Tchakirdji, like most successful men is not without the gift of humor. Once he was tracking a party of soldiers who were chasing him in the depth of winter. He came upon them, all wearied out, sleeping with no guard posted, in a stable. Entering quietly himself, Tchakirdji first took away their arms and then awakened them.

"Whom have you been looking for?" he asked.

"The brigand, Tchakirdji," they answered.

"Well, you have found him," Tchakirdji replied, "but you must still be punished for your carelessness in not posting a guard. Then, calling in his men, he first had a sound thrashing administered to his pursuers for the offence of sleeping on duty, and then sent them back through the snow, rifleless to their headquarters.

Such are some of the stories of this most famous of the Anatolian brigand chiefs. And lately to the ordinary dangers of his profession the perils of notoriety are beginning to be added, for it is said that not infrequently letters reach the Smyrna postal authorities addressed to him by European ladies who, touching as tourists at that port, have heard the tale of Tchakirdji's prowess.

From these communications it appears that it is only his inaccessibility topostal conveniences that protects him from the trial of having to refuse frequent offers to brighten his mountain cave with the presence of a European bride.

LET YOUNG FOLKS HAVE THEIR FUN

"Natural for Them to Live," Say Rev. Wm. A. Quail

The question of the young people in the church occupied the attention of the Ecumenical Conference delegates in Toronto, when the Rev. Wm. A. Quail, president of the Epworth League of the M. E. Church, said that the church which did not look after the young people was insane. He said that it was natural for the young folks to love.

"They want sweethearts," he said. "They want to get married. Do you blame them?"

He advocated home billiard rooms for the youth.

Rev. L. Hudson, of New Zealand, also made a plea for recreation.

"Wesley's restrictions on amusements for young people is acknowledged to have been a great blunder," he said. "To refuse boys and girls permission to play on the ground that they might want to play when they grow up is a policy as foolish as it is grotesque.

"How many thousands of young people are sent into the world to face unknown perils because at home they were crabbed, cabined, and confined by the circumscribed views of the head of the household? The Church cannot afford to, and has no right to say that she has nothing to do with providing recreation for the young people."

Time brings change. Contrast these utterances with the action of the Methodist Church in Belleville some 60 years ago, when it threatened to turn a man out of the church for playing cricket.

The financial statement of the Dominion to the 30th of September shows that for the six months of the current fiscal year the revenue amounted to $64,069,524, an increase of $7,921,331; the ordinary expenditure to $35,933,456, an increase of $824,784, and the capital expenditure to $12,318,027, a decrease of $112,109.

PREMIER BORDEN IS NOT A WEAKLING

It can scarcely be said that Mr. Borden has shown much sign of weakness since the opeing of the campaign which has closed so vigorously for him. At one time he appeared to stand almost alone in his attitude of opposition to reciprocity. Many of his sincerest admirers believed that he was courting political destruction in forcing a campaign on the country. There was reason to believe, at the time the terms of the agreement were first announced, that the Conservatives were almost as favorably disposed towards reciprocity as the Liberals were. But a short time before the announcement Conservative members of parliament were proclaiming their willingness to throw up both hands for just such an arrangement as was proposed, and when the terms were made known, several of the ablest Conservative papers came out unreservedly in support of the proposal.

Yet Mr. Borden stood his ground. He faced the dissensions among his own followers; he braved the antagonism of what looked liked a solid West: he carried the day. He swung his party into line; he caused the Conservative newspapers who had so cordially welcomed reciprocity to see with other eyes, and he ended by winning one of the most notable victories in the history of Canadian politics.

From all of which it would appear that the Liberal party would not be well advised if it placed too much dependence on the weakness of Mr. Borden's leadership. No doubt his difficulties have only begun; but it must not be too readily taken for granted that he will not develop the necessary strength to cope with these difficulties.

IT LOOKS LIKE A JOB

Settlement Awaits Hon. Mr. Monk's Decision

OTTAWA, Oct. 13—Victoria Island, close to the Chatts Falls in the Ottawa river, has been sold. Thereby is said to hang a tale which is a sequel to the story of Hon. William Harty's control of part of the enormous water power at the Chatts. The island giving Mr. Harty his rights to this power was alienated years ago by the Province of Ontario during the Liberal regime. It has since this greatly increased in value. The falls are situated immediately above Fitzroy harbor and extend from island to island across the river. The city of Ottawa has had an eye on this power.

Victoria Island has been looked upon as a key to the power situation It belonged to the Crown. Negotiations were opened with the Department of Public Works for the sale of the island to Mr. D. O'Connor, of Ottawa. The proposal was considered by the Liberal Government after the election and the island sold to Mr. O'Connor fourteen acres, at $100 per acre. This recommendation, which went to the Liberal council, has not yet been rturned to the Public Works Department. In the meantime Hon. F. D. Monk, the new minister, has given instructions that nothing be proceeded with until his return.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley, in conversation with the Gazette, freely admitted that the island had been disposed of for the sum named. The property, he said, was of no use to the Crown as an island. He denied that the sale carried power privileges with it, but admitted that the possession of the island was an important step in controlling the falls power. What the new Government will do with the sale remains to be seen.

These are the days when the "frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder's in the shock."

CURRENT COMMENT

If it takes two to make a quarrel, and a husband and wife are one, what is the answer?

Isn't it nice of the newspaper editors to help Mr. Borden pick his Cabinet without charging anything for advice? That's because they are not lawyers.

"Why do people smile every time they think of Sydney Fisher's defeat? Are we all becoming more cruel in our old age??" That's easy. Because every one who knows him looks upon him as a bumptious prig.

The Chicago News, in commenting upon the defeat of the reciprocity pact in Canada, exclaims in its lamentations: "There is always the consolation that we can revise our tariff any time we want to without the aid or consent of Canada." So can we, thanks to the defeat of the Taft-Knox-Fielding-Paterson agreement to gobble us up.

Hon. Mr. Perley is without portfolio in the new ministry, simply because such is his own desire. Yet there are many in Canada who regret that Mr. Perley so has decided, and that he is not at the head of one of the great departments of the service. The genius that organized the recent election campaign, and that has brought his own business to such efficiency, would, did it possess the administrative scope do great things for the Dominion.—Ottawa Journal.

Canadian Farm, a widely read weekly journal, devoted to agriculture, which neither supported nor opposed reciprocity in the recent electoral contest, makes in its issue of the 13th inst., the following important statement:—"By the rejection of reciprocity the Canadian West has been retained as a market for Canadian horses. As heretofore, thousands of horses bred and raised in Eastern Canada, will go west to supply the big demand for horses. During the past few years it has been a very profitable market. So profitable has it been that the East, and especially Ontario, has no over-supply of draft horses on hand."

Some day Miss Canada will realize what a great gainer she might have been by a free interchange of climates with Uncle Sam.—Chicago Tribune.

Not a bit of it, dear Tribune. Canada prefers her clear, bracing, Northern atmosphere, that produces vigorous, healthy men and women, to the damp, murky, consumptive-breeding climate of Chicago. She also prefers her pleasant temperate zone to that of the southern torrid clime, that produces an enervated race. No thanks, Mr. Tribune. No "exchange of climate for us." Keep your own. We Canadians are satisfied with ours.

The Hon. W. A. Charlton, one of the few Liberals who was elected in Ontario in the last Dominion election, is to face the courts on a charge of bribery and corruption. This is the first case that has been filed in court. On the 13th inst., Mr. E. B. Ryckman, K. C., acting for Alexander McColl, Conservative candidate for Norfolk, petitioned against the election and disqualification of Hon. W. A. Charlton, Liberal. Allegations of bribery, treating, undue influence, and corrupt practices are made. The petition alleges that offers or promises of money were made to induce persons to vote or to refrain from voting. The petition covers nine pages of typewritten matter. Mr. Charlton was elected by 148 of a majority.

The Duluth Herald laments the defeat of the reciprocity pact by Canadians. It says: "Duluth would probably have shared more generously in the results of the reciprocity agreement, had it been ratified by the Canadian people, than any other community. With a direct railway line completed to the grain fields of Western Canada, this port would have been the gateway through which a great volume of travel would pass on its way to the markets of the world. The Board of Trade would have extended its scope to include the Canadian fields, the volume of business cleared through Duluth would consequently have been greater. The agreement would have given a great impetus to the city's growth in commercial importance." Yes, at the expense of Port Arthur, Fort William and the carry trade of Canada. Knowing that, the Canadians rejected it.

PROGRESS OF THE TELEPHONE

The rapid growth of the use of the telephone in the United States is something enormous. There were more than eleven billion messages over United States telephone wires in 1907, an increase of 124.3 per cent. over the number of conversations in 1902. The total number of systems and lines was 22,971, an increase of 151.4 per cent. over 1902. The number of miles of wire was 12,999,369, an increase of 165.2 per cent. The salaries in 1907 amounted to $19,296,423, an increase of 95.2 over 1902. The wages paid to wage workers in the telephone service was $48,987,704, an increase of 85.7 per cent.

The capital stock and funded debt of the United States telephone systems in 1907 was $814,616,604, being an increase of 135.1 per cent. over 1902. The income earned in 1907 was $184,461,747 being an increase of 112.5 per cent.

These are extraordinary figures and show a progress in the telephone industry that is little less than startling. When the United States census of 1880 was taken the telegraph companies were operating 291,213 miles of wire and the telephone companies 34,305 miles. By the census of 1902 the amount of wire for the telegraph systems had increased to 1,318,350 miles, and that for the telephone systems to 4,900,451 miles. Thus in 1902 the mileage of wire devoted to the transmission of telephone messages was almost four times as great as that used for telegraph purposes. Both industries developed rapidly between 1902 and 1907, and by the end of that period the mileage of single wire devoted primarily to the telephone business was eight times as great as the mileage for the commercial telegraph business.

What will be the extent of this industry ten years hence? Who shall fix the limits of its expansion?

SOMETHING ABOUT PAYMENT OF BILLS

News reports say that a society milliner in New York has "gone broke" because the fashionable women who are his customers have been in the habit of neglecting to pay their bills. These bills are not large; they are mostly in small sums; but in the total they are considerable, and the list of those owing them is almost a list of fashionable society on this side of the water and even in England. The milliner will not dun his customers. Some of them would have been highly indignant at the receipt of a bill. And so he has done the next thing, and gone into bankruptcy.

He is not the first man to suffer in this way. Not all people who have money are careful about payment of their small accounts. And some of them are proverbially slow. It is not uncommon to hear men who do a considerable business in fashionable summer resorts say that they find it very hard to collect the sums due from some of the people who make the biggest splurge. And some of them flatly refuse to do business with these families except upon a cash basis. Generally such lack of payment is of course, simply thoughtlessness. People who have a large margin in the bank have no idea of the difficulty of a trader who is doing business on a small margin. Sometimes it is for other reasons. But the average business man would be greatly elated if his customers of means would develop the habit of promptness in paying their bills.

This is not to say that poor people, or people in moderate circumstances do not do the same thing. The habit of living on credit leads many people to live beyond their means. And payment is therefore long deferred. There would be a tremendous saving of anxiety to customer and dealers if people could only learn to pay their bills as they go.

It's a surprise party if everybody has a good time.

Pepper and salt to taste
4 tablespoonfuls cream, this may be omitted.

Wash the Dal thoroughly in several waters, then put it into a saucepan with cold water, celery, parsley, mace, peppercorns and onion. BOIL ONE HOUR. Then drain the liquid through a wire sieve into a basin, and with a wooden spoon rub the sieve as much as possible of the Dal pulp.

Then put into the empty saucepan the flour and butter and rub them together with a wooden spoon till smooth. Then add the milk gradually, stirring one way till it boils and thickens. Next add the soup from the basin, a little at a time, season with pepper and salt, and allow to boil at once.

If cream is used it should be put in just before serving. The soup must on no account boil after the cream is added.

CHAPTER V.

Florence, after Dora has left her, sits motionless at her window. She has throw open the casement, and now—the sleeves of her dressing gown falling back from her bare rounded arms—leans out so that the descending night dews fall like a benison upon her burning brow.

She is wrapped in meloncholy; her whole soul is burdened with thoughts and regrets almost too heavy for her to support. She is harassed and perplexed on all sides, and her heart is sore for the loss of the love she once had deemed her own.

The moonbeams cling like a halo round her lovely head, her hair falls in a luxuriant shower about her shoulders; her plaintive face is raised from earth, her eyes look heavenward, as though seeking repose and comfort there.

The night is still, almost to oppressiveness. The birds have long since ceased to sing; the wind hardly stirs the foliage of the stately trees. The perfume wafted upward from the sleeping garden floats past her and mingles with her scented tresses. No sound comes to mar the serenity of the night, all is calm and silent as the grave.

Yet, hark! what is this? A footstep on the gravel path below arouses her attention. For the first time since Dora's departure she moves, and turning her head, glances in the direction of the sound.

Bareheaded, and walking with his hands clasped behind him as though in deep thought, Sir Adrian comes slowly over the sward until he stands beneath her window. Here he pauses, as though almost unconsciously his spirit has led him thither, and brought him to a standstill where he would most desire to be.

The moon, spreading its brilliance on all around, permits Florence to see that his face is grave and thoughtful, and— yes, as she gazes even closer she can see that is is full of pain and vain longing.

What is rendering him unhappy on this night of all others, when the woman she believes he loves has been the willing companion for so many hours, when doubtless she has given him proofs of her preference for him above all men?

Suddenly lifting his head, Sir Adrian becomes conscious of the face in the window above, and a thrill rushes through him as he recognizes the form of the woman he loves.

The scene is so calm, so hallowed so full of romance, that both their hearts beat madly for a while. They are alone; any one still awake within the house is far distant.

Never had she appeared so spiritual—so true and tender; so full of sweetness that is almost unearthly. All pride seems gone from her, and in its place only a gentle melancholy remains. She looks so far removed from him, sitting there in her white robes, that, at first, he hesitates to address her. To his excited imagination, she is like an angel resting on its way to the realms above.

At last, however, his heart compelling him, he speaks aloud.

"Florence, you still awake, when all the world is sleeping?"

"You, too," she says in a whisper that reaches his strained ears. There seems to be a subtle joy in the thought that they two of all the household are awake, are here talking together alone in the pale light of the moon.

Yet she is wrong in imagining that no others are up in the house, as his next words tells her.

"It is not a matter of wonder in my case," he responds; "a few fellows are still in the smoking room. It is early you know—not yet three. But you—why are you keeping a lonely vigil like this?"

"The moon tempted me to the window," answers Florence. "See how calm she looks, riding majestically up there. See"—stretching out her bare white arm until the beams fall full upon it, and seem to change it to purest marble—"does it not make one feel as if all the world were being bathed in its subdued glow?"

A pale, tremulous smile widens her lips. Sir Adrian, plucking a tall pale lily growing near him, flings it upward with such an eager aim that it alights upon her window-sill. She sees it. Her fingers close upon it.

"Fit emblem of its possessor," says Adrian, softly, and rather unsteadily. "Do you know of what you remind me sitting up there in your white robes? A mediæval saint cut in stone—a pure angel, too good, too far above all earthly passion to enter into it, or understand it, and the grief that must ever attend upon it."

He speaks bitterly. It seems to him that she is indeed cold not to have guessed before this the intensity of his love for her. However much she may have given her affection to another, it still seems to him inexpressibly hard that she can have no pity for his suffering. He gazes at her intently. Do the mystic moonbeams deceive him, or are their tears in the great dark eyes? His heart beats quickly. Once again he remembers her emotion of the past evening. He hears again her passionate sobs. Is she unhappy? Are there thorns in her path that are dicffiult to remove?

"Florence, once again I entreat you to confide in me," he says, after a pause.

"I cannot," she returns, sadly, but firmly. "But there is one thing that I must say to you—think of me as you may for saying it—I am not cold as you seemed to imply a moment since; I am not made of stone; and, alas, the grief you think me incapable of understanding is mine already! You have wronged me in your thoughts. I have here," she exclaims with same vehemence, laying her hand in which she holds the lily upon her breast, "what I would gladly be without—a heart."

"Nay," says Adrian hastily; "you forget. It is no longer yours; you have given it away."

For an instant she glances at him keenly, while her breath comes and goes with painful quickness.

"You have no right to say so," she murmurs at last.

"No, of course not; I beg your pardon," he says apologetically. "It is your own secret."

"There is no secret," she declares, nervously. "None."

"I have offended you. I should not have said that. You will forgive me?" he entreats, with agitation.

"You are quite forgiven;" and, as a token of the truth of her words, she leans a little farther out of the window and looks down at him with a face pale indeed, but full of an unutterable sweetness.

Her beauty conuqers all his resolutions.

"Oh, Florence," he whispers, in an impassioned tone, "If I only dare tell you what—"

She starts and lays a finger on her lis, as though to enforce silence.

"Hush!" she says in a trembling voice. "You forget! The hour, the surroundings, have momentarily led you astray. I ought not to have spoken with you. Go! There is nothing you dare to tell me—there is nothing I would wish to hear. Remember your duty to another—and—goodnight."

"Stay, I implore you, for one moment," he cries; but she is firm, and presently the curtains are drawn close and he is alone.

Slowly he walks back to the smoking room, her last words ringing in his ears—"Remember your duty to another." What other? He is puzzled, but, reaching the window of the room, he dismisses these thoughts from his mind, and determines to get rid of his guests without delay, so as to be able to enjoy a little quiet and calm for reflection.

Canada Made an Offer.

Manchester, Oct. 14.—Prof. Hewins, an ardent tariff reformer, says that the opponents of tariff reform have constantly said that the colonies made no offer. Well, now, there was an offer, in the voice of the Canadian people, and the present Government had no authority to reject reciprocal preference because the subject was not before the electors of Britain at the last election.

The Guardian, anent this declaration, asks Hewins, when and where did the victorious Canadians make the offer and asks what Hewins thinks of the inclusion in the Canadian Government of a statesman opposed to Borden's Imperial policy, and also of Laurier's modified policy?

Suffragists Jubilant.

New York, Oct. 14.—The National headquarters of the Woman's Suffrage organizations are in gala dress over the news of the victory in California.

Unquestionably the strongest element in San Francisco and Oakland, which gave a majority of 16,000 against suffrage, in opposition to suffrage was the saloon. In the country, granges and other farmers' organizations endorsed suffrage, and much to the surprise of the politicians the farmers went to the polls. Instead of the light vote that was expected the vote in the country was heavier than in the city.

Flemming is Premier.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 14.—Hon. James Kidd Flemming, the new Provincial Premier, will announce his Cabinet on Monday.

The new Premier is 43 years of age, and was once a school teacher. For a number of years he was a manufacturer and dealer in lumber. He was first elected to the Legislature in 1900, and entered the Cabinet in 1908.

Re-open the Mines.

Lethbridge, Alta., Oct. 14.—It has leaked out through what is considered an authoritative source that the Miners' convention Thursday passed a resolution authorizing the executive to make arrangements to meet President Stockett of the Western Canada Coal Operators' Association to negotiate for the re-opening of the mines.

Major MacLaren Killed.

Barrie, Oct. 14.—Dr. W. D. MacLaren, major of "A" Squadron of the Mississauga Light Horse, was thrown from his horse on his way in from attending a gathering at Major Sneath's in Vespra, about 1.30 Thursday night. A small bruise on the head produced concussion of the brain, which ended fatally at 7.30 yesterday morning.

Offhand Definitions.

A limony.—The price of peace.

Human nature—Something to blame your excentricities on if you are not like other people.

When a man goes out to buy a collar he comes back with a collar, and perhaps a necktie or two. When a woman starts out to buy a collar she returns exhausted with a new silk blouse, a pair of gloves, some skirt bindindg, a cake of soap, a paper of pins, some window curtains, a sewing machine, and a mangle.

Men keep best in a cool dry atmosphere, if you will remember that fact it may save you some trouble in the years to come.

Borden as a Home Ruler.

London, Oct. 14.—The Westminster Gazette wonders if the English Unionists' enthusiasm for Mr. Borden and his Cabinet will be modified on discovering that they are all convinced supporters of Irish Home Rule.

"The average Tory believes that to be a home ruler is to be a traitor. He will begin to think that Borden is as disloyal as the much reviled Laurier."

Fell Eighty Feet.

Windsor, Oct. 14.—After a fall from the top of the old grand stand at the Driving Park to the ground, a distance of nearly eighty feet, Thursday, Frank Deacon, a carpenter, is still alive, but so badly injured that his recovery is despaired of.

The Yankee pig of 1911 is smaller than the same animal of 1910. This is due to a shortage of corn.

A Just Penalty

Judge Winchester shows a disposition to put a stop to furious automobile driving. He has just imposed a fine of $1,000, or six months in jail, upon a lumber merchant for reckless driving. Here is the report of the case:

> Alexander S. Tracey, the Port Huron lumber merchant, who drove his automobile into a crowd at the corner of Queen Street and Roncesvalles avenue, injuring about half a dozen people, some of them permanently, was fined $1,000 or six months in the Central Prison. Mr. Henderson in pleading for leniency stated that Tracey had offered to settle with the injured parties, but some of the demands made were exhorbitant. One woman who testified that she was only shook-up asked for $1,000. Some of the others were settled with.
> Judge Winchester remarked that he would have to impose a penalty that would stop furious auto driving and imposed the fine, adding that the next man to come up on a similar charge would not be given a fine. Tracey was allowed forty-eight nours to pay the money.

Furious drivers, put this sentence in your pipes and smoke it.

MacKay

The Hon. Mr. MacKay, formerly a member of the Ross Administration in Ontario, and consequently responsible for all its misdeeds, is now the leader of the Opposition to the Whitney Government, and is appealing to the electors to replace the present Cabinet by a few of the Cap. Sullivan tribe, himself at their head.

This gentleman devoted a good deal of time, wasted no little energy, and expended no little eloquence and oratory during the last Dominion election in trying to convince the electors that they should vote for reciprocity and continue Laurier in power, and he is now appealing to them to "drop their slavery to party" and vote Grit. Here is a specimen of his ravings, which receives the commendations of the Toronto Globe:—

> "If many of the electors of the townships are so slavish to party that they will not vote for Liberal candidates, let them at least pledge Conservative candidates to drop their slavery to party, and to demand a square deal in educational matters. The Conservative members of the last two Legislatures sat behind the Government, swallowed their convictions, and voted solid whenever the educational power, not on but behind the throne, said: 'Thumbs up!'"

What think honest electors of this, coming as it does from the leader of a party that misgoverned Ontario for about thirty years, through and by a partizanship that knew no bounds? Why, a Conservative never received the slightest consideration or concession, no matter how just his cause was; he was not even allowed to look at, much less swell, the atmosphere of the radical precincts. Asking people to drop politics and vote for such men as MacKay, Stratton, Cap. Sullivan, et al.

Electors may well ask, what next?

Mr. MacKay got an answer to his requests on the 21st of last September, and he will have it repeated next December, when the local elections are held. The people of Ontario, fortunately, shook off the thraldom of Grit partizanship when their country was in danger, and it will be repeated whenever the opportunity offers. Mr. MacKay, you had better select your hollow tree, sleep, and rest, as do the bears, during the coming winter, and come out in the spring refreshed and renewed, if that be possible.

The Coming Ontario Elections

As we are to have another election in Ontario, and that, too, at an early date, would it not be well for those desirous of continuing an honest Government in power to bestir themselves, organize, hold conventions and select candidates in the three Ridings of Hastings and in the County of Prince Edward, in order that the electors may know who are in the field for election?

This is no time for uttering uncertain sounds. Ontario has now, and has had, for some few years past, the best and most straightforward Government that has controlled its affairs for over the past thirty years, and, in the interest of the Province, it must be sustained. No more lapses, such as disgraced our rulers for years, are required. The best way to prevent that is to choose and elect men who have the ability, industry and honesty to work in the interest of the country and not in the interest of self.

The County of Hastings in the past has had representatives in both the Federal and Local Parliaments who were and are a credit to the people who sent them there.

Hastings wants no back-bench members; it requires, and should have, representatives who can take front seats and maintain them. The present members for this County are such men as we have here portrayed, each of them having left nothing undone to further our interests, individually and otherwise.

In the North Riding the member has succeeded in securing much larger grants for roads and bridges than was ever secured from any former Government, and, of what is of equal importance, having it properly expended and not absorbed by Grit bosses and overseers.

The member for West Hastings occupies no second place in the Legislature, and no man has done more in the furthering of the material interest of the county than he has. The success which attended his efforts in securing material aid in the construction of the Ontario Central Railway to the extreme north of the county, opening up a portion of the county undeveloped, the trade of which will enure so largely to the country, and Trenton in particular, should not be forgotten. This railway scheme must not stop here. Belleville cannot afford to continue without a connecting link with the northern road. Messrs. Northrup and Porter have already done yeoman service in that respect, and, with the aid of the local members and an honest Government in Ottawa, it is to be hoped justice will be done in this matter.

Mr. Richardson, of the East Riding, must not be forgotten. He has acted in concert with his fellow members in all that has been accomplished. With united efforts in the future, much may yet be done to further the interests of the county.

Call conventions, decide upon candidates, and then elect them, is the advice we tender the electors.

5 YEARS' THROAT TROUBLE AND INFLUENZA CURED

EMINENT DOCTORS FAILED TO CURE—HAD GIVEN UP HOPE. This Case Does Prove That When Catarrhozone is Breathed Every Trace of Catarrh Disappears.

Milford Haven, Da., Oct. 14—Every one in this neighborhood knows of the long suffering from influenza and catarrh endured by Mrs. D. Gurney. To-day she is well. Her recovery is due entirely to Catarrhozone. This is her own statement "I was a great sufferer from catarrh in the head, throat and nose, and endured the manifold tortures of influenza for five years. My life was despaired of. Catarrh was undermining my strength very fast. I used treatments from eminent doctors, but all failed to cure me. I had given up hope of ever being well. Then I read of a wonderful cure made by Catarrhozone. Immediately I sent for Catarrhozone, and before I had used one bottle I was greatly relieved. To-day I am cured We would not be without Catarrhozone in our home—it's so sure in colds, coughs bronchial and throat trouble. I feel it is my duty to publicly recommend Catarrhozone."

Get the large dollar size of Catarrhozone; it contains a beautiful hard rubber Inhaler, and medicine that lasts two months. Smaller sizes, 25c. and 50c. each. Beware of imitations —accept only Catarrhozone, sold by all reliable dealers, or by mail from The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont., and Buffalo, N. Y.

Monuments in Queer Places.

There are Monuments in all sorts of out-of-the-way places, but one that is really unique is that erected in a river. It stands in the Parramatta River, New South Wales, a stream known the world over for the rowing events that have taken place upon it. This monument, which is in memory of the world-famed rower, Searle, is also unique from the fact that it has been used as the winning-post of the races for the world's championship, and is still used as such for local events.

The Emperor Gorges Himself.

The "Hoel Pao" says that an American doctor recently visited the palace at Peking to examine the baby Emperor, who, it was found, had gorged himself with a meal of swallows' nests (a sort of glutinous material), and thus provoked a raging thirst. The indisposition yielded easily to the doctor's treatment. The Emperor sleeps in a gigantic bed, big enough for six people! he rises at six, at once has a meal of rice-gruel or rice, and then goes to pay his respects to the Dowager Lung-yu.

A sculptor recently produced the likeness of a celebrated personage in whose biography it was mentioned that he regarded architecture as a very secondary art. The son of this personage visited the artist's studio for the purpose of examining the bust, when, after considering it with the air of a connoisseur, he inquired, Could you not express more clearly his contempt for architecture?"

The heart of a man is divided into many compartments, mostly isolated. Sometimes there is a door between two of them, or even three may be joined together, but usually each one is complete in itself.

Rather Burn Than Pay

Mr. Lindsey Laring, a millionaire Boston sportsman, has just burned his yacht Eelin rather than pay the new annual tonnage tax on foreign-built yachts. Mr. Laring, who is very fond of yachting, bought the Eelin years ago, but as she was built in England, he came under the law passed two years ago providing for an annual tax of seven dollars per gross ton on foreign-built yachts. The tax amounted to 511 dollars per year, and Mr. Laring declined to pay it. The tonnage tax on American-built yachts is only one dollar, and yachtsmen have been fighting the law as unconstitutional, being in fact nothing less than class legislaiton. Alternatively they claimed that the Act should not apply to yachts purchased abroad by Americans, before the passage of the bill The Courts, however, held that the Act was retrospective, and applied to foreign-built yachts regularly used in American waters, and Mr. Laring was one of those who lost their cases. Mr Laring ordered his yacht to be burned after removing the keel, masts, and rigging.

DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION TO CURE ECZEMA

Eczema, Psoriasis, and other skin troubles are caused by myriads of germs at work in the skin. Unless these germs are promptly destroyed they rapidly multiply, gnawing their way deep into the sensitive tissue. This is what causes that awful itch, and what seemed a mere rash may grow worse and develop into a loathsome and torturing skin disease with its years of misery.

Don't take any chances! Destroy the germs at the beginning of the trouble with that soothing and cleansing wash, the D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

We have had experience with many remedies for skin trouble but have never—never seen such remarkable cures as those from D.D.D. Prescription. Instant relief from the very first application.

If you have skin trouble of any kind, we certainly advise you to drop in and investigate the merits of D.D D. or why not drop a line to the D.D.D. Laboratory, Dept. B. I., 49 Colborne St., Toronto.

We know that D.D.D. will help you.

THESE COME OF OLD FAMILIES

Residents of Britain Today Who Can Reliably Trace Their Geneology Back to the Twelfth Century.

There is, of course, a good deal of truth suggested by the familiar and oft-quoted couplet—

When Adam delved and Eve span,
Who was then the gentleman?

But, like a great many other truisms, the suggested answer to the question is only a half-truth; for, though it goes without saying that we could no doubt trace ourselves back to a common stock, the fact remains that most people cannot get very far back into their family history. It speaks, therefore, very strongly for the stability of a family, and for the capacity of its members to hold their own in the ups and downs of the centuries, when a genealogy can be traced far back into the early days of our history.

Perhaps the most interesting lineage, as it is certainly one of the most ancient in England today, is that of the family of Wake, of Courteen Hall, Northampton. This is one of the oldest now existing in the male line in England, being directly traceable to the celebrated Hereward the Wake, son of Leofric, Earl of Mercia, and Lady Godiva of Coventry fame. It is not remarkable that in the family which boasts "the last of the English" as its founder, the name of Hereward, Herewald, or Herwald should be of frequent occurrence, and a Herewald Wake nobly sustained the honour of the name during the Indian Mutiny when, although a civilian, he held the Puckah House at Arrah against the Sepoys. A daughter of this house was mother of Joan (the Fair Maid of Kent), the wife of Edward the Black Prince; and Sir John Wake, with characteristic loyalty to a falling cause, mortgaged his estate to raise a troop of horse for Charles I.

Another very long pedigree is that of the Cornish family of Salusbury, Trelawny. The name is taken from Trelawne, in Cornwall, which one Eduni, an ancestor of the present family, possessed in the reign of Edward the Confessor. To this family belonged the Right Reverend Sir Jonathan Trelawny, Bishop of Bristol who was one of the seven bishops committed to the Tower by James II

The family of Scott of Ancrum, in Roxburghshire, boast an antique and singularly romantic history. "Uchredus, filius Scote" was witness to the foundation of Holyrood Abbey in 1128, and it was to this house that there belonged the famous wizard, Michael Scott, mentioned in the "Lay of the Last Minstrel," and also, as is probably less generally known, in Dante's "Inferno."

Few people can claim a more distinguished origin than the house of Perrott of Plumstead in Kent, said to be of ancient British descent. The founder of this family, the British Edwal, Lord of Penfro, married a grand-daughter of Alfred the Great, and the son of the marriage first took the name "de Perot" from his castle in Armorica. A later Perrott was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the reign of Elizabeth, and the family took a vigorous part on the Royalist side during the Civil War.

Cleopatra's Needle.

The London County Council have erected a scaffold round Cleopatra's Needle, and cleansing operations are in progress. The monolith had its last rub down some fifteen years ago. It is to be feared that the London atmosphere is beginning to tell upon the sharpness of the hieroglyphic inscriptions, and nobody has yet completely solved the problem of preserving stone or even granite surfaces against sulphuric acid deposits. The County Council's chemist has been giving attention to the matter, and he has advised the use of paraffin wax as a protective coating. The monument will therefore be scrubbed all over with water and the paraffin wax will be afterwards applied. The column, which was placed on the Embankment thirty-three years ago, is about 87 feet high.

BRIEF BUT INSTRUCTIVE

Never trust a friend in business.

Whatever is good for humanity comes from ambition and the struggle for life.

It has been said that there are three sexes: Men, women, and educated women.

You can achieve no laurels in any career if you will not scorn delights and live laborious days.

The real joys of life are found in the simple things which rich and poor alike have within their reach.

Idleness and ignorance amongst women, with the frivolity and waste they cause, are dangers to the community.

True patriotism begins not with Empire, but with home and school and suburbs and city, working outward.

The cleverest man imaginable, with the utmost possible knowledge, is a perfect nuisance if he is not "straight."

There can be no more demoralising idea than to suppose that the honours of life are all dispensed by the goddess of luck.

We are sent into the world to be supremely happy, and, if we do not achieve this, we make a hopeless muddle of things.

Train Versus Elephant

Among the remarkable photographs published in the last official report of the Federated Malay States Railways were two, showing the wreck of a passenger train and the wild elephant which caused it. The animal, apparently frightened by the noise of the approaching train, started to cross the track, and was struck by the engine. The force of the impact was sufficient to throw the engine and tender from the track. The elephant was almost instantly killed by the force of the blow and thrown into a ditch.

Fame and fortune await the artist who can paint a portrait of a woman to look as she thinks she looks.

PROGRESS IN STEAMSHIPS

Future of the Geared Turbine System of Propulsion Promises Vastly Higher Power Than Has Yet Been Attained.

When shipbuilders — or, to be strictly accurate, shipbuilders who are also marine engineers — turn from the human element in their works to the scientific they find themselves face to face with problems of even more absorbing interest. It is not necessary to look back more than one year into history in order to justify this statement. The marine steam turbine is one of the commonplaces of engineering, but all its possibilities are not yet known. It was born on the Tyne, but it was cradled and nursed on the Clyde, and at the present moment more is being done on the Clyde than anywhere else to show that its sphere of usefulness may be widened far beyond the present limits. Clydebank has proved that the Curtis type, imported from America and given the hall-mark of Clyde design and workmanship, is capable of doing splendid service; and at Fairfield and Dumbarton the Parsons type is being developed in two different directions. On the large liners which they are building for the Pacific service of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the Fairfield Company are to drive four shafts — for the first time on vessels of great size — with triple-expansion turbines; and on the two railway steamers which the same firm are building for the Havre cross-channel service, as well as on two British destroyers at Dumbarton, the geared turbine is to be used for powers vastly higher than in anything of the kind yet attempted. With at least two other forms of reducing gear past the experimental stage, a 5000 tons oil-engined vessel making ready at Whiteinch for trials in December, and a number of similar ships building at different Continental yards, all threatening to abolish the steam engine altogether as a marine motor — not to speak of the gas-producer ship looming out of the shadows as it were — there is enough to keep the marine engineer who would remain abreast of the times thinking very hard indeed, even if he had no labour problems to consider at the same time.

THE LIE NAILED DOWN

J. M. Barrie, who celebrated his 51st birthday a few days ago, is a direct contradiction to the absurd theory that Scotsmen are humorless. Once the leading actor who was playing in one of his plays fell ill. The occurrence meant a chance for his understudy, who, not being particularly gifted with a sense of modesty, sent a few dozen telegrams to dramatic critics and others solemnly informing them that he would be taking the "star" part that evening. One telegram went to Mr. Barrie. He sent this answer:

"Thanks for your warning."

In connection with the Scotsman's proverbial love of argument, he tells a delicious story. An old fellow lay very near to death, and his friends suggested sending for the minister. But the old chap did not want a spiritual comforter. The friends said they would sing a hymn. The dying man did not want hymns. "A'm wanting neither hymns nor minister," quoth he: "I want to argy."

Another yarn Mr. Barrie tells is about a friend of his who once had the misfortune to sit at a performance of "The Little Minister" behind a lady with a large hat. Requested politely to remove it, the lady stubbornly refused. But the man was anxious to see the play. Presently he leaned forward again. "Madam," he said, gravely, "if you won't remove your hat, would you mind folding up your ears?"

Sherlock Out-Holmes'd

A short time ago a large factory fitted with the most modern appliances, including electric light, caught fire, and, despite the most strenuous efforts of the fire brigade, was almost demolished.

The following morning a newly appointed member of the police force was despatched to the shop to see how the fire originated. After closely questioning the manager of the factory, he asked to see the man who was responsible for the electric light.

The manager stated that the electric switches were under his sole control.

"Then you are the man that lights up the electric affair?" said the policeman.

Manager—"That is so."

Policeman, bubbling over with excitement.—"Now, be careful how you answer my next question, 'cos if it ain't satisfactory, it will be took as evidence against ye. When you lighted the electric light last night, where did you throw the match?"

Breaking the Hat-Pin

Berlin's Chief Constable is dealing with the hat-pin danger in a very pointed manner. Some months ago he issued a courteous appeal to the fair inhabitants of the city requesting them not to wear dangerously long needles in their headdress without covering the points with protecting sheaths. This appeal, however, does not appear to have met with the desired compliance, and the Chief has now proceeded to stronger measures. A woman whose unprotected hat-pin inflicts a wound on another person is now liable to a fine of $220 and to a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years, in addition to which the injured party may claim damages up to $1,500.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

A SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT

The discovery and turning in an alarm of fire maks possible the heroic work of the firemen in putting it out.

Undiscovered, a fire spreads with amazing rapidity, destroying everything within its reach.

Dandruff is contagious, and its spread is checked by the use of Newbro's Herpicide. This delightful scalp dressing kills the germ, and prevents the hair from falling. It stops that itching almost instantly.

Herpicide is the one standard and original dandruff germ destroyer. Any other preparation making this claim is an imitation.

GREENLEAF & SON

Many folks complain when showers are frequent, but few seem to know the good that these same showers do. To begin with, rain purifes the air, beating down the minute particles of dust with which it is usually laden, and driving away many millions of germs. Rain is a great fertilizer, as it contains a large quantity of carbonic acid, which it collects from the air, and further absorbs mnay chemical substances from decaying vegetation lying on the surface of the earth.

CANADA'S NEW ROYAL GOVERNOR

The Duke of Connaught comes to us, says the Montreal Star, as a personage of exceedingly high standing in the Empire. He is the representative of royal blood of, indeed, the highest standing who could by any possibility hold the office of Governor-General The Imperial Government and the Royal Family have given their best: and it is a compliment which this loyal Colony of Canada will appreciate profoundly.

The Montreal Gazette furnishes the following interesting biographical sketch of His Royal Highness:

The appointment of His Royal Highness was a recognition of the importance, new to some extent, which the statesmen of Great Britain attach to the representation of the Sovereign in the great colonies. Queen Victoria's son King Edward's brother, and King George's uncle, in Europe ranks with the greatest. The Duke of Connaught, however, is worthy of respect for more than his rank and royal connections. He has not been an idler. In the way of duty as a soldier he has served in many parts of the Empire. As a young man he visited America. He was with Wolseley in Egypt in 1883 when Arabi Pasha's power was broken. He held the post of commander-in-chief of the army at Bombay, and commander-in-chief and high commissioner of the Mediterranean, which gave him authority over all British forces from Gibraltar to Egypt As a near relative and man of experience, he has been known as a personal adviser to both King Edward and King George. He does not come to Canada as a stranger. As a young officer he arrived in Canada in 1869, travelled largely by waggon road, for there was then no railway, from Halifax to Quebec, was stationed at Montreal, went out with his corps to repel the frontier raid of 1870, and was present as a guest at the opening of the third session of the first Parliament. Later came the Prince of Wales, now King George, on the voyage from Halifax to Quebec, was attaioned at Montcourse of events, formally open the first session of the twelfth Parliament He again saw this country when he returned from India by the Pacific route and learned how the experiment of nation-making which he had seen in its infancy, was developing. He comes now for the third time to take up new duties. It is needless to say that he will be welcomed, both for himself and because of the commission he bears. A welcome will also go out to the Duchess, his wife, a princess of Prussia, and the daughter of a soldier, and to the other members of the family who are to join him here.

NATIVE POLO AT GURAIS.

Polo is played at Gurais (three marches up the Gilgat Road) in Kashmir regularly once a week during the summer months, when the ground is free from snow.

Each villager rides his own pony (about 12 hands any distance up to 15 miles in the morning, plays from 12 to 3 or 4 p.m., and then rides back to his home. When there is a bet of a sheep they have sides otherwise it is each for himself. Each chukker lasts two hours unless nine goals are scored first; if the ball goes between the posts it counts as a goal, and if it can be caught in the hand in mid-air the catcher scores a goal by riding with it in his hand between the posts—if he can. No one bothers about "offsides," fouls, or other embellishments of Europeans.

In spite of plentiful hard knocks, and sometimes worse, no one will miss his weekly game if he can help it. The game generally starts with six or eight players, but by the time it finishes it is no uncommon sight to see twenty players taking part at the same time, and needless to say the game is fast and furious all the time.

The local telegraph master is the only European who plays, except for occasional visitors and sportsmen on their way through. To our ideas the game is primitive, but it finds great favour in the eyes of all the natives in this part of the world, and one has only to watch the game for a few minutes to realize how keen they all are, and absolutely devoid of nerves.

The greatest tragedy that can befall a keen player on polo day is to have no pony. Sometimes it happens, however, that the animal is hired out and not returned in time. Then the player calmly takes his place in goal — on foot.

The United States hay crop is estimated at 56,969,000 tons, compared with 60,978,00 last year.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

IS SWORN INTO OFFICE

Duke of Connaught Is Now Canada's Governor-General.

With H. R. H. the Duchess He Rides Through the Gaily Bedecked Streets of the Ancient Capital Amid the Cheers of Thousands—Entertained at Luncheon By the Dominion Government—Party Leaves For Ottawa.

Quebec, Oct. 14.—Amid the cheering of the hospitably minded citizens of the ancient capital, Canada's royal Governor-General, the Duke of Connaught, accompanied by the duchess, landed yesterday at the King's Wharf, and, preceded by a mounted guard, passed through bunting bedecked streets to the Parliament buildings, where the ceremony of administering the oath of office to His Royal Highness was held.

The scene was an impressive one. Seated round the table in the Legislative Council Chamber were Hon. R. L. Borden and the members of the Dominion Cabinet. On the right of the dias was seated the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, and on the other side were the judges of the Supreme Court in their robes of office.

The commission of appointment was read by Lieut.-Col. Lowther.

At the completion of the installation, the guns of the citadel thundered out a royal salute, and the band played the National Anthem.

Addresses of welcome were read by the Lieutenant-Governor, and the mayor of Quebec, the duke replying briefly.

The duke's message to the people was brief. He said:

"For myself personally I have only one wish, and that is to serve Canada, to make myself at home in this country, and to do all I can to promote its best interests, and also to promote that connection to the Empire which I think of such importance to Canada."

An unfortunate accident occurred as Their Royal Highnesses were driving from the Parliament Buildings to the Citadel after the installation. Turning the corner just through the St. Louis gate, the horse of Trooper George Snape of the Royal Canadian Dragoons, who formed the escort, slipped on the inclined pavement and fell, throwing Snape to the ground. The horse next him also fell. Snape was picked up and carried into the Garrison Club. These were the horses immediately in front of the carriage bearing the duke and duchess. The quick action of Captain Douglas Young, who commanded the escort, and who rode up and helped to get them out of the way prevented Their Royal Highnesses' carriage being delayed.

Then the royal party passed to the Chateau Frontenac, where they were entertained at luncheon by the Dominion Government.

In the evening a dinner at Government House was followed by a reception at the Parliament Buildings, after which, preceded by a mounted escort, the duke and duchess left for the C.P.R. station, where they boarded the special train that is to bear them to the capital of the Dominion.

As Their Royal Highnesses passed down the street to the station, there were displays of fireworks and crowds of people assembled all along the route to give the vice-regal party a greeting.

CRISIS BECOMES ACUTE

Chinese Officials Rushing Troops to Disaffected Districts.

Rebels Are Confident of Victory and Pekin Itself Is Threatened—Garrison In Capital Is Honeycombed With Revolutionary Sentiment—Raiding of Treasury at Hankow Proved Profitable to the Rebels.

Pekin, Oct. 14.—China to-day faces an unprecedented crisis. With the spread of revolutionary activity the opinion is gaining ground that the fate of the ruling dynasty hangs in the balance. The revolution is no longer confined to the central provinces, a thousand miles away from the capital. Pekin itself is threatened. Members of the Cabinet admitted yesterday that the garrison here are known to be honeycombed with the revolutionary sentiment The same condition exists in the two great military posts which guard the capital, Pao Ting Fu and Tien Tsin.

Yesterday's news included reports that Chung King was in danger, that I-Chang had been taken, that Yo-Chow had fallen, and that communication between Hankow and Chang-Sha, the capital of Hunan Province, was interrupted.

The revolutionary army is strongly entrenched in Wu Chang and Han Yang with guns mounted in commanding positions.

The revolutionists have informed the mission schools at Hankow that they will respect all treaties and loans and indemnities contracted by the Chinese Government.

All the available railway cars are carrying to the south troops who will be used first to guard the line and thereafter in an attempt to recapture the towns taken by the revolutionists.

It is reported that the rebels yesterday allowed the weekly express to leave Hankow crowded with refugees. It is believed the rebels found over a million dollars of Mexican money when they raided the treasury at Hankow, and also obtained half a million dollars in the same coin from the Hankow merchants.

A well-informed revolutionary sympathizer told the Associated Press last night that the rebels probably would leave the capture of Pekin and Shanghai to the last, because of the danger of foreign complications. He said the utmost confidence seems to prevail among the rebels. It is stated that they have been two years in perfecting their negotiations and now have members in all the Government offices.

The National Assembly showed revolutionary tendencies last winter, and the reassembling of that body in a fortnight is regarded with anxiety. The provincial assemblies almost without exception are anti-government.

Rebels Unable to Keep Order.

Hankow, Oct. 14.—The rebels have been unable to maintain order, and business has been completely suspended here and at Hank-Yang and Wu Chang The working classes are without employment and are attempting to plunder. Fully a half-million persons have fled to the countryside.

It is reliably reported that rebels are proceeding northward to meet the imperial troops and that a thousand troops in the Province of Honan, adjoining the disaffected Province of Hu-Peh, on the north, also are prepared to resist the imperials.

Thrown From Wagon.

Hamilton, Oct. 14.—Instant death from a broken neck was the fate which befell Edward Cooper when the team which he was driving ran away and threw him from his wagon at the corner of Burlington street and Ferguson avenue, about five o'clock yesterday afternoon. Cooper was driving along Ferguson avenue when his horses became frightened, and in their mad flight caused the empty wagon to collide with the fountain at the corner of Burlington street. The unfortunate man was hurled violently to the ground, and was dead when picked up.

Spanish Lossss In Morocco.

Madrid, Oct. 14.—The Moors in the Riff country are attacking the Spaniards at every opportunity, usually sustaining losses greatly in excess of those inflicted. The Moors assaulted the camps at Imarufen, and Ishafen on the night of Oct. 10. They left 30 dead on the field. Two of the Spanish soldiers were wounded.

El Correo, however, publishes a letter from its correspondent at Melilla, Morocco, in which the losses to the Spaniards in the fight of Oct. 7, are estimated at 400 dead and wounded.

Not Dead Yet.

Chicago, Oct. 14.—While being carried into an undertaking establishment on the west side, David Easley, 35 years of age, of La Grange, Ill., who was thought to be dead, suddenly regained consciousness and shouted, "Take me out of here, I'm not going to die yet." He was taken to a hospital for treatment and may recover from injuries received when he was struck on the head with a rifle while quarreling with Roscoe Holtz over a woman, to whom both men had been showing attention.

Lost Both Feet.

Ridgetown, Oct. 14.—Clarence Bishop, son of William Bishop, had both feet amputated Thursday when, while standing on top of a threshing machine near Palmyra he slipped and was caught in the machinery. One foot was torn off at the ankle and the other was badly mutilated. Bishop's condition is very serious.

Noted Hunter Dead.

Windsor, Oct. 13.—Nicholas Nantais, aged 96, a veteran hunter and trapper of this action, died at his home on Tecumser road Thursday.

ROYALISTS DEFEATED

Portuguese Invaders Have Been Reinforced However.

Monarchists Are Reported to Have Retreated Into Spain and Returned With Added Supporters — Manuel and Dom Miguel Have Agreed to Let Their Claims to the Throne Rest on the Result of an Election.

Lisbon, (via frontier) Oct. 14.—It is reported here that a part of the Royalist command left Serra da Corda and retreated across the border into Spain, where they were reinforced and again re-entered Portugal. The reinforced column aggregates about 2,500 men. A newspaper here says the Royalists are armed with Kropatschek, Mauser and Remington rifles, and that there are about 4,000 of them along the Spanish-Portuguese frontier. The newspaper says, however, that they seem greatly disheartened.

It is rumored that a fight took place Thursday night in which the Royalists sustained heavy losses and were forced to retreat. Details of this engagement are not yet obtainable here.

The Republicans have four batteries of heavy artillery at Serra da Pilar, and much surprise has been caused by their never being brought into action against the Monarchists. The newspaper Novivades says a document has been discovered which shows that the Monarchists distributed $80,000 among the artillerymen with the proviso that they should not be fired upon. This statement has caused a sensation here and the Government has started an enquiry.

It has been ascertaned that Captain Couciere, the leader of the Royalists, has made another appeal to the Brazilian Monarchists for $2,500,000 which he says is necessary for the purchase of additional arms, ammunition and provisions.

It is now known that a secret arrangement exists between ex-King Manuel and the pretender of the throne, Dom Miguel of Braganza, whereby, if the Monarchists are victorious, general elections shall be held throughout Portugal to decide whether Manuel or Dom Miguel shall be king. In case Manuel is chosen, the decree banishing Dom Miguel's family will be revoked and his entire family will return to Portugal as royal princes and receive an aggregate of $100,000 annually.

Moreover, in case of the death of Manuel, it has been agreed that his uncle, the Duke of Oporto, being childless, the eldest son of Dom Miguel, Prince Miguel of Braganza, who married Anita Stewart of New York, shall succeed to the throne. A further provision of the agreement is that if Dom Miguel is elected king, a heavy indemnity shall be paid to Manuel.

According to the latest advices, however, neither party to the agreement apparently has much chance of success, as the Republican form of government seems firmly implanted in Portugal.

New Brunswick's Lieutenant-Governor

Ottawa, Oct. 14.—The office of Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick becomes vacant on March 1 next, and it is now certain that the appointment will go either to Dr. Daniel or Senator Wood.

Dr. Daniel steps aside to provide Hon. J. D. Hazen a seat in St. John, and in the event of Senator Wood accepting the position, he will go to the Red Chamber. There is also some talk of appointing Mr. C. A. Magrath Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta when the present occupant, Hon. Mr. Bulyea, steps out. Mr. Magrath was defeated in the constituency of Medicine Hat at the recent elections, and would undoubtedly have found a seat in the Cabinet had he been successful.

There may be a meeting of the Cabinet after the ceremonies to-day in connection with the arrival of the Duke of Connaught, but it is likely to go over until Monday. The Treasury Board is to meet on Monday, and one of the matters to be dealt with is the issue of the certificate giving running rights to the Banque Internationale du Canada.

Shock of Earthquake Slight.

Toronto, Oct. 14.—The earthquake which occurred last night in the Gulf of Mexico began at 10.03 o'clock, according to the local observatory record, and gave only a slight shock at this distance. The disturbance took place underneath the water of the Gulf and caused a tidal wave which rolled up 20 feet high and destroyed the towns of San Jose, Guaymas, Ecycalama and Irstiz. Seventeen ships in Guaymas were also destroyed with nearly all the inhabitants.

Nothing In It.

Montreal, Oct. 14.—The report cabled from London that the Canadian Pacific Railway will operate a steamship service between Rotterdam and Boston was absolutely denied yesterday by Mr. Bosworth, fourth vice-president of the C.P.R. Mr. Bosworth said: "I have no knowledge whatsoever of any such service." He was asked: "Has this any bearing on an Antwerp-Boston line?" He said: "I say officially I have never heard of it."

Side of Island Blows Off.

Seward, Alaska, Oct. 14.—There have been three different eruptions of Bogoslof, the celebrated Aleutian volcano, this season. Deputy U. S. Marshal Hastings of Unalaska, who arrived here yesterday, passed Bogoslof on Sept. 10. Bogoslof is noticed to have completely changed its physical appearance. There was no longer a boiling lake in the centre. Its place was a bay of cold water, the side of the island having been blown off.

Japan to Intervene?

Tokio, Oct. 14.—It is rumored that Japan will be asked to intervene in China and restore order. Fifty thousand first-class troops would be required for the purpose. It is said that Japan favors the revolution.

CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

Friday the Thirteenth Was a Disastrous Day In Toronto.

Toronto, Oct. 14.—Yesterday was Friday, the 13th, and it preserved its reputation for calamity with a long list of deaths from misadventure and several serious accidents were tallied during the day.

Baby Dick, aged 2 1-2 years, was playing in the roadway on Manning avenue, near Barton street, and ran in front of a newspaper delivery motor car. He was struck down and instantly killed. His father is J. Dick, of 778 Manning avenue. His parents and other witnesses of the accident joined in saying that the driver was blameless in the matter, and could in no way have prevented the accident.

Despite the plucky efforts of her fourteen-year-old son to save her when her clothing caught fire from the explosion of a can of coil oil with which she was trying to liven a fire in her home at 168 Christie street early yesterday morning, Mrs. Esther Fish died at three o'clock in the afternoon at the Western Hospital, where she had been taken in the police ambulance. When the mother, who was clad only in her night robe, found that the garment was in flames, the lad rushed out and poured a quantity of water over her, but by this time it was almost consumed and the woman's body was so severely burned that she died.

Andrew Culverwell, who was struck by a Dupont street car in Yonge street, near Agnes street, Wednesday evening, sustaining a fracture of the skull, died at St. Michael's Hospital last night. An inquest will be opened this afternoon.

The body of a man believed to be that of J. G. Galbraith of Port Hope, Ont, was picked up on a pile of earth on the bay shore at the foot of John street early yesterday morning. He wore a masonic emblem in his coat.

First Petition In.

Toronto, Oct. 14.—At one o'clock yesterday afternoon the first protest arising from the elections of Sept. 21st was filed with the Senior Registrar at Osgoode Hall by E. .B Ryckman, K.C.

The petition is that of Alexander McCall, lumberman, of Simcoe, the defeated Conservative candidate in Norfolk, and it is lodged against William A. Charlton, lumberman, of Toronto, his successful opponent.

With the usual circumlocution of election petitions under the Controverted Elections Act, Mr. McCall insinuates that the return of Mr. Charlton was not the expression of the free and untrammelled voice of the independent electors. In fact he goes further, and charges Mr. Charlton and his agents with bribery, treating, personation, intimidation, undue influence, and corrupt practices. He insinuates that the result of the election was not won by the merits of reciprocity, but by the promise of money, office, and such inducements to the voters to vote or refrain from voting.

Will Get Salaries Soon.

Ottawa, Oct. 14.—The Government will get the Governor-General's warrants signed on Monday, and will on Tuesday be able to pay the salaries which have been held up. Among the services which have suffered is the grain inspection branch of the Trade and Commerce Department. The money for this will be telegraphed west the moment the authorization is obtained. The Government telegarph service is in the same position, and the outside service of the Department of Agriculture is short of salaries to the extent of $400,000.

Ottawa, Oct. 14.—Word has been received by the comptroller of the mounted police that the schooner "Laddie," which had been chartered to deliver stores to the Hudson Bay ports of the police, has been driven back. WOMEN HAVE TURN.

Ecumenical Conference Deals With Their Work In Church.

Toronto, Oct. 14.—Yesterday afternoon was indeed women's day with the Methodist Ecumenical Conference, and the able manner in which Mrs. W. T. Haven of the Methodist Episcopal Church presided, indicated the power which is possible in women of Methodism when put to the test. The firmness with which Mrs. Haven rapped the delegates down when out of order and the tact she used in recognizing those entitled to speak on the topic of the afternoon, "Woman's Claims and Responsibilities," won admiration.

In speaking on "Methodism and the Woman's Movement," Mrs. J. Johnson of London, England, maintained that men and women were still in the process of making, and they were far from perfect. She said the talk of women not occupying important places in the world's affairs was nonsense.

"Men cannot advance without women," she said, "neither can women advance without men."

She said there was a wind coming up in the west, whistling woman's suffrage, and it would eventually sweep everything before it. The speaker said women were superior to men in detecting emotion and character in church work, which was invaluable in saving souls.

Mrs. T. J. Copeland, speaking on behalf of Miss Belle Bennett, on "Woman and Missions," said: "We women of the Methodist Episcopal Church are looking towards the rising sun. It is in the eastern uncivilized countries, where women are showing their worth in church work as missionaries."

On the subject of "Deaconesses and Sisterhoods, Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer of the Methodist Episcopal Church, told of the great work of the deaconesses nurses. Last year, according to Mrs. Meyer, 16,461 sick and maimed persons unable to help themselves were taken care of by the nurses."

No Jurors Selected Yet.

Los Angeles, Oct. 14.—After two days of court session in the trial of James B. McNamara for the murder of Charles J. Haggerty, a victim of The Los Angeles Times' explosion and fire on Oct. 1, 1910, no juror had been selected even tentatively last night and no decision had been reached as to the eligibility of the first talesman examined. Although court proceedings moved forward without interruption, the magnitude of issues involved in the examination of Z. T. Nelson, the first talesman, made proceedings deliberate.

At sunset, when court adjourned, arguments on Mr. Nelson's status remained unfinished.

A provision of the constitution of the state, differing somewhat from the constitution of the United States, sections of the penal code regarding the qualifications of jurors, and a contest over the meaning of the record of Nelson's examination, combined to furnish points of contact which affect not alone the talesman under examination but every prospective juror, and for this reason were stubbornly contested.

Killed at Battleford.

Guelph, Oct. 14.—Conductor William Herbert of Guelph, who runs on the G. T. R. between Guelph and Hamburg, received a telegram yesterday stating that his brother, E. E. Herbert, had been killed at North Battleford, Sask., on Thursday.

A Milwaukee steer was killed, dressed and hung ready for market in four minutes and one second. A record.

UNIQUE STORY OF A BOUQET

Ladies in particular will be interested in a unique bouquet that was handed to her Royal Highness at Quebec City on her arrival. In its way it is certainly the most interesting in the world, having an exceptional historical influence.

It was partly composed of myrtle, which formed a portion of the bouquet which the late Queen Victoria carried when she married Prince Albert on February 10, 1840.

The bouquet which the good Queen carried at her wedding 71 years ago was afterwards distributed among her ladies in waiting. One of them, on reaching home, asked her gardener if it was possible to propagate a sprig of the myrtle from the Queen's wedding bouquet. It certainly was possible, and the myrtle grew in great profusion. The gardener was a friend of a florist named Young, of North Derby, Liverpool. Young coaxed his friend to give him some of the sprigs, and he in turn trained them into his fine plants.

Two years ago, a Montreal florist, when going to England, got some of the sprigs from Young, and brought them to Montreal, transplanting them

Within the past week a dozen or more pots of the pretty foliage graced the store.

They were a few days ago stripped of their foliage and went towards forming what is certainly the most interesting bouquet ever presented to anyone on this continent.

When Mr. W. R. Baker, assistant of the President of the C.P.R., told the florist what was wanted, the latter said: "The bouquet shall be for the finest in the land, and it will contain myrtle that has come through the decades from the hand of the good Queen Victoria."

The Duke and Duchess were told about this, and it was natural that Her Royal Highness was greatly interested.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

The Grand Trunk Pacific has refused to recognize a strike among its machinists and boilermakers in Winnipeg and is filling the places of those who went out as quickly as possible.

At several points in the West the men did not strike. In reply to advertisements the company claims many applications were received.

Within six weeks the new G.T.P. shops at Transcona will be working when the temporary shops at Rivers, Man., will be practically abandoned

AMUSEMENTS

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY."

A sparkling comedy, entitled "The Arrival of Kitty" was presented at Griffin's Opera House last night to a fair sized house. The play is somewhat replete with merriment on account of complications and situations. Louis Marlow as "Billy Brown," a college student, and Evelyn Grey as "Jane," his sweetheart, are the centre of attraction in the play and carry out their parts well. Others taking part in the cast do fairly well.

THE HONORABLE W. T. WHITE THE NEW MINISTER OF FINANCE

Who Is He?

The editor of "The British News of Canada," a paper published in Montreal, Toronto and London, gives a biographical sketch of the new Minister of Finance. It is interesting, hence we reproduce it in extenso:

Dark Horse Is White.

The dark horse of Canadian politics is Mr. W. T. White, of Toronto, whose post, the Minister of Finance, is next to the premiership in importance. It is a great position for any man; and it goes to a young fellow of forty-five who is without Parliamentary experience, and who, until six weeks before he was asked to enter the Cabinet had not made half a dozen political speeches in his life. A few years ago he was a clerk in the Assessment Department at the Toronto City Hall; and a few years before that he was a reporter on the Telegram. He studied law and earned his bread at the same time.

Mr. Borden has done, I believe, a great thing for his Government and for Canada in making Mr. White Minister of Finance; and I think my belief is founded on infinitely more than the personal equation that necessarily affects my judgment—for you can't be altogether free from the influence of personal regard.

The chief organ of the Opposition has described Mr. White as "an able and patriotic Canadian." It is a just description; and I am going to prophesy—the first time I have done anything of the kind in Canadian politics—that if the Minister of Finance continues in good health he will give a much needed distinction to political life; and will some day become First Minister. What manner of man, then, is he?

Six feet one, broad shouldered, lean-loined, well blessed with hair, just a little grizzled; reasoning, overhanging brows; good, deep eyes, set like guardians in a fortress; a shortish moustache, below which issued a voice tuned with optimism, a hand that comes to you freely, even generously; candor and a certain distinction in aspect and word—there you have the Honorable W. T. White, Minister of Finance for the Dominion of Canada.

But these things don't make a statesman, although they are mighty valuable adjuncts to the real thing. You want more indubitable signs that he is endued with the unmistakable gift. For a Minister of Finance here is one—go to White's room in the National Trust Offices, any time, and you find his desk clear.

He has the gift of encouraging subordinates to do the work they are paid to do. He said once, apropos his work: Things are running here so that I can put my feet on the table any time.

Effectual Spoken Word.

A clean desk is a great recommendation. But it isn't a complete guide to statesmanship; and especially the sort of statesmanship we are looking for. We want leadership, brainy leadership, that radiates intelligence and inspires confidence. We are badly in need of the effectual spoken word. White can speak it as few other men in the ten Cabinets in Canada can.

For he has literally spoken himself into his great office—not intentionally, either; for it was a big job to get him to undertake the post. He was politically-baptized at Massey Hall, Toronto, on March 9th last, before an enthusiastic audience of four thousand people.

The idea of facing the crowd put a nervous strain on him that interested me immensely; for I happened to be in at all the arrangements for the demonstration. He came early with his wife and went with her to a box; where, sitting back, he looked over the people who had come to hear him and other speakers unaccustomed to multitudes.

He was nervous, but not afraid. He was full of matter—the best defence against the fleeting deceptions of a truly sensitive mind. When his turn came he was still nervous, but the audience wasn't—height and presence are godsends as introducers. He began by reading a quotation. Unless I am mistaken he did that for the purpose of ascertaining what his voice sounded like—an aid to confidence. There was little other reading in the memorable speech that followed—the speech of the evening; and in very real sense, the speech that made him Finance Minister.

One Way of Putting Things.

A man should thank his Maker for such advantages as White has. He was on terms with his hearers from the first moment. He talked as naturally as he does across his desk. He developed a habit of turning to one corner of the hall; and when the crowd with great good humor called him back, he came round to them with equal good humor. They wanted to hear what he was saying because it was worth listening to.

The Honorable W. T. White, Minister of Finance, owes much to Tom White, who used to report for the Telegram, and write the half-column of gay epigrams entitled "Ups and Downs." The gift of phrase-making is his—enviable man. The art of apt illustration is natural to him—fortunate fellow. Scriptural allusions come to him as the thrush that wants to sing flies into the tree—thrice blessed trait.

Let me recall two things from that first speech in Massey Hall, concerning the American offer of reciprocity, the temptation of which he admitted.

"We haven't the excuse that Jacob had when he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage—Jacob was hungry."

"I would not only look this gift horse in the mouth, but I would take good care to keep clear of his heels."

And two from his speech in the same place, the night Mr. Borden spoke there in the middle of the campaign:

"Let the result of this election be to the world a new declaration of Canada's independence of the United States."

I have given the substance, and not the fine form of these typical things. They were sparkling gems in a mass of solid, illuminating argument. In the election campaign, Mr. White made twenty-five speeches in Ontario. They were exceedingly effective when they were made. My information is that they were more effective next day and the day after, when men talked them over.

Take this proof of their effect—the man in the hall nominated White for the Cabinet. That's the sign infallible of the gift of leadership—the best disclosure of the gift of tongues.

Motor Road to Falls.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 13.—At a meeting of prominent citizens on the American side yesterday final arrangements were made for building a boulevard between the Falls and Buffalo. The belief was expressed that Canadians would co-operate in the good road movement by shortly building a model highway from here to Toronto, thus connecting Albany and Toronto by motor road.

Neglecting His Business.

A country doctor was recently called upon to visit a patient some distance away. Driving to where the invalid tied his horse to a tree and started to walk across the field. It happened that work was in progress on a new well, of which the doctor knew nothing until he found himself sinking into the earth. He fell just far enough to be unable to get out of the hole unassisted, and lustily yelled for help. When he was finally pulled up, the hired man remarked to him: —

"I say, doc, you had no business down there."

"No, I don't think I had," replied the doctor.

"Don't you know," continued the hired man, "you ought to leave the well alone and take care of the sick?"

Says the Cook:
"It's the stove, Madam, that's no good."

Says the Stove:

ROCKEFELLER AND THE GOAT.

No butting for John D. if he could help it.

John D. Rockefeller does not possess quite enough money to keep him from being afraid of a common, ordinary, gardn variety of goat. On one occasion, when he was walking along one of the country roads just outside of Augusta, Georgia, where he spends every spring, he overtook a little girl who was driving a goat hitched to a cart.

Walking beside the cart was a young woman who had taken the little girl out for the ride, and it was with the young woman that Mr. Rockefller talked.

"I used to drive a goat myself," he volunteered, in explanation of his interest in this one. "Where did you get it?"

He was told that the goat and cart had been hired. By this time the rich man had taken his stand in front of the goat and was leaning reflectively on his cane.

"Does he kick?" was the next question.

"Oh, no, sir," cut in the little girl. "He doesn't kick, but he butts something awful."

That was enough for in that moment Mr. Rockefeller destroyed the popular idea that he is infirm and feeble. He displayed all the agility of a youth of eighteen by making one leap, that took him from in front of the butting goat to the gully beside the road. And there he stayed until the little girl drove on.

Rise Immediately after Waking.

Get up immediately after waking, says a physician. Do not stay in bed, falling into a half unconscious state. When you are up go through a few light exercises without bells or clubs. Now have a bath, cold if it does not disagree with you, slightly tepid otherwise. Dry thoroughly and use such vigor leisurely. If you do not experience any giddiness, confusion of ideas, palpitation of the heart or nervousness during or after this meal you may continue with it. But should there be one or more of these symptoms there is something in the meal that disagrees. Tea, coffee or cocoa may be responsible, or it may be the heat of the fod, or even the odor-laden atmosphere of the room. The body is never in such a low state of vitality as during sleep, and at no period of the active day is it so weak as just after waking. Do not hurry; do not fill the stomach with irritants; do not indulge in tasks of strength, do not poison it with an impure atmosphre. Thousands of people have found physical salvation in cool, pure air, cool cleansing and a cold, light meal.

Just His Luck.

The lady bather had got into a hole, and she couldn't swim. Nor could the young man on the end of the pier; but when she came up for the first time and he caught sight of her face he shrieked: —

"Help!"

A burly fisherman sauntered to his side.

"Wot's up?" he hoarsely cried.

"My wife! Drowning! I can't swim! Twenty pounds for you if you save her!"

In a moment the fisherman was in the sea. In another moment he was out of it, with the rescued lady bather. Swelling with expectation he approached the young man again.

"Well, what about the twenty quid?" he asked.

But if the young man's face had been ashen grey before, it was now deadly pale as he gazed upon the features of the recovering dame.

"Y-e-s, I know!" he gasped. "But when I made the offer I thought it was my wife who was drowning, and now — now it turns out it was my wife's mother!"

The fisherman pulled a long face.

"Just my luck!" he muttered, thrusting his hand into his trousers-pocket. "How much do I owe you?"

The Principles of Life.

Whoever studies the principles of of life finds in them a unity which binds together all events, all industries, all joys, sorrows, and interests, and enables him to use them for the good end of improvement. They are not ends in themselves, but means to something higher; they are not life itself, but methods by which we are able to accumulate life. The child looks at each lesson as a separate task to be learned for its own sake; but the mature student sees running through all his studies and connecting them the higher purpose of mental development. So the shallow and thoughtless look at each circumstance of life as something to be welcomed or regreted for itself alone; but the wise man or woman sees that through them all runs a deep principle, the development of true manhood and womanhood and that only as that principle is upheld and cherished can the real value of external experiences be extracted.

Hint for the Laundry.

Articles that have been put away rough dried, when required again are often extremely tiresome to iron owing to the difficulty of getting them properly damped. If, however, they are well sprinkled, rolled up tightly wrapped in a damp cloth, and then in a newspaper, and placed for a few minutes in a cool oven with the door open, the heat will cause the steam to rise through the material, and thoroughly soften it, and the articles can then b ironed with perfect ease.

Sudden Rise in Real Estate.

He bought when real estate was low,
Then hoped that it would rise.
A workman dropped some dynamite;
It did — to his surprise.

Most beautiful women are born without hearts, to lure men to madness... It's a merciful provision of nature. If they grieved over every man whose life they spoilt their whole existence would be one long grief.

LORDS AS MUSICIANS.

Many Peers can make a living by Singing.

The recent announcement that Lord Wolverhampton has achieved considerable distinction in the musical world by composing several tuneful songs, although he has never studied music and plays only by ear, reminds one of the accomplishments of Lord Kinnoull, who plays both organ and piano beautifully, and composes and sings well. It was he who composed the hymn that was sung by the choir on the occasion of his marriage in 1903. Lady Kinnoull, by the way, is an expert violinist. Then there are Lord Tollemache, who is a good 'cellist, and Lord Shaftesbury, who possesses a magnificent tenor voice which is often heard in church, and which once led an enterprising American impresario to offer his lordship $150,000 to go on a concert tour through the United States.

Tit for Tat.

The following funny incident happened in one of the largest Edinburgh auction-rooms. A big, stout lady, apparently of the broker class, had ensconced herself comfortably in an arm-chair, and in due course began bidding for a table, on which a tired-looking man, for want of something to sit upon, affectionately leant. Competition was brisk, but in the end the table was knocked down to the stout lady, who no sooner recognised that it was now her property than, stretching out her arm, she sharply rapped her knuckles on it, exclaiming: —

"Hey, man!"

But the tired-looking man paid no attention, so she next poked him with her umbrella, and said, with greater asperity than ever: —

"Lean of that table, will you? It's my property, and you'll scratch it."

The leaner regarder her fixedly for a moment or two, but did as requested. He did more, however; for, pulling a scrap of paper from his pocket, he put it under the lady's nose with the quiet remark: —

"D'ye see that number there, mam? And d'ye see that?" and he next indicated a corresponding number on the arm-chair she was seated on. "Well, then," he continued, when she had acquiesced, with a wondering nod of the head, "git off; it's my chair and I want to sit down."

And off she had to get.

A Division of Labor.

Bobby had been unusually quiet for several hours, so quiet, indeed, that his mother began to worry over the great quantities of stillness that came from the room in which he was sitting. Finally, unable to stand the strain any longer, she rose up from her work and went into the nursery.

"What are you doing, Bobby?" she said, as she discovered the little chap curled up in a chair with a very solemn expression on his face.

"Thinkin' and wishin'," replied Bobby.

"What about, dear?" asked his mother.

"I was thinkin' how nice it would be if I was twins," he answered. "Then the other one could do the studyin' at school and I could stay home and play; and then, when I did something naughty, why you could spank him. When I was sick he could take the castor oil, and"——

"And when you had some candy, what then?" asked his mother.

"Oh, I'd eat it," said Bobby. "It wouldn't do for me to let him get sick."

Antique Things and Antique Minds.

Antique things are for antique minds. The mind that is capable of being attracted to antiques ought to be steam-cleaned, overhauled, tar-papered, and laid away in moth balls in a musty attic, filled with love letters, and family skeletons. There it should be felt until the family moves, when it should be thrown into a pile with other truck, from whence it goes to form the substratum of some new real-estate alotment but recently reclaimed from pulsing tides or stagnant swamps.

An antique mind should not be put in an insane asylum. Such an environment would be altogether too rational. On the other hand, there is some hope for the mind that is satisfied with modern things made in imitation of the antique. That is to say, any mind that doesn't look beyond the label is a material assistance to business. If you must lean toward antiques, do not be too particular about the age of the articles offered.

They Couldn't Kill this Boy.

The young man was told that the ranches of the West were fine places in which alcohol and rum could be worked out of the human system. He journeyed forth and accosted a ranch owner with this: "I'm the swiftest fellow you ever saw. I was known as the swiftest thing on Broadway. Give me a job!" The ranch owner looked him over, had a fit of hysterics, and decided to get rid of him by giving him a job big enough to kill him. "There's a flock of sheep, two hundred of them," he said. "Go out there and drive them into that corral you see a mile away. When you've done that I'll give you a real job." In fifty minutes the Swiftest Thing came back and reported: "I've got 'em all in — two hundred sheep, and nine lambs." "There ain't any lambs," objected the ranchman. "Come and see," suggested the Broadway racer. "I know. I rounded them up." The ranchman went and took a look. The swiftest thing on Broadway had driven into the corral the two hundred sheep and nine jack-rabbits.

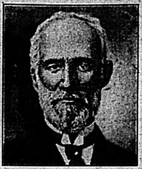
HARDWICKE, N.B., Jan. 17th. 1910.

My general health was miserable as a result of this disease, and I became depressed and alarmed. I was treated by physicians without the slightest permanent benefit, and I tried all kinds of pills and tablets



"I saw the strong testimonial in favor of 'Fruit-a-tives' by New Brunswick's 'Grand Old Man' Senator Costigan, and I knew that anything he stated was honest and true and given only to help his fellow-men. I tried 'Fruit-a-tives' and the effects were most marvellous, and now I am entirely well from all my Chronic Constipation that I suffered with for years." A. G. WILLISTON.

PARDONABLE QUACKERY

How a Physician Had to Fake to Cure

As a doctor, one of the English heroes who assisted in the defence of Kars, had special opportunities of studying the habits and character of the degraded races of Asia Minor. He found it necessary to be more of a quack than a physician among them. "As my patients became numerous, and pestered me at all hours, I fitted up," he tells us, "a spare tent to serve as my dispensary, and gave out that I received at the time of afternoon prayer flasar). I took my seat at the door of my tent, and soon had a crowd around me, many suffering from real diseases, many from imaginary ones, and many bringing for my inspection the effects of diseases such as palsied limbs and stiff points." One of his patients was an old woman, who came forward, and taking hold of the corner of his cloak, kissed it, and then, kneeling before him, began, in a very wheedling manner, to call his attention to her case. "She went on to describe the most anomalous symptoms, affecting her eyes, ears, limbs, and sometimes every part of her On further inquiry, she confessed to be quite well at that moment; but a year ago, having had these strange complaints, she dreaded the same thing would invade her this year. I then promised to give her strong medicine, but ordered the crowd to stand at a short distance from us. A space is cleared, and all wait in silent admiration for my remedy. I slowly draw forth a bottle of strong liquor of ammonia, or smelling-salts, from my medicine-chest, and, holding it before my patients eyes, tell her to draw in a strong breath when I put it to her nose. I acordingly first hold her nostrils, then, having removed the stopper, I apply the mouth of the bottle to the nose, the fingers are removed, a long sniff is taken, followed by a sort of spasm, and she falls to the ground. A hum of horror runs through the crowd; the patient, after a short interval, rises, her eyes streaming with tears; and then breaks from the crowd, 'La Ilaha Ilia 'Llahu Mahommed rasulu 'llah!' — 'There is no God but the God, and Mahomed is the Apostle of God!'"

Valuable Information about Taxicabs

In reply to many correspondents from the West, it may be said that a taxcab is a lineal descendant of Captain Kidd on its father's side and Jesse James on its mother's. To look at, it is a harmless creature. To read about, it is positively virtuous. But to monkey with, it is the triple concentrated extract of Montreal's Ananias Club, fishermen, real-estate agents, mining promoters, and autobiographers. Whether this is because of sheer willfulness or because it was sick with the scarlet fever at the time the rest of the class studied the tables of linear measurement is not clear, but the fact is that a taxicab can get more miles out or three blocks than a landlady can get pieces out of a single pie, and it can ruffle one's temper more effectually than the most lipsomaniacal Jehu that ever cracked a whip or framed an oath.

An old mackintosh is full of possibilities to the woman who intends to go camping or fishing or even to one who does gardening and her own laundry work or scrubbling. The circular cape may be cut into two aprons finished with a waistband. Cut the skirt portion of the coat from the underwaist, form a box plait at the center back, put on a waist band and close at the left front, and it is a splendid water proof skirt. The pocket should be left in if it is placed right. The frayed hem at the bottom may be trimmed and finished with black skirt binding. From the remaining parts of the waist a sponge bag or waterproof cuffs may be fashioned.

The Foolishness of Over Work.

The labourer who wears out all his powers in the machinery of life's work and takes no part in its thought and imagination, and the thinker who wears out his brain before its time and has no part in the practical activity of life, have each lost much of the pleasure that rightly belongs to them. They may not be conscious of it, but it is none the less true that the health, happiness, and real effectiveness of every man can be gained only by the harmonious union of labour and thought.

His Wife's Tact.

"I'll give my wife credit for not causing me to be swamped by big hat bills of hers," declared the husband boastfully, in the presence of his wife's lady guests. "All the hat bills I get are small ones, which, however, come in very, very often, although I haven't observed a new bonnet on her since Easter."

"I'm so glad you're pleased," rejoined his wife, coming unexpectedly into the room. "The fact is, you're still paying for that last Easter bonnet, the bill for which the milliner is sending to you in installments."

The Eucalypus of Australia.

While the eucalyptus, or Australian blue gum tree, destroys malaria and keeps off mosquitoes in marshy soil, it has no such effect on dry soil. The difference is ascribed by a German scientist to the fact that the tree is constructed to act as an evaporating machine, and only does its work in marshy land. A feature of the tree is its daptability to different climates, it [illegible] now grow in almost every civi- [illegible] country where [illegible] do not occur.

Don't Talk Too Much.

When we are in the company of sensible men, we ought to be doubly cautious of talking too much, lest we lose two good things — their good opinion and our own improvement; for what we have to say we know, but what they have to say we know not.

WHAT IS TRUTH!

Men will believe nothing what they cannot understand.

Truth comes to us only by glimpses. There are some who refuse to receive a partial truth, who insist upon having a clear idea of the whole, or at least upon persuading themselves that they have it, before they yield assent to anything. Thy will believe nothing which they cannot understand, they say, forgetting that, although we may both believe and understand many things to be true, it is only by occasional glimpses that we can ever discover how they came to be so. For instance, we all believe the wonders of the natural world, the existence and motions of the planets and starts, the changes in the earth's surface, the marvellous growth in the vegetable world, and the still more wonderful development of the animal creation — of conscious life and human intelligence. In believing these things we understand that they are so; but how they came to be so, how they perform their several functions, what are the laws which uphold them and the forces they obey — these things we do not understand, except as study or thought, or participation in another's thought, give us glimpses of the truth.

NOBLEMAN INVENTS INVISIBLE AIRSHIP

Mirror-Like Surface of Huge Craft Will Reflect its Surroundings and Effectually Hide It

The recent disaster to the great naval airship at Barrow, England, and the sharp criticism of the British press, it is said, at last has caused the British Admiralty and War Department to adopt different views with regard to the development of military aeronautics in England. Four aeroplanes have now been ordered from the Bleriot Company in France, and a British War Office expert is now in France attending the military competitions for heavier than air machines that are taking place at Rheims.

This complete change of official attitude is primarily due undoubtedly to the remarkable lessons taught by the Army manoeuvres held recently, and almost simultaneously, in France and Germany. Comparatively little notice has been taken in Great Britain of the part played by aeroplanes at those manoeuvres; yet the results obtained in utilizing the heavier than air machine for purposes of war cannot but have been most important. One may judge this from the fact that as soon as the operations came to a conclusion the Kaiser, in one of his characteristic speeches, declared that the money spent on military aviation in Germany was quite insufficient. A few days later a semi-official announcement was issued to the effect that there would be a substantial increase for the purpose of aeroplanes in the German Budget over the $375,000 voted last year. Similarly in France the Budget for 1912 for military aviation was at once raised to nearly $3,400,000.

Curiously enough, simultaneously with the British Government's decision to give up further experiments with dirigibles, came the news that a young engineer of noble birth, Baron A. Roenne, has just been granted patent rights in England for an improved airship, which promises to be a wonder—if the invention can be successfully worked out.

Baron Roenne, who has already designed and built a number of dirigibles, believes he has solved the problem bearing on the equal distribution of weight in a lighter than air vessel. According to him the number of accidents to airships would have been almost nil had the constructors given greater importance to the question.

In order to preserve this essential requirement of "flight," the inventor's airship will be so built that the passenger-car will be exactly of the same length as the framework.

"As planned by myself," said Baron Roenne, "the new airship will have accommodation for 400 passengers and be capable of remaining aloft for at least a week. She will be fitted with fifteen motors, each developing 120 horsepower, and this aggregate power of 1,800 will, I am confident, enable her to travel at a speed of 48 miles an hour, and this in a 40-mile wind."

Another wonderful feature of Baron Roenne's projected airship is that at a height of 3,000 feet she will be absolutely invisible. It is by the method of equalization of light and shade that the inventor claims that it is possible to secure invisibility for the airships while in the air.

The cover, or envelope, of the airship is made of chromium, a metal possessing a highly-polished surface, which is perpetually retained by a covering of transparent varnish. Therefore, the metal is equivalent to a mirror, and it is by reflection that the invisibility is obtained. The surface and sides of the polished envelope naturally must reflect the same color—bright or murky, according to the weather, and blend with its environment. The device has been submitted by the inventor to the officials at the Greenwich Royal Observatory, who declare that it is thoroughly scientific and certainly practicable.

ANCIENT VILLAGE FOUND

Remains of Houses and Utensils Used By Prehistoric Man

What is claimed to be a Neolithic walled village has been discovered near the main road between Harrogate and Bolton Abbey at a spot a few miles from Otley, by Mr. W. Storey, of Fewston, a member of the Royal Archaeological Society of Great Britain and Ireland.

The discovery may be divided into two parts. In a dell behind a hill are 24 stone circles, varying in diameter from 20 feet to 3 feet, the whole being surrounded by evidences of a stone wall.

One of the stone circles was a well. A number of stone implements, which experts ascribe to the Neolithic period, have been found.

On a site above the village is a 20 foot stone circle commanding a magnificent view for miles down the valley, and evidently at one time used as a look-out.

On the other side of the hill are two stone circles connected by a huge stone slab, a small stone circle, filled with smaller circles, about 8 inches in diameter, and 2 feet deep, containing charcoal, and two large circular erections, supposed to have been used as a place of worship and a crematorium.

A LONE ANARCHIST

One Man Determined to Revolt Against the Law

The church of Clermont, in the Oise, France, has been turned to a novel use. A temporary outlaw hoisted a red flag on its steeple, and then posted himself with a gun, ready to fire from the top at anyone who dared to approach. Someone had the presence of mind to ring the bell, which sounded like a tocsin, and of course the whole town turned out. The man at the top of the tower fired several shots to warn them that they had better not come nearer. The whole trouble arose between him and another man with whom he had a row. For this he was brought before a police court and was fined fifteen francs. The fine exasperated him, and rather than pay it, he took possession of the church and the steeple and hoisted a red flag to show his revolt against existing society and authority. Gendarmes were sent to parley with him, and after parleying all night they at last induced him to surrender. He did so on condition that he would have another hearing at the police court and that he should present whatever new arguments he had to show that he ought not to be fined.

STORY OF A SHIPWRECK

Five members of the crew of the wrecked liner, Fifeshire, which went ashore off the coast of Somaliland, told a thrilling story when they landed. Death at the hands of frenzied Somalis, or by drowning or starvation were the alternatives that seemed to face those on board when the Fifeshire ran on the rocks. "Most of the passengers were in their bunks and many of them were asleep," said Robert Nixon, steerage steward. "Signals of distress were made and rockets fired, but these brought no assistance. We passed a horrible night, and in the morning, to make matters worse, we saw that the shore was lined with savages, armed with spears and looking decidedly unfriendly. They made threatening gestures, and altogether made it clear to us that our presence was not desired. "The shore was only about four hundred yards away, and about twenty of the natives swam out to the ship; Captain Craner, however, would only allow one of the men to come on board. When the man got on deck he pointed to those of his party who were on shore and drew his hand across his throat in a significant manner. He muttered something the whole time, but we could not make out a word of it. The mate dressed him in a gold-braided suit and made him presents of tobacco, and with these he swam ashore."

All through the day the natives watched events on the liner, and after dark it was thought they might attempt to surprise the ship's company. Careful watch was kept and guns were discharged at intervals. The ship was abandoned, and those on board—110 altogether—left in four boats for Aden, some 450 miles away. The third officers' boat capsized, but the occupants were rescued, and their craft was righted. At eleven o'clock at night, those in the third officers' boat sighted the light of a liner, the French steam-ship Adour. After sixteen hours searching the Adour picked up two of the other boats, but no trace could be found of the boat containing the second officer and twenty-three other persons. There were about five women and two children among those in the missing boat. A number of animals, including a kangaroo, four goats and several donkeys were on the Fifeshire, and were set free by the captain before leaving the vessel. The cargo consisted mainly provisions.

Convicts on Strike

Almost anything seems a good enough excuse for a riot now-a-days. Convicts in the gaol at Castidias, Sardinia, have been in the habit of buying sweets and fruit with the few halfpennies allowed by the authorities. The vendors having put up the prices of these luxuries, the convicts rioted so effectually a week ago that a regiment of artillery had to be sent from Cagliari to soothe them.

PRIDE BEFORE A FALL

Notorious French Convict Comes to Grief Through Exhibition of Photograph

Leon Cibion, an escaped convict from the French penal settlement at Guiana, has paid for his vanity by being re-arrested.

Cibion early took up crime as a profession. After numerous imprisonments he was condemned in 1907 to seven years penal servitude. He managed to escape, however, and went to Hayti, where he stole another Frenchman's papers and returned to Paris two years ago.

Some months ago Cibion became engaged to a girl, and before his marriage suggested to a party of friends that they should all be photographed as bachelors for the last time.

The photograph was excellent; in fact it was so good that it was the undoing of Leon.

The group was exhibited in the photographer's window, where it was seen by a detective, who recognized the escaped convict. Cibion was traced to his house in Paris and promptly taken into custody.

PARNELL'S SISTER

Drowned While Bathing at Ilfracombe —Her Lonely Life

A romantic story came to light at Ilfracombe following the tragic death, while bathing there, of Miss Anna Catherine Parnell, a sister of the famous Irish Nationalist Leader. Miss Parnell went to bathe in a rough sea and was drowned. At the inquest next day the story of her solitary life under the assumed name of "Miss Palmer" was related.

Miss Parnell had lived at 6 Avenue road, Ilfracombe, in the house of Mrs. T. Rowe. She had been there since June, 1910, and on arriving there she gave the name of Palmer, and at once said that she was "getting on for sixty." While she was with Mrs. Rowe she had three letters in the name of Parnell, on which curious fact Mrs. Rowe said she passed a remark. After that all letters came in a sealed envelope, and addressed in the name of Palmer. Miss Parnell was a regular bather in the sea. When Mrs. Rowe remarked that it was not much of a day to go bathing, Miss Parnell merely said, "Rubbish."

The story of her death was told at the inquest by Mr. T. Austin, the bathing attendant. A heavy sea was running, and Miss Parnell began to drift out. Mr. Austin went for help, and Mr. Parkin and his son, with Police-Constable Bedford, launched the boat which was kept at the Tunnels, and secured the body, which was floating on its back.

"Accidental death" was the verdict.

Miss Parnell was one of four sisters, and at one time took an active part in the work of the Ladies' Land League. She was an eloquent platform speaker, and the author of numerous articles in Mr. William O'Brien's paper, the "Irish People."

At one time she lived at Brockley, London, S.E., also at Southwold, Suffolk.

It was her custom at Southwold for nearly six months in the year to go bathing every afternoon. For most of the time the water was far too cold for the ordinary bather to brave it. She always had two Irish retrievers with her; one named Judas stood guard over her bathing-box. She rarely spoke to anybody, and the landlady of the house where she stayed during those years afterwards said she never had half an hour's continous conversation with her.

Discontent Among the Foreign Population of South Wales

The rapid growth of foreign colonies in South Wales is causing discontent among the native population. The latest protest is from Newport, where many of the residents of the Pigwenlly district, a working-class area, have sent a petition to the Watch Committee, directing attention to the large and rapidly growing settlement of Chinese and other foreigners in their midst, and suggesting that the committee should take measures to check this growth. One of the means proposed is that property owners should be advised not to let premises to foreigners.

INVISIBLE BANDITS

Some Crimes are Committed by Murderers Whom No One Has Seen

The neighborhood of La Roquette sur-Siagne, near Cannes, France, has again been thrown into a panic by the attempt to murder a farmer and his wife by the "invisible bandits of Pergomas."

A year ago a band of murderers who were known by this name ravaged the district, attacking villas and farmhouses. The bandits were nicknamed "invisible" as no one had ever seen them.

Lately, Mme. Roussey-Dalon, the wife of a wealthy farmer, while standing at the window of her father's villa, was shot by an unknown person, expiring almost immediately. The only clue was a piece of wadding discovered on the window sill.

An attack was made on a farm at Mouans-Sartoux, a village close to La Roquette sur-Siagne. While a farmer and his wife were going to bed a hail of stones rained on the shutters of the windows. About two hours later, when the couple were in bed, a gun was pushed through an air-hole in the shutters and three shots discharged into the room.

One bullet lodged in the head of the bed, and on examination it was found to be similar to that which caused the death of Mme. Roussey-Dalon. Detectives are scouring the country-side in search of the bandits.

PRINCES ON BICYCLES

Young Royalty Had a Pleasant Time in the Highlands

The young Princes enjoyed immensely their holiday in the Highlands. Every day they engaged in healthy sports in company with their tutor, Mr. Hansell, who reduced the period allotted to studies to a minimum. Prince Albert and Prince Henry invariably had a spin on their bicycles before breakfast, which was served in the garden cottage adjacent to Balmoral Castle, in which they lodged. Afterwards they usually indulged in shooting, fishing and kindred sports. The Princes are adept cyclists, and indulge freely in trick riding. A favorite practice is to ride backwards until a collision with Princess Mary or some other bystander appears to be inevitable. Princess Mary also cycles a great deal, and drives a pair of greys with her governess and a coachman in attendance. Prince John does not participate in his brothers' sports, but he is frequently a keenly interested spectator.

RECOVERING LOST TREASURE

The Salvage Association is After Gold and Silver Bars

In the North Sea, between the islands of Vlieland and Terschelling, an expedition organized by the National Salvage Association, is now at work with a view to the recovery of treasure which was lost with the English frigate Lutine in 1799 while on passage from London to Hamburg.

The Lutine set sail from the Thames in October of that year with an enormous amount of gold for the English garrison on the Dutch island Texel, and gold and silver bars for Hamburg banking houses, valued in all at $6,035,000, but she was wrecked during a violent storm and only one of the crew was saved. Repeated attempts have been made to find the precious metal, notably in 1800-1 and in 1859-61, and it is estimated that a little over $500,000 worth has already been recovered.

TO HONOR SHAKESPEARE

The New Theatre in London Will Cost a Fabulous Sum

The executive committee of the Shakespeare National Theatre Fund now feel almost certain that an immense theatre facing Trafalgar Square will not only be an accomplished fact, but that it will be actually opened on April 23rd, 1916, the tercentenary of Shakespeare's death. The site alone will cost about $2,500,000, and the theatre itself an even larger amount. The fund now possesses only $500,000, but this money has been raised without appealing to the public. Such an appeal will now be made, and the committee expects to raise the necessary $5,000,000 in two years.

"As to the repertoire," says the secretary of the committee, "it will include, on an average, at least one Shakesperian and one other English classical play per week, and will also embrace new or recent plays, English and foreign, of the first order of merit.

"The architectural features of the theatre are matters for the future. The design will be the subject of competition, of course. We hope to secure the endowment before we put up the building."

ITALY'S CHARITABLE QUEEN

The Queen of Italy, who is a remarkably original woman, recently instituted a charming charity, which has added greatly to her popularity. Fifty of the most poverty-stricken motherless babies in Italy have been collected and brought to a white house overlooking the sea, which her Majesty has purchased at her own expense, and here they are to live and be educated under the immediate supervision of their benefactress until they are competent to look after themselves. The Queen visits her creche at frequent intervals, accompanied by her children, plays with the small inmates, who call her "mother" and are all known as the "Queen's children."

The long-rumored breach between the Duke of Westminster and his wife, the Duchess, seems imminent. Of late the Duke has been squandering his patrimony to such an extent that he has been placed on allowance by the executors of his father's estate.

HOME SWEET HOME!

Grand Old Hymn, Known the World Over, Was First Sung in Public When Its Author, Payne, Was Under Arrest.

When the boundary line between Georgia and Tennessee was being fixed, it crossed an Indian trail which became a place of some importance. There had sprung up between Georgia and Tennessee a spirit of rivalry, and the boundary line fixing the limits of the respective territories increased it. To try and harmonize the contending factions, the government established a trading post there. John Howard Payne appeared upon the scene, and was accused of inciting the Indians to insubordination. He was placed under arrest as an incendiary and carried to the council house. During Payne's incarceration a band of Indians arrived, among whom was one known as Oochee or Rattling Gourd. His wife and papoose were buried in the neighborhood, and he visited their graves, where he mourned. It was seen that he was a broken-hearted man. One morning he was missed, and the patrol in searching, found him weltering in his own blood between the graves of his loved dead, he having fallen on his bayonet, which pierced his heart. He was buried by the soldiers, and after the service was over, Payne, who had been a silent witness to the pathetic scene, began singing softly to himself that hymn, or song which since has been sung in every land. General Bishop, who had kept a close scrutiny on Payne, heard the song and called him to him. "Young man," said the stern old fighter, "where did you learn that song?" "I wrote it," said Payne. "Where did you get the tune?" "I composed it," said Payne. "Will you give me a copy?" "Certainly I will."

General Bishop surveyed him for a moment, then said: "Well, a man who can write and sing like that is no incendiary. Appearance may be against you, but I am going to write out your discharge and give you a pass through all the territory."

That was the first time "Home, Sweet Home" was ever sung in public.

An Upright Thief

A Prince once said to Rabbi Gamaliel: "Your God is a thief; he surprised Adam in his sleep, and stole a rib from him."

The Rabbi's daughter overheard this speech, and whispered a word or two in her father's ear, asking permission to answer this singular opinion herself. He gave his consent.

The girl stepped forward, and feigning terror and dismay, threw her arms aloft in supplication, and cried out, "My liege, my liege, justice — revenge!"

"What has happened?" asked the Prince.

"A wicked theft has taken place," she replied. "A robber has crept secretly into our house, carried away a silver goblet and left a golden one in its stead."

"What an upright thief!" exclaimed the Prince. "Would that such robberies were of more frequent occurrence!"

"Behold, then, sire, the kind of a thief that the Creator was; he stole a rib from Adam, and gave him a beautiful wife instead."

"Well said!" avowed the Prince.

CONQUEST OF THE AIR

Discovery and Progress of Airman's Art has Wonderful Possibilities in Connection with Public Services and Work of Exploration.

The fundamental principles of aerostatics was discovered by Archimedes and formulated as follows: "Everybody plunged into a fluid is subjected by this fluid, to a 'pressure' from below to above which is equal to the weight displaced by that body." The first application of this principle was to balloons, care being taken to produce a body whose total weight was less than that of the volume of air it displaced.

But although the principle was thus applied as far back as 1783, it was not until 1884 that the first balloon capable of being steered was produced by Col. Renard, who accomplished a circular flight in what deserved the title of a dirigible. The reason for this was that in order to steer a body floating in a fluid it is absolutely essential that this body should possess an independent speed, to permit it to move in the fluid of its own accord. In 1885 Col. Renard succeeded in obtaining an electric motor of 8 horse-power, weighing only forty kilogrammes a horse-power and capable of great endurance.

To-day mechanicians have succeeded in perfecting motors especially designed for aviation of the almost incredibly light weight of two kilogrammes a horse-power and of such perfect action that they can start in an instant without preliminary preparation. Professor Berget explains clearly and briefly the mechanical difficulty of the problem and the scientific reasons why it took a century to discover how to guide the machine which the brothers Montgolfier launched into the air in 1783.

Next came the problems connected with the resistance of the air, which determine the shape of the envelope for a dirigible balloon. A spherical balloon cannot be propelled. So long ago as the beginning of the nineteenth century Marey-Monge predicted the necessity of adopting a shape, should an attempt be made to propel aerostats, which should have "the head of a cod and the tail of a mackerel."

The applications in civil life of locomotion in the air will be numerous and varied, and it will doubtless be possible to travel by public service or by private vehicles. The special use of the highway of the air which Prof. Berget foresees is by the post office with aeroplane messengers from city to city every hour, the service, interrupted only by heavy storms. The exploration of unknown regions in such difficult countries as Africa, the heart of Asia, Australia and South America, with accurate maps, is one of the important scientific uses to which the new ships may be put. The whole of Central Africa, for example, could be mapped from airships, acting under international sanction, with a ship over Timbuctu and the shores of Lake Tchad, in French territory; Leopoldville, for the Belgian Congo; Dongola and Lake Albert for the English stations.

Progress Comes by Death

One of the straight facts about living beings is that so far as this earth is concerned, they die, and the question is whether we can hope to find that this fact of death has a use for life. That would be a great discovery, for we are apt to think that death is useless and cruel.

Well, death certainly has a value for life — not for the life of the creature that dies, but for the lives of others. If there were no death there would be no parenthood and childhood, for plainly there would soon be no room for the introduction of new beings if those already there did not make room for them. Without parenthood and childhood, and all that they mean, no kind of life—human, animal, or vegetable — would be anything like what we know; and there would be no more progress, for that depends on new and higher kinds of life being born in the world. Thus, without death, mankind could never have been produced.

The Parnell Monument

The elaborate Parnell monument in Dublin, which has been in course of construction for a long time past, at a cost of about $45,000, is now complete, and the unveiling will take place on October 1, when the ceremony will be performed by Mr. John Redmond, M.P. Parnell is represented standing in oratorical attitude, with his left hand resting on a table. The inscription, an extract from one of Parnell's own speeches, reads as follows:—"To Charles Stewart Parnell. 'No man has a right to fix a boundary to the march of a nation. No man has a right to say to his country, 'Thus far thou shalt go and no further.' We have never attempted to fix a ne plus ultra to the progress of Ireland's nationhood, and we never shall.' "

A Salutary Lesson

An artist, a barrister, and a doctor, motoring from Dijon to Chalon-sur-Saone together, devised a novel method of punishing an unprovoked act of aggression by a peasant who, out of sheer prejudice against motor cars, threw a large stone, which struck the artist on the chest. The occupants of the car pursued and captured their assailant, took him into the car, quietly divested him of his coat, watch, and money, and then, after proceeding at full speed for over 30 miles, set him down on a lonely roadside to walk home in the broiling sun. His clothes and other property they sent back to him subsequently.

There are thousands of women with harsh, faded, characterless hair, who do not try to improve it.

BORDEN AND HIS CABINET

By H. W. Hellwell

(Copyright by Publishers Press Limited, Montreal.)

had been made great by the man, — the man who will go down to posterity as the greatest Prime Minister since Sir J. A. Macdonald, and whose shoes were not easy to fill and though Mr. Borden had shown something of his calibre as a statesman, while in opposition, he had yet to show his worth as the first minister of the crown. And the earliest test was the forming of his government. How he has succeeded we know. The prime minister's difficulty was not Sir J. A.'s when a friend once complained about the weakness of the make up of one of his governments, "Give me," said Sir John, "better timber and I'll build a better cabinet." Rather it was the splendid quality and number of his followers — practically it was the process of elimination. Further, it is an unwritten law in the Dominion that every Province shall be represented as well as the two races and two great religions, so that while it would be possible to have chosen better individually, on the whole the cabinet chosen by Premier Borden to help him in the governing of this great country is worthy not only of the leader but of the people as well. In short it is a government of which Canada can be proud.

In dealing with the personal of a government, most of the members of which are new to official life, the private characters and influence amongst their fellows will help considerably to judge the reasons of their inclusion in this really representative Cabinet of Canada. When the task of leading his Majesty's loyal opposition fell to Mr. R. L. Borden in 1901 the Conservative party was weak in numbers and there was jealousy within the ranks — and to make matters worse even his friends had little confidence [illegible] this quiet lawyer from Nova Sc[illegible] to ultimately lead his party to [illegible]tory. They did not know the man. He gave up his law practice which was considerable, and gradually gathered around him young men — each a born fighter and of irreproachable character both in public and private life — and instilled into them something of his zeal and honest determination to win. The work of overturning a strong government was great but Borden and his men held on and there is no doubt that their opposition last session to the Liberal government was a magnificent example of a fighting combination who had confidence in each other and their leader. Sir Wilfrid Laurier realized the strong position of the opposition and, trusting to the country again returning him to power resigned. Again the Liberal premier was frustrated. Mr. Borden and his lieutenants had organized the party so well that even Sir Wilfrid had no chance in the elections. This quiet man from the province by the sea had surmounted obstacles that few would attempt. He had after ten years of splendid labor, —work, that as it began to be known gained the encouragement and then the admiration not only of his friends but of his political foes — come to his own.

HON. J. A. LOUGHEED,
Minister without portfolio

That Mr. Borden is determined to carry on the governing of this country himself — without the aid of busy bodies — was well exemplified in the forming of his cabinet. Sir Hugh Graham of Montreal "Star" fame evident thinking he had won the election with his paper tried to force one or two of his friends on to the Premier — but he failed.

Mr. Robert Laird Borden, who is the eighth Prime Minister of Canada since confederation was born fifty seven years ago in the hamlet of Grand Pré and after a short scholastic career as professor in Glenwood Institute was called to the Bar in 1878. As a lawyer Mr. Borden soon had a good practice and his popularity amongst his fellow-members of the Bar is evidenced in his retaining for ten years the presidency of the Nova Scotia Baristers

Society. Mr. Borden was first elected to the House of Commons in 1896 for Halifax and though he was defeated in 1904 his first constituency re-elected him in 1905, again returning him in the election that made him Premier as well as member.

The Premier is one of the most widely read men in Canada and if it is true, as has been said, he is a better statesman than politician, then a new vista is open for Canadian students — a wider appreciation of the possibilities of Canada's prosperity on the world's politics. Be that as it may in placing the destiny of their country in the hands of R. L. Borden the people of this country have taken a step that can only mean one thing—Empire building in its best sense.

HON. R. L. BORDEN,

HON. GEORGE FOSTER

In asking the old war horse Hon. George Foster to join his government as Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Borden took a wise step for outside his long and brilliant experience in the political field under such leaders as Macdonald, Tupper, Abbot and Thompson, and as principal supporter of Borden during his uphill fight against the Laurier administration, Mr. Foster is easily first in the house as a debater and all his debating powers will be wanted to fight Laurier as opposition leader. Further Mr. Foster's complete knowledge of parliamentary procedure, and his previous two official visits to England will be of invaluable help to the new government.

HON. FRANK COCHRANE,
Minister of Railways and Canals.

GEORGE H. PERLEY

In looking over the list of ministers none is more popular than George H. Perley whose wonderful powers of organization as chief whip did so much to bring victory to his party in the last election. When Mr. Perley — who is a wealthy man and head of the great lumber firm of G. H. Perley & Co. — went in for politics he determined to make parliament take a keener interest in the elimination of disease from our congested districts, and though he has not succeeded as yet in carrying out all his reforms Mr. Perley has, with his speeches — which are always worth listening to — induced many municipalities to take a saner course in the granting of building leases and the acquisition of open spaces for the people. This public spirited man has given his time and his money to practically every philanthrophic institution in Ottawa and district.

C. J. DOHERTY

In selecting his minister of Justice, Mr. Borden had many lawyers of experience to choose from, but when his choice fell upon ex-judge C. J. Doherty everyone realized the wisdom of the appointment. As a jurist and authority on constitutional questions the new Minister of Justice has few equals and his knowledge of men will do much to leaven the purely technical side of his great position. Judge Doherty — who is one of the most cultured men in the House — is a brilliant conversationalist and those who have had the privilege of his company have left feeling stronger and with a new confidence in human nature.

HON. ROBERT ROGERS

It seems to be the accepted thing that the Inferior portfolio should be in the hands of a western man, but in the Hon. Robt. Rogers from the Manitoba Government this custom is not only carried out but as the little village of Lakefield in the Province of Quebec has the honour of being the birthplace of Mr. Rogers the East can claim an additional representative to its list. If previous experience goes for anything Canada has in Mr Rogers an ideal Minister of the Interior, for previous to his taking up political work, this strong man — he was a cabinet minister when he was but thirty-six years of age — had made a fortune out of general and grain dealing and mining. Mr Rogers who bears a splendid reputation in the West, is a typical son of the soil, a man who calls a spade a spade, who hates cant and who loves a good fight. Mr. Borden certainly made no mistake in taking Robt. Rogers into his cabinet.

F. D. MONK

Probably one of the strongest men in the new cabinet is the Hon. F. D. Monk who represents our French compatriots though he himself is half English. Elected first in 1896 this single minded patriot has taken his parliamentary responsibilities so seriously that his practice — which was a large one — had to suffer and only his sense of duty to his people held him on. So that Mr. Monk entered the Cabinet a comparatively poor man. Truly a life of self sacrifice and a splendid encouragement to men of culture to serve their country. As Minister of Public Works Mr. Monk is the spending man of the Cabinet.

HON. LOUIS P. PELLETIER

In choosing the Hon. L. P. Pelletier to take the Post-office Department the Premier picked one of the most brilliant men in French Canada. Even as he won gold medals in his scholastic career, he won provincial portfolios when he was still a young man and his brilliancy at the Quebec bar won for him a large law practice. This experience will stand Mr. Pelletier in good stead in his new duties.

W. B. NANTEL

The second French Canadian in the Cabinet is Mr. W. B. Nantel who is the new minister of Inland Revenue. He comes into the Government with a good reputation.

A. E. KEMP AND SENATOR LOUGHEED.

Two of the ministers without portfolios, Mr. A. E. Kemp and Senator Lougheed, have worked hard in the past for the party and though at present their positions are of an advisory nature yet much is expected of them.

T. W. CROTHERS

Mr. Crothers who served a good apprenticeship for his position as Minister of Labour when he acted as Chairman of the party, will make a good administrator as the legal knowledge and good judgment are known assets of this intellectual giant. When in opposition his acid speeches were more feared by his opponents than even Mr. Foster's; but underneath all his apparent brusqueness Mr. Crothers has a warm heart as all his friends know.

three representatives in the government and gave up the Provincial portfolio of Lands and Mines to enter Federal politics evidently knowing his opportunities, should the conservatives be returned. Mr. Cochrane is a man of strong common sense and holds in contempt anything smacking of the ward heeler. The Department of Railways and Canals will suit Mr. Cochrane's abilities as a man of business.

HON. MARTIN BURRELL

For the second time in Canadian history an Englishman holds a cabinet position in Canada — the other being

A. S. GOODEVE, M.P.,
Who is slated for early promotion.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell, ex-Prime Minister. Mr. Martin Burrell is probably the best man that could be chosen for the portfolio of Agriculture. He is a practical farmer and a successful one at that. His particular branch is fruit growing but he knows all about every branch so that his experience combined with his splendid knowledge of public affairs and men will help Mr. Burrell in his propaganda of being the real representative of the farmer in the government.

HON. SAM HUGHES

It is appropriate that the Militia Department should go to Col. Sam Hughes — though the Montreal Star wont like it — who during the long opposition kept his predecessor up to the scratch. It will be remembered that the Colonel also knows something of real war having served in South Africa. Being an old newspaper man Col. Sam will be the publicity agent of the Government.

J. W. REID AND W. J. ROCHE

There are two medical men in the Cabinet, Dr. J. D. Reid of Prescott who takes up the portfolio laid down by Wm. Patterson — Customs; and Dr. W. J. Roche, from Manitoba whose position as Secretary of State is growing in importance.

HON. W. T. WHITE

The most difficult position in the Cabinet that Mr. Borden had to fill was that of Financial Minister. He had plenty of good material to pick from and in choosing Mr. W. T. White from Toronto he selected one of the best known financial men in Canada. His genius for organization has been in great demand by the public institutions of Ontario and now that the country has the command of his great talents many financial reforms will be made.

J. D. HAZEN

New Brunswick's loss in her Prime Minister is surely Canada's gain, for a harder fighter and more beloved man is not known in the Dominion. Mr. Hazen will have the delicate task as Minister of Marine and Fisheries of adjusting the naval policy of the new government. What that policy will be it is not for one to suggest but that it will be in conformance with the Premier's promises to the electors we have every confidence.

Such in brief is the personnel of the government of Canada — a government with a clean slate, for Premier Borden has tied himself to no particular policy and no particular clique. His hands are free, he has a strong government backed up by a large party sent to Ottawa by the will of the people. That the premier will give a good account of his stewardship is the confident hope of Canadians — a stewardship that will make for the public and material prosperity of this fair dominion and its people.

St. John, N.B., April 12, 1911.

"I am glad to report that my knee is completely cured of Rheumatism—thanks to Father Morriscy's No. 7 Rheumatism & Kidney Tablets, as they alone are responsible for my cure. I was troubled for a number of years, and tried everything I heard of, and needless to say, spent quite a sum of money without any results. I have no further trouble now, and my knee feels as good as new. I was personally acquainted with the late Father Morriscy and knew his remedies are good. Anyone suffering from Rheumatism and Kidney trouble should by all means try No. 7 Tablets, as I can cheerfully recommend them."

WATCHES IN EARLY DAYS

For General Time-Keeping the Sand-Glass Was Discarded in Sixteenth Century, When Watches Were First Seen in England.

Sand-glasses were introduced about A. D. 330, and they still have their uses when boiling eggs or taking a division in the House of Lords, though these are only miniature reproductions of the early time-tellers that took just one hour for the sand in the upper bulb to pass into the lower.

Watches were supposed to have been introduced into Britain only in 1577, but though this may be correct if taken in a general sense, it is nevertheless certain that Henry VIII. had a watch; and in 1572 the Earl of Leicester presented Queen Elizabeth with an armlet with a watch hanging from it. When Malvolio speaks of his anticipated great fortune he says: "I frown the while and perchance wind up my watch or play with some rich jewel."

It used to be the custom to lend watches to be worn on special occasions, and in the "Alchemist" Jonson says:—

And I lent my watch last night to one
That dines to-day at the Sheriff's.

In 1698 English watchmakers became so famous that an Act was passed to compel makers to affix their names upon the watches they made in order that discreditable ones might not be passed for English. The best-known makers of the time were Noble, Tosbroke, Nares, and Pepys. The first watches were supposed to have come from Nuremberg, in Germany, and they were known under the name of "Nuremberg Eggs," on account of their shape, which was egg-like. The works were enclosed in a circular metal case, and they were hung from the girdle. At first the movements were entirely of steel, then brass was adopted for the plates, and pillars, the wheels and pinions only being made of steel, and at last it was only the pinions that were of steel.

Blind but Brilliant

That two old men who are totally deprived of their sight should be able to build a comfortable seven-roomed dwelling without any assistance from anyone is certainly a very remarkable feat to accomplish. The house that they built was twenty feet square, and is quite handsome in design and finish. These sightless builders, named respectively Frank M. Steele and Joseph Martinez, live out in one of the little suburbs of Berkeley, California. The house is a box-frame cottage constructed of pine lumber, and the exterior walls are covered with plain redwood lumber. It is practically a two-storey building, the first storey being part basement. There are a number of doors, of course, and six windows in the building. There is a little porch at the front, and steps leading up from the sidewalk. Both exterior and interior have been very neatly painted. Remarkable as the statement may seem, all of this work was done by Steele and Martinez without the least assistance from anyone else. They planned the building themselves, and all of the work was done without any suggestions. These men are both past the half-century mark.

THE HIGHLANDERS TARTAN

Distinctive Coloring of the Cloth Identified with the Garbing of the Gael Had Early Eastern European Origin.

It will interest others besides those Canadians of Scots descent to learn that the term tartan is not Gaelic, nor is it claimed that it was first used in the Scottish Highlands, for it is a well authenticated fact that it was in use in Gaul, Wales, and Ireland before we have any reference to its use in Gaeldom. Tartan clothing, however, has been retained in Celtic Scotland long after it had been given up by all the other Celtic nationalities, and hence it has won for itself the term "Highland." The Gaelic term for tartan is "breacan," from breac, spotted, and in the old Gaelic tale of Curio, which Professor Mackinnon assigns to the fourteenth century, the word "brecan" occurs. In his "Remarks on British Antiquities" (1776), Borthwick prints the Accounts for 1474 of John, Bishop of Glasgow, Treasurer to James III., which contain a reference to "tartane" cloth. It has since been discovered that the term used is "tartar," which bespeaks an Eastern origin, and that, as Skene points out, the the first indisputable reference to Highland tartan occurs in the "Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland in August, 1538." It is generally admitted that district tartans are older than clan tartans, and it has been shown how certain tartans associated with particular districts have been annexed by the clans predominant in those areas. It is interesting to note that there is historic evidence to prove the existence of clan tartans as early as 1587. In a Charter of that year, granting Hector Maclean, heir of Duart, certain lands in Islay, the feu-duty is made payable in the form of sixty ells cloth of white, black and green colours, which correspond with the hunting tartan of the House of Stuart. The evolution of certain clan tartans is extremely interesting. For example, the Gordons, who for a time wore the Huntly district tartan, now wear the tartan invented for the "Gordon Highlanders" by introducing a yellow stripe into the "Black Watch" pattern. In like manner, the Clan Forbes evolved a tartan for themselves, by adding a white line to the "Black Watch," or 42nd tartan. Cadet families, ambitious to possess a tartan of their own, generally added a few lines to the tartan of the clan to make a distinction, but always left sufficient to the original set to show the relationship.

THE EARTH AND THE SEA

Facts and Figures of Interest With Regard to the Earth and Its Population, the Sea and Its Depths.

Sometimes this old world seems a rather large place, and occasionally one gets the idea that there are a great many people;—but, after all, there are only fifty-six million square miles of land on which we may build houses and grow crops and walk about, and there are only fifteen hundred million persons to do these things. If the earth's population was evenly apportioned to the various continents and islands, there would be twenty-seven persons on each square mile; but, as it is, there are 101.2 persons to each square mile in Europe, 49.1 persons on a like area in Asia, 14.2 [illegible] North America, and only 1.5 in Australasia. The polar regions are [illegible] lonely lands, however; for there the population is only six-hundredths of a person to the square mile. The total population of the earth at the time of the death of Emperor Augustus was not over fifty-four millions, about three-fifths the present population of the United States, and the total population of Europe did not exceed fifty millions before the fifteenth century.

The greatest depth of the Pacific Ocean is supposed to be nearly six miles, and that of the Atlantic four and one-half miles.

The peoples of the world, after much contention, have divided themselves into some fifty principal political divisions.

The average duration of a human life is about thirty-three years. One-quarter of the people on the earth die before reaching the age of six, one-half before sixteen, and only one person out of each hundred born lives to be sixty-five. It is calculated that every minute there are sixty-seven deaths, ninety-six thousand a day, or thirty-five million a year. Births take place at the rate of seventy a minute, one hundred thousand a day, or thirty-six million each year.

A Popular Godfather.

Few men are in greater demand to stand as godfather than Mr. J. M. Barrie, the well known author, who has just added another godchild to his long list in Miss Cissie Loftus's baby. As there is no man fonder of children, the duty of sponsor is very agreeable to Mr. Barrie, who takes his responsibilities very seriously. Mr. Barrie has admission to Kensington Gardens, London, any hour in the twenty-four. This privilege he owes to the fact that the late Duke of Cambridge was so charmed when he read "The Little White Bird" that he presented a key of the gardens to Mr. Barrie, with "The Park Ranger's compliments." Mr. Barrie appreciated the favour, for he delights to wander with "Peter Pan" in the leafy dells when the rest of the world is asleep.

THE EDIBLE CRAB

Something of the Curious Life of This Half Fish Half Animal.

The edible crab is obliged to moult or cast off its shell many times during its life. This moulting appears to be an unpleasant ordeal to pass, for the crabs often die during the act. When we see that they are not only obliged to escape from the carapox or shell, but also from the hard covering of their legs, delicate mouth-parts, and even gullet — turning themselves inside out, as it were — it is not surprising that they perish during the ordeal. The crab crawls up into some secluded nook or cove in shallow water to moult, out of th way of its hard-shelled relatives, for the helpless, newly-moulted, or soft-shell crab, if found, is devoured by them, as well as by several species of fishes. Fortunately for the crab, the soft covering hardens rapidly, and in a few hours it has a new and strong armour, and it then goes fearlessly out into deep water.

Boosting.

Things may be coming your way but be careful that they do not come with such force as to carry you away with them. There are tides and tides. Some are natural, some are supernatural and some are dangerous, because they move with a force which is too strong for our character and skill. "Beware of uncontrolable circumstances". This was an expression which first fell from the lips of Wellington. The editor of a periodical remarks: —

"Old salts, who are forever yarning about wrecks and their causes, have a theory that what is called a "boosting" sea accounts for more than one of the disasters that have occurred in the long history of shipping. A "boosting" sea is a sea that runs heavily after a steamer, and, if it does not actually "poop" the vessel, yet, by the roll of billow after billow, accelerates its speed to a degree unguessed by the navigator, until finally the ship, having unconsciously overrun its course, brings up upon a rock or hidden reef, and is reported at Lloyds' as "lost."

DANGEROUS FAMILIARITY

Shooting Season Brings Much Enjoyment, But Drastic Measures are on Demand for the Careless Handlers of the Rifle.

The shooting season is upon us again. For a great many men and boys it is going to mean a few days at least of well-earned holiday and some genuine sport, carried on in a manner becoming to true sportsmen. It is going to mean welcome additions to the larder at a time when the range of meat foods has become narrow and monotonous. Roast wild duck is not to be despised at a king's table. But unless it is remarkably unlike previous seasons, this shooting season is going to mean more than sport and good eating. It will mean death to a number of people, sorrow in the homes they leave, and passionate regret never to die out in the heart of the man whose hand caused the "shooting accident" of which we read and hear so often that it scarcely causes a pang of pity or surprise. None of these deaths are ever caused by malice, but nearly all of them are avoidable if proper care is taken. Real familiarity with a gun breeds respect; it is your youthful, inexperienced sportsman with a desire not to appear like an amateur who treats his weapon with dangerous familiarity and adds the largest quota to the list of the slain. There are a group of men — middle-aged men now — who have gone deer hunting together every season since they were young fellows. There never was an accident in that camp in all the years because the infallible rule was that no man was to shoot till he was sure at what he was shooting, and no man was to bring a loaded gun into camp under any pretext whatever. Breaking the rule meant that the camp was closed forever to the guilty one. Making it compulsory to have a gun license is a good thing, but suggests a sporting authority one of the conditions should be that any man who caused an accident with a gun during the game season, should have both gun and license taken away from him for the rest of the year, and aggravated cases of heedlessness should be punished by fine or imprisonment.

WANT A FIXED CALENDAR

British Proposal to Even-up the Months Would Cut Apart as Specials New Years' Day and "Leap Day".

Some novel proposals are contained in the Fixed Calendar Bill presented by Sir Henry Dalziel, and supported by Mr. Wilkie, Mr. Pringle, and Mr Munro Ferguson in the British House of Parliament. The bill purposes to substitute for the present irregular calendar a fixed calendar having regular periods, of which the week is a common measure. An appended table shows that the months of January, February, April, May, July, August, October, and November would each consist of 28 days, whilst the remaining months of March, June Steptember and December would each have 35 days. "New Year Day" is set apart, thus bringing the total of days up to the requisite number of 365, whilst for leap years a special day is set apart as "Leap Day," which is to be intercalated between the last day of June and the first day of July, as reconstituted by the bill. A clause of the bill lays it down that the New Year Day and Leap Day shall neither of them be accounted days of the week, and shall not, except where specially mentioned or provided for, be held to be included in any computation of days, but shall otherwise be public Bank Holidays.

Why He Felt Bad

"Football," cried the old gentleman in the "Red Lion" smokeroom, "is a curse and a disgrace. Football," he continued, thumping the table with his fist, "is an abomination, and a blot on civilisation. The very name of football,' he shouted, sweeping two glasses and a pint pot off the board in his excitement, "the very name of football is enough to make a decent, respectable man go and 'ang hisself out of pure disgust!"

"The gentleman seems to feel rather deeply on the subject," said a commercial traveller, who had been listening to his remarks.

"He do," assented one of the natives.

"Has he lost something at a match," inquired the commercial.

"He 'ave so. 'Ad a relative killed at one," replied the other, oracularly.

"What relative was it?" asked the querist.

"'Is wife's first husband!" was the response.

Electricity from the Star.

Experiments conducted in Ireland, if they are to be trusted, reveal a distinct electromotive force exercised by the stars. Using a reflecting telescope of two feet aperture to concentrate the star rays, and a sensitive electrometer to note their influence, the experimenters had reason to believe that they were able not only to detect, but to measure, the electromotive force of both stars and planets. To Venus, for example, they ascribed a force of about seventeen one-hundredths of a volt, and to Jupiter a force of at least three one-hundredths of a volt. In the case of Jupiter only a part of the planet's light fell upon the electrometer, so that the experimenters inferred that his entire electric influence must be much greater than that stated. Sirius, which appears to us as the brightest of the fixed stars, showed a force amounting to two one-hundredths of a volt.

A BLESSING IN DISGUISE

The Man With a Shaky Memory Has Reason to be Grateful, For He Misses a Heap of Worries.

Almost any day of the week you can hear people remark:

"I wish I hadn't such a bad memory"; or, "Really, I must try to do something to improve my memory."

But why? If the man with a bad memory knew all he had to be grateful for, he would probably begin to thank the Fates for the blessing thus bestowed upon him.

Just think of all the unpleasant things the man with the good memory remembers. How often he must wish he could forget only a few of them.

If the man with the good memory has cold mutton twice in a single week the chances are he remembers it and grumbles. You can give the man with a bad memory cold mutton every day for a fortnight, and he will be just as happy as if he had had a different joint every day.

As likely as not at the beginning of the third week he will turn blandly to his wife and say with, perhaps, just a touch of irritation:

"My dear, I'm rather fond of a cold joint sometimes in this hot weather; don't you think we could have it once in a way? Now, a cold leg of mutton is rather a nice thing——" And the wife, if she has any sense at all, will answer:

"Why, certainly, dear, I'll see that you get it to-morrow."

Then, many of us have acquaintances who say nasty things about us, and plenty of these nasty things are sure to be repeated to us by our friends who have good memories.

The man with a really bad memory can never remember these things and so he can't repeat them, and, therefore, he gets the credit for charitableness, and his friends tell one another he is "one of the few men — or it may be women — they know who hasn't got a spiteful tongue, and who doesn't repeat all the tittle-tattle he— or she — hears."

There, at once and without any trouble, the man with a bad memory gets an enormous pull over his companions who pride themselves on forgetting nothing.

In addition to this he can't remember what disagreeable things Jones told him Brown had said about him, so that when he meets Brown, to whom he had intended to give "a bit of his mind," he not for the life of him recollect what he wanted to give a "bit of his mind" about.

RIGHT ABOUT CUT!

What a lamentable sacrifice of time, money, energy, and temper is involved in the shaving of the chins of the British nation! In its monetary aspect alone last year it is estimated that £12,000,000 sterling was expended in daily recurrent efforts to efface the beard — "Nature's glorious insignia of manhood." A scientist has calculated that a man shaving until he is 80 has mowed down 27 ft. of hirsute stubble. Think of the waste!

"Why is it," inquired a distinguished foreign ambassador, "that you English generally shave your beards, when both your present monarch and his predecessor set an example by letting them grow?"

There was a time when the chins of the male portion of the nation assumed the appearance of that of the reigning king. As one historian remarks, "The royal portrait reflects a general fashion from which only the disloyal or the indifferent departed."

In the "sixties" and "seventies," and even the "eighties," every other gentleman you met wore a beard. Why did the fashion change? Why is everyone now clean-shaven as to the chin — all except a million or so, including His Majesty King George, several dukes, many members of Parliament, the leading financiers of the day, the leading artists, the leading merchants, Mr. G. Bernard Shaw, and Mr. A. B. Walkley and Sydney Fisher.

About the Modern Girl

The woman of to-day differs from the woman of earlier times, for not only has she a clearer consciousness of her own intellectual possibities, but she has broken down the barriers of custom, prejudice and tradition, which for long surrounded her, and has found scope for her talents in those wider fields hitherto reserved exclusively for men. In public works women are serving in the employ of the London County Council, Board of Education, Local Government Board, Home Office, and Board of Trade. In agriculture and gardening, hygiene and cookery, philanthropy and politic woman has justified the position accorded to her; and in the arts she is making her mark, and this with an intelligent development which has placed her on equality with man. In poetry, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Christina Rossetti, and Alice Meynell are names in the first rank; whilst in painting in 1875, we have Ruskin's recantation of his opinion that no woman could paint publicly expressed, his "iniquitous prejudice" confessed, his frank acknowledgement that Lady Butler — Miss Elizabeth Thompson as she then was — was doing 'Amazon's work." Since that time we have the work of Mrs. Stanhope Forbes, Mrs. Henrietta Rae, Mrs. Jopling, Mrs. Adrian Stokes, Miss Eleanor Fortescue Brickdale, Mrs. Swynnerton and Miss Lucy Kemp-Welch, as illustrative of the extraordinary development, the robust originality, the sound technical method to which, in this branch of art, woman's work has reached.

Mother (crossly)—"Freddie, haven't I told you that you must not talk when I am talking."

Freddie—"But, mamma, you won't let me stay up after you go to bed."

That is an honorable work which is done as well as we can do it.

Some people speak as they think—only more frequently.

If you want to do your relatives a favor, don't visit them.

ABANDONED RAILROADS

Timber States South of the Line are Dotted with Rusty Remains of Tracks, for Which there is no Traffic.

Recent reports show that in the United States there are eighty-one abandoned railroads, says the Railway Magazine. From eighteen the rails have been removed and thirty-four are described as "not in operation" or "operations suspended."

In regard to the first class, the franchises seem to have expired by disuse, but the tracks are still in evidence; in the second class the company had pulled up stakes and quit, in the third a variety of causes may have contributed to the stopping of wheels.

The shutting down of a railroad may simply mean that it has outlived its usefulness. The neighborhood served by the line may have developed in a fashion that the builders hardly contemplated and with which the rails and rolling stock are incapable of dealing.

Along comes capital and either gobbles up the little road altogether or puts it out of business by offering the travelling facilities and accommodations that it cannot attempt to rival. It is really prosperity that shuts down such a road.

Then there have been roads built on the basis of the anticipated boom of a resort, a town or a section. The hope of the boomers not being realized the line goes into the discard.

Again, the initial promises of a mining district are such that a line is built for its benefit. The district doesn't pan out or goes barren after a time and in consequence the road is abandoned.

The same is true of regions in which the natural resources are many or enticing, notably in those that yield oil. The disuse of lumber roads is inevitable also. The timber states are dotted with the remains of rusty rights of way and almost every year adds to their number.

Of course the list of derelict lines does not indicate that the judgment of modern railroad builders was in every case at fault but rather that the possibilities of the country are increasing, and with them the need for the larger facilities that the abandoned lines could not supply.

One of the smallest and perhaps most unprofitable railroads in the United States was the abandoned Kentucky Northern that ran from Simcoe, Ky., to a junction with the Louisville & Atlantic railroad a distance of eight miles. It was incorporated in May 1902. From the first it proved to be a drain on the pocketbooks of the stockholders. The surrounding population seems to have disliked the line. Not enough passenger tickets were sold and not enough freight was shipped to pay for the keeping of its one locomotive its lone passenger coach or its solitary flat car.

In the year ended June 1908, its operating expenses were $12,333, and its net earning $697.

The "Philosophers Stone"

The philosopher's stone was something which the chemists of long ago were looking for. In those days they were called alchemists, alchemy being the old name for chemistry. They are the same words, al simply meaning the.

The general name of philosopher was given by other people to all who studied Nature in any of her aspects. The object of the search was to find something that would turn base metals into gold. This was really not worth aiming at, but in the search, which never succeeded, the alchemists found out all manner of chemical facts, for which we must always be indebted to them. And we must do them the justice to suppose that many of them were deeply interested in what they found out, for its own sake. The philosopher's stone would not have been worth finding for the sake of the gold, for directly gold became common it would lose its costliness. It has no real value in itself beyond that of a great many other metals. We are learning now that one metal can be turned into another, especially through the action of radium.

It is not certain that we shall be able to make gold for a long time yet, but radium already goes a very long way towards being what our ancestors looked for in the "philosopher's stone."

A Timely Hint

One of the best known and ablest of English judges is not given to the use of superfluous words, and his fondness for brevity is such that he embraces every possible opportunity of leading others to seek it also. During the hearing of a certain case which came before this judge, a learned King's Counselor prosed away at what seemed likely to be an interminable length, until His Lordship, becoming utterly weary of the proceedings, suddenly looked towards the speaker, and gently enquired what day it was.

The question was so unexpected that the barrister looked a while, in sheer amazement, at the questioner. "Tuesday, me lud," he replied, when he had partly recovered from his surprise.

"Ah, yes, quite so," responded the judge, in his suavest tones. "You see, I only just wanted to mention that I shall not be sitting after next Saturday."

Nasty Professor!

The student was handsome, easy, and self-possessed, but appeared to be utterly ignorant of the simplest phase of the subject. Professor W. put question after question to him, without receiving one intelligent reply. Finally, the student said, naively:—

"I am very unfortunate, Professor; you never ask me anything I know."

The professor said nothing, but gravely tore off a tiny piece of paper from a convenient pad.

"Here, Mr. B.," he said, handing it to the student, "write all you know. Take plenty of time — there's no hurry."

NAVAL BATTLE WITH HORSES.

How 3000 Cowboys Captured the Spanish Fleet.

Paez, who was the first President of the Republic of Venezuela, was perhaps the only man who ever fought a naval battle on horseback. It is a matter of history that he, to whom more than any other man, apart from Simon Bolivar, Venezuela owes her independence, actually attacked and captured with his cavalry a fleet of ships.

Bolivar was endeavouring to cross the Apure River in the struggle for independence, but was prevented from doing so by some eight Spanish gunboats, which moved up and down the stream as he did. Bolivar was in despair for a while. To Paez, who was second in command, he appealed for counsel, saying that he could never cross the river so long as the Spanish gunboats were there. "If only we could capture them," the revolutionary leader observed, "the rest would be easy."

Paez decided that he would have those ships or die, and he accordingly told his regiment of cowboys to follow him. Paez himself had been a cowboy on the plains of the Orinoco, and was the idol of his men. So when he spurred his horse into the stream, calling on his men to follow, of the 3,000 cowboys and their mounts, which are taught to swim as well as to gallop, there was not a single man to hold out in this unique assault upon the gunboats. It being night, the Spanish fleet were taken quite unawares. The cowboys wriggled from their [illegible] to the dec[illegible] els, letting their mounts [illegible] o shore. Having thus cut [illegible] own retreat, it was a question of [illegible] or die. They fought well, and ever[illegible] gunboat was captured.

QUAINT JAP PILGRIMS

Japanese peasants, when they mselves up for the business of mage, are the quaintest figures ble. The women generally their petticoats well above knees, either leaving the legs re or else swathing them in white bandages, which form a kind of leggings. Their hair is done in the usual elaborate Japanese style, and generally an artificial flower is stuck in at the top. It does look so comic to see the wizened face of an old woman with a large red rose bobbing over it. And this floral decoration is not confined to the women; when you meet a party of pilgrims you often see the old men also with a flower stuck coquettishly above the ear. It appears that many of the poor old dears from the country get so bewildered by the magnificence of the places they go to and the distractions of shopping that they quite lose their heads, and consequently their way. So the ever thoughtful Japanese police have insisted that every party of pilgrims is to have a distinguishing badge. At Nagano it was the commonest thing possible to see some ancient dame rushing about wailing, "Where is my party? Where is the purple iris party?" or, "Where is the yellow-towel-round-the-neck party?" And then she would be told that the "yellow-towel-round-the-neck party" was on its way to the station, or that the "purple irises" were still saying their prayers in the temple.

Australia has Tallest Tree.

Australia claims to have the tallest tree in the world. It has long been thought that to California belongs this distinction, but, while California trees are of gigantic dimensions they do not come up to Australia's eucalyptus trees. The Californians are noted not so much for their height as for their girth and diameter. The tallest tree in California yet discovered was found by actual measurement to be 340ft. high. Australia's record gum tree can beat this by 140ft.

Not Gratifying.

Some one sent the manuscript of a story to a literary friend, with the request that he would criticise it. The friend returned it, with the following note:

"My dear Blank: Your book contains much that is both new and good; but what is new is not good, and what is good is not new."

It is wicked for us to go about with ces which indicate that life has en a disappointment to us instead f a glorious joy. It shows that we ave missed the real object of living, hat we have never caught a glimpse f the realities of life, but that we re living in the shadows, in the loom instead of the sunshine of ality, of truth, of beauty. It indicates that we have not even caught glimpse of the real glory of life.

WOMAN'S WORLD

FASHIONS ETIQUETTE RECEIPTS CHIT-CHAT

SEASONABLE AND SUITABLE

One of the pretty effects recently introduced, suitable for a woman of moderate proportions, can be of various descriptions of material according to taste and purse, with neck and sleeve trimmings to match.

DAINTY HOME-MADE SASHES

Sashes play such an important part in this summer's fashions that every woman who has leisure should make a supply of them. They give a graceful finish to a plain bodice, and are indispensable for outlining the high waistline of the Empire robe, and generally add pretty and coquettish details to the toilette.

On a soft lingerie gown, particularly if worn by a young girl, they bestow a dainty and becoming touch. For afternoon and evening gowns a sash end with deep fringe gives an excellent appearance, and soutache braid can be used with great success in helping to make these dainty sashes and girdles.

For dressy occasions, for instance, a girdle and sash ends of pale blue satin ribbon is a great requisition. The ends of the sash, for which two yards of wide ribbon are necessary, should be elaborately embroidered either with gold embroidery silk, quite an easy matter when a transfer pattern is used, and finished with pale blue silk knotted fringe.

The latter is cut in seven places, twelve inches long. Each piece must be folded and gathered in the centre on to a heavy piping cord; the cord is then pulled tightly through the gathered ribbon, and thus forms one loop of the rosette, one inch wide, which, when finished, makes a double frill of the ribbon.

PUFFS, SOFT, IRREGULAR

When the hair is elaborately dressed it may be puffed. These however are no longer stiff and set in regular rotation. Rather are puffs soft, irregular as to form, with here and there an end escaping as a ringlet.

Sweetmeat Pudding.

Line your pie-dish with puff paste, and screen it with minced orange, lemon, and citron peel (one ounce of each). Now beat well four yolks and two whites of eggs, with six ounces of sugar, and a quarter of a pound of butter. Mix and beat well all together, then lightly sift in two table-spoonfuls of dry flour. Set the dish into a hot oven until the paste is just set, then pour into it the mixture. If the eggs are beaten properly it will resemble a thick cream. The pudding must be watched while cooking, so that it will not burn.

In the heart of a woman there are few chambers and still fewer doors.

CONVENTIONALITY

It is a mistake to bring up children with the idea that they should do something just because some one else does it, or not do something, because some one else does it not. The reason is this. We never can tell what associates our children will have as they grow older, and they should do or not do a thing from a principle or reason — independently of their associates. The woman who runs her husband into debt because she must have what her neighbour has, is often the result of "Mother's training." You must do this because other little girls all do it.

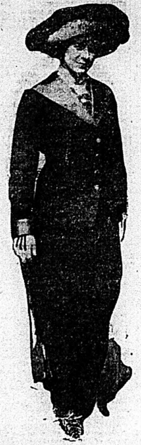
The woman who slanders her best friends behind their backs, is often the outcome of the same sort of things — she does it because the people she associates with do it. The men and women who drift into gambling or drinking — or worse, not from viciousness or always even weakness, but because — their friends do it.

Now we can't make all our children's friends for them. We can't guide all their footsteps — even if we were fit to, — but we can teach them ideals, principles so that if they have to wear cotton while their friends are wearing silk, they will not get sulky over it, but wear it so gracefully and cheerfully that their friends in silk almost envy them the cotton.

It is not necessary to be a prude or a prig, because we do not choose to gamble or drink. But to gamble and drink when we dont approve, and don't want to, is often the curse of conventionality which has made us its slave and dwarfed the moral courage which God gave us all originally.

When we free ourselves of the idea that our neighbours and associates are to dictate to us what shall be our pleasures, who shall be our friends and what our tastes, we shall all be happier. Eccentricity is not in the least necessary — I only mean sincerity of purpose and principal' simplicity. Then we can go where we like, with whom we like in a coat of armour that is clean and strong.

THE EAST INDIAN TENDENCY



This suit is much favored in Paris shops. It is made of fancy black serge and satin. The fringe trimming along the hem of the skirt is decidedly more fanciful than healthy.

A novel treatment of white lawn morning frocks is to trim them with checked ginghams — the pretty blue and white, lavender and white and pink and white that everybody knows and likes.

The Napoleonic tendency is very strong in Paris fashions. A chic turn of the hat brim, a military dash of the collar, lapel, cuffs or seperate bag are the little things that suggest the conqueror.

Whole embroidered hats and hats with embroidery-covered crowns are shown in the millinery shops and will, no doubt, be seen later on with many embroidered costumes on the streets or at summer resorts.

Ribbons and piece velvet are both most generously used on hats of all kinds, and it is thought by experts that velvet especially will be strong continuously for the next 12 months in the millinery field.

DRESSES FOR CHILDREN

The one-piece dress for children holds its place in the hearts of the mothers, and the little garments are made in many pretty styles. Figured materials, such as challis, cambric, lawns as well as ginghams, linens, French flannels, etc., are all in favor for the making, and these are trimmed with bias bands, briad, or embroideries. A favorite finish is the embroidery scalloped edge.

Omelette

1 oz. corn flour, 2 eggs, ¾ teacupful milk, ½ oz. butter, pepper and salt.

Separate the yolks from the whites of the eggs. Beat up the yolks in a small basin. Add a pinch of salt to the whites and beat to a stiff froth. Blend the corn flour with the milk, and add it to the yolks. Season with pepper and salt. Add the whites of the eggs lightly to the mixture. Put the butter into the omelette pan, allow it to get hot, then pour in the omelette. Shake the pan gently over the fire, and when the omelette is set and the underside slightly browned fold it in front of the fire till the upper side is browned. Double over and put on a hot plate. Chopped ham, tongue, chicken, or kidney can be added to the mixture, before doubling over.

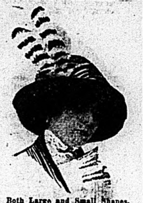
MY LADY'S COLUMN.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE CARE OF PLANTS.

That the home may be enjoyed to the full there must be growing plants and flowers in the house as well as out of doors. Not many winter ferns will live beyond a winter if kept in a steam heated room, and nothing is so sad as a half dead palm struggling bravely to keep alive amid most adverse surroundings. So if the house is to be kept cheerful there must be some pots of bright colored blossoms about. It is still early enough to buy the bulbs of many spring flowers and to have the pleasure of watching the flowers come to being from the first tiny shoots.

A city girl will probably not have any spot where she can go in for the delights of a conservatory, but in almost every country house there is some corner with good exposure to the sun which can be fitted up and made to serve as a real conservatory. In this home greenhouse a number of young plants can be kept until time to plant them out of doors in the back yard or garden, and here next year bulbs can be placed directly after being taken from the ground during the early part of January, and flowers thus kept in the house through the entire winter. How delightful always to have a small hyacinth, narcissus or primrose in flower to take to a friend who is ill and forced to spend all her hours in the dreary emptiness of a hospital room!

FROM THE GAY CITY



Both Large and Small Shapes.

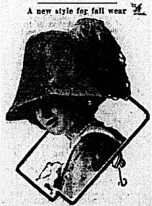
Both large and small shapes are shown in the autumn models, but the undoubted favorites for first wear with tailored suits of wool and mohair are the helmet shapes.

LOW-CUT DRESSES.

The present fashion of low-cut necks for dresses and waists does not indicate that the neck of every one who wears them must be left naked and exposed. Every woman should have yokes and guimpes at hand for these dresses, either because the style of an undressed neck would be unbecoming, or unsuitable, or because of comfort on damp or cool days, and there will be many occasions when a yoke and a high collar attached will be found necessary.

A fashion magazine tells us that, from the amount of sheer materials now used with every kind of gown, it would seem that the one aim of every dressmaker was to render the garment as perishable as possible. For the yokes and guimpes to be worn with the low-cut dresses, lace and net are very much favored rather than the sheer goods, because of their utility.

A new style for fall wear



This is a popular helmet shaped hat in coronation red. The small and medium sized shapes appear to prevail in fall millinery.

PARAGRAPH POINTS ON FADS AND FASHIONS.

Fringes and galloons are used to weight down tunics.

Beads worked in designs are very efective on evening costumes and are used as well on afternoon blouses and simple little dresses.

Hair "swirls" have come in again held in place by tortoise and amber combs, sometimes studded and again of metal set with mock gems.

There is a growing tendency toward the Norfolk jacket style of coat which means extra length and a belt that slips well down below the waist.

Little coats of net are used to finish afternoon costumes. They hang over veils of tulle and gave a "suit" effect without any uncomfortable warmth.

Flowers of small varieties, such as forget-me-nots, lilacs and violets, are combined with tulle to form cabochons at the fastenings of a bodice or skirt.

By the time a man knows anything worth telling he is usually old enough to keep his mouth shut.

HOME NURSING

A great many cases demand linseed poultices, and these should be prepared and applied quickly and well, or they lose their heat. The proper method is to get flannel, a small bottle of olive or linseed oil, and oil-silk, and, if liked, a piece of very thin and transparent book muslin which has previously been washed out to make it soft, ready before beginning to make the poultice.

Always put a poultice on very gradually from the bottom, so that the patient's skin becomes gradually accustomed to the heat, always testing the temperature first of all as children's skins are very tender.

In cases where there is any fever it is most advisable to keep a temperature chart, taking the temperature morning, noon and night, and at the same hours each day, for comparison. After usage the thermometer should be disinfected in a solution of carbolic acid and shaken down two or three degrees below normal, 98.4, before again using the instrument.

Sick room cookery is an item which needs special attention, the monotony of any prescribed diet demanding careful serving and manipulating to render it at all appetizing.

The sick room should always be kept extremely bright, with plenty of fresh air, but no draughts. A fire should be kept burning in cold weather, but not too big a one. This always lends a cheerful appearance to a room. Some difficulty may be found in keeping up the fire if the patient happens to be asleep. Have several large logs near at hand, but not in a scuttle, together with an old glove easily slipped on. The coal can then be put on the fire with the gloved hand, making no noise at all.

Books, too, always brighten up a room; choose them carefully with a view to the little patient's individual taste, bringing him a new one now and then. To a child who loves them, this will always be a treat.

But above all, always see there are some flowers near at hand and prettily arranged, they will save a dull room from insignificance, while a really pretty room without this final touch loses all its charm. Take care to remove them during the night, as they are apt to consume the air.

As soon as it is permitted, the little patient should have a change of air, to bring back the roses to his cheeks. Nothing will do this so quickly as the bracing sea air. The east and south-east coasts are certainly the best for a convalescent, the south being much too relaxing, and the west very subject to rain. Let him run wild for a week or so, and his lost strength will speedily return.

COLD WATER CANNING FOR YOUNG HOUSEKEEPERS

Pare and halve peaches or pears and put in fruit jars at once. When filled, cover to the top of the jar with syrup prepared before beginning to pare the fruit. Make the syrup of granulated sugar and water, and boil to the desired thickness or to taste. Covering the fruit at once prevents discoloring. I use a small galvanized iron tub which will hold about eight or ten jars. Place a rack made of thin wood on the bottom of the tub, so as to keep the jars from the bottom of the tub, and cover nearly to the top of the jars with cold water. Let come to a boil, and continue the boiling for ten minutes. If the fruit has cooked down, fill to the top with extra syrup (hot this time), and seal in the air-tight way as usual. Remove the tub from the fire, and let the jars remain until the water is cold. The fruit in this way retains the natural shape and natural flavor, the syrup is clear, and to me this is quite the easiest way to put up fruit, and I am always complimented on both the flavor and appearance. Pineapple, black and red raspberries are perfect prepared in this way; also whole tomatoes. If they are sealed properly, they never spoil. For the best results use firm, ripe, but not soft fruit, and always use new rubber rings.

The deep bronze greens of the velour are beautiful and lend themselves well to trimming effects that include violet, mauve and certain shades of blue.

SHRUBB'S GREAT RECORD

Out of a Long List of Over Two Thousand Starts Has Lost Only Ten Races.

"England is a good place for a rich man to live in and it may be possible that when I make my pile I may return to the Motherland but Canada is one of the greatest countries in the world and Toronto promises to be one of its big cities. For the last three years I have been acting as coach for the Harvard Cross Country team and am going to Cambridge to take charge of their team for this coming season." Asked with regard to the number of races in which he had competed, Shrubb stated that he had run in all 2002 races and had lost ten. He does not think much of the marathon distance. "It is too long a grind, and it will kill any runner inside of three or four years. From ten to fifteen miles is a good distance and any man can stay in the game for a good many years if he only takes care of himself. I have been running between thirteen and fourteen years. I made my best records in the amateur class and hold all the world's records, from two to ten miles and also for the one hour distance." His ten mile record was 50.40 and a fraction made some seven years ago and he has covered the same distance in a number of other races in 51 and a fraction. "Gee, I could run in those days but I am kind of getting to be a has been although I can hold my own with a good many that are still racing".

Shrubb is now the proud father of a five year old lad and says that he has a small race track on his lawn for the little fellow to practise and he expects him to be a world's beater when his day comes. His reminiscense are of a very interesting character and his unassuming manner makes him an ideal talker. His pastime outside of running is shooting and he is going to endeavor to pay a visit to the Province later this year during the moose season to see if he cannot get a head to adorn his home in Toronto.

Jam-Making Hints.

Never use damp or over-ripe fruit.

Cheap-quality sugar spoils the flavour and wastes jam through throwing up large quantities of scum.

Tinned preserving pans are apt to spoil the colour of the jam. If possible use a - - scrupulously clean - - copper one, or a cast-iron enamelled stew-pan.

If your preserving-pan is at all thin in places, don't put it directly on the fire or gas, but use a trivet.

Boil the jam quickly the whole time; otherwise the colour will be spoilt. Also, skim and stir it constantly.

If the fruit is watery, use rather less water — with those fruits which require water in preserving.

Cultivating our own sorrows kills the power to sympathize.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

REPEATS IN BIG GOLF TOURNEY

Playing his tremendous drives well up to the green, Charlie Murray, the veteran professional of the Royal Montreal Golf Club, demonstrated his ability for the second time in the Open golf Championships of the Royal Canadian Golf Association, which were held over the links of the Ottawa Golf club, the beginning of this month. Murray started out well, turning in a score of 73, the lowest ever recorded over the Ottawa links in competition, while his follow on card was equally good, he averaging a little over 78 strokes for his four rounds of the course.

CHAS. MURRAY.

Twenty four started in this competition, they being the very cream of Canadian golfing experts. Murray led Black, of the Rivermead Golf Club by two strokes, achieving a magnificent win under very trying weather conditions.

Why Jimmy Carroll's Dad Licked Him.

Brooklyn Jimmy Carroll could have been the middleweight champion if he had not allowed his great friendship for Dempsey to stand in the way of his ambition. Carroll was a more rugged and powerful fighter than Dempsey, but he always refused to take away the honors from the Nonpareil. Carroll was only a boy when he began boxing in amateur contests in Brooklyn. One night he came home very late with a black eye and several boxing medals pinned on his coat. He was as proud as a peacock over his success.

"Why, where have you been so late, Jimmy?" asked his good mother in amazement, as she gazed at the blue optic.

Mrs. Carroll was horrified and lost no time in reporting this shocking state of affairs to Jimmy's father.

"You must stop that boy's fighting! It's disgraceful! I leave him in your hands!" she said as she left the room. Carroll senior, compelled to preserve the dignity of his household and to satisfy the protests of his wife, proceeded to take his son to task in this way:

"So you've been fighting, eh? Well, I'll give you all the fighting you want." Then Jimmy received a punch on the jaw that sent him sprawling into a corner. The boy jumped up quickly and made his escape, after saying:

The next day the young fellows about town were talking about Jimmy's fighting ability. In the afternoon Carroll senior drove a pair of fast trotters in front of his house.

"Jimmy, my boy," he said kindly, "jump in and take a drive down the road with me." At first young Carroll refused, but after much persuasion he went along. They stopped at all the road houses on the way to Coney Island, and the elder Carroll, with evident pride, whispered to his friends:

"That's Jimmy, my boy, who won the big boxing tournament last night, but you can bet if I'd known about it he'd not have fought a lick. Have a bottle on the boy's victory."

SWIMMING

The 200 yard national breast-stroke championship of England has been decided at Weston-super-are. There were eight starters. In the first heat (three competitors) Dawson (of Attercliffe) soon took the lead, and maintained it to the finish. Time, 2min. 50 4-5sec. Finlay (of Australia) was a good second; Thould (of Weston) being third. There were five starters in the second heat, but the contest lay between Courbet (Brussels), and Toldi (Hungary), the former winning in 2min. 55 3-5sec. In the final heat Toldi took the lead and increased it to the finish. Courbet being ten yards behind. Finlay was third. Time, 2min. 42sec., the record being 2min. 41 2-5 sec.

IS LACROSSE LOSING GROUND?

Writing on this subject President on. Jones of the Vancouver club says:—"I do not think so. In answering a question of this kind, however, one can not but be influenced by local conditions. In Vancouver lacrosse never stood so high, or enjoyed such big patronage. There are more teams and better teams than ever before in the city, and there was never such patronage accorded the game in the history of the sport. The average attendance for senior league games this season in Vancouver has been 10,000, as against about 1000 a few years ago. That certainly does not indicate the sport is losing ground. I certainly think, however, that more encouragement should be given the youngsters. Lacrosse is a great game, but to be an expert at it, the boy must grow up with the stick in his hand. How many youngsters get the chance to play lacrosse in the various cities of Canada? The boy finds that it costs money to become the owner of a stick and whereas he can buy a baseball for a few cents, he naturally turns to the sport which costs him less for his recreation. That, I think, is the real reason lacrosse is not pursued more closely by the boys. The public at large want the game, and this has been shown repeatedly, but just now the crying need of the game is players, and it takes years to make players. Teach the boy lacrosse, help him to play the game, and there you have the secret of keeping up Canada's national game."

JOHN PAUL JONES

Jones is a most interesting figure in athletics, not only because he has proven to be the most wonderful middle distance runner America has ever had, but because he is credited with having developed his powers as an athlete in spite of the handicap of a frail and sickly childhood. He was at one time threatened with consumption, his physician fearing that he might not survive to reach maturity. Not pleased with the prospect he set about strengthening his body and lungs, took up running, and this year succeeded in establishing two new intercollegiate records, one of these being a new world's amateur record. For sixteen years the wonderful record of 4 minutes, 15 3-5 seconds for the mile, made by Tom Conneff, at Travers Island, had not even been approached. Jones did it in 4 minutes, 15 2-5 seconds, after having already set a new intercollegiate mark of 1 minute 54 4-5 seconds for the half-mile on the same afternoon.

The mile record was partly due to good competition, Paull, of Pennsylvania, and Hanivan, of Michigan, both being expected to do better than 4:20. They set a hot pace, but Jones ran away from them easily in the finish. Earlier in the season he had shown his speed by defeating Paull in the Cornell-Pennsylvania meet, running the mile in 4:18 4-5, one second slower than the previous intercollegiate record held by Paull.

Jones had also taken the latter's measure at the U. of P. Relay Carnival when each ran the last lap of the four mile relay championship. Starting the last mile, Paull had a good lead, only to be beaten by yards at the finish. It is due to Jones and his speed that a new four-mile relay record was made upon that occasion.

A GREAT RUNNER

RUSSIAN RAILWAY WONDER.

When the railway between Moscow and St. Petersburg was opened, an old peasant determined to take a ride on it to 'Mother Moscow.' The down express and the up express met at Bologoe—half-way between St. Petersburg and Moscow—and the passengers of both trains were allowed half an hour for supper. Among the people who alighted from the other train, the old peasant recognized a friend whom he had not seen for a long time. They had a delightful chat together over their tea in the restaurant, and then, without any thought of what he was doing, the old peasant boarded his friend's train instead of his own. The talk was very merry for some time, but at last the old man became grave and silent, and appeared to be puzzling deeply over something. At last he broke out: 'Ah Ivan, what a wonderful thing are these railroads. Here we sit in the same car, I going to Moscow and you to St. Petersburg!'

WHAT GOTCH EATS

FRANK GOTCH

It's the tasty, wholesome food cooked by pretty little Mrs. Gotch's own little pink hands that turned the champion wrestler's muscles into whipcords.

Frank is as big as a good sized mountain. Mrs. Frank is about as big as a ginger jar, weight about 95 pounds. But she's got love ribbon tied tightly about her good-natured husband's heart and she runs the Gotch household like a diminutive queen.

"What does Frank eat? What should men eat in order to be strong? How does Gotch live?"

A day at the Gotch home here tells the story. Little Mrs. Gotch is on the job bright and early, when Frank gets out in the cool daylight for his cross-country run. She starts him off with a couple of soft boiled eggs and a bumper of sweet, rich milk and then begins on his breakfast. He returns about 10, takes a shower bath and sits down to breakfast across from his wife in the Gotch dining room. He has more milk, chops, boiled eggs or a delicate parsley, omelette, light, fluffy and crisp brown on the exterior; hot baking powder biscuits or day-old, home-baked, whole wheat bread. (No fresh, yeast-raised bread is allowed.)

Fruit also forms an important part, not only of breakfast but of dinner, but it is eaten after the chief portion of the meal instead of before, because the fresh fruit juices are more easily cared for by a partially filled than by an empty stomach. Just new peaches and cantaloupe are the principal fruits, varied occasionally with raspberries, blackberries, huckleberries, grape fruit, oranges and juicy baked apples.

HINTS FOR THE HOME

To Restore Tainted Fowl or Game

When feathered game or fowl have become tainted, pick and draw the birds as soon as possible, and immerse them in new milk. Let the bird or birds remain in it until the next day, when they will be quite sweet and fit for cooking. The milk must be thrown away.

THE GOLD FIELDS OF BRITAIN

Thousands of Britishers Explore the Wilds Abroad for Gold Neglectful of Various Mining Spots at Home.

According to a paper read by Mr. J. M. MacLaren before the Institute of Mining and Mechanical Engineers, native gold has been found in most of the Cornish tin-streams flowing to the south. In Devon the existence of gold has been known for many centuries, the principal auriferous locality being at North Molton. Gold has also been found at Goldscope, Cumberland, and Whalton, Somerset. In Merionethshire, gold-mining has been actively carried on for many years, and the actual value of the gold produced from 1887 to 1901 amounted to nearly $1,450,000.

There are many Scottish gold localities, but the chief is the district of Leadhills, Southern Lanarkshire. The gold of this area is found in the streams as fine dust; but small nuggets also occur, the largest on record having a weight of twenty-seven ounces.

In Ireland, Wicklow appears to be the most notable gold locality. The largest nugget found there was picked up by a party of peasants in 1795, and weighed twenty-two ounces.

The total yield of gold in Great Britain and Ireland, with the exception of the Leadhills area, is estimated at $2,500,000, nearly half of which has been obtained during the past twenty years.

Puns in the Bible.

It has been pointed out that the pun is one of the commonest forms of humour in the East. The Old Testament writers, especially the prophets, are true Orientals in this respect, for they use this ornament of speech most effectively."

Amos, the desert prophet, the first of the writing prophets, uses puns more successfully than any of the prophets. Unfortunately in our translations the play of words is lost to us, and we fail to see the delicate shade or meaning or the mocking or scornful irony of many a phrase. A most notable pun of this prophet is that of the vision of summer fruit—"And he said Amos, what seest thou? And I said a basket of summer fruit. Then said the Lord unto me—The end is come upon my people Israel." (Amos viii. 2.)

"In this verse the translation fails to bring out the play upon the words 'summer fruit' and 'end,' consequently the point is lost to us. The Hebrew word for 'summer fruit' is kaitz, and the word for 'end' ketz. The parable is made far more expressive by the pun and much more liable to stick in people's memories. Just read the verse, substituting the original words, 'And he said What seest thou? And I said a basket of kaitz. Then said the Lord unto me, The ketz is come upon my people Israel' — and we at once see how sight and sound must have combined to arrest the attention and impress the mind of the unthinking Israelite. The beauty of this punning parable lies in the fact that 'the symbol and the word expressing it coincide.'"

CANNIBALS OF NEW GUINEA

Another Scientific Expedition Will Shortly Visit British New Guinea to Study Habits and Customs of Natives.

Mr. D. Jenness, of Balliol College, England, is about to leave on a scientific expedition in British New Guinea. The undertaking, which has been organised by the University, and the cost of which is being borne by private subscribers, will involve at least twelve months' work. The objects are chiefly anthropological. From New Zealand Mr. Jenness will proceed to the extreme south-easterly corner of British New Guinea, to which region work will be confined. The headquarters will be on Goodenough Island, the most northerly part of the D'Entrecasteaux Archipelago. There it is intended to study the habits and customs, the arts and religion of the inhabitants, who are thought to be an intermixture of the Melanesian and Papuan peoples. The district selected has been specially chosen, as although it is the most accessible portion of Papua for such an expedition it remains absolutely untouched. There is one mission station on the coast, and occasionally the Government official lands, but the interior has never been explored. It is known that cannibalism exists among the natives.

Sir T. Crossley Rayner, Attorney-General of British Guiana, is one of the few white men who have ever seen Kaieteur Falls, which he declares the most beautiful and impressive in the world. "Kaieteur Falls are far inland in British Guiana," he told his interviewers on shipboard, "so far inland, in fact, that they are about 200 miles from civilisation. They are 829 feet in height and about 400 feet wide."

Some Apt Proverbs.

THE PROBLEM OF GROWING OLD

Some of the More Apparent Causes that Account for Changed Appearances in the Later Years of Life.

The growing old of an organism is not merely the result of the lapse of so much time; it is the inevitable outcome of a progressive failure of its vital activities. A man of 80 or 90 years old may be only as old physiologically as a man of 50 or 60, whereas a man of 40 or 50 may be, as to his tissues, as old as another but more vigorous man of 60 or 70 years. Every living organism, vegetable or animal, must go through the stages of growth, prime and decay; this sequence is inherent in the constitution and mode of action of protoplasm. We have the seed, the seedling, the young tree, the full grown specimen, the decayed oak, and, finally, the lifeless, sapless, hollow form. The living organism is like a projectile fired from a gun — it ascends, it reaches its highest point, and it inevitably descends to earth again.

Growing old is a progressive diminution in functional capacity which, on the whole, will not be recovered from. In old age the heart beats more feebly (but not more slowly), and it is more easily depressed by fatigue and cold and more easily overcome by the rise of its internal pressure. Less nourishment, too, is absorbed, fat not usually being stored in the body. The skin, in particular, receiving less blood, shrinks and withers; its hair-follicles produce less or no pigment, and the hairs in consequence grow grey or white. Not that grey hair by itself necessarily indicates senility; it may indicate no more than an early displayed and usually hereditary tendency to diminished formation of melanin, the colouring matter of skin and hair. The powers of assimilating food having diminished, the appetite tends to fail in old age. But if no surplus food is taken, there can be no laying down of fat, and so the lean figure is produced — "The sixth age shifts into the lean and slippered pantaloon... His youthful hose well saved, a world too wide for his shrunk shanks."

JACK TAR AND HIS SUNDAY

What Was Once a Picturesque Institution Aboard British Men-o'-War is Today a Fruitful Source of Irritation.

The question of the observance of Sunday in the Navy appears to have been engaging attention both in Britain and in America. In the British service a brisk discussion has been going on in regard to the oppressive routine now carried out every Sunday, which is chiefly the outcome of the cleaning necessary to make the vessel as smart as possible for the captain's weekly inspection. In the United States the Secretary of the Navy has issued orders for a more strict observance of the Sabbath and for the abolition of captains' inspection on Sundays. With the British reverence for ancient institutions it is hardly likely that a similar step will be taken in our own naval service. For years past it has been customary for the captain to inspect the ship's company on Sundays, and to make a tour of the vessel, examining every department. In preparation for this elaborate ordeal the men have to spend a lot of time in cleaning and polishing the ship's fittings and interior, although such work has already been performed once on the previous day. In past times, when ships were not so continuously employed in war training both by day and night as they are now, the captain's Sunday rounds were a picturesque institution, but they appear to have become a fruitful source of irritation to officers and men alike, as the present controversy afloat and in service newspapers shows.

One Truthful Fisher

His eyes gleamed with triumph as he strode into the presence of his wife.

"You talk about luck," he exclaimed; "just look at these fish, Maria. Just look at them!"

After gaping at them for a few moments she said—

"I suppose they weigh about two pounds each, don't they?"

"I will be truthful with you," he said, as he gently handled his booty. "I have had them weighed, and they average only one pound and a quarter each."

While his wife eyed him in astonishment, he continued—

"You just ought to have seen the three that got off my hook."

"Were they big four-pounders?"

"Guess again, Maria."

"Were they six-pounders, the kind that are so often hooked and never caught?"

"You're wrong, my dear; you're wrong again. Guess once more."

"Surely they didn't weigh about eight or ten pounds apiece?"

"You are anything but a good guesser," he replied. "I tell you what it is, Maria. I may not be much of an adept when it comes to angling, but when it comes to telling the truth, I'm at home there. Those fish that got off my hook were not large at all. They were about the size of sardines."

Child Laborers.

Italy has no child labor laws, and [illegible] merchants throng the streets. [illegible] cherry vender, often scarcely in [illegible]ens, carries his luscious fruits in baskets, tucks his measure into his vest, and swings his scales over his shoulders. Thus equipped, he makes his way merrily through the city streets, calling his merchandise.

The proof of a good bluffer lies in his ability to make good when he's called.

Cause and Cure of Headache

The cause of headache as you know, is the stoppage of the circulation resulting in pressure on the delicate nerves of the head. In time nature will start the blood going again, but meanwhile we suffer and are unfit for duty.

Assisted by two ZUTOO Tablets, which by the way are as harmless as the soda they contain, nature will remove the pressure and stop the headache in twenty minutes. Why continue to suffer? Why be unfit?

It is really remarkable how many people now use ZUTOO to cure their headaches. Do you? If not, why not?

STREAM OF SUNS

Astronomers Sun and Star Theory of Creation Proves Scheme Without Evidence of a Beginning or Promise of an End.

There is in England at the present time a New Zealand university professor who is devoting the evening of his life to the establishment of what he believes to be an epoch making astronomical discovery. Prof. A. W. Bickerton, of Christchurch, New Zealand, has for more than thirty years been working on his theory, and he has already gained for it a certain amount of recognition among scientific men.

It is well known that some hundred million stars can be photographed in the Milky Way. These stars are of all ages, young, mature and old. According to Prof. Bickerton the suns are travelling in two great streams in opposite directions. They attract each other as they pass and frequently come into collision, generally a partial impact or grazing collision.

When such a grazing collision occurs the parts coming into collision coalesce and form a new body. As the suns approach one another at the speed of hundreds of miles a second the graze does not stop them, though it alters their course. The coalesced third body possesses many wonderful properties; it spins, it sorts its atoms and it is abnormally hot; it has more energy than it can retain, therefore it explodes.

Thus a graze of suns produces three bodies, two revolving torn suns or variable stars and a third explosively hot body, which is a temporary star. This star appears suddenly, expands for a time and is finally dissipated into atomic dust. These atoms in their turn have their life history, varied and complex.

Prof. Bickerton believes that the light atoms escape and form vast ensphering shells, the atoms actually flying away into the empty parts of space, there to lay the foundations of other cosmic systems.

Solar impact then, according to Prof. Bickerton, is the key to the mystery of creation. The basic idea of his theory is the formation of the third body, which he maintains has been missed by the astronomers.

"My theory shows the scheme of creation as a whole as one that is infinite and immortal, without evidence of a beginning or promise of an end. A cyclic scheme which as a whole is deathless, birthless and flawless.

Queer Personal Adornments

The Langos, who inhabit a country to the east of the Victoria Nile and the Bahr El Gebel, about three degrees north of the equator, have several very remarkable ornaments. For example, bands of finely plaited grass are worn by the men round the abdomen. These suggest a tightly laced corset. Iron, or, more rarely, brass, ornaments have place on the upper arm. These are put on when the man is young, and as the arms grow force the muscles of the biceps out below them. In one case, the girth at what should have been the broadest part of the biceps was only 8½ inches over the wire; while lower down, just above the elbow, it was 15 inches. Lip ornaments are made of glass filed down from pieces of broken bottles, inserted a quarter of an inch below the lower lip.

The Humorous Elephant

The elephant is a humorist. The discovery has been made in a San Francisco paper, which tells the story of a keeper who was given thirteen oranges for his four elephants. Thrice the showman went down the line, and then he had one orange left. Every elephant fixed a greedy gaze upon that orange. It might have caused trouble to give it to any one of them. After a moment's reflection the showman decided that there was but one course to pursue. Accordingly he held up the orange so that all the elephants might clearly see it, then calmly peeled and ate it himself. He asserts that the elephants nudged each other, and shook their ponderous sides, and otherwise gave evidence of their appreciation of the humour of the situation.

A Fortune on Guinea Pigs

The Pasteur Institute, of France, spends annually a sum of $80,000 on guinea pigs, but there is a dearth of these little animals just now, hundreds of small purveyors in the South of France having decided to cease raising the little unwilling martyrs of science. Wherever the Institute applied latterly, it was told that no more guinea pigs were for sale. The Institute has had to rely principally on its own supply from its own guinea-pig farm at Garches, but the demand has been so great that the numbers have diminished. Something like 3,000 guinea pigs are kept on the ground permanently for breeding purposes.

A Black Outlook

"'Allo, Bill! You do look pale an' thin, Bill. Wot's wrong Bill? Been ill, Bill?"

Thus one jovial frequenter of the gutter to a friend he had not seen for weeks.

"No," he answered, "I ain't been ill—it's work! Work from ten in the mornin' till nine at night, and only one hour's rest. Think of it, mate — just think of it!"

"And where are yer workin'? 'Ow long 'ave yer been there?"

"I ain't been there yet," retorted Bill, with a groan. "I begin termorrer!"

OUT IN CHASE OF THE WHALE

An Exciting and Interesting Pursuit, Which However Seems to Point To An Extermination of the Species.

It may not be known generally but it is a fact that many varieties of the whale are now as extinct as the buffalo, and unless the remnants be protected from slaughter they will, it is feared, be altogether exterminated.

The whale is a mammal and not a fish; that is to say, it is a warm-blooded animal which breathes air instead of water, drowns if submerged too long, brings forth its young alive and nourishes it with milk from its own body. The largest of the family is the sulphur-bottom whale. Specimens measuring 97 feet in length have been killed. Such a creature would weigh 110 to 120 tons. A fair number of these creatures still exist in the Pacific Ocean, though they are now being killed off very rapidly.

Then there is the bowhead, also called the Greenland or Polar whale, which inhabits the waters round the North Pole. This species is now very scarce.

The right whale, slightly larger than the bowhead, is now virtually extinct. A quarter of a century ago it was found in large numbers in both the North and South Atlantic Oceans. The whale generally seen by passengers crossing the Atlantic is the humpback species, which attains a length of from forty-five to sixty feet. Then there is the finback of the North Atlantic coast, which attains a length of sixty feet, and yields little oil and is difficult to kill. In the Pacific Ocean there is the California gray whale, often found in comparatively shallow water, but savage and dangerous. It attains a length of about forty-five feet.

The virtual extinction of the right whale and the bowhead has been brought about by the invention of the harpoon gun. In the old days whales were captured from boats. It required courage, pluck, and the whaler took his life in his hands. To-day the animals are slaughtered by firing at them from the bow of a vessel with a heavy cannon, which shoots a harpoon weighing more than a hundred pounds, and having an explosive head of point, called the "bomb."

Not a particle of the great carcase is wasted. The blubber is "tried out" for oil, and the meat and bones are boiled for the same purpose. The flesh is artificially dried and sifted, making a very fine guano, and the bones are ground for fertiliser. Even the blood is boiled and dried with the flesh, and the water in which the blubber has been tried out makes excellent glue. The fins and tail, after being sliced into thin strips, salted, and barrelled, are sent to Japan, where they are used as food.

The Trials of a Parson.

If he delivers a written sermon, he is a back-number. If he preaches extempore, he is a shallow thinker.

If he is not constantly calling upon his people, he is unsociable. If he visits to any extent, he is a gadabout.

If he is married "he is an awfully nice fellow, but his wife doesn't amount to much." If he lives in single blessedness (?) woe be to him. All the eligibles and many of the others never speak to each other at the guilds and parish socials, or else they do speak — gossip!

If he is content to serve his Master and his people on a small monthly sum (paid at irregular intervals) he is "cheap." If he timidly asks for a large enough stipend to keep his household "decently and in order," he is worldly-minded.

If he would be "all things to all men," he is a hypocrite. If he is somewhat reserved, it is a cloak to conceal his sly attempts to foist a mediaeval priestcraft upon his people.

If he quotes the sources from which his best ideas are drawn, he is lacking in originality. If he fails to give due credit for these various ideas, he is dishonest and a thief.

Self-consciousness is the precious faculty bestowed on a privileged few of hearing the sermon and at the same time studying the hats.

Who has not seen the Great shabby and spotty to a degree? It is one of the privileges of being great that one can afford to have samples of bygone repasts on one's waistcoat.

The Achilles' heel of a man is his hat. He must guard that as he does his reputation, for it is at once his strength and his weakness.

Every policeman is an arbiter of fashion. To him any originality in clothes means either crime or insanity. — From "The Talk of the Town," by Mrs. John Lane.

Lord Avebury's Pet Wasp.

There are few who would choose a wasp as a companion, but Lord Avebury is among the few. Some years ago he captured a wasp in the Pyrenees and he kept her for nine months. "I had no difficulty," he writes, "in inducing her to feed on my hand; but at first she was shy and nervous. She kept her sting in constant readiness; and once or twice in the train when the railway officials came for tickets, and I was compelled to hurry her back into her bottle, she stung me slightly — I think, however, entirely from fright. Gradually she became quite used to me, and when I took her on my hand apparently expected to be fed. She even allowed me to stroke her without any appearance of fear, and for some months I never saw her sting."

TO SAFEGUARD THE SAILOR

Dangerous and Tedious Duties of the Lightshipmen Who Point Jack the Way Past the Rocks to Port in Safety.

Sailors say that there is a little cherub sitting up aloft in their rigging to keep and guard over Jack Tar. The real guardians of those who go down to the sea in ships are the brave fellows who man the lighthouses.

Ships passing outward to sea, or inward to port, are guided on their way at night by the beams flashed from these lighthouses, or warned to steer clear of the dangerous rock upon which the lighthouse stands. In fair weather and in foul the lighthouse casts over the sea its unspoken message of guidance, encouragement, and warning. It seems like some unfailing machine, and few people can realize that in that lonely watch-tower are men imprisoned, week after week, perhaps month after month. It is a man who lights the lamps and keeps them burning, but he is so removed from the everyday affairs of life that he is hardly ever included in the company of heroes to which he belongs.

Only men of exceptional character are chosen for these distant posts. They undergo a long training on land, in the management of the machinery which controls the lamps, and in all the routine of lighthouse duty; they are taught to cook, to sew, to keep house, for there are no women to cook and mend for them in the lighthouses. When they have had all this training, they are sent from place to place to the less lonely lighthouses, until they are finally qualified for the more isolated ones.

There may be more than three men in the big lighthouses, where there is machinery to manage for the production of gas or electricity, for the winding of clocks, the manipulation of the lamps, and so forth. There are never too many. Six or seven years ago the three men of the Flannan Lighthouse, in the Hebrides, Scotland, disappeared, and to this day we can only guess their end. For several nights the lamps were seen to be unlighted, but nobody could approach, owing to a storm.

When the storm passed away the light still failed to shine. Men went off in a boat, but not one of the lighthouse crew could be found nor have they ever been found. Two hundred feet distant from the lighthouse there is a recess, cut for the reception of lighthouse ropes and implements. It is supposed that the three men, seeing these latter in danger of being washed away by the storm, went down to make them secure, and were themselves swept to death.

THE CRIMINAL AMONG PLANTS

Thugs of the Vegetable World that Have No Honest Ways, and Live by Strangling Their Brethern.

There are plants of bad character, which are the thugs of the vegetable world, for they live by means of strangling their victims, and have no honest way of gaining their own livelihood. The Broomrape family are all of evil repute, for they throttle the roots of the vetches, of furze, clovers, and other leguminous plants, robbing them of the rich nitrogen which they have collected from the air for their own roots, and seizing this private store for themselves. What could be more like the actions of human thieves? The Tooth-worts which infest the roots of nut-bushes, elms, and other trees are like unto them; and both are singularly wanting in beauty, being clothed in dirty-brown tints, as a rule, and having no green leaves. Even one of the Persicarias (Black Bindweed) has taken to evil courses, for it climbs on the stems of other plants, and strangles them in so doing; and these evil-doers by no means exhaust the list of the criminals of the vegetable world. We can, however, scarcely blame the rootstock of a grafted rose for starving the graft, and throwing up its own suckers; such a proceeding is but too common amongst ourselves, for selfishness is almost universal.

Birdcages and Disease.

Bedsteads and birdcages are among the sources of plumbism — the deadly lead poison disease — according to a report by Dr. Robert Edgington in the current "British Medical Journal". "In putting together chandeliers and gas-fittings white lead is used in the joints," he says, "and it is the custom of the workmen to test the joints by sucking the air out of the tubes, so that in this case the lead is probably conveyed directly into the stomach." The process which figures highest (with seventeen cases in a list of eighty-four instances of plumbism) is the painting of motor-car and coach bodies, safes, and stoves, whose glossy enamel-like surface exacts a heavy toll from the workers owing to the lead dust inhaled during the repeated sand-paperings involved in securing a perfectly smooth surface. House painters come next, and on the same level as regards frequency of poisoning are the girls who smooth down the paint of bedsteads and birdcages with their hands to get an enamel-like surface. Cases of lead poisoning among tinners and kettle makers are ascribed to the mixture of lead and tin used for the inside surface of kettles and saucepans.

Touch and Go.

Papa—It's very simple, my son. It means extreme speed, and refers to the professional borrowers who make a touch and get away so fast you seldom see them again.

THE TOBACCO-CHEWING EVIL

Continuance of the Practice Has Material Effect in Putting the Face of Man Off the Natural Shape.

Writing on "Chins and Character," Dr. Louis Robinson says:—Tobacco-chewing, a loathsome habit which happily appears to be going out of fashion among civilised people, has been productive of a cast of countenance which will remain historic for all time. "Uncle Sam" will probably be for ever portrayed as an individual "lean of flank and lank of jaw," as Oliver Wendell Holmes verbally depicts him in his humorous apotheosis. Those familiar with the portraits of the great soldiers of the American Civil War can hardly fail to have been struck by the curious family likeness which runs through their dour determined visages. It is scarcely too much to say that this military type is practically extinct in America now. Almost to a man, these long-faced sallow heroes were tobacco-chewers, as were also many of the prominent statesmen of the same period. It was, however, by no means exclusively an American custom. Most people of middle age can remember among sailors and working men of Great Britain, men with long angular-jaws and wrinkled sallow cheeks resembling those of that extinct ruminant, the "typical Yankee" of caricature.

Great Underground River

According to geologists, the greatest underground river in the world flows from the Rocky Mountains underneath New Mexico and Texas, emptying itself in the Gulf of Mexico. This river is thought to be in places several miles wide, and it is believed that it feeds rivers that flow upon the surface. The artesian well belt of Texas is pointed to as the uplifting of the water from this river, often from eight hundred feet below.

Steel Oven Heats Quicker—Saves Fuel

Make sure your new range has a steel oven, and "Pandora" name-plate on the door. Go, at once, to nearest McClary Agency and pick out size desired.

Pandora has a sheet steel oven, because steel is more sensitive to heat—absorbs it faster—than cast iron does. Pandora oven thus heats quicker—less time required to get oven ready for the baking—which also means less fuel-expense.

A PICTURE OF SEA POWER AS EVIDENCED IN BATTLESHIP "ORION"

The Vessel's Structure Stood Perfectly the Enormous Strain of Firing Her 13 1-2 inch Guns—Britain Still Far Ahead in Ships and Guns

All of the great nations watch one another closely in naval matters, and just now there comes from Washington a detailed report regarding the unqualified success that attended the tests of the new 13.5-inch guns mounted in the new British Dreadnought battleship, which tests have just been completed off the English coast.

The story of these trials gives the average layman a somewhat astonishing impression regarding the terrific striking power of this last word in big guns. It was said by many experts that the gun mountings and the hull of the ship could not withstand the strain of firing this truly terrific battery of ten guns of the new type—for the Orion is a "big gun" ship, in that she mounts ten 13.5 guns, whereas the original Dreadnought carried a smaller battery of 12-inch guns and a secondary battery of sixes. In the new model the secondary battery disappears, and in addition to the primary armaments the Orion only carries small guns to resist torpedo craft.

The Orion, according to the reports of reliable observers, came through the trial without developing the slightest sign of weakness. A correspondent who deals with the matter says that the crew were protected from the nerve-racking concussion caused by the discharge of the guns by wool-lined leather earpads, but even then the shock from the blast as the 1,250 pound missiles left the muzzles is said to have been terrific. The roar of the guns was distinctly heard at Portsmouth, fourteen miles away.

At first half charges were fired, the guns being discharged singly, then in pairs and fours.

Although the ten guns comprising the broadside were fired during the trials, discharging a total of five and a half tons of steel, there was always an interval, almost imperceptible, between the discharges.

Incalculable damage would be caused to the hull of a battleship if a complete broadside were fired simultaneously, and such a step would never be contemplated. The energy of each of the 13.5-inch guns is about 70,000, a total broadside being capable of lifting a weight equivalent to thirty Dreadnoughts a foot into the air.

During previous gunnery tests in Dreadnoughts the firing has caused havoc internally, but in the Orion no damage appears to have been done beyond the breakage of a few pieces of crockery ware and some of the lighter fittings.

No attempt at ascertaining the accuracy of the guns was made, the sole aim being to test the mountings and the resistance of the ship's structure to the strain imposed on it.

A man who was inside one of the barbettes when the guns were fired said that the six-foot recoil of the gun was the only indication that the weapon had been discharged. On deck the concussion produced a sensation of numbness.

A sea fight between two fleets whose battle lines are composed of Orions would be titanic, surely. As ever, Britain has a long lead in sea power.

THE M'NAMARA TRIAL

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 15.—Portentous developments in the trial [illegible] J. B. McNamara, charged with murder by dynamite, which are expected to-morrow, kept interest in the McNamara case at the tense stage today. Judge Bordwell will rule on the fitness of Z. T. Nelson to serve as a juror. If he holds Nelson may serve he will deal the defence a severe blow, and the task of getting a jury will be greatly shortened. On the contrary, a ruling favorable to the defence will prolong the time in which to get a jury.

ANOTHER MONUMENT TO GREAT SCIENTIST

VIENNA ISERE, France, Oct. 15.—The statue of Michael Servetus, the Spanish physician who discovered the circulation of the blood, and was burned at the stake for heresy at Geneva in 1553, was unveiled here to-day. The ceremony has been postponed from time to time for the past two years owing to the fact that the pedestal was not completed.

Curtis Gild, of Boston, had been invited to deliver an address, but was unable to be present. His place was taken by Charles William Wendle also of Boston, who is the general secretary of the International Council of Unitarian and other liberal religious thinkers and workers.

It was a beautiful sunny day and there was an immense throng present. Senator Jouffrax was master of ceremonies. Owing to the national mourning for the Liberte disaster, the members of the Cabinet were not present. President Rudolph Berger, of Berlin, placed a wreath at the foot of the monument, and Mr. Wendle placed two wreaths, one of which was tied with American colors. Professor Richet, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine, paid homage to the great physician. The English Unitarians were represented by John Harrison, of London. After the unveiling there was a banquet, at which 600 guests were seated. The fourth monument to Servetus is to be unveiled in Geneva, there being now three in France.

MILL'S MURDERER BAFFLES THE POLICE

WINDSOR, Ont., Oct. 15—Although more than three weeks have elapsed since the crime was committed, no arrests have yet been made for the murder of Thomas Mills, and, so far as outward indications go, the search has practically been abandoned. Mills' murder was one of the most brutal in the criminal annals of western Ontario, and that the murderer has been allowed to escape has aroused much criticism of police methods. Detective Redburn, of Toronto, who came to investigate the case, gave it as his opinion that the negro Daigon, for whom a warrant has been out for some time, was the man who committed the deed, and circulars were sent out to all parts of the country giving a description of Daigon. The local authorities are of the opinion that it will be necessary to offer a reward for the murderer's apprehension before any results are obtained.

LITTLE BLAZE; LITTLE DAMAGE.

Saturday evening at 8.30 an alarm of fire was sounded, a blaze having been discovered in a compression car belonging to the Hamilton Bridge Co. and used in connection with the work of constructing the C.N.O.R. bridge across the river. But little damage was done to the car, which was on the track near south Front Street.

COLLISION ON THE G.T.R.

A collision occurred on the line of the G.T.R. at Kingston Junction at an early hour this morning, but fortunately no person was seriously injured. No. 5 express, going westward, which is due here at 2.15 a.m., collided with a light engine which was taking a cross switch at the Junction, and a heavy fog obscured the light. Both engines and the baggage car of the express train left the track as a result of the collision. The auxiliary from here went to the scene of the wreck. Owing to the accident passenger trains going east and west were delayed for some time.

They refused, but the affair was amicably settled when a police officer was sent for.

'TWAS CHILDREN'S DAY.

Children's Day was yesterday fittingly observed in the Anglican churches, when the work of the Sunday school commission was prominently brought before the congregation. At St. Thomas' church the Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, preached at both services, the sermons being appropriate to the occasion. In the morning his text was from St. Luke ii:52. The sermon was from the life of Christ and His example to children. The prayers and hymns were in keeping with the service. Mrs. C. Wilmot sang "The Sweet Story of Old." In the afternoon the Parish Hall was filled with S. S. children and parents. Addresses were given by the Superintendent, Mr. Fleming, the Rector, and Mr. J. Elliott. The offernig to the S. S. commission was generous.

CANADA LEADS THE UNITED STATES

HACKENSACK, N. J., Oct. 14.—Addressing a gathering of Democrats here last night, Governor Woodrow Wilson told a thousand hearers that Canada was a generation ahead of the United States in the regulations of corporate business, in her banking system and in her currency system.

Canada rejected the reciprocity agreement," he said, "because she feared that by adopting it they would open the door to the evils that prevail in the business system of the republic.

"The present contrast between Canada and the United States," he said, "is that the United States is fretful and distrustful; Canada is ablsolutely buoyant with confidence and hope.

"Canada has got through the deep waters we are now in, or rather she was never in them; she never let herself get in them. While we have been going on from one financial crisis to another, Canada has not had any financial crisis. Canada, if we must admit the truth, feels her economic superority to the United States because she did some time ago, as a matter of course, the things now called radical in the United States, and which are making business men uneasy.

DEATH'S CALL

MRS. LUFFMAN.

Mrs. Minnie L. Luffman, wife of Mr. James Luffman, residing on the 3rd concession of Thurlow, died on Sunday morning. Deceased, who was 37 years of age, had been in failing health for some time and her demise was not unexpected. The remains will be brought here for interment.

Deceased was a member of the Presbyterian church, and in politics was a Conservative. Mrs. Goy died some eight years ago. Surviving is a family of four sons and 2 daughters. The sons are Thomas of Thurlow, J. W., George and Isaac B. of Sidney. The daughters are Mrs. T. Leslie of Sidney and Mrs. Chas. Jose, of Kirkton, Ont.

NEW REGISTRATION MAY BE NECESSARY

In order to find out if there is any possible way by which a new registration of voters for the provincial election can be avoided a study is being made of the statutes. It seems to be practically certain that a new registration will have to be held. Because neither side wants the registration efforts will be made to avoid it. It is hoped that the lists used for the Dominion elections can be made to serve. The statute allows of the provincial lists being used in a Dominion election, but as for the Dominion lists being used in a provincial election no provision is made.

MUST USE MULES AND DONKEYS

LONDON, Oct. 15.—Information comes from Rome to the effect that the headquarters of the Italian army of occupation in Tripoli will be at Benghazi, which, with Derna and Tobruk, will be strongly garrisoned. The estimated strength required for the garrisons of the coast towns is placed at 10,000. The present army of occupation, numbering 50,000, will be reinforced in November and brought up to 60,000 or 70,000. The expenses of the expeditionary forces in the first two months is calculated at $60,000,000.

Despite optimistic reports and reassuring official announcements, the Turkish garrison in the hinterland of Tripoli is starving, and in no condition to offer serious resistance. The Government is greatly preoccupied, and the War Office realizes fully that the problem is most difficult and dangerous. Experiments in the sands on the Ostia coast show that motor transport is an utter failure. The War Office has therefore decided to use donkeys and mules in the transportation of ammunition, provisions, water and fodder. They have abandoned the idea for the present of occupying the Fezzan desert. The march of the Italian column, it is estimated, would average seven miles a day. This would mean three months from Tripoli to Murzuk, the chief Fezzan oasis. The question must soon arise. The country provides practically nothing, absolutely nothing, once the littoral is left. This fact was the greatest factor in helping to bring Italy to the frame of mind in which she is willing to consider a modus vivendi.

DATE OF BY-ELECTIONS

OTTAWA, Oct. 15.—Within half an hour of attending the reception in his honor on Parliament Hill on Saturday afternoon, the Duke of Connaught signed his first order-in-council at Rideau Hall, fixing the date of the ministerial bye-elections. Nominations will be on Oct. 27, and polling, if any, on Nov. 3. The outlook is that all the ministers will be returned without opposition.

At the council meeting held on Saturday, after the return of the Cabinet from Quebec, the change in dates was decided upon.

Unless you over-estimate the average man he doesn't think you fully appreciate him.

Repairs to the lower bridge piers would not be amiss now. The water in the river is very low; no better time could be found. DO IT NOW!

In looking over the faces of the new Borden Cabinet Ministers one will find there is not a clean shaven man among them; all wear a moustache or whiskers.

The Grits imagine that they have got the "irreducible minimum" in the Legislature; but the result of the coming general election may prove that they haven't.

Norway has now the cheapest electricity in the world. Over 500,000 horse power has been developed and there is every prospect for an increase of 50 per cent. in the near future. Consumers can obtain high tension power for $6.50 per horse power per year.

We have enough theology to last until the millennium, remarked one of the speakers at the Ecumenical Methodist confernce. True words More of the Golden Rule is the desideration. And yet folks will continue as before, to shift the onus of its observance on the other fellow until the time when that halcyon period arrives —Mail and Empire.

In 1896 there were 1,009 miles of tramways and light railways open in Great Britain, over which were carried 759,466,047 passengers, while last year over 2,562 miles, 2,743,189,439 passengers were conveyed. The number of incorporated commercial and other companies registered has grown from 21,783, with a paid-up capital of £1,145,402,993 in 1896, to 51,787, with a capital of £2,178,619,734 last year.

Mr. Balfour has taken new courage from the Canadian elections to urge the forming of that bond which President Taft feared might soon reach from England around the world to England again. The policy of the Preferences certainly escaped a fatal wound when Reciprocity was rejected It is still on the cards; but it is still as essential as ever that the people of the United Kingdom shall decide for themselves how far they want to go. —Montreal Star.

The North-West wheat crop will probably amount to nearly 190,000,000 bushels. This would give 78,000,000 bushels for export, after providing for seed and domestic needs. So says an excellent authority, namely, the Montreal Journal of Commerce. Contrast this statement with the "campaign lie" of a Grit farmer at a public meeting in this city, that Newburg, who boldly asserted that Canada would this year export 200,000,000 bushels of wheat.

From a Board of Trade return we learn that British exports for the seven months ended July exceeded those of the United States by $152,435,000. and those of Germany by $189,080,000 For the six months ended June, Great Britain led America by $109,380,000 and Germany by $181,745,000. Germany ranks next to the United Kingdom as an importer, France third, and the United States fourth. British exports for the seven months exceeded Germany's by $281,105,000.

Col. Gaedke, an eminent military expert, says the military spirit is on the decay among the masses of Germany. He says that after forty years of peace the Germany army does not attract either by its pay or prestige the young men who posses ability. "The young German who has to make his living prefers to be an engineer, bank clerk, or merchant, rather than a unit in the military orgnization of the Empire." And that may be a change beneficial to the country and to the world."

A Little Economy.

A Northern lady with philanthropic symptoms was trying to instil a little economy into her husband's colored tenants. One of them, Mary Kinney, an anti-race-suicidist, kept a colored girl as nurse to her group of ten growing American citizens. "Mary," remarked the lady, "do you think a woman in your circumstances can afford a nurse?" "I dunno 'm, as I kin, but I don't pay her but twenty-five cents a month, an' I pays dat in ole cloes, and" — with a wide smile — "she don't git dem!"

Nothing Like Politeness.

It is much easier to be polite and neighbourly than to fly into a passion when things do not suit you. Take this note as an instance, addressed by a lady to a neighbour next door—"Dear Madam—Your children, who are numerous, and appear to be disorderly, no doubt deserve the frequent floggings you give them; but, as my nerves are weak, I write this to ask if you can't do something to deaden the sound!"

Some people... have such admirable command over their feelings that one is tempted to believe they have no feelings to command.

It's a surprise party if everybody has a good time.

PITIFUL TRAGEDY OF THE DESERT

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Oct. 15. —One of the most pitiful tragedies of the Mojave desert in recent years was discovered in Inyo County yesterday, when a party of teamsters on the way across the sandy waste came upon the family of George McDermott.

McDermott and his family, consisting of his wife and five children, started overland several weeks ago for Mill Valley, Utah. Becoming short of water, it is thought, they drank from one of the numerous poison springs of the desert. The horses and cows became sick and the cows died. Then McDermott became sick and died six days later.

The distracted widow then took the reins and drove the nearly dead horses for miles over the desert in search of water until she was stricken and fell by the side of her husband. When the teamsters found the family the mother was near death, and the children, all sick, were clinging to her. All were taken on to Mill City, and it is thought the mother will die.

Want Stagni Sent Back.

Montreal, Oct. 16.—There is a report coming from Quebec that a move is now on foot with a view to having Monsignor Stagni, the papal delegate at Ottawa to return to Rome.

After the return of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to power in 1896 all the Liberal Catholic members, as well as the Senators, petitioned Rome for a delegate, claiming that the Quebec bishops had supported the Conservative party and the statement has been made that the prelates have been ever against such a nomination as a delegate to this country.

Be this as it may, the report has it that now that Laurier is out of the way the Quebec bishops at least will be favorable to treating directly with Rome, instead of with a delegate. Hence the move in question.

Taft Breaks Ground.

San Francisco, Oct. 16.—Under conditions that were almos tideal ground was broken here on Saturday for the Panama-Pacific Exposition of 1915, that is to commemorate the opening of the Panama Canal. President Taft with a golden spade lifted the first shovelful of earth from the ground on which the Exposition buildings will be erected, and Mme. Lillian Nordica sang. More than 100,000 persons filled the great stadium in Golden Gate Park to witness the ceremony.

Summer Evening Wraps.

Evening wraps are unusually novel this season, the great vogue for sheer materials finding a happy expression in these more elaborate garments. Marquisette wraps are the latest novelties, and while exorbitant prices are asked for them in the smart shops, there is no reason why any woman could not fashion one herself, or at least plan one and have it made at very little expense.

Black, white, Alice blue, gray, gold color and king's blue are good colors for these little wraps. Many of them are cut on extremely simple lines, with the kimono sleeve and plain back and front. There seems to be no attempt to fasten these garments. They are cut so that the front just meet, and are apparently designed to hang free.

Small Heads Dont Mean Small Brains. ..

The fact that you take a small size in hats does not necessarily mean that you have a small brain. A man with a small head may be much cleverer than a man with a large one. Moreover, the size of the brain is not everything, since, if undeveloped, it is no more likely to produce anything of value than land which is not fertile. There are people with large heads who display so little intelligence that one almost expects to hear their brains rattle when they move, like a shrivelled kernel in a nut.

Too Much Education a Mistake. ..

It is a mistake to suppose that a good general education will secure success in life. No wise man accepts a general invitation to dinner! It involves no particulars. Only a particular education is of practical use Let the boys be educated for something particular — lawyers, doctors, clergymen, printers, merchants, tradesmen — only something definite No hands are so often idle as those which are supposed by the owners — and by no one else — fit to "turn to anything."

Expecting Much.

The sphere of our affections is one in which we are very apt to expect too much from others, and thus to cause bitterness and often estrangement.

To the objection of a contemporary that the Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance in the Borden Cabinet, was a Liberal, the Brockville Times furnishes the following spirited reply:—"That, of course, is a grave charge to bring against any man, but he may live it down in time. However, ti is not without precedent. The Liberal party has in the past taken men into its fold who were once Conservatives. The late Mr. Tarte, Sir Richard Cartwright, Mr. Scott, formerly Secretary of State, Hon. John Costigan, and—to come to a notable case in the home field—the Hon. Senator Derbyshire. These Conservatives were welcomed at short notice to the very bosom of the Liberal party, and the Recorder said never a word in protest,—because the circumstances were not the same."

A Sewing Machine Wrinkle

A hand sewing-machine is often very apt to slip about on the table. To obviate this, all that is necessary is to place a couple of the old-fashioned gelatine lozenges, slightly moistened, under each corner of the base board. In a few seconds the machine will be found to adhere to the table and equal a stand-machine in firmness.

Humility Safest Virtue.

Among all the virtues, humility, the lowest, is pre-eminent. It is the safest, because it is always an anchor; and that man may be truly said to live the most content in his calling who strives to live within the compass of it

Her Confidence.

She had stopped, panting, by the road to rest. It was the shell road at Toronto Beach, and she was black. Beside her was a heavy market basket filled to overflowing. A passerby smiled at her with sympathetic friendliness and she responded with full and free confidence

"Yassm. I is some tiahed. An' lame. All painful wid miseries. Yassm. I coulda done sen' some one else to mahket fo' me. Mah grandson he couda done gone. But I dasn't trus' him. He spends mah money too briefly."

Don't Lie Discouraged.

A very large proportion of the suffering that afflicts mankind proceeds from the simple feeling of discouragement. Besides the misery which it inflicts, there is the palsying effect it exerts on all human effort. As long as hope reigns in the heart, no exertion seems too great; it is when hope sinks away and despondency takes its plac that labour of head or hand languishes.

Women Formed for Love.

Women are formed for attachment. Their gratitude is unimpeachable. Their love is an unceasing fountain of delight to the man who has once attained it and knows how to deserve it. But that very keenness of sensibility which, if well cultivated would prove the source of a man's highest enjoyment, may grow to bitterness and wormwood if he fails to attend to it or abuses it.

DELICATE WHITE SOUP

Made from DAL Without Meat. Highly Nutritious.

INGREDIENTS

Half a pint of Dal
3 pints of cold water
2 blades celery, or 1 teaspoonful celery seed tied in muslin,
3 sprigs parsley.
1 blade mace.
Half dozen peppercorns.
1 onion
2 oz. flour
1 oz. butter
Half pint milk
Pepper and salt to taste
4 tablespoonfuls cream, this may be omitted.

Wash the Dal thoroughly in several waters, then put it into a saucepan with cold water, celery, parsley, mace, peppercorns and onion. BOIL ONE HOUR. Then drain the liquid through a wire sieve into a basin, and with a wooden spoon rub through the sieve as much as possible of the Dal pulp.

Then put into the empty saucepan the flour and butter and rub them together with a wooden spoon till smooth. Then add the milk gradually, stirring one way till it boils and thickens. Next add the soup from the basin, a little at a time, season with pepper and salt, and allow to boil at once.

If cream is used it should be put in just before serving. The soup must on no account boil after the cream is added.

Fashion and Food

LET fashion dictate what you shall wear, but don't let it dictate what you shall eat.

Changing the style of your hat does not affect your health, but changing the style of your breakfast food is a different matter.

Some folks have taken a fancy to predigested foods. They are simply robbing their digestive apparatus of the exercise necessary to keep it in good working order.

Then there is the other great point—the purpose of eating.

Is it merely to please the palate or to furnish fuel for the body? Why not eat foods that do both?

The body requires two kinds of fuel: that which gives energy and that which gives tissue.

The perfect food, according to scientists, should give 5½ parts of energy to one part of tissue, because that is just the ratio in which the normal man or child uses up his energy and tissue.

Tillson's Rolled Oats when cooked for only 15 minutes are in a perfect state for the normal digestion.

No amount of science and no amount of judgment can produce a more perfectly adapted breakfast food for father and son, and mother and daughter, than Tillson's Oats. We leave it to you to find out at your breakfast table tomorrow morning whether you can find a more tasty, delicious and appetizing dish.

A Hint: Try milk and a sprinkle of salt on your porridge. That's much better for your digestion than rich cream and a lot of sugar.

The Haunted Chamber

They are all noisily discussing a suicide that had recently taken place in a neighboring county, and which had from its peculiar circumstances, caused more than usual interest.

One of the guests to-night is an army-surgeon, and he is giving them an explanation as to how the fatal wound had been inflicted. It appeared at the inquest that the unfortunate man shot himself in such a peculiar manner as to cause considerable doubt as to whether he had been murdered or had died by his own hand. Evidence, however, of a most convincing nature had confirmed the latter theory.

Captain Ringwood, with a revolver in his hand, is endeavoring to show that the man could not have shot himself, just as Adrian re-enters.

"Be careful with that revolver," he exclaims, hastily; "it is loaded."

"All right, old fellow, I know it," returns Ringwood. "Look here, doctor, if he had held it so, how could he make a wound here?

"Why not? Sir Adrian, take the revolver for a moment, will you?" says the surgeon, anxious to demonstrate his theory beyond the possibility of a doubt. "I want to convince Ringwood. Now stand so, and hold the weapon so"—placing it with the muzzle presented in a rather awkward ward position almost over the heart.

"I thought fellows always put the muzzles of their revolvers in their mouths and blew their brains out when they committed suicide," Ring- remarks lightly.

"This fellow evidently did not," says the surgeon calmly. "Now, Sir Adrian, you see, by holding it thus, you could quite easily blow yourself to——"

Before he can finish the sentence, there is a sudden confusion of bodies, a jostling as it were, for Arthur Dynecourt, who has been looking on attentively, with one foot on a footstool close to Adrian's elbow, has slipped from the stool at this inopportune moment, and has fallen heavily against his cousin.

There is a shout from somebody, and then a silence. The revolver in the suffle had gone off! Through the house the sharp crack of a bullet rings loudly, rousing many from their slumbers.

Lights can be seen in the passages; terrified faces peep out from half-open doors. Dora Talbot, coming into the corridor in a pale pink cashmere dressing gown trimmed with swan's-down, in which she looks the very personification of innocence and youth, screams loudly, and demands hysterically to be informed as to the cause of the unusual noise.

The servants have rushed from their quarters in laarm. Ethel Villiers, with a pale, scared face, runs to Florence Delmaine's room ,and throws her arms round that young lady as she comes out, pale but composed, to ask in a clear tone what has happened.

As nobody knows, and as Florence in her heart is more frightened than she cares to confess, being aware through Adrian that some of the men are still up in the smoking-room, and fearing that a quarrel had arisen among them, she proposes that they should go to the smoking-room in a body and make inquiries.

Old Lady FitzAlmont, with Lady Gertrude sobbing in her arm, seconds this proposal, and, being a veteran of much distinction,takes the lead. Those following close behind are glad of this, and hopeful because of it, her appearance being calculated to rout the enemy. The awful character of her dressing gown and the severity of the nightcap that crowns her martial head would strike terror to the hearts of any midnight marauders. They all move off in a body, and, guided unconsciously by Florence, approach the smoking-room.

Voices can be heard as they draw near; the door is slightly ajar. Florence, drawing back as they come up to it, the old lady waves her aside, and advances boldly to the front. Flinging wide open the door, she bursts upon the astonished company within.

"Where is he?" she asks, with a dignity that only heightens the attractions of the cap and gown. "Have you secured him? Sir Adrian where is the constable. Have you sent for him?"

Sir Adrian, whose gaze is fixed upon the fair vision in the trailing white gown standing timidly in the door-way, forgets to answer his interrogator, and the others, taken by surprise, maintain a solemn silence.

"Why this mystery?" demands Lady FitzAlmont, sternly. "Where is the miscreant? Where is the man that fired the murderous shot?"

"He—who? Mr. Dynecourt?" ejaculates her ladyship in a disappointed tone. "It was all a mistake, then? I must say, Mr. Dynecourt," continues the old lady in an indignant tone, "that I think you might find a more suitable time to play off your jokes, or to practice target shooting, than in the middle of the night, when every respectable household ought to be wrapped in slumber."

"I assure you," begins Arthur Dynecourt, who is strangely pale and discomposed, "it was all an accident —an——"

"Accident! Nonsense, sir; I don't believe there was any accident whatsoever!"

As these words pass from the lips of the irascible old lady, several men in the room exchange significant glances Is it that old lady FitzAlmont has just put their own thoughts into words?

"Let me explain to your ladyship," says Sir Adrian, courteously. "We were just talking about that unfortunate affair of the Stewarts, and Maitland was showing us how it occurred. I had the revolver in my hand so"—pointing the weapon toward himself.

"Put down that abominable weapon at once, sir!" commands Lady FitzAlmont, in a menacing tone, largely mingled with abject fear. As she speaks she retreats precipitately behind Florence, thus pushing that young lady to the fore.

"When my cousin unhappily stumbled against me, and the revolver went off," goes on Sir Adrian. "I'm deeply grieved, Lady FitzAlmant, that this should have occurred to disturb the household; but, really, it was a pure accident."

He locks far more distressed by this occurreace that Sir Adrian, who had narrowly escaped being wounded. This only showed his tenderness and proper feeling, as almost all the women present mutually agreed. Almost all, but not quite. Dora Talbot, for example, grows deadly pale as she listens to the explanation and watches Arthur's ghastly face. What is it like? The face of a murderer?

"It was the purest accident, I assure you," protests Arthur again, as though anxious to impress this conviction upon his own mind.

"It might have been a very serious one," says the surgeon gravely, regarding him with a keen glance. "It might have meant death to Sir Adrian."

Florence changes color and glances at her host with parted lips. Dora Talbot, pressing her way through the group in the doorway, goes direct to him as if impulsively, and takes his aand in both of hers.

"Dear Sir Adrian, how can we be thankful enough for your escape?" she says sweetly, tears standing in her brgiht blue eyes. She presses his hand warmly, and even raises it to her lips in a transport of emotion. Standing there in the pretty pink dressing gown that shows off her complexion to perfection, Dora Talbot looks lovely.

"You are very good—very kind," returns Sir Adrian, really touched by her concern, but still with eyes only for the white vision in the doorway; "but you make too much of nothing. I am only sorry I have been the unhappy cause of arousing you from your rosy dreams; you will not thank me tomorrow when there will be only lilies in your cheeks."

Finances of Canada

The statement of the revenue and expenditure for the first half of the fiscal year, being from April 1 to September 30, comes out at practically the same time as the Laurier Government retired from control of the country's affairs. It records high water mark in the revenue for a half year, and also in the expenditure. The figures follow, those for the same period of 1910 being given for comparison:—

Revenue—	1910.	1911.
Customs	$36,185,416	$42,284,535
Excise	7,898,552	8,799,535
Post Office	3,675,000	4,151,000
Public Works, Railways and Canals	5,607,145	5,873,637
Miscellaneous	2,782,079	2,961,816
Total	$56,148,193	$64,069,524
Expenditure—
Ordinary account	35,108,672	35,933,456
Capital account	12,430,136	12,318,027
Total	$47,538,808	$48,251,483

It must not be forgotten that the above is but a moiety of what the incoming Government has to face and shoulder in the near future. There are heavy liabilities which have been incurred for public works running up into the millions and which have to be provided for, and charged against income and capital, which will materially swell the figures quoted above.

Now for the debt account of the Dominion, which, when the proposed expenditures are incurred, notwithstanding the large surpluses which have poured into the coffers of the country during Grit reign, the total indebtedness will be swollen by millions of dollars. We give it as it now stands:—

Liabilities—Funded Debt—
Payable in Canada	$ 4,865,260
Payable in London	263,121,429
Bank Circulation Redemption Fund	4,654,316
Dominion Notes	99,308,945
Savings Banks	57,433,599
Trust Funds	9,721,724
Province Accounts	11,920,582
Miscellaneous and Banking Accounts	26,227,283
Total Gross Debt	$477,256,141
Assets—Investments—
Sinking Funds	$ 11,714,007
Other Investments	28,776,851
Province Accounts	2,296,429
Miscellaneous and Banking Accounts	110,530,085
Total Assets	$153,317,372
Total Net Debt 30th September	$323,938,768

Reader, put these figures in your head for comparison with those dealing with the debt of the Dominion when Laurier came into power and with what the debt will be when the liabilities which have been incurredare are paid, and you will wonder that the people ever submitted to such extravagance.

The Globe's Opinion of the Cabinet

There are men in the new Ministry in whom The Globe has no confidence." So says that journal editorially on the 11th inst. It is supposed that the moment Mr. Borden reads this declaration he will dismiss those in whom The Globe declares a want of confidence.

It, however, speaks more favorably of the Premier and others of his Cabinet. Of the former it says: "Of the Premier it may be said unreservedly that he comes to his high task with an unsullied personal record. He is an honorable, courteous, clean-minded and clean-handed man for whom no Canadian need apologize either at home or abroad."

Of others of the Cabinet it has, after expressing its want of confidence in some, this to say: "There are others—and they form the majority of the Administration—who have rendered useful public service, who are good and true Canadians, who are devoted to the cause of Imperial unity, and who may be depended upon to do all that in them lies to make Canada great and prosperous, and her people happy and contented." Honest Globe, for once.

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

When the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box. 6

Sydney, N.S., Oct. 16.—Sydney has a distinguished visitor in His Highness Prince Ghako bi Soumaila, who, with his friend and aide, Capt. Radcliffe, is en route to Newfoundland. Prince Ghaki and Capt. Radcliffe are keen sportsmen, and have visited a number of the principal hunting centres in America. This is their first trip to Newfoundland.

In regard to the Turko-Italian war, the prince stated that in his opinion it was simply a pre-arranged matter between the great powers of Europe that Italy eventually would get Tripoli.

"It is only a sham fight, and there will be no more bloodshed. The Turkish Government is too clever to continue a war of this sort when she knows that having so much seaboard and practically no navy, she cannot possibly prevail."

Won't Sit at Trial.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 16.—A Journal special from Ontonagon says Circuit Judge Cooper has refused to sit at the trial of Miss Laura Stannard, charged with poisoning her husband, Charles Stannard, a wealthy lumberman of Greenland, who died a few months ago.

Post Office Favoritism

The Toronto News of the 10th inst. charges directly the Post Office Department, under the Hon. Mr. Lemieux, late Postmaster-General, with party favoritism to the Toronto Globe in the matter of non-charging postage on extra copies of The Globe sent to parties in various parts of the Dominion during the late contest. The charge is that The Globe was permitted to send tons of its issues though the post office without exacting extra postage which The News and other Conservative papers were compelled to pay. To such an extent was this favoritism carried that The Globe made an actual saving of no less than $25,000, which The News alleges it still owes to the Post Office Department. Le Devoir, Bourassa's paper, was treated in the same manner as was The News. The manager of Le Devoir says he visited Ottawa and agreed to pay the extra postage if it were exacted from Le Canada, The Tribune and other Government papers, but got no satisfaction. This favoritism does not appear to have been confined to The Globe, but have been extended to other Liberal journals as well which were booming reciprocity.

After the election and defeat of the Laurier Cabinet, a refund of the extra postage paid by The News was made. Is there any one credulous enough to believe that this would have been refunded had it not been for the purpose of relieving The Globe from the payment of the $25,000, nor would a dollar have been refunded had not The News exposed the whole transaction by demanding equal treatment.

The Globe made a reply, but did not meet the charge clearly.

As investigation by Parliament must be had as soon as the House meets. With the present House of Commons there will be no blocking of evidence. If the law is such as to justify what was done to favor The Globe, the question will arise, why then was the same privilege not extended to others?

THE MARKETS.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 14.—There was a steady undertone at opening, and values were barely ¼d higher, and, following the opening, there was a decline of ¼d to ½d, with selling to realize. The firmness in Winnipeg at the close yesterday, and the firmness of Australian and Plate offerings, together with expected lighter American shipments this week, as shown by Bradstreet's, were offset here by a forecast of liberal shipments to the United Kingdom and a quiet demand for spot, and less demand for both cargoes and parcels. Advices from Argentine are favorable, with the weather warmer, and this was reflected in the comparative heaviness in the distant months here. At the close the market was dull, ½d higher to ¼d lower than yesterday.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Prospects of another big increase of the visible supply made the wheat market to-day turn weak. The close was 1-8c to 1-4c and 3-8c under last night. Corn declined 3-8c to 1-2c and 1-2c net, and oats 1-8c to 1-4c. The end of the day left provisions varying from unchanged figures to 5c advance.

Western Grain Coming In.

Winnipeg, Oct. 16.—Nearly two million bushels of grain were marketed on the Canadian Northern and Canadian Pacific Railways Friday, the C. N. R. total amounting to 685,000 bushels and the C. P. R. to 1,199,000 bushels, making a total of 1,885,000 bushels for the day.

T. S. Atcheson, general grain agent of the C. P. R., stated that from special reports he has received from all over the West the grain was being threshed at a very fast rate, the weather being fair and warm.

To date the Canadian Pacific have had marketed along its lines 14,360,000 bushels of wheat and 1,735,000 bushels of other grains. The total number of cars loaded amounts to 10,970.

After the Job.

Stratford, Oct. 16.—It is most likely that James Torrance will be one of several M.P.P.'s who aspire for the post of superintendent of colonization, which Donald Sutherland resigned to contest South Oxford.

In the event of Mr. Torrance securing the position, there will be a new Conservative candidate. The names mentioned for the position are those of James Mackins, K.C., and D. A. Dempsey of Ellice, with the chances in favor of the former.

After Twenty-Six Years.

Kingston, Oct. 16.—After a pastorate of twenty-six years, Rev. Dr. Mackie bade farewell to his congregation at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church yesterday. He and Mrs. Mackie will leave for Montreal Tuesday, and later proceed to their old home in Scotland. Dr. Mackie has been in the ministry for thirty-six years. In 1885 he came out from Scotland, where he was assistant to Rev. Dr. Barclay, now of Montreal.

International Bank License.

Montreal, Oct. 13.—It now looks as if the International Bank of Canada would open its doors for business on Tuesday morning next. Rodolphe Forget, M.P., the president, stated last evening that it was expected that the long-delayed license would be granted on Monday. It is understood that Hon. W. S. Fielding has left a memorandum in the department giving the reasons for his persisting refusal in granting the license.

FALSE IDEALS

"Graball Too Often the Height of Ambition.

False ideals of happiness haunt the ays of men and lead them on to anger and destruction through the ren song of fantasy. One markes his f wealth. He has enough now for ll the purposes of refined living; ut he wants that extra, that margin, y which enough may be broadened ut into excess, and refinement may e made to include frantic luxury and isolent ostentation. "When I have so uch, I shall be content," he says to imself. But he is never content. If e gets a hundred thousand pounds, e wants two; if two, three; and so n till he covets a million which then, hen compassed, shall positively be he term and boundary of his desires. ut the million spreads out and rolls n, as the hundred thousand had done efore it.

Rousing Response.

At a Toronto theatre not long since he curtain rose on an empty stage n the second act of a play, and by nd by a meek-looking young man vith a dust-coat slung over his arm ame on and loudly called, "Uncle! ncle!"

According to the book of the play e should have received no answer o his call, and after an appropriate ause he should have gone on with he monologue. But a graceless "god" in the gallery took upon himelf to answer the actor.

"All right, I'm coming in a monent; how much do you want on it?" he shouted.

The effect on the audience may be imagined.

Japan has Cheapest Postal Service.

Japan has the cheapest postal service in the world. Letters are carried ll over the empire for two sen, about even-tenths of a cent. This is the nore remarkable when we consider he difficulties of transportation over mountainous and irregular country hat has only about a hundred miles f railway, while only a few of the chief roads can be used for wagons and the steamships connect only a small number of stations on the coast.

We Eat Too Much.

To rise from the table able to eat a little more is a proverbially good rule for every one. There is nothing more idiotic than forcing down a few mouthfuls because they happen to remain on one's plate after hunger is satisfied, and because they may be wasted" if left. It is the most serious waste to overtax the stomach with even half an ounce more than it can take care of.

CHEAP CHEESE FROM BUTTERMILK

Experiments at the Agricultural Department of the University of Wisconsin, show that a valuable inexpensive cheese may be produced from buttermilk. Large amounts of buttermilk are practically wasted annually in many creameries. If this were made into cheese it would furnish a large supply of palatable food, said to be equal in food value, pound for pound, to lean beefsteak, and it can be sold profitably at haf the price of meat.

In the process of making this cheese the curdling of the milk is produced by heating to 80 degrees, and leaving it undisturbed for one hour. It is then heated to 130 degrees, and after standing quiet for about an hour, the clear whey is drawn off the curd, and the latter is placed on a draining rack which is covered with cheesecloth. Here it remains half a day, or over night, until as dry as desired, when it is salted with one and a half pounds of salt per hundred pounds of curd. The cheese is now ready for use.

Butermilk cheese can be made from butermilk from cream which was pasteurized before ripening, or the buttermilk may be pasteurized during the process of cheesemaking, in either case insuring the absence of disease germs. Since the public is not familiar with the product, it is necessary that it be carefully advertised, and that the packing and selling of it receive special attention. It may be safely shipped in butter tubs and retail in paper pails or other small packages. It will keep for a week or ten days at 50 or 60 degrees, and much longer than this if stored at 32 degrees or lower. It may be sold at from three to five cents per pound at the factory and retailed from seven to twelve cents per pound, and at these prices should prove a profitable product for both the creamery and the retailer. Cheese color can be used if high color is desired. The curd from buttermilk containing 50 per cent. or more fat, as well as buttermilk from cream which was pasteurized when very sour, is always so fine-grained that it runs through the draining cloth and is lost.

The food value of the product is high in comparison to its cost, and it is said to be very palatable when eaten alone, like cottage cheese, seasoned with salt or pepper, or when used in salads. It will spread like butter, and is thus very suitable for sandwiches. The fine buttermilk flavor makes it preferable to cottage cheese to many consumers, and it is easily digestible, which should make a keen demand for this product once it becomes well known.

The special apparatus for making this cheese is inexpensrie and the draining rack strainer and siphon may be made by almost any butter maker: in fact, where only a small quantity is made daily, the ordinary utensils of a creamery may be used.

FIELD SPORTS OF THE Y. M. C. A.

The field sports held at the Driving Park on Saturday afternoon, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A and which were postponed from Saturday previous, proved to be uninteresting. Only a few were present, and the competitors were scarce. Only five events were carried out, and the two successful competitors in the events were as follows:

Running high jump—V. Butts, 4 ft. 7 in. C. H. Hankinson, 4 ft. 5 in. Butt gave an exhibition jump, clearing five feet.

Half mile walk—R. McCreary 1st., B. Rowe 2nd. The former gave his competitor 150 yds. start, but won easily.

220 yars race—R. Smith 1st; H. Ingram 2nd; C. H. Hankinson 3rd.

Prof. Root, of Albert College, was starter and Mr. F. C. Dingman, Y. M. C. A. physical director was referee.

THE CLERGY AND THE SECULAR PRESS

The secular press is coming to its own, and none too soon. Only this week we heard from a very prominent member of the Woman's Auxiliary of the exceeding kindness of the Winnipeg press in printing reports of the Triennial meeting, of their accuracy, and of the courtesy of the reporters who procured them. And the lady evidently was voicing the feeling of her sister workers.

Then a few weeks ago a brave cleric got up in General Synod and championed the daily papers which had been reviled because in the stress of a pre-election campaign and in the demand for all the fair news the newspapers had at times "boiled down" synod reports until nothing remained but the facts. This man had courage enough to say that the clergy did not own the papers, that editors were at perfect liberty to publish just as much or as little as they pleased, and that he considered that the Church and all good works had occasion to be very grateful to the daily newspaper and its editor.

This is such good talk that we'd like a little more of it! The Church and the clergy have every reason to be grateful to the daily newspaper and its editor, for it often does work without reward which they are pledged and paid to do and which they often leave undone or do, from lack of common sense, ineffectually. We should like to see an alliance between every clergyman and minister in Canada and the local papers. An alliance of this kind would be an invincible purifying agency in every town and city in the Dominion. Failing this we are thankful for straws showing that the wind is blowing in the direction of our daily newspapers, getting the reward of at least a grateful word from the clergy and Church workers. —Church Life, Kingston.

$1500 LEGACY PROVED FATAL

BOSTON, Oct. 14.—An unexpected legacy of $1500 bequeathed to William Colvin by his mother was the cause of the death of the beneficiary and his best friend, Charles Percival. After one week of riotous living in this city and New York, Percival died at the Relief Station and Colvin at the Washingtonian Home.

On Monday afternoon last the two men were arrested and taken to the East Dedham Street Station, where they recovered their senses sufficiently to tell a coherent story.

Colvin was a workingman, and not a particularly hard drinker, he said. When he received the unexpected legacy his only idea was to have a good time. He found his friend Percival, and after a day and a night at the various cafes and hotels of this city, in which they parted with nearly $200, they took a train for New York. They spent three days in that city and got rid of $1,000.

They reached Boston again on Sunday night last, and immediately began buying drinks. When arrested on Monday each had about $1.

ALGONQUIN NATIONAL PARK.

The high altitude of the Algonquin National Park of Ontario is one of the attractions and has much to do with the benefit derived from a visit to it. The elevation above sea level at Algonquin Park station, the objective point on the railway, is 1700 feet. There is a tonic quality to the air which must be experienced to be understood. With prevailing winds from the north and the west, the air is purified by its journey over millions of square miles of forest land, much of which is pine and balsam. The 'Highland Inn' offers exceptionally good accommodation to visitors, and any season of the year is a good time to visit this territory. The Inn is open all the year round. Food That Saved When Everything Else Failed.

The food route is a safe and very sure road back to health.

"For six years I was a serious sufferer from indigestion and general stomach troubles, from the improperly cooked food in boarding houses and restaurants of which I was a victim.

"During three of the six years, I was so bad off nervous prostration set in and I sought relief of a specialist without success. I had gotten so that I could eat almost nothing and was steadily losing flesh.

"Many different foods and preparations were recommended for trial, without success, and I had become indifferent to all food.

"Some months after seeing your ad. in the daily papers about the scientifically prepared food, Grape-Nuts, and its good qualities, and being driven almost to despair over my plight, I skeptically resolved to give Grape-Nuts a trial as a last resort. And I thank God that I did.

"From my first meal of Grape-Nuts I felt a great change for the better; the knot that arose in the chest after meals disappeared; stomach ceased its uneasiness and gradually the nervousness disappeared.

"For about a year I ate Grape-Nuts and cream 3 times a day and have gained 54 pounds of lost weight and weight 5 pounds more than I ever did, and now do not find any trouble in using my old-time relishes with my Grape-Nuts.

"I expect to be married soon and I do not expect Grape-Nuts to be eliminated from my bill of fare as long as I live. If my testimony will help some poor mortal, place my letter conspicuously where it can be read. I will gladly answer letters." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

"Grape-Nuts contain all the constituents of a complete food and in a highly assimilable state," says the "London Lancet."

The Envy of her Neighbors

is the woman whose kitchen shines with a handsome, roomy range—whose face beams with the satisfaction afforded by a perfect cooking equipment.

For every woman wants a good stove. Whether she does her own cooking or not, she eats the meals that are prepared on it, and feels a pride in having the best. GURNEY-OXFORD satisfies that pride; justifies the neighbor's envy. Gurney-Oxford stoves and ranges carry every known feature of convenience, economy and control with some new points of excellence that are exclusive.

GURNEY-OXFORD

First of all is the lever that holds. No danger of the fire going out between meals. The Oxford Economizer will hold the heat at a low ebb till you want it; then turn the handle, and your stove is hot in a jiffy. Besides this saving of time and worry it saves in fuel to the actual extent of one ton in six.

THE DIVIDED FLUE STRIP is the envy of all women who bake. It guides the heat equally along sides, back and front of the oven.

Let us demonstrate these and other strong advantages of the Gurney-Oxford line. We have stoves for every purpose, every fuel, and a variety of prices.

FOR AN "AT HOME"

Pointers for the Housewife Who Prefers to Arrange the Details of Her Entertainment Without Professional Assistance.

When an entertainment of any kind 's in preparation, the question which presents most difficulty is often that of refreshments. Of course, it is some-'imes possible to let a confectioner ndertake this part of the business at fixed charge for each guest; but this vay of arranging matters is rather xpensive and not always practicable, 'or people who live in the country re sometimes beyond the reach of a eally good confectioner.

Then, if it is settled that the catering shall be done at home, the question arises, "How much of each thing hall we want? What quantity will be ufficient for all the guests, and yet ill not leave stale cakes and dried ndwiches on which we are obliged live for a week after the party?"

It may, perhaps, be useful to have a st of the refreshments needed for venty people, and this can be amfied or reduced according to the umber of guests.

For Sandwiches. — One quartern ndwich loaf, half a pound of butter, ne jar of potted meat or fish paste, ne cucumber and some other reasonble green stuff. This will make ur large plates — two of green ndwiches and two of meat or fish.

For Sweets. — One dozen eclairs, ne dozen pastries, one dozen queen akes, one pound of rich plum cake ut into fingers, one pound of small ancy biscuits.

For Beverages. — A quarter of a ound of tea, half a pound of coffee, ne pint of cream, one pint of milk. laret cup made from three bottles f claret and four bottle of soda vater.

Ices. — Three pints of ice cream hould be sufficient for twenty people, ut as in the hot weather ices are pt to waste a little, it might be well o order two quarts.

If the fancy cakes are being prepared at home, they can quite well be nade a day or two in advance, provided that they are kept in a tin with cover which fits tightly enough to xclude the air. Rich cakes keep etter than those belonging to the ponge cake or queen cake varieties.

Sandwiches should not be cut until ust before they are wanted, as they et dry so very soon.

IN A LADY'S GARDEN

Gardens sloping to a river or that ave a sheet of water may be greatly eautified by the cultivation of water lants. The water violet need only be laid in the water; there it floats root and all. The broad-leafed cat'sail, "Typha latifolia," is large-flowered and very abundant. The lovely hree-leaved buckbean, with its pure vhite flowers, thrives well in quite hallow water; the Cape "Aponogeton listachyon" is charming; and surely nothing could surpass the well-loved orget-me-not, "true-blue," that beckons from afar! Many sorts of rushes and spiraeas, flags, iris, and flowering shrubs flourish by the banks, and many of our ferns and trailing plants, such as periwinkle and St. John's wort. Kingcups are among the most brilliantly beautiful of all waterloving plants: "thick o'erlaid with gold," they seem to send forth a refulgence of light. Water lilies may be planted by letting them down in the water in baskets; and there is no prettier sight than a stream of water "lilied o'er." "Nymphea alba" is the usual white kind; "N. caroliniana," rosy pink and fragrant; "N. perfecta," salmon pink and fragrant; "N. chromatella," canary yellow; "N. odorata alba," pure white and very fragrant. Then there are purple, pink, carmine, sulphur, all most fair to see; and in hospitals and sick-rooms, where the same garden flowers have been sent throughout summer, these come as something new and wondrous, like a fresh revelation of God's goodness and mercy.

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND

The old family doctor, of whom so few are now seen in that age of "specialists," was the valued friend and adviser of his patients. They depended on him to keep them in health, and cheer them with his counsel. He taught them the wisdom of preventing illness by watching closely after the health of the family.

Mrs. S. H. DuBois writes from her home at Hempstead, L. I.: "Vinol is an old friend of our family. We have used it for years whenever any of us need a tonic on account of being in a rundown state of health, and it always gives perfect satisfaction. We have used nine bottles this winter."

There are thousands of families who could and do the same thing. Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil, has proved its value by bringing back rugged health and strength to vast numbers of weak, rundown, men, women and children. That is why we sell so much and guarantee it to give satisfaction. If it disappoints you, you can have your money back at once. Red Cross Drug Store, J. S. McKeown, Belleville.

Turkish Speech From Throne Shows No Yielding.

Constantinople, Oct. 16.—The Turkish Parliament was opened yesterday afternoon. The Sultan's speech from the throne was read, according to custom, by the Grand Vizier in the presence of the sultan, the eldest Turkish princes, the foreign diplomats and the heads of the foreign banks.

Profound silence marked the reading by Said Pasha of the throne speech, at the conclusion of which applause broke out. Sultan Mahommed V. appeared to be deeply affected.

The speech from the throne dealt mostly with the action of Italy in declaring war over Tripoli, and with the steps taken by the powers looking to mediation.

"In the meanwhile," the Grand Vizier read, "the Turkish Government continues to have recourse to measures to defend its rights and legitimate interests."

The speech declared that Italy's ultimatum was presented while the Turkish Government was engrossed in developing the country industrially and repairing the errors of the past regime. It accused Italy of opening hostilities before the expiration of twenty-four hours after the ultimatum was given, and with firing upon torpedo boats in the Adriatic when they were saluting, ignorant that hostilities had broken out.

Italy's Difficulties.

Rome, (via frontier), Oct. 16.—The landing of the Italian expeditionary force in Tripoli was more eventful than was at first known. Owing to the difficulties caused by a rough sea and a hard shore, the Italian commanders found themselves confronted by a serious problem. The great fleet of coral boats from the Islands of Lampeduse, Lampidone, Linosa and others in the Mediterranean, came to the rescue of the transports and helped in the speedy landing of the troops. The gravity of the situation is indicated by fact that the torpedo boat Preccia was wrecked on the rocks, although the crew was saved.

Cholera was reported likely to prove a worse enemy than the Turks. Already 20 or 30 cases have occurred, with a 75 per cent. mortality.

Another cause of apprehension to the Government is the position of Italian residents in Ottoman territory, which is considered extremely dangerous. An exchange of communications on this subject has taken place between Rome and Berlin. Germany is using all her influence to prevent excesses and is endeavoring to convince Turkey that reprisals aganst Italians now in that country would only serve to make her position still more difficult.

Abused the Italians.

Rome, Oct. 16.—Reports from distant regions of the Turkish Empire are causing considerable excitement here. These reports describe the authorities as abusing members of the Italian colonies and sequestering their private correspondence. It is asserted that the telegrams of Italian consuls despatched before war was declared, were seized and that Italians who later wished to leave the country were held as hostages and released only recently through the intervention of Germany and after they had been subjected to gross indignities.

Cholera Outbreak at Tripoli.

Malta, Oct. 16.—It is reported that several cases of cholera have developed among the soldiers taking part in the Italian expedition to Tripoli. The stricken men have been isolated and other energetic measures adopted to prevent a spread of the disease.

ANOTHER LIFE SAVED.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Nov. 17, 1910.

"I had Pleuro-Pneumonia and was taken to the City Hospital to have my lungs tapped. After this was done I seemed to get worse, and never expected to walk again. In fact, I was given up and wanted to be taken home from the hospital. I was in a terribly rundown condition and felt that I was going right into consumption, and for six months was just a shadow. I tried every means to get well, but there was no cure for me until I began taking your No. 10 Lung Tonic, of which I used 22 bottles in all. It was not long after returning home that I surprised my neighbors by gaining in strength and health, and now I am in good health, and feel it my duty to publish it everywhere, as I am living to-day—saved from the grave by your wonderful prescription. You may publish this letter if you wish, for I am willing to let the world know what this medicine did for me, and I cannot praise it highly."

Mrs. John S. Barker.

The above prescription is not a "Cure-All" or so-called patent medicine. Dr. Morriscy prescribed it for 44 years, and it cured thousands after other doctors failed.

Republic Declared.

Washington, Oct. 16.—The rapid spread of the revolution in China has led to an informal exchange of views on the situation among the Powers. Representatives at the embassies and legations here have talked the matter over in a preliminary fashion, and while no action is expected, the European and American nations interested in Chinese developments, and having citizens in the danger zone, will keep in touch with each other.

The request of the revolutionary leaders for recognition at the hands of foreign consuls is of course regarded as premature, though it is usual in such cases for consuls to be instructed to deal unofficially with the insurrectionists for the protection of lives and property and the facilitation of trade. It is considered that in the near future consuls will be so instructed, unless their general orders cover contingencies of this nature.

WILL BE BUSY SESSION

Commons Expected to Wind Up Affairs by Christmas.

Cabinet Is Expected to Announce Soon the Date of Sitting, and It Is Believed That the Work Will Be Crowded Into a Short Period, After Which an Adjournment Will Be Taken Until the Fall of 1912.

Ottawa, Oct. 16.—It is more than likely that there will be a short session commencing on or about November 15, and ending before Christmas, Parliament being prorogued then until next autumn.

It had been expected that there would be a session lasting only a month this fall and then another after the holidays. The Cabinet is considering at present crowding all the work into one term.

The new Ministers believe that even a session called after Christmas would hardly give them time to outline a comprehensive legislation program. Of course, with a session lasting only until Christmas, a number of important measures, such as the Banking Act, would have to stand over. The present act would likely be extended again for a year without amendment.

The date of the opening of Parliament and whether there will be one or two sessions will be decided upon next week.

Dr. Roche, the new Secretary of State, left Saturday night for Winnipeg.

Date of Bye-Elections.

Ottawa, Oct. 16.—Within half an hour of attending the reception in his honor on Parliament Hill on Saturday afternoon, the Duke of Connaught signed his first order-in-council at Rideau Hall, fixing the date of the Ministerial bye-elections. Nominations will be on Oct. 27, and polling, if any, on Nov. 3. The outlook is that all the Ministers will be returned without opposition.

At the council meeting held on Saturday, after the return of the Cabinet from Quebec, the change in dates was decided upon.

It's a Toss-Up.

Ottawa, Oct. 16.—Hon. Josiah Wood of Sackville, N.B., was here yesterday, and the question as to whether he or Dr. John Daniel of St. John is to be the new Leutenant-Governor of New Brunswick is under consideration. If Senator Woods is to be Lieutenant-Governor, Dr. Daniel, who is giving up his seat to Hon. J. D. Hazen, will go to the Upper House.

French-Canadian Speaker.

Ottawa, Oct. 16.—According to custom, the retiring speakers of both houses, Hon. J. K. Kerr and Hon. Charles Marcil, have been gazetted Privy Councillors. It is expected that the new Speaker of the Senate will be Hon. John N. Kirchoffer of Brandon, which will necessitate the selection of a French-Canadian for the Speakership of the Commons.

Emperor Bill's Motive.

Paranaqua, Brazil, Oct. 16.—The promptness of Emperor William in sending a donation of $2,500 to aid the flood sufferers in the State of Santa Catharina is regarded with such significance here. The gift was the subject of a discourse on the Germanization of South Brazil. The speaker was Deputy Correla Freitas, who said that Brazil had had disasters in other states without exciting Emperor William's generosity.

Duke and Duchess Get a Loyal Welcome in Ottawa.

Drives In His Own Carriage, Drawn by Four Black Horses—Pays a Compliment to Earl Grey and Congratulates Canadians on Their Unblemished Record as a Peaceful Nation—Warm Feeling For Irish.

Ottawa, Oct. 16.—Ottawa Saturday afternoon gave a great welcome to the Duke of Connaught. Parliament Hill was resplendent in red, white and blue flags, bannerets and bunting. The weather was ideal and an immense crowd witnessed the reception.

His Royal Highness arrived by special train from Quebec at 2.15, the special having been held at Buckingham in order that the civic arrangements might not be upset. The journey was made by way of the north shore, the train crossing through Hull and pulling into the Broad street station.

A military band at the station played the National Anthem as the train came in, while a royal salute was fired from Primrose Hill. The vice-regal party were met by Hon. R. L. Borden and members of the Dominion Government.

The duke's own carriage, a gorgeous vehicle, in black and red and gold, drawn by four horses, was waiting for him, with a guard of the Princess Louise Dragoons. Two big motor cars from Rideau Hall took the duke's suite and the procession started for Parliament Hill.

The reception took place immediately in front of the main block of the Parliament Buildings, on a platform erected on the main walk.

At 2.30 the cheering of the crowd announced the approach of His Royal Highness. The band played the National Anthem and a guard of the 43rd Regiment presented arms. The duke, attended by his staff, inspected the guard and then proceeded to the platform, where addresses of welcome were presented by the City of Ottawa, St. George's Society, St. Andrew's Society, St. Jean Baptiste, St. Patrick, Overseas Club, and others.

On the platform with the Governor-Genearl and staff were: The Prime Minister, Hon. R. L. Borden, and his colleagues; Sir Wilfrid Laurier and several members of the former Government; Chief Justice Sir Charles Fitzpatrick and judges of the Supreme Court, and a host of lesser officials.

In replying to the address of the City Council, His Royal Highness said:

"Gentlemen: In the name of the duchess, as well as my own, I thank you for your loyal address of welcome. In coming once more to make my home among you, I am inspired by a feeling of pleasure at renewing the associations of my youth, as well as with one of wonder at the great development which has been achieved since my last visit to Canada, twenty-one years ago. I take this opportunity of making reference to my predecessor, Earl Grey, and of saying how fully I realize the difficulty of succeeding one who had so completely identified himself with your joys and sorrows and by his long residence amongst you had become a most enthusiastic Canadian. I know with what regret he left you, and how his sympathy and affection will remain with Canada till the end of his days.

"You have referred to my having taken part in military operations within the Dominion some forty years ago. I congratulate you on the fact that ever since then a succession of wise and thoughtful Governments have as the result of their deliberations here in Ottawa kept this great Dominion clear of any similar menace to peace and progress.

"You have recently passed through the throes of a general election, in which both sides have been animated by a common desire for the benefit of their country and a momentous decision has been arrived at by the electorate. I pray that this decision and such others, as may from time to time be made by the nation, may all—under the blessing of Providence—be to the advantage of Canada and the British Empire. That your progress may continue throughout this your twentieth century, is my most heartfelt wish and hope."

In replying to the address of St. George's Society, the duke said:

"I thank you in the name of the Duchess of Connaught, as well as in my own, for your loyal address of welcome. It is a real pleasure to me to be welcomed here by so great and important a branch of your famous society. Such a society as yours has the very gratest value, not only to those permanently resident in the Dominion, for whom it presents a means of maintaining their connection with the old country, but also to the settler, the newcomer. Many of these are indebted to you for the valuable advice and discreet help which you dispense so wisely, and it is my earnest wish that you may continue to flourish in the future as you have in the past."

In replying to the address given by the officials of the St. Patrick's Literary and Scientific Association, His Royal Highness said:

"I thank you for your address of welcome, the graceful terms of which are characteristic of the Irish race, and I shall have the greatest pleasure in informing the King of your loyal expressions of devotion to his person and crown.

"I congratulate you on the progress of your association, and on your ideal of fostering the national spirit in a people, which has given so many noble sons to the Empire.

"As your association said ten years ago in an address presented His Majesty: 'Each visit from a member of the royal family finds our people more numerous and prosperous.'

"True as the statement then was, it is doubly true to-day and with this constant augmentation of the population, the self-imposed duties of societies such as yours are heavily increased. Your services, freely given, are deeply valued and appreciated by those who benefit thereby.

"I am glad, in replying to your address to renew here on Canadian soil my relations with Ireland and the Irish, with whom I have been so constantly, and so intimately associated, and for whom I retain such a warm corner in my heart."

WILL FORCE IT THROUGH.

Lloyd-George Is In London Ready For Battle Royal.

London, Oct. 16.—Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George has returned to town, and Saturday started what promises to be the hottest and most arduous fight of his political career. This is his campaign in favor of his national insurance bill, which he himself described as "a measure which would do more to hinder or dissuade human misery than any bill carried by the Legislature since the abolition of the corn laws."

His regular political opponents, who, at the outset, professed to regard the insurance bill as a non-partisan measure, the principle of which was admitted by both sides in Parliament, are utilizing the dissatisfaction, which is undoubtedly widespread, with the details of the bill, to serve their political ends.

The returns issued this week regarding the working of Mr. Lloyd-George's land taxes have provided his opponents with excellent material for attacks on the new bill. Fifteen hundred new officials were appointed to make valuations of landed property. Eleven million valuations were required, of which only 369,000 have been made in the first year. The Unionists ask when will Mr. Lloyd-George's "hen-roosting" at this rate of progress, pay for the cost of collection, and point with triumph to the fact that the undeveloped land tax has so far produced the impressive sum of £1,162. One criticism, which, is backed by the approval of both the Labor and Unionist M.P.'s, is that the benefits of the bill provides could be obtained for 5d. from any well-managed friendly society, whereas under the new bill they cost 9d.

Chargd With Firing Barns.

Berlin, Ont., Oct. 16.—Herman Affeldt, living at Centreville, three miles from here, was taken into custody at midnight Saturday by Detectives Huber and Chief of Police O'Neill, charged with arson. It is alleged that he fired the barns of his son, who lives on the homestead, and caused a loss of $3,000.

The fire was discovered between eight and nine o'clock, and by great effort some of the stock was saved, but otherwise the barns and contents are a total loss. They were partly insured.

Affeldt had been to town during the day and had come home the worse of liquor. He called at the house, where the family lived, and made threats concerning the home and that they would not have it long to live in. This was after six o'clock, the same evening as the fire, and he neglected to go to his house. This is what leads the family to suspect the father, as they, thinking he was at home, tried to rouse him, but got no response. They then telephoned for the police, who after interviewing the members of the family, decided to arrest Affeldt. They found him at his home, but he declared he knew nothing of the fire.

Affeldt has a police court record, the latest was that he was bound over to keep the peace for a year, which expired the other day.

Well-Known Printer Dead.

Hamilton, Oct. 16.—The body of William A. Winfield, one of the best-known printers in this city, was found in a area at the rear of The Spectator building yesterday morning about eight, by the caretaker of the building. When found, the body was cold and stiff, and it is thought the man had been dead since early Saturday night. It is supposed that death was caused by a broken neck, or fractured skull, resulting from Winfield's fall into the areaway. Coroner McNicholl was immediately notified of the fatality, and ordered the body taken to the city morgue, whence it was subsequently removed to Blachford's undertaking parlors. After investigating the cause, the coroner decided an inquest was not necessary.

Awarded $6,000 for Arm.

Barrie, Oct. 16.—The closing case before Sir John Boyd in the assize court here Saturday was an action for $10,000 damages by Roy Stone of Barrie against the C.P.R. for the loss of his right arm on March 8 of this year, while in the company's service. Plaintiff, while trying to open the knuckles of a car in motion at Bolton, Ont., fell between the cars, one going over his right arm. The company at the time of the accident offered to have plaintiff removed to a hospital in Toronto and pay for amputation of the limb, but the family thought the limb might be saved and sent their own physician to the city to bring the injured man to his home town, where amputation finally took place.

The jury rendered a verdict of $6,000 damages for the plaintiff, each party paying their own costs. It is understood that the C.P.R. had previously made an offer of settlement, in which they agreed to give the plaintiff $1,250 and a position as station agent at Baxter at a salary of $50 per month with free light and fuel, but he was to pay $5 per month rent for the house. This the plaintiff refused to consider on the ground that it was not a permanent guarantee of his position for life.

It is understood that the C.P.R. will appeal the case.

NEWSPAPER OFFICE WAS DAMAGED BY FIRE

Last evening about 8.30 fire was discovered in the rear portion of the Ontario Printing Office. An alarm was sounded and the brigade was soon upon the scene. The blaze originated in the room in which was deposited a large quantity of old papers ready for shipment. The flames had gained a fairly good headway when the alarm was sounded but several lines of hose were run out and a number of well-directed streams stopped the progress of the devouring element. The flames however, worked their way into the stables in connection wtih the Victoria Hotel, which abut the rear end of the printing office. It was a stubborn fight of two hours' duration, owing greatly to the fact that the sheds had a tin roof. The flames were finally extinguished. The Ontario Office suffered the loss of their motive power, and the presses were damaged to some extent by water. The fire did not reach the editorial or news rooms, and did but slight damage to the press room. Considerable damage was, however, sustanied to the Victoria Hotael stables. At the time of the fire there were a number of horses in the stables which were quickly removed to a place of safety. The loss to the building, whicsh is owned by Mr. T. S. Carman, is covered by insurance; also the loss sustained by the proprietors of the Ontario Office. How the fire originated is not known, but it may have been caused by spontaneous combustion.

At an early hour this morning the brigade were again called out, as the flames had broken out afresh. The outbreak was soon checked.

YOUNG WOMAN GAVE LIFE TO SAVE MOTHER

HALIFAX, Oct. 15.—The sister of Dr. John T. Rowe, head of the medical department in the Insane Asylum of Ward's Island, New York, was so badly burned while trying to save her aged mother from a similar fate that she died. The accident occurred at Port Williams. Mrs. Rowe, who is 80 years old, was in the kitchen, when her clothing caught fire from a spark from the stove. The daughter ran to her mother's help throwing a piece of carpet around her. In doing this the young woman's own clothing took fire. She rushed out sceraming and plunged into a hogshead of water near the door. A brother and neighbor soon came and took care of the young woman, whose clothing literally crumbled off her body. After terrible suffering for several days she died yesterday. The mother was not badly burned but cannot long survive.

U. S. ARMY WILL BE IMMUNE FROM FEVER

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 14.—Army officers hope to announce by the first of the year that all members of that service are immune from typhoid fever. This will be accomplished through typhoid prophylaxis. Orders were issued recently requiring every enlisted man under 45 to take the treatment unless he had a well-defined case of the fever.

The laboratory of the army medi-school here is issuing supplies to posts all over the country and the treatment has begun in earnest.

The compulsory treatment order was issued following the good results shown after the prophylaxis had been used by the troops encamped at Texas last summer, where there was only one mild case of typhoid.

QUAKE KILLS MANY IN ITALIAN TOWNS

CATANIA, Italy, Oct. 15.—There has been a violent earthquake at Santa Venerina, Guardia and Giarre. Houses collapsed at the first mentioned place, and two were killed, while six were killed at Giarre and many were injured. At Macchia a church collapsed. There has been widespread damage, and panic prevails in many villages. Rescue workers are rushing to the towns as rapidly as possible. Telegraph and telephone lines were interrupted, but they have been repaired. The latest report from Giarre, which is at the foot of Mount Etna, received this evening, says that ten dead and fifty injured were recovered from a house that was demolished.

At Roninella five persons were killed in one house that tumbled to the ground.

SIX ARE ASPHYXIATED

Escaping Gas in Toronto Hotel Accounts For Five.

Sixth Is a Mrs. Maddens, Who Is Suffocated In Her Home In Same City—Five Occupants of Occidental Hotel in Toronto Junction Succumb to Deadly Fumes on Sunday Morning—They Had Been Drinking.

Toronto, Oct. 16.—Six bodies are lying in the morgue, the life of each having been snuffed out through suffocation by gas. Five men were asphyxiated early Sunday morning in the Occidental Hotel, Dundas street, West Toronto. The other body is that of a woman who was found dead in her bed at 13 Walton street, on Saturday evening, she having been a victim of the deadly fumes.

Samuel Eadie, aged 30, single, employed by Heintzman Piano Co.

George Williams, aged 45, single, employed by Heintzman Piano Co.

William Allan, aged 60, married, harnessmaker.

Mrs. Mary Maddens, aged 50, 13 Walton street.

The bodies of Knowles, Eadie and Williams were found within a few feet of each other, the two first named being discovered lifeless on a bed, while Downs was lying in a heap near the door. They were fully dressed and apparently had dropped off to sleep while in a state of stupor. It is believed that Downes had come to his senses for a moment and tried to make exit, but was over come before he could reach the door.

Allan was in the next room and in bed. The two rooms were separated by a short hall, from which a door led into the main hall. Allan had left his door open when he went to bed at 10.30 p.m. The others came in after midnight, lit a lamp in Allan's room and the two jets in their own apartment, and, somehow, a third nipple, which was for the purpose of running a tube to a gas heater, was also turned on, but not lighted.

That the men had been drinking appears certain, as they had received their pay on Friday night and had not afterwards been seen around the hotel until their lifeless forms were discovered yesterday morning.

At midnight on Saturday Fred. McKewan, the proprietor, made his last round and found everything in proper order. When on the top flat he noticed Allan's door open, and looking in to see if all was right, noticed the elderly gentleman sleeping. He turned the gas in the hall out and retired.

Later the four other men returned and at three o'clock Bert Patterson, whose room is on the opposite side of the hall and directly opposite where the bodies were found, smelled gas and rose from his bed and went into the hall to see if by any chance the gas jet there had been turned on. He found the gas in the hall properly turned off and would have opened the door leading to the room occupied by the five men, but heard them talking in a tone, which, he said, betrayed their intoxicated condition and not wishing to thrust himself into their company, went back to bed, but first opened his dormitory window.

About seven o'clock Geo. Williams was washing in the main hall.

About seven o'clock William Vancey, a C.P.R. fireman, returned to the hotel from his work and on reaching the top flat at once perceived gas.

With that he started in search of the leak. In a moment he thrust open the door leading to the hall connecting the two rooms. Bruce followed. Turning to their right they opened another door and Vancey took a step forward, but stumbled over the dead body of Downes, who was lying in a heap a foot from the entrance.

Had it not been that James Moon was picked up by a policeman and taken into No. 6 station for drunkenness, he, too, would probably have been added to the number of dead. He was also closely attached to the other men, and occupied the room next to Allan's. It was customary for him to spend his evenings with the others, and had it not been for his arrest would most likely have been with them on Sunday morning.

The sixth victim of asphyxiation was Mrs. Mary Madden, 13 Walton street, whose body was found on Saturday evening by Mrs. McGuire, 28 St. Patrick street.

There was a strong smell of gas in the room, but the jet had been nearly turned off and there was not apparently sufficient fumes in the room to kill the woman. Others in the house had not noticed the gas.

Students Have Riot.

Montreal, Oct. 16.—The class of 1915 brought the annual McGill theatre night to an abrupt and premature but altogether welcome conclusion on Saturday night at His Majesty's Theatre. Half way through the last act of "The Fair Co.," George Ade's musical comedy, a dozen freshmen, tiring of the monotony of riot which had been incessant from the raising of the curtain, clambered upon the stage and started a snake dance in front of the footlights. A swarm of indignant sophomores followed them and the curtain was rung down and the lights snapped off, leaving the representatives of the rival classes fighting for the possession of the stage.

The orchestra struck up the National Anthem and the audience took the hint and left the theatre. A little furniture was broken.

WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP; GIANTS WON THE FIRST

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—In the presence of what was probably the greatest throng of baseball enthusiasts ever gathered together, the National League pennant-winners, the New York Giants, defeated the American League titleholders, the Philadelphia Athletics, by a score of 2 to 1 in the first game of the series for the world's baseball championship of 1911 at the Polo Grounds here to-day.

The National Commission announced 38,621 persons had paid admission to witness the contest, and the gross receipts were $77,359.

From an artistic point of view, however, the game was an ordinary one and would not live long in the minds of those who saw it were it not for what depended on the outcome. There were scarcely any difficult chances or opportunities for sensational play such as frequently brings a crowd to its feet.

It was a pitcher's duel from inning to inning, with the Indian Bender having the better of it during the early part of the contest. His superb breaking curves swept with blinding speed over the plate, and eleven Giants, unable to fathom his service, struck out. The Chippewa fanned Snodgrass, Merkle, Fletcher, Mathewson each twice, while Devore, Murray and Herzog swung futilely at the ball once each and then sat down. Doyle and Meyers were the only Giants who were not retired on strikes. Mathewson sent back five Athletics to the bench by the strike-out route. They were Lord twice and Oldring, Baker and Barry once. Mathewson's pitching was effective when hits meant runs, and he was the steadier of the two moundsmen, giving but one base on balls, while Bender passed four and hit one man. Mathewson employed his sweeping drop curve which he effectively used with his fadeaway and a high fast one which sped across the plate with a jump on it.

Baker and Oldring of the visiting team were the only men on either side to get more than one hit. Each got two and both of Oldring's were smashes for two bases. The only other extra-base hits were made by Meyers and Devore, the latter's rattling double sending the New York catcher home with the winning run in the seventh inning.

Eddie Collins, the brilliant second sacker of the Athletics, and the star of last year's world series, made a horrible bobble of an easy chance on Herzog's grounder which allowed the fast flying Snodgrass to score from second. This run tied the score. The only other misplay made in the game was an excusable muff by Third Baseman Baker of the Athletics of a thrown ball by Thomas to catch Snodgrass, who was attempting to steal third. The fleet New Yorker came into the base feet first, spiking Baker on the arm and causing him to drop the ball. The umpire had declared Snodgrass out and was compelled to change his decision when he saw the ball roll away. The error did not affect the score as Snodgrass was a moment later thrown out at the plate on an attempted double steal.

The Athletics' only score was made in the second inning. Baker pushed a rattling single to right and went to second on Murphy's sacrifice hit. Here Mathewson sent to the batter a wide, breaking curve which fooled his own catcher, and on the passed ball Baker took third. Captain Harry Davis, substituting for the injured McInnis, smashed a solid drive out past short, which brought Baker across the plate. The fielding play of the Giants was perfect, although they had but one hard chance. This one difficult chance came in the fifth inning, when Firstbaseman Merkle had to extend himself to touch out Eddie Collins after getting his grounder, which looked like an infield hit. This play came at a time when the Athletics were occupying second and third bases with two out.

New York, which led the National League in base stealing this year, did not run wild on the bases. Bender held them to the bags, and only one of the three attempts at stealing was successful. That was Doyle's steal of second in the first inning, when Thomas threw a trifle low. In the sixth inning, after the attempted steal of third by Snodgrass a double steal was attempted by Snodgrass and Herzog. This time Thomas had Snodgrass at the plate by a yard on Collins' good return of Thomas' throw.

The Athletics tried to steal one, Baker attempting the trick in the sixth, but was turned back by Meyers' perfect throw.

The crowd which saw the game was a wonder in itself. Solid masses of humanity banked the field bleachers. An equally solid and even greater mass faced the diamond in the monumental steel and concrete grandstand which the New York Club was lucky enough to have finished in time to accommodate the world's series throngs.

TWO "FANS" DEAD.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Excitement over the New York victory in the first game of the world's series cost the life of one of the spectators. Lewis Boll, an elderly local "fan," who had rooted vigorously in support of the Giants from one of the upper seats in the grand stand, was stricken with apoplexy at the end of the game. He threw up his hands and dropped to the ground unconscious in the thick of the crowd. He was hurried to the Harlem Hospital, and died soon after his arrival. The physicians there said his death undoubtedly was due to the excitement over the game. He was sixty years old.

Another "fan" committed suicide at a small uptown hotel late to-day. The young man, who registered as L. H. Harris last night, and who is said to have been in the lobby all night and day talking baseball, deriding the Giants, was found dead from carbolic acid poisoning in his room shortly after the game was over.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 12.—At a meeting of prominent citizens on the American side yesterday final arrangements were made for building a boulevard between the Falls and Buffalo. The belief was expressed that Canadians would co-operate in the good road movement by shortly building a model highway from here to Toronto, thus connecting Albany and Toronto by motor road.

Afraid of Ghosts,

Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

MEYERS vs. EDMUNDS.

Those clever lightweights, Kid Meyers, of Belleville, and Artie Edmunds, who some weeks ago had an exciting and well-matched bout at the armories, are to meet again on Monday night next, 23rd inst., in a ten-round bout at the C.O.F. hall, when there will be "something doing." A preliminary bout of four rounds between Jimmy Barry, the popular local featherweight, and Bert Shaw, of Toronto, will be staged as an additional attraction.

A PROMISING COACH

Young Field Chosen Number One Coach at Yale is Rated a Capital Athlete.

John W. Field who was this year chosen to head the Yale football coaching staff, played the game first at Washington High School. He was graduated from the high school in 1906, and entered George Washington University the following autumn. Here again he was the same quiet, unobtrusive John Field, not a brilliant student but always a sincere man. Field played quarterback. He could kick some, but was not very fast on his feet. From George Washington, with his "pal," Frankie Miller, he went to Yale unheralded, and there ever since he has overshadowed all prep school stars. He made his 'varsity letter in his sophomore year, playing on the eleven against Princeton. Since that time he has been a member of the football team, and it was his stonewall defence as much as any factor which was responsible for keeping Harvard from crossing the Yale goal line last fall.

The new field coach has other interests. His adaptability is shown by his perfection as an oarsman. Yale was crying for a fighting crew, and his year Coach Kennedy and Captain Frost took a look around and drafted some of the heavy football men, among them Field.

RACE NEWS MONOPOLY

Organized gambling, a trust in race track news, is rapidly spreading over the United States, with its wires in every poolroom where bets are placed on running horses. The facts have come out through a quarrel between the two men back of it and a fight for control of the race news from the Butte track.

Mont Tennes, known everywhere as the kingpin gambler of the central west, tells how he eliminated Tim Murphy from his organization, his expose following some unkind words from Murphy. Charges of graft are bandied about freely. The [illegible] organized their race [illegible] a couple of years ago with a $5000 roll. Murphy took the eastern end and Tennes sent out his results from Chicago to pool-rooms and saloons all over the west. The game developed rapidly, with an increase of gambling on running races, and Tennes had practically a monoply of the field.

PECULIAR ROWING

The Inthas are a tribe living on the Neaung Zwe Lake, in the Southern Shan States, Burma, and the peculiarity of their rowing is that the men stand on one leg on the side of their "dug-outs" with the other leg wound round the paddle, the upper end of which is, as a rule, grasped in one hand, leaving the other free. Rowing in this remarkable fashion, they are great adepts at spearing fish, using the disengaged hand, the spear in use being a long pliable cane with a four-pronged iron head. It is safe to say that a team of these "foot-rowers" would create a sensation at a regatta in this country.

Fitzsimmons a Blacksmith

Bob Fitzsimmons was a journeyman blacksmith working hard for his daily bread at Timaru, New Zealand, when he entered Jem Mace's boxing competition in 1880. He defeated four men and won the middle-weight amateur championship of that country. The following year he won the same competition and then decided to put up his hands as a means of livelihood

No one but the captain should have the authority to tell the quarterback what play to make. When a quarterback is capable, the less interference he gets from the captain the better.

Coaches try to get men for quarterback who weigh 160 pounds or more. A large man can bowl over an opponent better and this is one of the chief duties of a quarterback.

THE HEAVY HITTERS

The most spectacular feature of a baseball contest is the batting and correspondingly the most showy talent of the individual player is his work with the stick. Some really great players have been poor batters, but a glance through the list reveals the fact that almost all the real stars of the game have been heavy hitters.

Of the individual members in the team it is generally the pitcher who gathers in the largest number of laurels of any individual member of a team. He has more of an opportunity to distinguish himself, individually, than any other member of the team, and is censured or praised in accordance with his work. His place on the team is held only by his pitching ability; his stick work is not considered if he is a great twirler With other infield positions, however, it is slightly different. A player must not only have the ability to cover his position with credit, but must have a batting eye as well. Both qualities come in for an equal share of consideration.

AUTO SPEED HAZARDS

Oldfield will be remembered as the driver of the pilot car in the Munsey Historic Tour last year. This tour which was the biggest automobile event of the year in the East, was run without a single accident. Tommy Skeggs, Lewis Strang, and Walter Donnelly, three men who drove cars in the Munsey tour, have since met violent deaths while driving racing cars, and Oldfield's accident may cripple him for life.

That the American Automobile Association will put a ban on automobile racing on dirt tracks, is expected by many followers of the game, says Harry Ward in the Washington Times The tragedy has stirred up in the minds of the public a feeling of antipathy to this form of sport, and if the automobile makers who support racing and the association that makes and enforces the rules do not do something to stop the slaughter of drivers and spectators the Legislatures may take a hand in the matter.

It is known that almost a majority of the automobile makers are opposed to these dirt track events because the results do not prove anything. Track racing on mile and half mile courses formerly used for horse racing has not ranked high in the estimation of the public during the last year or two. There have been too many flukes and fiascos in connection with them to say nothing of the loss of life, and it is probable that automobile racing may be restricted to the big road events and to the speedways, where the public may be given protection.

Dr. Theodore Lessing, one of the most distinguished scientists of Germany, declares that man's desire to make noises is inborn, can never be eradicated, and is as natural to him as breathing. In this case as in so many others, man, of course, embraces woman too.

"GIANT KILLER" IS A SENSATIONAL PITCHER

EARL MOORE

Great curve ball pitcher, formerly with Cleveland. Since he joined the Phillies Moore's work has been sensational. This spring he has shown wonderful form, earning the title of "Giant Killer." He is the star of Dooin's pitching corps.

HISTORIC GOLF COURSE

The course of the St. George's Club at Sandwich, the scene of the forthcoming Open Championship, is not yet twenty-five years old, yet it is rich in golfing history. No course has sprung into the front rank and been admitted into the charmed circle of Championship courses so soon after its birth. The Club was instituted in 1887, mainly by the efforts of that famous old golfer, Dr. Laidlaw Purves, but so great were the merits of the links that it was added to the rota of the Amateur Championship so early as 1891 and to that of the Open Championship in 1893, the Amateur Championship being played there in 1892 and the Open Championship in 1894. It may be said, therefore, that the famous Sandwich course was born under a lucky star, and that its parents and god-parents took care that the silver spoon, if not in its mouth at birth, should be placed there with the least possible delay.

BANTAM WEIGHT

Knight of England Who Started Wrestling When Fourteen is Man of Much Promise.

F. W. Knight, the bantam-weight champion of England, started wrestling when about fourteen years old. Six years ago he joined the Hammersmith A.W.C., then run by Ferdinand Gruhn. In 1907 he entered his first championship, and was second to E. Kaiser (Swiss), losing on points after two bouts of 20min. He entered the Swiss G. S. open 8½st., and was second again. The following year he entered the Swiss G.S. open 8½st., and won it, following up with the N.A.W.A. 8½st. championship at the Stadium. This he won against the pick of English bantams, there being 16 stripped to wrestle. In the same year he gained the German G.S. open 8½st., then in 1909 he won the Olympic 9st. open comp., also the Swiss G.S. open 9½st. comp. After that he entered and won the N.A.W.A. 9½st. championship. At Bradford, in 1910, he reached the final with Cockings, who, however, defeated him twice very easily, but the other day he won the N.A.W.A. 8½st. championship, beating W. Trappschuh in the final. In the Olympic Games he was beaten on points by Davis.

GIRL GOLFER IN TEENS SURPRISE OF TOURNEY

A 13-year-old girl was the sensation of the first annual tournament of the Southern Women's Golf association.

Miss Alext Stirling, of Atlanta, is the phenomenon. She won the low medal score, and went to the semi-finals — defeating several of the best women golfers of the south — and was only vanquished by Mrs. Rogers-Smith, of Nashville, who won the championship.

Besides running away with the low medal score, she went to the winner of the driving contest and the approaching and putting contest.

If the Southern Women's turnament next year doesn't bar players under 21, little Alext Stirling bids fair to be Dixie's champion.

DONT'S FOR ASPIRING QUARTER-BACKS.

Don't think about getting hurt. You'll get hurt if you do.

Don't think you can make a 50-yard run if you run 10 yards bach of the line.

Don't think about that girl in the grandstand.

Don't think about what may happen if your kick is blocked.

Don't think you know it all.

Don't let the other players run the game for you.

Don't call a man down for a poor play. Encourage him.

Don't try to pass the ball to a man before you have it yourself. It means a fumble if you do.

Don't make a forward pass with your eyes closed.

QUARTER TIPS WORTH WHILE

Don't advertise that the ball is about to be put in play.

Learn to pass fast and sure.

Get the ball to the runner so he can handle it without losing speed.

Remember fumbles mean lost ground. When tackled hang on like grim death.

Don't fail to cut in sharply on end runs.

The forward pass is a ground gainer — master it.

Use the straight arm freely. Tacklers don't like it.

THE CITY FATHERS HAD, AS USUAL A SITTING FAR INTO THE NIGHT

And They Didn't Do Much Business at That—Mr. Lindsay Wants $200 More as Manager of the Water Works—Bills for the Expenses of the Tax Lot Investigation—Applications for Assessorships Not Dealt With

At the Council meeting last evening the business transacted was to a great extent of a routine nature. Mr. J. G. Lindsay has requested an increase of $200 per annum as manager of the Water Works Department. This was referred to the Water Works Committee. The expenses of the tax lot investigation were not so great as was anticipated by many, as the Treasurer's report shows. The application for auditors was not dealt with, but was referred to the Executive Committee.

The members present were: Mayor Ackerman, Aldermen Adams, Anderson, Bogle, Caldwell, Canning, Chown Clarke, Gibson, McGie, Parks, Vermilyea, Woodley, Panter, Sills, and Bleecker.

After the reading and confirming of the minutes of the previous meeting, the Council went into Committee of the Whole on reports, communicatons, etc., Ald. McGie in the chair.

The reports of the various civic committees were taken up. The items of expenditure were passed, and the following recommendations agreed to:

That Thomas Manley, contractor on Front street sewer, be notified of claims for damages caused to the gas department by blasting during the construction of the said sewer, namely $59.80, and that the same be deducted from his contract, and that a further reasonable sum be held back from him for other damage being investigated.

That the Y. & O. Coal Co. be given a contract for coal for one year from Oct. 15th, 1911 at $2.47 per ton, to be supplied as required.

That an incandescent light be placed on Patterson, Cedar and corner of Bridge and Everett streets.

That an incandescent light be placed on the lower bridge in the centre of same.

That a sum not exceeding $60 be granted to the Industrial Committee for the purpose of procuring pictures for advestising the city.

The question of the diversion of Dundas street west where the C.N.O.R. track passes was introduced when a report was presented from the Industrial Committee requesting that the same be attended to at once.

Ald. Panter said that no time should be lost in having the diversion of Dundas street in West Belleville made as it was necessary to have the work done this fall.

Ald. Vermilyea endorsed the remarks of Ald. Panter.

The Committee's report was adopted.

The Water Works Committee reported that the following tenders, being the lowest, were recommended to be adopted for the laying of certain water mains.

Portions of Foster and Bleecker Avenues, John Arnott, $392 and $497.

The recommendation was adopted.

The following accounts were passed:

J. W. Walker,	$ 28.95
W. McGie	11.38
Miss McCoy	1.50
L. Soule	87.13
Intelligencer Printing Co.	100.68
R. McCoy	4.00
British American Oil Co.	200.00

A petition was presented for the building of a granolithic walk near the upper bridge on Moira Street.

It was decided to refer the matter to the assessor and the engineer.

A communication was read from Messrs. Porter & Carnew in reference to damages alleged to have been sustained to property belonging to Mrs. Wm. Docter, owing to want of drainage.

A claim for $100 damages was presented by Mr. J. Grotto for injuries sustained to a horse belonging to him and damages to his harness and vehicle on account of the horse falling over an unprotected pile of stone on Everett street which was not lighted that night.

The City Engineer was requested to make a report upon the matter.

A report was presented from the ladies of the W.C.A. in reference to the expenditure of the indigent fund, placed in their hands.

The W.C.A. thanked the Council for the gift of certain articles of furniture to the new wing, and also the building of a granolithic walk leading to the hospital.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

ANOTHER DISPUTE SETTLED.

The police at a late hour last night were called to a restaurant to settle a dispute. A party who had obtained a lunch refused to settle for same, but did so upon arrival of the officer of the law.

EAST HASTINGS CONSERVATIVES

The Liberal Conservatives of East Hastings will select their candidate at a meeting which will be held at Roslin on Friday, 27th inst. Speeches will be delivered by Mr. W. B. Northrup, K.C., M.P., Mr. A. A. Richardson, M.P.P., and others.

ALBERT COLLEGE WON.

Yesterday afternoon a football match took place between teams representing the city High School and Albert College. The result was a victory for the College boys, the score being 4 to 1 in their favor. Prof. Root refereed the game, which was witnessed by many spectators.

BRIDGE ST. LEAGUE.

The regular meeting of the Bridge Street Methodist Epworth League was held on Monday evening. The meeting was in charge of the Literary Committee and a most enjoyable evening was spent with the hymn writers. Papers were given by the Messrs. Wilson, Zufelt, Holton, Archibald and Ketcheson, and were very much enjoyed indeed.

FRONT ST. PAVEMENT.

It is understood that the contract for the permanent paving of Front street will be definitely let next spring, and as there are still, it is stated, a few water gas and sewer services not yet connected up, these should be completed at once. The City Engineer has been working on the by-laws for this work for some time past, and is desirous of remedying the existing conditions as soon as it is possible.

NEW BUILDING BY-LAW.

From a copy of this By-law, which is very comprehensive, it is learned that amongst other provisions the City Engineer has to pass on all structures henceforth to be erected in the city, and no building can be erected until a permit has been received from this department, and as possibly the true meaning and intent of this feature may not be known to everybody we are asked to give full publicity, so that all may understand. The same also applies to structural alterations, which exceed a cost of $100. We think the by-law covers a lot of useful ground, and places Belleville in the same line of progress as the more progressive cities, and shows, if only a record from month to month, the immense strides which Belleville is making in her development.

MARRIED AT KINGSTON.

Mr. Arthur Lingham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Lingham, of this city, and Miss Toye, of Kingston, were married in the Limestone City to-day.

GLASS BROKEN.

Mr. Smith, who owns a house on Benjamin Street, reports to the police that a number of panes of glass have been broken out of the windows. The house at present is unoccupied.

HOLLOWAY ST. LEAGUE.

At the Epworth League in connection with Holloway Street Church, held last evening, Mr. Henry Pringle gave an address which was highly appreciated. There was a large attendance of the members.

DRUNK WENT TO JAIL.

Harry Murray, a drunk, appeared before the Magistrate this morning and was fined $10, or, in default, 21 days in jail. He went up on the hill. Murray was before the Magistrate a week ago on a similar charge and was allowed to go without a fine.

A WELCOME IMPROVEMENT.

A day or two hence a valve will be placed in the man-hole at intersection of the George Street and Front Street sewers, which will stop all future sewage being dumped into the river at the lower bridge. It will be carried down Front Street and discharged from the steel pipe near the third pier of the C.N.O.R. bridge.

WORKMAN INJURED.

Mr. Harry Baker, of this city, who is employed at the Springer Lock Company's establishment, yesterday met with a painful accident. He was operating a press when his right hand was caught in the drop. The result was the top of the second finger was taken off and the first finger badly lacerated. He will be incapacitated from work for some time.

CHRIST CHURCH MEN'S CLUB.

The above society, which meets regularly on the first and third Mondays of each month, held its second meeting last evening in the Parish Hall. There was a very good attendance of men, all of whom were delighted with the lecture given by Col. Ponton on "A Trip Around the World." The lecture was delivered in Col. Ponton's usual able and interesting style and was illustrated with excellent views, which, through Canada, represented scenes along the lines of the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways, as well as the G.T.P., and then touched at China, Japan, India and across the Mediterranean. A hearty vote of thanks was given the lecturer and a pleasant evening closed at 11 o'clock.

THE COMING CONVENTION

We understand that a convention of the Liberal Conservative Association for lesser West Hastings will be called for the first Monday in November to select a candidate for the coming provincial elections. Appointed delegates will be present from Trenton, Frankford, Sidney and Belleville. So far as we know, no other name than that of the present member, Mr. J. W. Johnson, will come before the convention, and it is likely he will receive the unanimous support of the delegates, as it is generally conceded that he has made for West Hastings an excellent representative and ranks among the men of the Assembly out of which Cabinet timber is made.

KINGSTON IS WANTING A BIG NEW HOTEL

KINGSTON, Oct. 16.—A joint meeting of the Hotel Committee of the Board of Trade and the Finance Committee of the City Council was held in the Mayor's office last night to discuss a proposition for a new hotel on the site on King Street, recently bought for that purpose. Boston capitalists are interested in the new scheme.

After discussion it was decided to recommend to Council to submit a by-law to the people which will be done as soon as final plans for the project are prepared. It looks now, however, as if a new hotel were a certainty.

CURRENT COMMENT

There was a great deal of "Scotch" in the air last night—Scotch mist, that is.

* * *

Czar Whitney's rule is done.
Whitney is running to cover.

The foregoing from the Brockville Recorder is vastly amusing in face of the facts.

* * *

So they are talking of Mr. Stratton as the leader of the opposition in Ontario. If that is the case it isn't much wonder the Toronto Star publishes rumors that R. R. Gamey is going to be a member of the government.—Peterborough Review.

* * *

It took only 18 men to play the first game of baseball in the series for the world's championship; but it required 300 men to tell the readers of the newspapers what the 18 did and how and why they did it. Truly the newspaper is a great institution.

* * *

If Sir James Whitney had insisted on holding bye-elections instead of a general election he would undoubtedly have been blamed by his political opponents for putting the people of the province to this unnecessary expense. Now that he has decided upon a general election it is all a "petty trick." Newspapers that left their criticisms beyond the level of peanut politics were better to keep silent.—Kingston Standard.

On behalf of oppressed parents and guardians Mr. MacKay demands the "square deal" in educational matters. This from the member of a former Government which was the slavish tool of the famous book ring! Parents know that through its text book reform the Whitney Ministry have saved them hundreds of thousands of dollars in the aggregate by giving their children superior books at amazingly reduced prices.—Review.

Curious fellows, some of those Grit editors when they have a party end to serve. In the recent Dominion elections they asserted that under reciprocity the farmer would get higher prices for his products and that the consumer would pay less for those same products. Now that there is to be a general election for Ontario, they assert that Sir James Whitney is afraid of a reduction of his majority and yet are denouncing him as a "contemptible trickster," for giving the people the earliest possible opportunity of reducing that majority if they see fit.

There is a precedent for opposition journals making the most out of the condemnation of Mr. W. T. White, the new Minister of Finance, in which some Conservatives are indulging themselves. When there is nothing big to use against a political opponent earnest politicians naturally fall back on little things. The objections to Mr. White are small. One is that he has been a Liberal. It applies to thousands and tens of thousands of voters who made the result of the late parliamentary election what it was. It amounts to nothing. Another objection is that Mr. White has been managing a big business in co-operation with other men of big business affairs. This is a condemnation. A man with big ideas and business sense is needed at Ottawa where the biggest business in Canada is carried on in the name of the Canadian people.—Montreal Gazette.

WOMEN ASKED HIM PERTINENT QUESTION

SEATTLE, Oct. 16.—"When the community undertakes to procure the impeachment of an irresponsible, arbitrary and unfit federal judge and its public leaders are placed under arrest and thrown into jail, what becomes of the impeachment remedy?"

This is the question that was aked of President Taft in a petition presented to him at the Washington hotel yesterday by a committee of women headed by Mrs. Peter Bettinger. The petition is signed by several thousand names and calls upon the president to give public expression to his answer during his visit to the state.

To his excellency, the President of the United States:

In a recent public address you are quoted as having said that impeachment and not the recall is the better remedy to remove unjust judges from the public service. According to this suggestion, we, the undersigned, beg to submit, in brief, the following statement of the facts:

On August 25 of this year a mass meeting of five thousand people met at Dreamland Hall, Seattle, for the purpose of starting impeachment proceedings against C. H. Hanford, judge of the United States court for the western district of Washington.

The meeting was orderly throughout but for participants in the proceedings, nine of our citizens were arrested and placed under heavy bonds to answer an indictment by the federal grand jury at Tacoma upon the felonious charge of "conspiring to defeat the administration of justice."

Subsequently, in the last days of September, the federal jury at Tacoma, after thorough investigation, declined to find indictment against the said arrested men, presumably for the reason that their arrests had been unwarranted.

We submit to you, Mr. President, that if such conditons as these are to prevail, the right to impeach an objectionable judge cannot be exercised without the danger of arrest and oppression to those who participate therein by prosecutions set on foot by those in sympathy with the judge against whom the proceedings are directed.

In view of the situation, we respectfully ask you to investigate the situation and make a public expression during your visit here on your views upon the arrest of these citizens.

THE HERPICIDE GIRL

SAYS EVERYONE CAN HAVE BEAUTIFUL HAIR.

I am really ashamed of some of my girl friends when I look at their hair. There is no sense in having such looking heads. It simply shows that while they may be scrupulously neat in ever other way they are very careless about their hair.

Thin, scraggy, wispy hair generally indicates dandruff, and dandruff is caused by a germ. Newbro's Herpicide will kill that germ and keep the scalp as clean and healthy as can be. This permits the hair to grow naturally and luxuriantly. That terrible itching that goes with dandruff stops with almost the first application.

Substitutes, or remedies said to be "just as good" are sometimes offered, but it is better to buy the genuine, original germ killer, Newbro's Herpicide. There is no guesswork about that preparation. A trial isn't necessary, just buy a bottle and use it. The results are sure to be better than you expect.

For sale at drug stores. One dollar size bottles are guaranteed. Applications obtained at the better barber shops. Send 10c. in postage for sample and book to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, Belleville, special agent.

Dear Sirs,—I have found Zam-Buk most reliable for healing cuts and abrasions; while for the relief of skin irritation it is invaluable.

Zam-Buk Cures Bad Burns.

Stoker Kingsnorth, of H.M.S. "Cochrane," says:—"I slipped and fell with my arm on an exhaust steam pipe, which fairly frizzled the skin. At once the ship's surgeon dressed my arm, but the burns took the wrong way, owing to a lot of dirt from the pipe setting up blood-poison. A large scab appeared, and from underneath the festering flesh, matter oozed out. I was in fearful pain and didn't know how to get ease.

"For weeks I remained under treatment, but the ordinary ointments proved no good. Indeed, I got worse. I therefore obtained a supply of Zam-Buk and almost as soon as this was applied I got ease. From the very first application, healing commenced; and a few boxes of Zam-Buk healed my wound completely."

Zam-Buk cures eczema, ulcers, abscesses, ringworm, bad leg, varicose ulcers, piles, cold sores, chapped hands, babies' sores, etc. All stores at 50c., or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Send 1c. stamp for trial box.

The Haunted Chamber

The word lily brings back to him his last interview with Florence. He glances hurriedly at her right hand; yes, the same lily is clasped in her fingers. Has she sat ever since with his gift before her, in her silent chamber? Alone—in grief perhaps. But why has she kept his flower? What can it all mean?

"I think I might be shown some consideration," puts in Arthur, trying by a violent effort to assert himself, and to speak lightly. "Had anything happened, surely I should have been the one to be pitied. It would have been my fault, and, Mrs. Talbot, I think you might show some pity for me." He holds out his hand, and mechanically Dora lays her own in it.

But it is only for an instant, and she shudders violently as his touch meets hers. Her eyes are on the ground, and she cannot bring herself to look at him. Drawing her fingers hurriedly from his, she goes to the door and disappears from view.

"You have held it ever since?" he asks in low tones. "I hardly hoped for so much. But you have not congratulated me, you alone have said nothing."

"Why need I speak? I have seen you with my own eyes. You are safe. Believe me, Sir Adrian, I congratulate you most sincerely on your escape."

Her words are cold, her eyes downcast. She is deeply annoyed with herself for having carried the lily into his presence here. The very fact of his having noticed it and spoken to her about it has shown her how much importance he has attached to her doing so. What will he think of her? He will doubtless picture her to himself sitting weeping and brooding over a flower given to her by a man who loves her not, and to whom she has given her love unsolicited.

Her marked coldness so oppresses him that he steps back, and does not venture to address her again. It occurs to him that she is reserved because of Arthur's presence.

Presently, Lady FitzAlmont, marshaling her forces anew, carries them all away to their rooms, soundly rating the sobbing Gertrude for her want of self-control.

The men, too, shortly afterward disperse, and one by one drift away to their rooms, Captain Ringwood and Maitland the surgeon, being the last to go.

"Who is the next heir to the castle?" asks the latter, musingly, drumming his fingers idly on a table near him.

"Dynecourt, the fellow who nearly did for Sir Adrian this evening!" replies Ringwood, quietly.

"Ah!"

"It would have meant a very good thing for Arthur if the shot had taken effect," says Ringwood, eyeing his companion curiously.

"It would have meant murder, sir!" rejoins the surgeon, shortly.

CHAPTER VI.

"Dear Sir Adrian," says Dora Talbot, laying down her bat upon a garden-chair, and forsaking the game of tennis then proceeding to go forward and greet her host, "where have you been? We have missed you so much. Florence"—turning to her cousin—"will you take my bat, dearest? I am quite tired of trying to defeat Lord Lisle."

Lord Lisle, a middle-aged gentleman of sunburned appearance, looks unmistakably delighted at the prospects of a change in the game. He is married; has a promising family of young Lisles, and a fervent passion for tennis. Mrs. Talbot having proved a very contemptible adversary, he is charmed at this chance of getting rid of her.

So Florence, vice Dora retired, joins the game, and the play continues with unabated vigor. When, however, Lord Lisle has scored a grand victory, and all the players declare themselves thoroughly exhausted and in need of refreshment, Sir Adrian comes forward, and walks straight up to Miss Delmaine, to Dora's intense chagrin, and the secret rage of Arthur Dynecourt.

"You have often asked to see the 'haunted chamber,'" he says; "why not come and visit it now? It isn't much to see, you know; but, still, in a ghostly sense, it is, I suppose, interesting.

"Let us make a party and go together," suggests Dora, enthusiastically clasping her hands—her favorite method of showing false emotion of any kind. She is determined to have her part in the programme, and is equally determined that Florence shall go nowhere alone with Sir Adrian.

"What a capital idea!" puts in Arthur Dynecourt, coming up to Miss Delmaine, and specially addressing her with all the air of a rightful owner.

"Charming," murmurs a young lady nearby, and so the question is settled.

"It will be rather a fatiguing journey, you know," says Captain Ringwood, confidentially, to Ethel Villiers. "It's an awful lot of stairs; I've been there, so I know all about it—it's worse than the treadmill."

"Have you been there, too," demands Miss Ethel, saucily.

"Not yet," answers the Captain with a little grin. "But I say; don't go—will you?"

"I must; I'm dying to see it," replies Ethel. "You needn't come, you know; I dare say I shall be able to get on without you for half an hour or so."

"I dare say you could get on uncommonly well without me forever," retorts the captain ,rather gloomily. To himself he confesses moodily that this girl with the auburn hair and the blue eyes has the power of taking the "curl out of him" whenever she desires.

"I believe you are afraid of the bogeys hidden in the secret chamber, and so don't dare to come," says Miss Villiers, tauntingly.

"I know something else I'm a great deal more afraid of," responds the gallant captain meaningly.

"Me?" she asks innocently, but certainly coquettishly. "Oh, Captain Ringwood"—in a tone of mock injury—"what an unkind speech! Now I know you look upon me in the light of an ofiress, or a witch, or something equally dreadful. Well, as I have the name of it, I may as well have the gain of it, and so—I command you to attend me to the 'haunted chamber.'"

"Your order—I obey," says the Captain. "'Call and I follow—I follow, though I die!'" After which quotation he accompanies her toward the house in the wake of Dora and Sir Adrian, who has been pressed into service by the clever widow.

Florence and Arthur Dynecourt follow them, Arthur talking gayly, as though determined to ignore the fact that he is thoroughly unwelcome to his companion; Florence, with head erect and haughty footsteps and eyes carefully averted.

Past the hall, through the corridor, up the staircase, through the galleries, along more corridors they go, laughing and talking eagerly, until they come at last to an old and apparently disused part of the house.

Traversing more corridors, upon which dust lies thickly, they come at last to a small iron-bound door that blocks the end of one passage.

"Now, we really begin to get near it," says Sir Adrian, encouragingly, turning as he always does, when opportunity offers, to address himself solely to Florence.

Then Sir Adrian pushes open the door, revealing a steep flight of stone steps that leads upwards to another door above. This door, like the lower one, is bound with iron.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—Altho to-day, for the first time since 1901, the visible supply of wheat in the United States went beyond sixty million bushels, the prices of the cereal made a net gain of 1-4c to 1-2c. The chief reason for the advance was that world shipments for the week were much less than expected. Corn finished a shade to 1-4c higher, but oats at 1-16c to 1-4c decline. At the end of trading hog products varied from 5c off to 15c increase in cost.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ⅜d to ⅝d higher than on Saturday; corn, ⅛d to ¼d lower. Berlin, closed ¼c lower on wheat; Buda Pest, ⅜c lower; Paris, unchanged to ⅛c lower.

The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 1800 cattle, 2475 sheep and lambs, 1330 hogs and 350 calves.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for cattle, prices for butchers' stock being steady, owing to the fact that supplies of such were not in excess of the requirements as a large percentage of the offerings were only suitable for canning purposes, which met with a good demand from packers at prices ranging from 2¼c to 3½c per lb. Of the above number of cattle on the market there were twenty loads of ranch and domestic cattle from the northwest.

The demand from butchers was fairly good and the market on the whole was moderately active with sales of choice steers at 5¾c to 6c, good at 5½c, fairly good at 5c to 5¼c, fair at 4½c to 4¾c, and common, at 4c to 4¼c per lb. Good cows brought from 4c to 5c, and bulls 4½c to [illegible]

Export of Pulp Wood

The exportation of pulp wood in a raw form from Canada into the United States is increasing yearly, and by just so much as this is so does Canada lose the benefit to be derived from manufacture and the increased value of raw products. The Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior has compiled statistics showing that over a million and a half cords of pulp wood was cut in Canada during 1910, worth nearly $9,800,000. Over sixty per cent. of this amount was sent out of Canada without further labor being expended on it. The United States manufactured it into pulp and paper.

From United States Forest Products Bulletins, it is seen that approximately two-fifths of the pulp wood imported by that country is manufactured into mechanical pulp, and three fifths of the sulphite pulp, and that a cord of wood produced one ton of mechanical pulp or one-half of chemical pulp. This means that of the 943,000 cords of Canadian pulp wood sent into the United States in 1910, 377,000 tons of mechanical pulp and 286,000 tons of chemical pulp was made.

The value of this pulp, for which Canada received $6,210,000, was over $13,500,000 at the average prices paid in the United States. Thus Canada did not get one-half the amount she would have received if all pulpwood were converted into pulp on Canadian soil. As the United States does not export two per cent. of what it imports, a certain and steady market would be found for all the wood pulp of Canadian production.

MacKay's Platform

We have in a former issue called attention to the manifesto of the leader of the Ontario Opposition to the Whitney Government, in which he calls upon the supporters of Mr. Whitney to "drop party" and vote for him. The Toronto News deals with him and his claims for support more fully. It says:—

"On behalf of oppressed parents and guardians Mr. MacKay demands "the square deal" in educational matters. This from the member of a former Government which was the slavish tool of the famous book ring! Parents know that through its text book reform the Whitney Ministry has saved them hundreds of thousands of dollars in the aggregate by giving their children superior books at amazingly reduced prices.

"A scarcity of rural teachers is complained of, but the present Administration has done more than all its predecessors to advance school salaries and to render the teaching profession attractive.

"Mr. MacKay deplores the lack of progress in specialized training, but the Department as at present organized has introduced agricultural instruction in the schools. The results of Dr. Seath's investigations in Europe have appeared in a comprehensive report on technical education, which will be acted upon at an early date. Lastly the University has been rescued from the inertia in which the old Government's penuriousness left it.

"With curious ineptitude the Opposition leader condemns the Hydro-Electric policy, of which his newspaper supporters have been the steady champions.

"He attacks the conduct of the Provincial Railway though it is managed by a commission that is the envy of other Provinces and other countries.

"He says that the Whitney Government, like its predecessor, has neglected Northern Ontario, and, even while he does so, the Liberal press announces an expansive plan under which the Provincial and Federal Governments are to unite in extending the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario Railway, and in developing and peopling the Great Clay Belt on the Hudson Bay slope.

"It will thus be seen that the Opposition forces persist in assailing invulnerable points in the Ministry's armor. That, of course, is partly because the Cabinet's position is so strong that it leaves the enemy no real opening for a successful assault."

Cost of Militarism

Although the cost of militarism in the United States is a mere flea bite in comparison with that of several of the European powers, yet the following from the Technical World Magazine of New York is instructive, as showing how expenditure on warlike preparations has grown of late years:

> For the eight years preceding the war with Spain our average annual expenditure for the army was less than $24,000,000; for the eight years following the war the annual average leaped to more than $83,000,000; and now for the current year the army appropriation is $95,440,567. The navy has done even better. For the eight years preceding the Spanish war the average annual expenditure was a little more than $27,000,000; for the next eight years it averaged $102,400,000, and this year the navy gets $131,350,854. Adding the navy and army appropriations gives the sum of $226,791,421, which is rather a neat price to pay for imitating the antics of those ghost dancers on the farther side of the Atlantic. But that isn't all by any means. To this sum must be added the current appropriation for the military academy, $1,856,249; the appropriation for forts and fortfications, $5,617,200; and the pension appropriation of $155,758,000, making a grand total of $390,022,870 as the cost of militarism for one year, or at the rate of $1,068,555 a day for every day of the year.
>
> This enormous sum is paid out of the United States Treasury, a beneficial institution which seems too remote and intangible to concern the average man. But when you bear in mind, as you should, that even the United States Treasury cannot pay out what it does not take in and that its insatiable maw is fed, but never filled, from your pockets and mine and from every one else's the matter assumes quite a different aspect. The reality of your contriubtion is in no wise affected by your inability to perceive when you pay for it. Every mouthful you eat, every thread you wear, every need of your life, bears its tax which goes to make up the vast aggregate of government expenditure.
>
> Three hundred and ninety million dollars is $4.24 per capita for the inhabitants of the United States, exclusive of our possessions. But this counts in the women and children, the idle and the incapacitated. Getting down to an average for heads of families would multiply this per capita tax by five, or least, or $21.20 as the sum that each head of a family, speaking in averages, must contribute out of his earnings, whether he wants to or not, toward the support of the army and navy and the frills that go with them this year. Next year the forced contribution will be larger; for the year after that still larger; for the succeeding year larger yet, for once the military craze gets started there is no limit to its extravagances.
>
> Many men consider themselves lucky when they are able to squander $21 on one suit of clothes. Lots of them do not get that much for a week's work. Few can lose that much, even in a poker game, without wincing, inwardly if not outwardly. Twenty-one dollars would provide porterhouse steak for two persons for 42 meals, or it would pay the hired girl's wages for a month, or it might pay the premium on $1,000 life insurance for a year. Twenty-one dollars, in short, is a most useful sum of money. When it is multiplied by 18,400,000, the number of families here assumed, its potentialities for good are almost incomprehensible.

He Aimed All Right

"Well, James," said a clergyman to a labourer whom he was visiting, "what are you going to make of this youngster here, eh?"

James mysteriously extracts a dirty scrap of paper from the depths of an old tobacco pouch, and answ[illegible] reflectively—

"Oh, of course, he must learn to write and to read," says the parson.

"I don't know so much about the readin'," remarked James reflectively. "Writin's the thing now, sir. Just you be so good, sir, as to cast your eye over that. Maybe you haven't seen it before."

The parson does as he is requested. It is but a short paragraph clipped apparently from the corner of the county newspaper and it runs as follows:—

"It is said that the late Mr———, [illegible] $300,000 by writing."

It was useless for the parson to say much. So he took his hat, smiled, and departed, with a murmured "Well! well!" which did not commit him to anything.

Origin of Post Cards.

In 1869, while Professor Emanuel Hermann of Vienna, was seeking a vast amount of information by correspondence for his notable book, 'The Guide to the Study of Natural Economy,' the thought occurred to him that many advantages would result from the adoption of a means of correspondence cheaper than the sealed letter. On January 26 he went before the Austrian post director with his idea, an open, stamped card, and his suggestion was almost immediately adopted. Within a month the Austrian postal authorities printed and sold 1,000,000 postal cards, and thus established this indispensible means of communication.

WHAT I WENT THROUGH

Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Natick, Mass.—"I cannot express what I went through during the change of life before I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a nervous condition I could not keep still. My limbs were cold, I had creepy sensations, and I could not sleep nights. I was finally told by two physicians that I also had a tumor. I read one day of the wonderful cures made by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it, and it has made me a well woman. My neighbors and friends declare it had worked a miracle for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is worth its weight in gold for women during this period of life. If it will help others you may publish my letter."—Mrs. NATHAN B. GREATON, 51 N. Main Street, Natick, Mass.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

To display his son's ball tossing ability, a Montreal fan organized a baseball team. While pitching in a practice game Aaron, the boy, found his father at bat. His "inshoot" hit dad in the ribs. "Son," groaned the father as they hauled him away to the hospital, "I'm proud of that speed, but—but, please try to improve that control."

Not Worth Stopping For.

A party of four gentlemen were driving a motor-car along the road leading from Kilkenny to Clonnel. Seeing a fine stretch of level road in front the car was put at full speed, and they raced along for nearly four miles.

Presently speed was slackened, and the driver turned round to see how his two friends at the back had enjoyed the run. A look of scared astonishment overspread his countenance when he found that only one gentleman was seated there.

"Where's Jack?" he gasped, stopping the car.

Fathers Work Too Long.

It is a mistake for fathers to toil all their lives in order that their children may escape toil all theirs. Suppose the calculation correct, and permanent idleness secured for the next generation, what evidence is there that the boys and girls will be happier and better for it? The boys will be exposed to the devices of "sharks," and the girls to those of fortune hunters. Leave something for them also to do.

Men Like Stagnant Ponds.

The great ocean is in a constant state of evaporation. It gives back what it receives, and sends up its waters in mists to gather into clouds; and so there is rain on the field and storm on the mountains, and greenness and beauty everywhere. But there are many men who do not believe in evaporation. They get all they can and keep all they get, and so are not fertilisers, but only stagnant miasmatic ponds.

A Heavy Smoke

The editor of a certain periodical was rash enough to remove a few lines from a poem which he had accepted, whereupon the author wrote him a letter which wound up thus—"And now, O slaughterer, vivisector, mangler, maimer, destroyer, disfigurer, deformer, defacer, crippler, mutilator, good-bye! Put this in your pipe and smoke it!"

WHAT CANADIANS ARE DOING

HON. SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL

When nine years old, the boy whom fate had decreed as a man above the average amongst his fellows, voyaged across the Atlantic with his parents, having been born at Rickinghall, Suffolk, in 1823. Educated at Belville public school, young MacKenzie joined the staff of the Intelligencer at quite an early period of his life, and has been a busy man during all the intervening years, growing up with the paper in various capacities all the way from office lad to editor and proprietor, with many other duties parliamentary and otherwise worked in. His initial active participation in politics was at Confederation when he was elected for North Hastings, and during the years until he joined the Macdonald Cabinet he continued to occupy the editor's chair of the Intelligencer. Entering the Macdonald administration as Minister of Customs 19 October 1878, he was subsequently Minister of Militia in the Abbot Administration, of Trade and Commerce in the Thomson administration, and formed a ministry in December 1894, which he reconstructed in January 1896 from which he resigned three months later. Sir Mackenzie Bowell was leader of the Senate 1893-96, and leader of the opposition from that date until 27 April 1906 when he retired. Created K.C.M.G. on 1 January 1895, he in the year following had the further honor conferred by being appointed Chairman of the Colonial Conference, of which, it will be remembered, he was organizer. He is president of the Imperial Association of Canada, and ex-President of the Belville Hardware Manufacturing Co. and Northumberland Power Co., is a Governor of Toronto University, member of the Senate of Albert College Belville, and for many years Grand Master of the Orange Association of America. In his earlier years Sir Mackenzie took active interest in things military, having been a member of the 15th Light Infantry and the 4th Rifles from which he retired with the rank of Lieut.-Colonel. He served on the frontier during the American war, and was also in the field at the time of the Fenian troubles in 1866.

Her Own Fault

The wife of a pugilist was denied a divorce on the ground that her husband blackened her eyes. It was probably contented that the pugilist was only making a sparring partner out of his partner for life. This is only reasonable. A wife should be willing to help her husband in his profession and to take an active interest in it. If a lady is prejudiced against black eyes she should not marry a pugilist.

WILLIAM DENNIS

Mr. Denis, owner of the Halifax Herald, is a native of Cornwall, Eng., but came to Canada in 1873, and joined the reportorial staff of the Herald when it started a couple of years later. For some years he engaged in journalistic work in Winnipeg, and when he returned to Halifax it was to take possession of the concern on which he had acted as junior. Since then the Herald has gone on prospering and to prosper, and is to-day a journal of weight and influence. Mr. Dennis earned a high degree of praise for the whole souled effort through the columns of his paper in 1906 when no less a sum than $15,000 were raised in the distinct to help relieve the want resulting from the famine in Japan.

SIR CHARLES FITZPATRICK, K.C.M.G.
Chief Justice of Canada

When Sir Charles Fitzpatrick left the stormy sea of politics in 1906 for the comparitive calm of the bench he left behind him a record that any man would be proud of — a reputation that has been enhanced each year he has dispensed justice as the head of our judiciary and a splendid tribute to his impartiality is the esteem he is held by men who were at one time bitter political opponents. This brillant man was born in 1853 in Quebec when after graduating in Laval, he took up practice in law; three years later becoming crown prosecutor for his native city. In 1890 he entered the Provincial House for the county of Quebec, resigning six years later to became federal member for the same division, when he was also appointed Solicitor General. In 1902 Sir Charles became Minister of Justice, which portfolio he resigned in 1906 to occupy his present high position. Possibly the highest compliment that could be paid to a legal man was paid to the Chief Justice when he was offered and accepted a place in the Hague Tribunal of Arbitration in 1908-10, where he discharged his duties in such a way as to call forth the commendation of the greatest legal luminaries of the world. In 1906 Sir Charles received his K.C.M.G. and in 1908 his P.C.

HON. CHARLES DEVLIN
Minister of Public Works, Quebec.

Charley Devlin must have kissed the "blarney stone" thrice if successful public life and a gift of the mother tongue go together; for there is no doubt but what the Hon. Charles Ramsey Devlin — to give him his full title — has turned up trumps in every sphere of political work he has undertaken. First a member of the Federal House at Ottawa, — then a Commissioner in Ireland, — next a member of the Imperial Parliament — back again to Ottawa as member and finally Minister of Public Works in the Quebec Government and a seat in the Provincial House. Not a bad record for a man just out of the forties.

Chas. Ramsey Devlin was born in 1858 in Aylmer, Que., where after graduating at Laval University he engaged in newspaper work. He first became M. P. for Ottawa County in 181 resigning from parliamentary life temporarily to take up the position of Canadian Commissioner in Ireland. While in the land of his forbears Mr. Devlin was elected by acclamation as M. P. for Galway in the British House of Commons. On his returning to Canada in 1906 he was elected to the Federal House for Nicolet, but resigned nine months later to accept his present position as Minister of Public Works, Que. As a man Mr. Devlin is the essence of courtesy and kindness and no immigrant from the Emerald Isle has appealed to this big hearted man in vain.

"FATHER ENDEAVOR" CLARK

Not many Canadians have a more fruitful sixty years of life behind them than the Rev. "Father Endeavor" Clark, who visited Montreal a few days ago and has since celebrated his birthday in his native town of Aylmer. He was one of the first and ablest men to apply the new organizing principles of this continent to spiritual work, and the society which he formed has done a notable work in rallying the young people of the Protestant world into a single force, imbuing them with a powerful inspiration, and combatting the tendency to drift away from religious affiliation. In the 'eighties Dr. Clark could hardly have done what he did if he had remained in Canada, so that his removal to the United States was more a mission than an expatriation.

AN ABSENT-MINDED LAWYER

Two Good Stories of an Irishman.

Prominent among the members of the Irish Bar in its early years was Peter Burrowes. Although successful in his profession, he seems to have been subject to absence of mind in an unusual degree. A brother-lawyer who went to call upon him early one morning found Burrowes watching over a saucepan in which his watch was boiling merrily away, while his eyes were anxiously directed to an egg in his left hand. On another occasion he was caunsel for the prosecution at an important trial for murder. Burrowes had a severe cold, and opened his speech with a box of cough-lozenges in one hand, and in the other the small pistol-bullet by which the man had met his death. Between the pauses of his address he kept supplying himself with lozenges. But at last, in the very midst of a sentence, he stopped. His chest heaved, his eyes seemed starting from their sockets, and in an agonised voice he shouted. "Oh-h-h, gentlemen, gentlemen, I've swallowed the bul-let!"

Two Ribs Broken.

Several people saw him slip on a wet step and fall. Partly extricating himself from his umbrella he set up such a wail of distress that every one in hearing ran to his assistance regardless of the drenching rain.

"Are you hurt?" asked a chorus of voices.

"Anything broken?" demanded another.

"Only two ribs," he muttered in tones of deep anguish as he wiped his bleared face on his sleeve.

Helping him up, a kind man dragged him into a drug store. One thoughtful person suggested a glass of brandy; another, more generous, said there were two ribs broken, and a second glass followed the first.

"That 'll make you feel better, old man. Ribs hurt you now?"

"What ribs?" he puzzled, smacking his lips.

"Why, the ones you said were broken!"

"Oh," he replied, getting on his feet and moving toward the door. "Dey was de ribs in me umbrella."

Sparks from Mars.

Old Sport Saturn is getting very giddy these warm nights. Came home last week with two rings on crooked. Must be warm times on the "Gay White Milk Way."

Our astronomers make some queer blunders. The smoky spot on the earth that was long thought to be an active volcano turns out to be a habitation of earthings, called Montreal. Those immense fields of curious-looking objects are not gigantic mushrooms blown by the wind, but the hats of the earthling ladies. Thus do we live and learn.

Come, spend your summer on Mars. No mosquitoes. High altitudes. Take a gondola ride on the canals. Come and send a souvenir postal card to your friends on the earth.

It is sometimes better to have loved and lost than to be the other fellow.

It's a surprise part if everybody present has a good time.

Don't we want "new mills," "new markets," "new railways," more "money in circulation," "bigger pay-rolls," increased value in our land, and all the profitable benefits which this American paper says will go to the people who grind the Canadian wheat crop?

We have the wheat crop. Why not keep it at home and grind it ourselves? Then it will be of us that it can be said:—

"The miller who is able to grind this enormous crop will be the miller of the future; and, where he is, there will be the great mills of the world."

Too Much Education a Mistake.

It is a mistake to suppose that a good general education will secure success in life. No wise man accepts a general invitation to dinner! It involves no particulars. Only a particular education is of practical use. Let the boys be educated for something particular — lawyers, doctors, clergymen, printers, merchants, tradesmen — only something definite. No hands are so often idle as those which are supposed by the owners — and by no one else — fit to "turn to anything."

Pastor Russell's Sermon

Oct. 15.—London Tabernacle, Lancaster Gate W., was crowded to-day to hear Pastor Russell. He spoke of mistaken notions re the end of the world. He assured his audience that "the earth abideth forever," and claimed that errors were built upon misinterpretations of Scripture. His text was Revelations x:6-7. "And the angel sware * * * that the time should be no longer (delayed)."

Pastor Russell declared that his text had no reference to the end of time—that time could never end, must always endure. The word delayed should have been added by the translators to catch the proper thought. The time mentioned would no longer be delayed. The fulfilment of delayed promises would be accomplished. The transition is, however, in harmony with the generally received opinion respecting a coming wreck of matter, crashed worlds, burnin gof the world, etc.. These views in recent years have been voiced by Christian brethren styled Adventists, but really are to be found in nearly all the creeds of Christendom The erroneous theory has been further bolstered up by the misinterpretation of the Lord's word Our Lord said nothing about the end of the earth. What he did mention was the end of the aion, or age in which we live. Various aions or ages have followed one another, each ending in turn and giving place to another. So the present aion or age we believe will soon give place to a better aion or age, in which Christ and His church shall reign in triumph, overthrowing sin and death and uplifting the willing and obedient of the sinners.

Those who have not learned that the Bible frequently uses language in a symbolical manner may be excused for taking literally some of St. Peter's statements respecting the burning of the heavens and the earth. A critical study shows that the apostle could not have referred to the literal earth and the literal heavens as being consumed He used the term earth symbolically, as representing society, of which the mountains or kingdoms are the backbone, just as he used the word heavens to represent the ecclesiastical powers which are even now rolling together as a scroll from the two ends, the one Protestant, the other Catholic The social conflagration is being generally feared. Recent disturbances of social economics threatened us in London, Liverpool and elsewhere. Fortunately the fires of passion did not completely blaze forth to involve the social structure, and although they are still smouldering and, according to the Scriptures, will burst into a flame before long.

Although many expect the social conflagration, not many yet fear the religious blaze predicted by the apostle It surely will come; not a jot or tittle will fail. The religious heavens and the social earth will catch fire together After the great conflagration, upon the ashes of human institutions, Messiah will establish the kingdom of glory and blessing in the interests of our poor dying race. The new heavens will be the new ecclesiastical power—the church in glory. The new earth will be the new social arrangement which Messiah's power will inaugurate.

He that sits upon the throne declares that all things shall be made new by His kingdom until God's will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven—until mankind shall have been fully released from all the sin, depravity, and death, resulting from the fall.

The early church hoped, in harmony with the apostolic teachings, for Messiah's kingdom to be established and for the resulting times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began—Acts iii:19-21.

After the apostles fell asleep and the kingdom still delayed, false doctrines crept into the church, amongst others the theory that Christ's kingdom was not to be waited for—that it came at Pentecost and the apostles did not know of it; that it must conquer its way to the throne of the earth—that converts must be made even though the assistance of inquisitory torments were necessary to effect this. If every knee must bow, then our forefathrs concluded that it was their duty to make them bow. They acted conscientiously, no doubt. The papal throne was established. The popes in turn were declared to be reigning as Christ's representatives.

When the Protestant Reformation renounced Catholicism and denounced it as anti-Christ it proceeded, nevertheless, along the same lines. Various Protestant churches did their best to support their claims to the spiritual domination. Thus the Czar of Russia is the head of the Greek church, Emperor William is the head of the Lutheran system, King George is the head of the Church of England theoretically. We may be sure, however, that none of these talented men believe for a moment that they are reigning as and for and instead of the Messiah.

None of these kingdoms of Christ—nor all of them together, called Christendom, could ever hope to bring to pass the glorious things promised of Messiah's Empire—"that every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess to the glory of God." Indeed it is becoming more widely known daily that heathendom, as well as Christendom, is doubling population each century.

What shall we say, dear brethren? Shall we continue in sin and error, or shall we return to the Word of the Lord and its teachings? Let us accept the fact so clearly presented in the Bible that the church is the specially called and chosen class designed to be the Bride of Messiah and joint-heir with Him in His kingdom. Let us see that the kingdom of God's dear Son is to be established at His second coming, when with His Bride He shall bless all families of the earth with fullest opportunity and every necessary assistance to loyalty to God and to human perfection.

ENJOYMENT OF LIFE

Claim is Made that Animals can Extract More Joys Than Man From Their Term of Life on Earth.

In reply to the question as to whether animals enjoy life more than men, it is pointed out that in many cases they have all man's advantages and some extra ones of their own as well.

It is naturally in matters connected with eating that we find most opportunity for comparing the possible relative pleasures of animals and man. One would imagine that man's power of heightening his enjoyment of meals by the arts of cookery would quite surpass all animal enjoyment possibilities. But as against that, the question arises whether the average animal would care about having its food cooked at all. The most underdone steak or chop, served with the spiciest of sauce would not suit a lion or a tiger half so well as venison "au naturel" with plenty of fresh hot blood to it. Most other animals no doubt consider their food just done to a turn as they find it, whether it be the cow's long-protracted meal of fresh green grass or the hasty lunch which the solan goose makes of a fine plump herring swallowed "all alive, O." Besides, the most refined cookery cannot yield pleasure anything approaching that of keen appetite, and that is a feeling which animals are more likely to experience than men. A lion cannot drop in at a restaurant and order a fresh killed deer—"And see that you bring me plenty warm blood with it, Jackall," as in the case of man and his waiter. Every animal has to search for its food, and that means being truly hungry when it gets it. Still, there is little doubt that most animals have their favourite things — little treats which they enjoy specially. However kind it is to the sparrow, no one who has witnessed the painful spectacle of a live sparrow caught by a backgreen cat, and heard the low savage growl of, the carnivorous animal tasting blood, can doubt the peculiar, intense satisfaction derived. What could the sweetest milk be to that cat in comparison? Similarly, in more modified form ,every animal has its preference just as we have, and hunts high and low to find them to suit its palate.

Some animals, however, possess a pleasure quite apart from the inclination of the palate. That is the pleasure of "bolting" — a separate sensation apart from tasting. Most carnivorous animals will bolt when pressed for time, or liable to have their food taken from them; otherwise they prefer chewing and tasting. Most birds and all fish are bolters, but the bolter of bolters among them is the pike. Its only idea of enjoyment is bolting, and the harder a thing is to bolt the better it likes it. It will even try to bolt another pike of about its own size. Pike have been found dead in such peculiar entanglement as to give foundation for the surmise that each has been trying to swallow the other and that both have choked in the attempt.

Where the animals have a real advantage is in their freedom of action. They are at liberty to do as they like, and man is not. If a clinching illustration is wanted it is found in the undoubted pleasure of personal scratching, common to both man and animals. Whereas animals may, and do, scratch themselves where and when they choose, man may not. He consequently has to control himself with great effort at times, even in cases where the desire is created by the keen and unlicensed enjoyment on the part of some inconspicuous marauder.

THE CARE OF LAMPS

In places where electric light or gas are not available if lamps be good and have proper attention, one cannot wish for a more satisfactory light; but if badly cared for they will be a source of much discomfort. The great secret of having lamps in good working order is to keep them clean and to use good oil. Have a regular place and time for trimming the lamps. Put a folded newspaper on the table so that any stray bits of burned wick and drops of oil may fall upon it. Wash and wipe the chimneys and shades. Now take off all loose parts of the burner, washing them in hot soap-suds and wiping with a clean soft cloth. Trim the wicks and turn them quite low. With a soft, wet cloth, well soaped, wipe the burner thoroughly, working the cloth as much as possible inside the burner, to get off every particle of the charred wick. Now fill the lamps within about one inch of the top, and wipe with a damp towel and then a dry one. Adjust all the parts and return them to their proper places. Whenever a new wick is required in a lamp wash and scald the burner before putting in the wick. With a student lamp, the receptacle for waste oil, which is screwed on the bottom of the burner, should be taken off at least once a week and washed. Sometimes a wick will get very dark and dirty before it is half consumed. It is not economy to try to burn it; replace it with a fresh one. The trouble and expense are slight and the increase in clearness and brilliancy will repay the extra care. When a lamp is lighted it should not at once be turned up to the full height; wait until the chimney is heated. Beautiful shades are often cracked or broken by having hot chimneys rest against them. Now, when lighting a lamp be careful that the chimney is set perfectly straight and does not touch the shade at any point. The shade should be placed on the lamp as soon as it is lighted, that it may heat gradually.

Boys with chestnut hair, it is said, are likely to be more clever than any others,and will generally be found at the head of the class, and in like manner girls with fair hair are likely to be far more studious and bright than girls with dark hair.

The creed that can be stereotyped is not worth running through the presses.

WORLD'S OLDEST LIGHT

On the coast of the English Channel at Dover may still be seen the ruin of a Roman Lighthouse built at the time of the conquest by the Romans.

It was partly rebuilt and some alterations were made in it, but in the main it is the same old structure that guided the Roman galleys as they skirted the coasts of the Bay of Biscay, making their way to the Roman port of Brigantium. This is the modern harbor of La Coruna and the lighthouse is the most ancient thing about it.

Built in 98 A. D.

The Romans called it the Tower of Hercules and the moderns have perpetuated the name. The exact date of its erection is not known, but inscriptions and other evidence show that it was built in the time of Trajan between 98 and 117 A. D.

When the Roman empire fell and Rome lost the mastery of the seas the light in this tower was extinguished. For many years none of the old Roman lights lit up the sea edges of the former empire. Most of the light towers fell completely into ruins, but a fortunate chance saved the Tower of Hercules.

For many centuries it was nothing but four walls of stone and every century added to its dilapidation; but at last, about 1634, an Englishman and a Dutchman, Consuls of their countries at La Coruna, agreeing that the building was not decayed beyond repair, had it overhauled and patched up. The light was again kindled; and though it was not kept alive for many years the repairs that had been made saved the structure from irretrievable ruin.

Frequently Rebuild.

The exterior stairway encircling the building, by which the Romans and the two Consuls reached the lighthouse at the top had fallen completely and the Spaniards decided not to rebuild it. But they planned a thorough renovation of the tower and the work, as they completed it, is the tower of to-day.

They placed the new stairway in the interior of the structure. They tore down the upper third of the tower and completely rebuilt it. They faced the lower two-thirds with granite, marking by a slightly overhanging layer of stone the line where the ancient stairway had clung to the exterior wall.

Original Foundation Served.

They found that the old foundations were in perfect order and these foundations stand today as the Roman stone masons left them. This work was completed about 111 years ago, and every night since the light has guided the mariner along this part of the northern coast of Spain.

From the present building the light can be seen, according to the weather conditions, at a distance from sixteen to twenty-two miles at sea, and [illegible] doubtless a more effective beacon than that which glimmered from the old tower some 1,800 years ago.

Concrete Work in Freezing Weather

UNTIL a few years ago, although concrete had already been generally adopted throughout the country by contractors and farmers for almost all structural work, it was the practice to stop all work on this form of construction as soon as the cold weather set in.

It has been found, however, that concrete work may be carried on in cold weather successfully, and with but very little more trouble than under ordinary circumstances.

This fact is of great benefit to the farmer, as it is in the colder period of the year that he is able to find time for building and making the many articles around the farm to which concrete so readily adapts itself.

With a few simple precautions it has been found that concrete can be used, not only in freezing weather, but when the thermometer has been actually below zero.

If the concrete freezes before it starts to "set," it will not be injured, but if the freezing takes place after the "setting" action has started up, the concrete is likely to be damaged when it thaws, owing to the expansion of the melting water forcing the particles apart and making the concrete crumbly. On the other hand, if the concrete has a chance to become thoroughly "set" before freezing, no harm will be done. To give it this chance you must first of all prepare the materials as described below, and secondly, you must protect the concrete after it has been placed in the "forms."

PREPARATION OF MATERIALS.

Concrete will, on its own account, develop a certain amount of heat in the "setting" process. But in cold weather, some outside assistance, in the form of artificial heat, is necessary. The best way to develop this artificial heat is to warm the materials before mixing. This shortens the time that it takes the concrete to "set" and lengthens the time necessary to bring it to the freezing point. Bear in mind that the less water used, the quicker concrete "sets." Therefore, it is advisable to use as little water as possible in the mixing during cold weather.

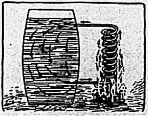

FIG. 1. SHOWING SIMPLE METHOD OF WATER HEATING.

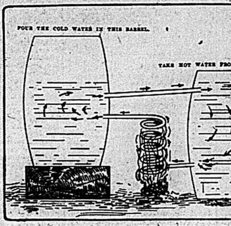
HEATING WATER.

A simple and easily-made vessel for heating water is shown in the accompanying drawing. (See Fig. 1.). A coil is made of one-inch pipe with the ends fastened in the barrel and made water-tight. A small fire built under the coil will heat the water rapidly and will keep it in circulation, thus keeping all the water heated.

For this purpose it is wise to use, a length of malleable iron gas-pipe, because it is easily bent into the required coil. This is done by taking a log or fence-post about the size of the coil and bending the pipe around it. This method prevents the pipe from "buckling" and makes the coils more regular in size.



POUR THE COLD WATER IN THIS BARREL.
TAKE HOT WATER FROM THIS BARREL.
FIG. 2. SHOWING TWO-BARREL METHOD OF HEATING WATER.

Where concrete work is being done on a large scale, it is advisable to use the two-barrel heater shown in Fig. 2. This allows the water to be constantly replenished without reducing the heat of the water in the barrel from which the hot water is taken.

Most farmers, however, possess large boiling kettles, used during butchering time, or for making soft soap, etc. One of these will do equally well.

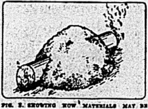


FIG. 3. SHOWING HOW MATERIALS MAY BE HEATED BY MEANS OF A FIRE IN AN OLD STOVE-PIPE.

HEATING SAND AND STONE.

Sand and stone may be very easily heated by making use of two pieces of stove pipe, one piece for the sand and the other for the stone. The pipes are laid on the ground in such a position as to allow the wind to make a good draft. The fire is then built in one end. The flames pass through, heating the whole pipe, and as fresh fuel is added, the cinders are pushed along the pipe and gradually work out at the other end. The sand and stone should be piled on top of the stove pipes, and will soon thaw out and become heated.

In very cold weather, the cement may be heated by laying the bags on top of the sand, but this is not absolutely necessary, as the cement itself must be kept dry until used, whether the weather be hot or cold.

TEMPERATURE REQUIRED.

Materials should not be heated to too high a temperature. A good way to judge the proper amount of heat is to make them just hot enough to be comfortable to touch. Care should be taken not to use any frozen lumps of sand.

PROTECTING CONCRETE IN POSITION.

After the concrete has been placed in "forms" it should be protected so as to keep the heat in as long as possible. This is more essential in thin structures than in massive walls, and foundations; for the latter will hold their own heat longer on account of their thickness.

Wooden "forms" are non-conductors, and will retain the heat in the concrete up to a certain point, but the concrete should be protected on top by a covering of canvas or heavy paper, with a layer of ten or twelve inches of manure on top of this. Straw will also answer the purpose. If manure is used, care should be taken to prevent it from coming in contact with the concrete, as it will discolor it, and possibly even seep through sufficiently to weaken the structure.

PROTECTING THIN STRUCTURES.

In the case of thin walls where extra cold weather calls for additional protection, heavy paper should be nailed to the vertical posts of the forms, (see Figure 4,) thus leaving an enclosed air space between each pair of posts. These air spaces will have about fifteen degrees higher temperature than the outside air. The "forms" should always be left on longer in cold weather, as it takes longer for the concrete to harden.

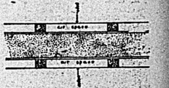

FIG. 4. PAPER TACKED TO WOODEN SUPPORTS TO PROTECT CONCRETE FROM FROST.

There is no reason why concrete cannot be used with complete success in cold weather if these simple precautions be followed.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

DYNAMITE ON BRIDGE

Attempt to Blow Up President Taft's Special Balked.

Section Foreman at Naples, Cal., Reports the Discovery of Thirty-Six Sticks of Explosive on Cairton Viaduct at Two In the Morning—Train Passed Over Safely at 5.51—Watchman Saw Men and Fired Shots.

San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 17.—A report received here yesterday by officials of the Southern Pacific Railway from C. C. Brown, section foreman for the road at Naples, Cal., gave details of the discovery of thirty-six sticks of dynamite under the Cairton viaduct, 20 miles north of Santa Barbara, several hours before President Taft's special train passed over the bridge en route to Los Angeles yesterday morning. The dynamite was found after the watchman engaged in a revolver battle with two men, who escaped.

The dynamite was discovered at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. The President's train passed over the bridge at 5.51. The nightwatchman saw two men on the bridge shortly before 2 o'clock. They were at the opposite end of the 1,000 foot span and ran when ordered to halt. The watchman hurried across the bridge, firing several shots, which were returned.

After the pair had escaped in the darkness, the watchman returned to the bridge and began an investigation. Near the centre of the span, lodged in one of the supports of the viaduct, he found the thirty-six sticks of dynamite with a ten-foot fuse attached to one of the sticks. He left the find untouched, going immediately to Santa Barbara and notifying the officials.

Sheriff Wines of Santa Barbara County went immediately to the bridge with several deputies and removed the dynamite. A general search is being made for the men.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Newcastle (Eng.) will give a banquet to Earl Grey in November.

Mr. Joseph Bradley was shot and killed near Paisley while hunting yesterday.

By the accidental discharge of a rifle, J. J. Bradley, aged 21, was instantly killed while in the bush near Paisley, Ont.

Four Days In Folding Bed.

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 17.—Miss Mary Elizabeth Graham, 70 years old, of Kenton, Del., will die as the result of a queer accident. She was found caught in a folding bed in her home, where she lived all alone.

While sitting on the edge of the collapsible bed it gave way under her weight. She became entangled in the bed clothing, and could not free herself. Finally the bed closed. She was too weak to extricate herself or to cry for help. She remained a prisoner for four days, when neighbors who had missed her, broke into the house and discovered her a captive. She had been paralyzed by her strange imprisonment.

WASTED TIME AND MONEY

BEFORE THEY FOUND GIN PILLS

GALETTA, ONT.

"My husband used Gin Pills for Backache and Kidney Disease. The pain in his back was dreadful and the kidneys failed to do their work properly. As he became worse, we found it necessary to begin treatment and unfortunately wasted time and money on remedies that were little or no good. After taking one dose of GIN PILLS, he found them to be exactly what he needed, and after taking two boxes of GIN PILLS was completely cured. We heartily commend GIN PILLS, at every opportunity to our friends and relatives". MRS. JAMES B. MILFORD.

HOUSE MEETS NOV. 15

Premier Borden Announces Date of the Session.

Sitting Is Expected Now to Run Over Christmas, But Not Later Than Early In February. — Hon. Sam Hughes Plans a General House-Cleaning In the Militia Department —Hon. Mr. Burrell Is Sworn In.

Ottawa, Oct. 17.—The new Parliament will be called for the despatch of business on Nov. 15. This date was fixed by the Cabinet-in-Council yesterday afternoon and announced later by Premier Borden.

The session will not be unduly prolonged. After a brief adjournment at Christmas prorogation will be sought by the end of January or first week in February. These, it is learned, are the plans of the Government. The Ministers will set about the work of preparing their estimates for the fiscal year, which commences on April 1 next.

The length of the session naturally depends largely upon the activity of the Opposition, but it is not expected that any stumbling block will be laid by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his supporters to the speedy transaction of the first term of the new Parliament.

There is something coming to the far-famed headquarters' staff of the Canadian militia under the Hughes administration. The new Minister proposes to bridge the gap dividing the Department from the militia itself. For this purpose he has in preparation a plan for holding a gathering of senior officers of the militia at Ottawa in a very short time.

According to the present shape in which the project is, the meeting will be convened on Thursday, Nov. 16, the day of the formal reading of the speech from the throne to the new Parliament, the discussion can thus run over Thursday and Friday, and if necessary on Saturday; while in addition there will be a specially large and representative gathering of militia officers for the first drawing-room of the soldier duke.

An agenda paper, is being drawn up; it will include organization matters, questions as to training, interior economy, recruiting, the bringing of military training into more sympathetic touch with the country, etc.

The roster of the new Government was completed when Hon. Martin Burrell, the new Minister of Agriculture, arrived in Ottawa yesterday morning, and was sworn in by His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, at 11 o'clock. The ceremony took place in the office of the Governor-General in the east block of the Parliament Buildings, over which is hoisted the duke's standard. Premier Borden was present.

The duke congratulated Mr. Burrell and expressed a warm feeling for the province of British Columbia, from which he had received more messages of welcome than from any of the other provinces of Canada. The Governor-General spent most of the morning in his office.

The first deputation to wait on the Duke of Connaught at Government House was one of several members of the Veterans' Association of 1866 Edward Kidd, M.P.-elect for Carleton, was among the number. The duke himself is a veteran, and was pleased to receive their greetings and congratulations.

Hon. Mr. Burrell will return to British Columbia almost immediately, in case there is to be a bye-election. The chances for the contest are, however, remote, for the new Minister's majority on Sept. 21st was something like two thousand.

Warrants for the payment of the inside and outside civil service were put through at a Cabinet Council held yesterday afternoon.

The amount raised will be sufficient to carry the service on from Sept. 1st to the meeting of Parliament, when further supplies will be voted.

Eugene Dahne, of Rio Janeiro, has been appointed to be commissioner for Brazil to Canada.

Monk Calls a Halt.

Ottawa, Oct. 17.—Mayor Hopewell, and City Treasurer Ellis yesterday morning had an interview with Hon. Mr. Monk, Minister of Public Works, regarding the Chatts Falls water power question. After the conference the mayor said:

"I called upon the honorable the Minister of Public Works this morning, and in an interview we showed the Minister a plan of the Chatts Falls, and extracts of a grant of part of Victoria Island and a number of other islands, made some years ago by the Ontario (Liberal) Government for a few hundred dollars. The hon. Minister agreed that it was simply an outrage, and that when the matter had come to his attention he had promptly ordered that no further action be taken until he had had an opportunity to look into the matter."

"Trial Engagement" Now.

Newport, R.I., Oct. 17.—Harold Vanderbilt and Miss Eleanora Sears have entered into a "trial engagement" to last for the period of one year.

This is the confidential announcement made by Mrs. Frederick R. Sears, of Boston, mother of the young woman whom society looks on with interest as having won the heart of the younger son of William K. Vanderbilt.

Co-operation With Colonies.

London, Oct. 17.—Earl Dudley, former Governor-General of Australia, speaking at Kidderminster, said the day had come when the Dominions must be admitted as partners in the councils of the Empire. They must never relax their efforts to bring about closer co-operation, as upon such eventually depended Britain's existence as a first-rate power.

Dynamited Bank Vault.

Clarksville, Va., Oct. 17.—Burglars dynamited the vault of the Planters Bank here early yesterday and after a fusillade of shots escaped with what is believed to be a large amount of money.

POPULACE WITH THEM

Chinese Revolutionists Have the Sympathy of the People.

The Probability of Disloyalty Among the Troops Is Causing a Great Deal of Worry to the Commander—Government Is Rushing Reinforcements to the Front—Revolutionary Party Is Well Armed—Money Needed.

Pekin, Oct. 17—Simultaneously with the acceptance yesterday by Yuan Shi Kai of the post of viceroy of Hu-Peh and Hunan Provinces, to which he is directed to proceed and immediately re-establish the imperial authority, the Government is showing remarkable activity, even in the face of a depleted treasury. The Government seems to realize at last the necessity of crushing the rebellion promptly, and is now despatching the army to the scene of the revolt as hastily as preparations can be made.

A few messages are beginning to arrive from the south, where several days previously was entirely cut off from telegraph communication. But the telegraph lines are open, few details of the situation in the affected provinces are filtering in. It is believed, however, that a certain measure of order is being maintained at Wu-Chang and Hankow. Outside of the foreign concessions in Hankow, these two cities are in the hands of the revolutionists, and the fact that all the women and children have left or are leaving Hankow indicates that the forces under the insurgent leaders, well armed and well ammunitioned from the arsenal store, are preparing to resist the Chinese army, several divisions of which are either on the road to Hankow or are being rapidly fitted out for the expedition.

The re-inforcement of the American legation guard by a hundred men, who are proceeding from Manila, while not significant of danger, is nevertheless indicative of the seriousness of the situation even in Pekin. Chinese respect for foreigners, which is often cringing, still continues up to the customary standard. This is due largely to the lesson of 1900, and it is not believed that the legation quarter will be subjected to more than inconveniences, owing to the rise in the prices of foodstuffs and possible disorders in the native city.

An indication of the activity being displayed by the Government is given in the despatch from Pao-Ting-Fu of twenty-four army trains in the last four days. Twelve trains will be despatched from Pekin, and the sixth division, which is now quartered at Pao-Ting-Fu, will leave as soon as conditions quiet down there. After the departure of a single passenger train to-day, the railway between Pekin and Tien Tsin was closed to all but troop traffic.

Gen. Yin Tchang, the Minister of War, who will have chief command of the Government troops, is a small, thin, queueless Manchu. The German and Austrian officers who hold the general's greatest confidence, report that he has not entire faith in the Chinese troops. According to the Chinese people generally, the Manchus were tolerable when they protected the country, but are now worthless. The vast body of Chinese sympathize with the revolutionists and a significant saying of the soldiers, who are proceeding to the south, is: "An ordinary rebellion would be all right, but we must now fight against our trained brothers."

The situation depends on money, and it is admitted that the ready funds of the Chinese Government are low. Further loans by foreign bankers have been refused. If the pay of the troops is increased and is regularly forthcoming, and if the men are well fed, they may not desert or rebel. The feeling in Pekin is, not which army is the stronger, but which is the less feeble, the less disorganized.

Yuan Shi Kai yesterday accepted the vice-royalty of Huan and Hu-Peh Provinces to the great joy of the Foreign Board, and in other official circles, among whom the belief is strong that the name of Yuan will be sufficient to strike terror in the hearts of the revolutionists and cause them to surrender.

Pessimism, however, dominates among the general public and Chinese officials as well as others are sending their families away from the capital. Yesterday morning's train to Tien Tsin was crowded.

An edict issued yesterday orders the distribution of rice among the poor, and the opening of the Pekin granaries for the sale of grain at low prices.

Disabled Government Gunboats.

San Francisco, Oct. 17.—News of the first engagement between the Chinese revolutionists and the imperial forces was received here yesterday. A cablegram to The Chinese Free Press, published here, gives an account of the disabling of three Government gunboats by the revolutionists near Hankow Sunday.

Two other boats of the flotilla, one of which carried Sui Ching, viceroy of the Hu-Peh Province, escaped. It is reported at the local headquarters of the Revolutionary Government, that the 1,300 men under Gen. Ching Piao revolted and joined the revolutionists. From Hang Weng, it was reported that 10,000 troops came over to join Li Yuen Hung, commander of the revolutionary army.

China Wants Money.

Pekin, Oct. 17.—The Government appears to have sufficient ready money for a campaign of six weeks or two months, but, anxious for a reserve fund in view of the possibility of a more extended conflict with the revolutionists, yesterday applied formally for a loan of $3,000,000, to the international bankers, who arranged the $50,000,000 currency reform loan. The group of financiers who represent four nations, the United States, Great Britain, Germany and France, were unable to agree to do this, and the loan was refused.

RIOTS IN SEGNI.

Italian Peasants Burn Down Municipal Buildings.

Rome, (via frontier) Oct. 17.—Very grave disorders occurred yesterday at Segni, a town of 7,000 population, one-half hour by railway from Rome, and the centre of a district in which is Carpineto, the birthplace of Pope Leo XIII., still surrounded with the ruins of towers erected in the middle ages for protection against the Saracens.

The rioting was caused, as was the case in Calabria recently, by the action of the municipality in adopting measures to stamp out the cholera. There are five patients at the hospitals, and four suspects are quarantined in a house. The inhabitants believed that the Government intended to poison the cholera patients and a great crowd marching to the City Hall demanded their release.

There were only four carabineers in the place, and when they attempted to defend the building, they were stoned, wounded and put to flight. Later they returned only to be again routed. They did not use their weapons, as they would have been of little avail against the mob, which by that time had been swollen until it numbered several thousand, practically the entire population.

The mob broke in the doors of the municipal buildings seeking the mayor, whom they held primarily responsible. However, the mayor and his clerks had made good their escape, and found refuge with friends in a house where they could not be found.

Failing to lay hold of the mayor, the mob sacked the building and then burned it.

The sight of the flames appeared to add to the frenzy of the rioters, and when a woman, seizing the municipal flag from the burning structure, cried: "To the hospital, to the hospital; death to the doctors," the suggestion caught the fancy of the crowd, and in another moment the thousands of shrieking and gesticulating men, women and children were bearing down on the hospital. The doors were forced, the attendants swept aside, and the cholera patients lifted from their cots and carried to the street.

Meantime others broke into the house where the suspects were quarantined, and took them from the place. Something like a procession was then formed, and the sick were borne in triumph to their homes. Of the nine stricken persons two were on the point of death, and it was a ghastly exhibition as they were passed from hand to hand, embraced, kissed and fondled by their half-mad friends.

While this was going on some of the local authorities managed to send a message to Rome, and troops were hurriedly sent from the capital.

The soldiers restored order after many of the mob had been placed under arrest.

Cochrane Steps All Work.

Winnipeg, Oct. 17.—For the first time since the establishment of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission the Minister of Railways has stepped in and exercised authority over the commission.

Word was received in the city yesterday that work was ordered stopped on the railway east of the city, including a $2,500,000 addition to the shops at Transcona. Contractor Volpi, who is building the stations from Reddit to Transcona; Contractor King, who is building the stations east of Grahame, and Contractor McDiarmid, who is building the coal chutes, have all been notified.

It is also announced that C. G. McFarlane, succeeds the late Mr. Poulin as chief engineer on division F.

Murder at Ensdale.

Parry Sound, Oct. 17.—Crown Attorney Haigh left yesterday morning for Ensdale to conduct an inquest into the death of an Italian who was murdered there Friday night.

It happens that he and another Italian member of a construction camp had been drinking and shortly after leaving the hotel engaged in a fight.

According to the story knives were used freely with the result that one of them was killed, his body having been found next morning in the woods behind a brush heap whither he had been dragged.

Clinton Bylaw Carries.

Clinton, Oct. 17.—The town of Clinton voted yesterday to sell a partly equipped plant and give a fixed assessment to a company to be known as the Clinton Motor Car Co. The bylaw carried with a large majority, the vote being, for 382, against 10. The company consists of Toronto motor-car men and local manufacturers.

A second bylaw to establish water works commissioners was carried by a majority of 125.

Forger Canning Goes Down For Another Seven Years.

Chatham, Oct. 17.—Richard P. Canning, convicted of uttering about $2,000 worth of forged checks on the local branch of the Dominion Bank, was yesterday afternoon sentenced to seven years in Kingston Penitentiary by Magistrate Houston.

Canning's career is one of pathetic interest. An accountant and mathematician, with an international reputation, he twice previously served long terms in Sing Sing Prison for forgery. On both occasions he had his terms shortened for good behaviour, and he established a system of bookkeeping in Sing Sing that is in existence in that institution to-day. It was while in Sing Sing that he conceived the idea of coming to Canada and making a clean start in life.

Walking the streets of Hamilton, Ont., without a dollar in his pockets the ex-convict got a menial job in one of the largest factories in the Ambitious City, where his ability was at once recognized, and he was promoted to one of the highest positions of trust in the factory office. Later he came to Chatham, where he acted as accountant for the Bent Goods Co.

It was here he met his third Waterloo. On the eve of accepting a high position with the biggest manufacturing institution in the western peninsula, he ran short of funds and forged the names of friends.

Peterboro, Oct. 17.—In rounding up a gang of six youths, the police found the writer of a letter addressed to Mr. Philox Kearney, Olive avenue, demanding $400. The letter was placed in the front door, and read: "If you don't leave $400 in front of your door to-night, we will blow out your brains in a short while."

The boys are charged with petty thieving. All are about 16 years of age.

Start Branches In Canada.

London, Oct. 17.—Norton Griffiths, M.P., urges manufacturers here to start branches in Canada, the same as the Americans. He said there was not a single trade here which could not successfully be established in Canada, which, without any booming, was going to be one of the greatest countries even if England never sent a single man or penny.

Peterboro, Oct. 17.—Four-year-old Barbara Bouregard fell into a cistern while playing at her home, near Crawford's Grove, and was rescued by her father, who was attracted by the cries of his young son, who happened to look into the cistern. She was taken from the water in a semi-conscious condition and restored.

FALL ASSIZES OPENED TODAY

No Criminal Cases—Judge Was Presented With White Gloves—Few Cases

The fall sittings of the High Court were opened at 1.30 this afternoon, the Honorable Mr. Justice Middleton presiding.

After the Grand Jury had been called they selected as their foreman Mr. John A. Holgate, and were then sworn in. His Lordship said their duties would be light at this session, as there were no criminal cases to be brought before them. This was a credit to the County of Hastings. They had, however, a duty to perform, namely, to visit public institutions that are supported or partially so by the public. He impressed upon them the necessity of seeing that public institutions are properly provided with fire escapes and that the inmates could be, in case of fire, got out in safety. He would like to have their presentment as soon as it was possible for them to do so.

Messrs. . C. Robinette, K.C., W. N. Tilley, K.C., and J. Jones, K.C., of Toronto, were in attendance at the court.

Mr. Clifford J. White, formerly of the State of Maine, and Mr. James Lynch, of Chicago, applied to be naturalized as British subjects. His Lordship granted the request and the necessary documents will be signed by the proper officials.

A Will Case.

The first case taken up was Delbert Rose vs. Wm. John Hubbs, et al, which was struck off the jury list and tried by His Lordship. It is an action to set aside a will. Many legal lights are engaged in the case, namely: E. G. Porter, K.C., T. C. Robinette, K.C., S. Masson, K.C., F. S. Wallbridge and S. J. Young.

A NEW KIND OF APPLE GIVEN A POPULAR NAME

That Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P., is personally, as well as politically, very popular even the most virulent of his political opponents have been forced by the logic of events to admit.

The following facts, narrated by Mr. John A. Kerr, the City Assessor, form ample confirmation of the above fact: "At Anson Junction," said Mr. Kerr, "I saw a barrel of apples delivered, which were marked 'Porter No. 1,' and addressed 'John Collins, Bancroft.' I asked the consignor why he had given the name 'Porter' to the fruit, and he replied, 'The apples are from a tree in our orchard, the variety of the produce of which had never been named, so I asked Mr. Sam Nesbitt, M.P.P., of Brighton, who is an expert in apples, to suggest a name. "Call them 'Porter,'" said Mr. Nesbitt; and so I did."

Popular as Mr. Porter is thus shown to be wherever he is known, he must yield the palm to "John Collins," who is the friend of princes, potentates and powers and whose popularity is bounded only by the confines of civilization.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE PRAIRIE PROVINCES

The Bay of Quinte District has a literary asset in the person of Mr. W. S. Herrington, K.C., of Napanee, who has again (with Wm. Briggs, as publisher) contributed an able historical study to the chronicles of Canada's composite nation-building. Many who have been deterred from following the labyrinth of tangled circumstances which together constitute the records of the west, will find here a clear evolution of the various agencies at work in preparing and producing a vast territory well governed and law-abiding.

> "Where wanderers from afar may come, and where the granary of the Empire became possible and productive. We congratulate Mr. Herrington on his good work and we recommend the little book as of great value and striking interest to both college student and romantic reader.

MOOSEJAW MURDER SUSPECT ARRESTED

WINDSOR, Oct. 16.—Fred Middleton, alias Frank Miller, was arrested at the home of his sister in Flint last midnight on a charge of having killed Frank Veale of Moose Jaw, Sask., several months ago. Veale and Middleton became involved in a quarrel over a girl, and Middleton shot and killed his rival.

From Moose Jaw Middleton is alleged to have gone to Missouri, where he told of his crime to a fellow-workman who won his confidence. The confidence was misplaced, however, and Herrod, the fellow-workman, wrote the Moose Jaw officers that Middleton had left there for his home in Michigan. Flint officers were notified, and Middleton's home near Montrose was closely watched. Middleton received mail, the police state, from the Moose Jaw girl at the Montrose postoffice under the name of Frank Miller.

Middleton is 21 years old, and resided on a farm near Montrose until a year ago, when he went west. He denies he is the man wanted, and declares he never was in Canada.

A resolution was passed granting the Mothers' Club the privilege of using certain tables and a stove belonging to the city for the furnishing of a room.

A communication was read from Mr. J. G. Lindsay, asking for an increase of $200 per annum as manager of the Water Works Department.

The matter was referred to the Water Works Committee.

—that has taken the place of tea and coffee in thousands upon thousands of homes.

"There's a Reason"

There's a drug—caffeine—in tea and coffee which interferes with digestion and has a disturbing effect on the heart and nervous system—showing in some persons more than in others.

One can continue with the drug and pay the cost in physical suffering, or quit and return to comfortable health, provided the condition has not become chronic.

Then, with the cause of trouble removed, Nature will properly take up the rich food elements in Postum for the rebuilding of the system.

Once started, you can keep on the road to increasing comfort, and you'll know

Quits When He Hits

Despite all warnings, a patient who suffered from overeating was obliged to call upon the doctor every few weeks for remedies. But when several months passed without a summons the doctor wondered, and, meeting his patient on the street, he asked.

"How is it I haven't heard from you in so long? Are you taking my advice or my prescriptions, or have you joined the ranks of the food-faddists?"

"I have done none of these things," responded the former dyspeptic, "and I believe I am done with the doctors for ever. I have found a perfect rule. When I sit down at the table I am careful to see that I measure just six inches from the table. Then I eat and eat and when I hit—I quit."

BOXING

WOLGAST AND WELLS.

Ad. Wolgast, lightweight champion of the world, and Matt Wells, lightweight champion of England, are finally matched. They will fight ten rounds at the Madison Athletic Club, New York, on Friday, November 3rd, for a purse of $19,000. The men are to weigh in at 133 pounds at 5 o'clock on the day of the contest.

A FOOTBALLER, BRAINY, HUSKY AND FAST

Frederick Conklin leads Michigan eleven. Conklin made a name for himself last year, playing through the schedule with his hand in splints, suffering from a broken finger, which did not interfere with his effectiveness.

Conklin is a husky, tipping the scale at 187 and standing close to six feet. He is a brainy player, and remarkably fast for so large a man. He captained his high school team at Schoolcraft, Mich.

Capt. Conklin is a senior medic and the first blond leader the Wolverines have had in years. He will doubtless play left tackle, the position he filled on last year's eleven.

KICKS IN FOOTBALL

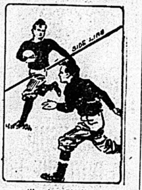

Diagram Showing Sideline Blocking

There are many kinds of kicks in football and as many ways to make them. The most common is the long, high punt.

McKay, Brown's captain last year, was the best man I ever saw at this style says Earl Sparkling of the Brown (United States) University. He held the ball at arm's length and on a level with his head, the ball pointing in at an angle of 30 degrees. He brought his leg up straight to the knee until his foot turned inward at the same angle as the ball. He caught the ball on the side, giving it the spiral twist. His kick continued through until his foot was over his head.

In the east, the long low punt is gaining favor.

GOOD MAN HILTON

After Steady Play All Through the Competition Hilton of England Took U. S. Championship.

The British amateur golf champion's splendid playing in the national amateur championship, at Rye, N. Y., won him the American title and the Havemeyer cup. Hilton led the field in the qualifying round and among others, disposed of Jerome F. Travers in match play.

A convenient tree gave Hilton the championship after he had tied 36 holes with Frederick Herreshoff of New York. Herershoff squared the match on the 36th hole, but topped his second shot on the 37th. Hilton's ball hit a tree and bounded onto the green.

Hilton is often referred to as a veteran and again as another's "younger opponent." As Hilton has been playing first class golf for 24 years, admits 42 years and has a son who is a six-footer, he can scarcely be a juvenile. Hilton says his success in golf is due to confidence in his ability to place a ball where he desires, arising from constant practice.

Utilizing Waste as Fuel.

The greatest work which has been carried on by the British in Egypt, since their occupation of that country has been the construction of dams along the Nile for the purpose of providing water for irrigating the Nile Valley. As a result of this work vast areas, previously waste, have been brought under cultivation and the output of the country vastly increased.

Another enterprise, of little less importance, is now under way. This is for the purpose of utilizing sudd, a thick tangle of water plants in the Nile bed. This growth has for generations seriously interfered with the navigation of the Nile. It has recently been discovered that it can be utilized as a fuel. The new fuel is known as suddite.

The New Boarder Again.

"For ten eyars," said the new boarder at a Montreal boarding-house, "my habits were as regular as clockwork. I rose on the stroke of six; half an hour later I sat down to breakfast; at seven I was at work, dined at twelve, ate supper at six, and was in bed at nine-thirty; ate only hearty food, and hadn't a sick day in all that time." "Dear me!" said th edeacon in sympathetic tones, "and what were you in for?" An awful silence ensued.

BEEN SNEEZING LATELY!

Hay Fever Blamed But Few People Get Sneezes From Hay, and There's No Immediate Death Danger.

The alleged "hay fever" season is now operating on full time and sneezing is general in the land, notwithstanding the more or less earnest efforts of the members of the Hay Fever Association which is alleged to have been in operation on the American Continent for close on forty years.

Hay fever is never "caught", we are told. A victim must have the tendency to develop the sneezing habit. He may develop it at seven and he may develop it at twenty-seven; but if it is in him, he will develop it, sooner or later, depend on that. There is something so dreadfully certain about hay fever. It comes, and nothing can turn it away. Doctors may claim to cure it. The man who has had hay fever thinks they deceive him. Their assertions are delusions, and their cures are snares. They may banish the awful explosions in one's bronchial tubes—corresponding to the explosions in the carbureter of a gasoline engine—for a brief time. But as for permanent relief — never.

Still, there are some consolations in hay fever. It seldom gets worse with age and few people have ever been known to die of it. Now and then you hear of some stout person of apoplectic tendencies being overcome by a paroxysm of sneezes, but after all, that kind of person is apt to explode with fatal consequences, one way or another.

The facts of the matter are that people who have hay fever or asthma, which is often confounded with hay fever generally live to a ripe old age. They may sneeze on their death beds, to be sure; but the sneeze will not kill them. Some doctors are even disposed to the possibly cynical belief that hay fever is an indication of longevity.

One might go on through an almost endless list of remedies. Injections of alcohol, cocaine, menthol, adrenalin and margol, air heated by electric lamps, these and many other queer means of relief are all seriously considered, weighed, and endorsed or found wanting, according to the individual experiences of individual sufferers. For the queerest thing of all about hay fever, is the fact that it never affects any two persons in the same way, and no relief, no matter how good it is, has ever proved anything like unanimous in its operation.

But, after all, hay fever any way you look at it is not what it pretends to be, nine times out of ten. Very few people get the sneezes from hay, and as a conclusive and final indictment of hay fever, the worst that can be said against it is that it is not a native product. It slipped in long ago and it has propagated like the English sparrows. To be exact, in the days when this country was covered by forests, the hay fever particular sneeze was unknown. The red men never did it, and the first generation of colonists probably escaped it. Not because they were "hardy pioneers." The hardy pioneers have always escaped hay fever, not because they were hardy, but because they were pioneers. But with the pioneers came cultivation, and with cultivation came the introduction of the poisonous gases, plants, flowers, and weeds, the pollen of which started the disease, and roads which gave off dust. And then.

SAFE FROM TYPHOID

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" THE BEST PREVENTATIVE

There is practically no danger of Typhoid Fever as long as you keep the bowels regular with "Fruit-a-tives."

Typhoid is an inflammation of the bowels, due to a germ. This germ enters the body in milk, water or food. If the bowels are constipated, the germ remains in the body long enough to attack the delicate lining and thus Typhoid begins.

"Fruit-a-tives" acts directly on the liver, kidneys and skin, and cleans the system of all impurities. "Fruit-a-tives" will not cure Typhoid—but it will cure Constipation, assist Digestion and tone up the system—thus preventing Typhoid.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers, or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

No Resemblance.

"Now, Nora," said the departing physician to the Irish girl, who was nursing a bad case of fever, "if the patient sees snakes again, give him a dose of this medicine. I shall be in at six."

The hour for his return arrived. The physician once more visited the sick patient, and found him raving. He had been so, said the nurse, for hours.

"And did you give him the medicine?" inquired the puzzled doctor.

Nora shook her head.

"But didn't I tell you to give it to him if he saw snakes again?" demanded the physician.

"But he didnt say he saw snakes this toime, dochter," replied the nurse, confidently. "He said he saw red-white-and-blue turkeys wid straw hair on!"

SWALLOWS' NEST OF BANK-NOTES

Also How a Mouse Stole $10 Worth of Notes to Make a Home.

The parent birds discovered that the new notes were just the shade of blue to match their eggs, the tissue being tough but flexible, and exactly the material they needed. The nest and the missing notes were only discovered when the swallows had abandoned it and it fell to the ground.

This feat has been equalled by that of an enterprising mouse in Dornbirn, which abstracted a number of twenty-kronen notes to the value of $40, of a delicate reddish brown shade, from the cash drawer of a butcher, and, tearing them to pieces, adapted them to the purpose of making a nest for her family of seven. The butcher in his search for the notes suspected and traced the mouse, and found the nest under the boarding. He carefully picked up the remains of the notes and returned them to the bank, where they were pieced together. The butcher recovered the mouse's teeth.

A steadier feeling prevailed in the market for hogs this morning and prices were practically unchanged from last Wednesday. The supply was not so large, for which the demand was good from packers, and sales of selected lots were made at $6.25 to $6.50 per cwt., weighed off the cars, and a few lots were delivered on contracts made last week at $6.75.

The trade in small meats was fairly active, there being a good demand from butchers for supplies and prices ruled steady. Lambs sold at 5¼c to 5½c, and sheep, at 3½c to 3¾c per lb. The demand for calves was good at prices ranging from $3 to $10 each, as to size and quality.

BAD CASE CURED IN TWO DAYS

"I was unfortunate enough to catch a bad cold from sitting in a draught in my bare head," writes Miss Nora E. Jamieson, well known in Sangre Grande, Td. "An acute condition of catarrh developed in my nostrils, and for three days my eyes and nose ran most copiously. The usual remedies entirely failed to relieve. I read in The Mirror newspaper about Catarrhozone, and sent to Smith Bros.' drug store for a dollar outfit. In two days Catarrhozone cleared out my nostrils, cured the sneezing, coughing, and all traces of catarrh."

Large size Catarrhozone, sufficient for two months' use, guaranteed, price $1.00; smaller sizes 25c. and 50c. Beware of imitations, and substitutors, and insist on getting "Catarrhozone" only. By mail from the Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Ont.

MARRIED BUT A WEEK BEFORE HE SUICIDED

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., Oct. 17.—George Powers, 28 years old, is dead here after three attempts at suicide, all made since his marriage a week ago.

Three days after his wedding he cut his throat with a penknife. The next day he made a suicide attempt with his wife's hatpin, and Sunday night, in the presence of his bride, he slashed his throat with a razor.

He was rushed to a hospital, where the wound was sewed up. As he lay on the hospital cot last night, he was heard to mutter: "I will do it anyway." Thereupon he dug his fingers into the wound in his throat and tore it open, bleeding to death before it could be closed again.

What we htink of others often depends on what they think of us.

Perhaps Adam blamed it on his wife because he had no mother-in-law.

Many Wounded Being Brought in—Two Imperial Gunboats Crippled

(Intelligencer Special.)

HANKOW, China, Oct. 18.—The first real battle of the rebellion has been in progress just north of here since dawn and many wounded are being brought in. The rebels also shelled the Imperial fleet in the river and succeeded in crippling two gunboats. The revolutionists are vastly superior in numbers, and the Imperial troops are in danger of annihilation.

MOST BRUTAL MURDER

(Intelligencer Special.)

PARRY SOUND, Ont., Oct. 18.—The murder of an Italian on Friday night near Emsdale was a most brutal affair. The victim had cashed a money order in the presence of one of his countrymen. On the way home through the bush he was knocked down, his head almost severed from the body, and the face terribly slashed. The murderer is under arrest.

LUNATIC ON A ROOF HOLDS NEW YORK POLICE AT BAY

Throws Off the First Man Up, Breaking His Arm and Leaving Him Senseless—Reserves to Subdue Him—Remarkable Battle in Fort Greene Park with a Powerful Maniac Armed With Stones

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Fort Greene Park, in Brooklyn, filled rapidly with folk of the neighborhood when the weather began to clear at 5.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The benches were too wet to sit upon, but men, women and children promenaded in the walks until their attention was attracted by a heavily built man, who collected an armful of stones from the paths and then climed to the roof of the shelter house, a single-story structure, about fifteen feet high, by a ladder which laborers had left resting against it.

The crowd gathered about the shelter house as the man began to make a speech. Nobody understood his harangue, and presently the crowd began to hoot him. For answer the speechmaker hurled a few handufls of gravel at them, and then a few stones. The crowd ducked and ran to a safe distance. The man on the roof continued his speech, stopping now and then to emphasize his remarks by hurling a few stones at his audience.

Presently Policeman Riedel of the Classon Avenue station came along, sighted the man and drew close to hear what he was saying. Satisfied after a moment that the man was out of his mind, Riedel invited him to come down and talk it over. Laughing his scorn at this proposal, the man on the roof threw a few stones at Riedel. The policeman dodged and again tried to persuade the man to come down. More stones followed this so, while the crowd cheered, Riedel prepared to climb the ladder.

On the roof the man waited patiently for the policeman. When Riedel's head was on a level with the roof, however, the man tipped the ladder over, depositing Riedel on the ground. The crowd redoubled its cheering, and Riedel, thoroughly [illegible], and shouting what he would [illegible] he caught the man, raised the [illegible] again and commenced the ascent.

This time the man let Riedel get on the roof and then grappled with him. The policeman is a big man, but his opponent was too strong for him. The couple wrestled over the roof while the crowd watched breathlessly. At last the man drew a length of lead pipe from his pocket and struck the policeman over the head with it. The blow knocked the policeman flat on the roof, but failed to stun him, but before he could rise, the lunatic kicked him off the roof.

Riedel fell on his head and shoulders, and lay unconscious where he had fallen. Several men in the crowd ventured near enough to pick him up, while the man on the roof pelted them with stones. Dr. Broadhurst came from the Cumberland street hospital and said that Riedel's right arm was broken, his back wrenched and his head badly cut.

Meantime somebody had telephoned for the reserves, and presently a dozen policemen arrived at the park. The crowd explained the situtation, and, after glancing at the man's stronghold on the roof, decided not to risk a single assault, but to get several ladders and storm the position from several sides.

The ladders were brought from a storehouse in the park nearby, and with several policemen to each ladder they were rushed into position against the four sides of the building. The man on the roof watched these preparations unmoved, but as soon as the first policeman put a foot on the ladder he seemed imbued with redoubled vigor. He danced rapidly from side to side of the roof, kicking over the ladders as fast as the policemen could raise them, while he kept up a perfect fusilade with stones, of which he had still a large supply left.

Policeman after policeman was sent spinning from the top of the ladders as the man on the roof tossed their ends again and again from their position. Rapidly as he moved, however, the policemen, because of their numbers, were able to move faster. At last they got a ladder into place and held it there while others of their number made a sortie on one side, until half a dozen gained the roof.

Even then the man fought desperately. He grappled with the policemen, managed to upset one man and kick him off the roof, and kicked and bit every man who tried to grab him. At last he sank to superior numbers, however, and the weary reserves sat on him until someone brought a rope. They tied his hands and feet and lowered him to the ground like a bag of meal.

The man had been pretty well used up by his fight, and Dr. Broadhurst was called back to attend him. He took him to the hospital, saying that he might have a fractured skull.

In the hospital the man said he was Oscar Fischman of 95 Leonard Street, Williamsburg. He either could not or would not say anything else about himself. Dr. Broadhurst said there was no doubt that the man was insane.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

SEASON FOR SQUIRRELS.

The open season for black and grey squirrels is from Nov. 15th to December 1st, not December 1st to December 15th, as published yesterday.

WATER VERY LOW.

The St. Lawrence is now the lowest it has been in many years. Friday the record showed the water some five and one-half feet below the mark of three years ago at this date.

LARGE FRUIT SHIPMENTS.

Shipments of apples and other freight have been unusually large this fall, so much so that the steamer Geronia, of the Ontario & Quebec Navigation Co., was forced into commission. She left Picton on a special trip to Montreal Saturday with 12,000 cases of canned goods.

COOK BADLY BURNED.

Hurrying a fire for the crew's breakfast by putting a lump of grease in the stove, David Urquhart, of Deseronto, cook on the freight steamer John Rolph (formerly the Resolute), was badly burned about the face and head, and went to St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto, for treatment. The John Rolph plies between Deseronto and Toronto, carrying coal.

DEAD TREES A MENACE.

Yesterday's breeze was certainly breezy; it caught the dead limbs of trees to a certainty, and in one instance it caught the whole top of a dead tree on the corner of Bridge and Church Streets and nearly caught in its descent Mr. Job Davis, who at the moment was passing. Hearing a crash he stopped to look round, and the whole tree top was swooping down. He made a stampede, which most surely saved a terrible accident or perhaps his life. There are other dead trees that ought to be felled before probable accidents may occur.

TWO FUNERALS TO-DAY.

Many relatives and friends were this morning in attendance at the obsequies of the late Mr. James Gay, of Sidney. Services at the house were conducted by the Rev. A. S. Kerr, pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church in this city. Interment took place at Foxboro cemetery. The bearers were Messrs. VanAllen, Reynolds, Denyes, Wickett, Coulson and Watt.

The remains of the late Mr. John Jenkins, who died at Milford, were this afternoon brought to the city and interred in the Belleville cemetery. Services at the grave were conducted by the Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, Rector of St. Thomas' Church.

WEDDING AT QUEBEC.

At Quebec City, on Friday, the 6th inst., a wedding took place, one of the participants being well known in this city. It took place in the Anglican Cathedral, and the ceremony was performed by the Very Rev. Dean of Quebec, assisted by the Rev. A. E. Burgett. The groom was Mr. George Filliter, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Henry Filliter, of this city, and the bride was Miss J. Blanche Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. C Hall, of Quebec City. Miss Webb was maid of honor and the bridesmaids were Misses Katie Christie, of Ottawa, Helen Warburton, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., and Corinne Jones, of Quebec. Mr. F. M. Stanton was best man. A reception was held after the ceremony at the residence of the bride's parents. In the evening Mr. and Mrs. Filliter left on a wedding trip.

FARMERS' BANK DEPOSITORS.

Depositors in the defunct Farmers' Bank will meet here October 24th. An effort is being made to have the Federal Government protect the depositors.

FALL DUCKS ARE LATE.

The fall ducks are very late in arriving this season, which indicates that comparatively fine weather has prevailed in the north. A few flocks of broad bill have been seen on the bay of late.

PRIESTS HELD MEETING.

The priests of the Diocese of Kingston had a meeting last week in St Mary's Cathedral, Kingston, to make arrangements for the reception and consecration of the new Archbishop on November 30th.

ASSAULT IS CHARGED.

A man reported to the police last evening that he had been assaulted while in a business place in the city. The party complaining was advised to lay an information against the alleged assailant and thus have the matter settled.

THE "MOVE-ON" POLICY.

Kingston is not so slow but what her police magistrate proposes to severely fine every street corner loafer brought before him. This is a reform that might well be strictly prosecuted in Belleville, where these pests are a nightly nuisance to young women passing along the streets in an endeavor to force their unwelcome attentions on them.

BELLEVILLE'S POPULATION.

The official report of the census gives the population of Belleville as 9,850, an increase of 733 during the decade. Were the population of the city taken by the de facto system, as is done in England, the population would foot up to at least 11,000, as all the students of our educational institutions, domestic servants and transients would be counted. The assessor's enumeration footed up to 10,377.

JUDGE WAS ENTERTAINED.

The bar dinner which is given at the sittings of the High Court when in session here, took place last evening at Hotel Quinte and as usual, proved to be a most enjoyable affair. A tempting repast was provided by mine honst J. V. Jenkins and was well served. Mr. F. E. O'Flynn occupied the chair. At his right sat Hon. Justice Middleton, Mr. T. C. Robinette, K. C., of Toronto, and Mrs. S. J. Young, of Trenton. The local bar was well represented. After supper a number of toasts were proposed and admirably responded to. All present took part in the function.

TEACHERS' CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the teachers of South Hastings, Belleville and Trenton will be held in the school room of the Tabernacle Church, which has been very kindly placed at their disposal, on Thursday and Friday of this week. Miss McRae, of Peterboro' Normal School, formerly on the local High School staff, will be present and deliver three addresses during the day sessions, and on Thursday evening will deliver a lecture, accompanied by illustrations, on "Some Pictures That Have Lived." The public will be made welcome at any and all of the sessions, and are particularly invited to the evening session, which, of course, is free.

INSANE PHYSICIAN ATTACKS HIS WIFE

PATCHOGUE, L. I., Oct. 17.—Dr. William Charles Wills, a practising physician here, was committed to-day to the State Hospital for the Insane at Central Islip. Dr. Wills figured in an abduction case a year ago last June, when he ran away with Jennie Dayton a fifteen-year-old girl of this place. Wills was indicted, but when his case was called in court he and the girl appeared with a marriage certificate and the charge against him was dropped. He and his wife have since been living here.

Early this morning residents of Bayport were aroused by a woman's screams, and the first arrivals at the spot from which the cries came, found a man tying a womn to a telephone pole. The couple proved to be Dr. Wills and his wife. They had driven to Bayport in an auto, and the physician had dragged his wife from the car out in the road.

Dr. Wills was arrested, and his wife, who was hysterical, was taken to a nearby hotel. Dr. Ross of Sayville, was called to treat Mrs. Wills, and after an examination said she appeared to be suffering from drugs. A vial of morphine was found in her possession.

Dr. Wills was brought here and was examined by Drs. Overton and Terry, who advised that he be sent to an asylum. Mrs. Wills was later taken to her parents' home. Her condition is said to be serious. In Dr. Wills' home was found the following note:

"Doctor Wills and wife, having both been ill in bed for several days, have gone to Lake George for a few days' rest. Address General Delivery, Caldwell."

Blessings often come disguised, but the wolf that comes to your door never wears sheep's clothing.

BAPTISTS CELEBRATE CHURCH ANNIVERSARY

Last evening the Baptists of the city held their anniversary tea and concert, despite the unusually inclement weather, the auditorium of Victoria Avenue Church was filled. The supper, which preceded the concert, was, as usual in the case of suppers prepared by the ladies of this church, all that could be desired.

After the supper a programme was given, which included two addresses—one by the Rev. Robert Wallace, of "Marcmont Home," this city, which was, indeed a very able discourse. The other address was by the popular pastor, Rev. C. G. Smith. In the course of his remarks he thanked the assisting artists who took part in the programme, the ladies who prepared the supper, the Symphony orchestra, and the audience in general for turning out on such a disagreeable night. A feature of the programme was a violin solo by Mr. Dingman, of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Dingman, who is a new arrival in the city, is a musician of marked ability, and will be a decided acquistion to Belleville's musical fraternity.

The following is the programme, each number of which was presented in an able manner:—

Selection—Orchestra.
Duet—Mrs. P. C. McLaurin and Miss Wanda Riggs.
Piano duet—The Misses Riggs.
Chairman's Address—Rev. Robert Wallace.
Selection—Orchestra.
Solo—Mr. H. Wrightmyer.

CURRENT COMMENT

Fifty dollars for calling a man 'pig face,' and other tender names, is the amount Mr. T. Girard will have to pay. Action was entered for $200 but the court allowed only exemplary damages, the plaintiff in the case, Mr. G. J. Browning being a citizen of good standing and having only suffered moral damages. There are scores of men who will suffer being called 'pig face' at $50 for every call, if they keep at it the whole year.

Grit journals are in a fault finding mood just now. They consider a dissolution of the Ontario House of Assembly by Sir James Whitney as an outrage, for the reason that that party just now is not ready for a fight. It's cruel of you, Sir James, not to have consulted those gentlemen before taking such a step. We would suggest to our Grit friends to treat such conduct on the part of the Ontario Premier with contempt by refusing to place any candidates in the field. That would be a revenge not to be misunderstood.

Some of our contemporaries are calling attention to the imposition of a fine of $1,000, or in default of payment, six months in jail for reckless motor driving, as unfair to the poor man who commits the offence, being unable to pay he must go to prison, while the rich man who can pay gets scot free of imprisonment. The payment of a fine is of little consequence to the rich, while the six months imprisonment to the poor might result in great hardship to the latter's family. There is much force in this view of the case. Send all such offenders to jail and the evil will soon cease, except by motorists who have diluted their water with too much whiskey—they deserve double punishment.

Whether intended or not, the defeated Liberal Government received from Earl Grey at the Canadian Club banquet in Quebec, on the eve of his leaving for England, a courteous, diplomatic, but heavy rebuke. It was an ingeniously conceived and sugar-coated utterance. It took the form of a prediction. He held up to Sir Wilfrid and other Liberals present the future of Canada—then his vision—and by inference said to the fallen Ministry: "This is the Canada you attempted to mislead and destroy."

The Duke of Connaught has, at the beginning of his career in Canada, shown himself to be a master in diplomacy. His reply to the addresses presented in Quebec proves that he possesses the tact and statesmanship of his late brother, King Edward VII. His remarks were, in reference to the two races that govern Canada, that "from the Saxon and Norman stock England drew the qualities of courage, perseverence and strength which raised her to her proud position among the nations. Here, under the wise rule of statesmen, sometimes of British and sometimes of French descent, Canada has achieved an era of development which is the envy of the world." Could the case be more happily put?

Satisfactory results are already flowing from the rejection of the reciprocity compact. Mr. S. A. Glines, of Winnipeg, who was in Toronto the other day, stated "that a remarkable proof of the prediction that foreign capital would pour into this country if reciprocity were defeated, is furnished by the Commissioner of the Winnipeg Development and Industrial Bureau. In a conversation he had with the latter he was told that from Sept. 22 to Oct. 7, practically two weeks, no less than 1,038 letters of enquiry had been received from United States manufacturers and investors who were desirous of obtaining particulars in regard to the city." None of which, it is safe to say, would have been written, had Canada ratified the treaty.

The suggestion thrown out by The Intelligencer when it was announced that Pugsley had ratified some 30 or 40 contracts for public works involving some seven or eight millions of dollars, should be cancelled until fully examined, has been acted upon by the new Minister of Public Works, who gave orders before leaving to look after his election, that all the contracts let in the dying hours of the late government be held up and submitted to a close scrutiny. These contracts, 30 in number, total up in the millions and will include the Courtney Bay improvements, I. C. R. extensions, etc. They were put through but not finally awarded, owing, it is said, to Earl Grey's disapproval of the course.

Canal traffic in Canada shows a material decrease during the past season, but the falling off is almost wholly at the Soo Canal was 5,188,044 tons, show a total, all canals included, of 22,936,881 tons, as against 27,896,682 in the same period last year, a decrease of 4,959,801. The decrease at the Soo Canals was 5,188,044 tons, and there were also shortages on the Chambly and Ottawa Canals, while the Welland and St. Lawrence increased, the former by 136,000 and the latter by 189,900 tons. This falling off of canal traffic at the Soo, is no doubt the result of the depression in trade in the United States. A great deal of the traffic through the Soo is in ores from the south shore of Lake Superior, and just in proportion to the reduction in the manufacture of steel and iron does the traffic in ore fall off.

SERVIA IS MOBILIZING

BELGRADE, Oct. 17.—The Drina division of the Servian army on the Bosnian frontier was mobilized yesterday. The Minister of War says, however, that this action has no porticular meaning; that it is merely a trial mobilization and that other divisions will also be brought together in a similar manner. All the officers of the reserve, even those residing abroad, have been called to the colors for the manoeuvres.

REBELLION IN COREA

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 17.—News received here from Mukden, Manchuria, state that a rebellion has broken out in Corea. Several thousand natives have arisen and declared war on the Japanese.

Japan annexed Corea about a year ago and renamed it Choo Sen, "the land of the morning calm." Lieut. General Count Terauchi was appointed Japanese resident-general. The Emperor became a prince, and now ranks after the Japanese Crown Prince. The administration of Corea was transferred to the Japanese Home Department. The Japanese had been intriguing to secure Corea for some 400 years.

CENSUS RETURNS OUT

Enumeration Gives Canada a Population of 7,081,869.

The Greatest Gain is in the Western Provinces, But the Net Result is a Sore Disappointment — Neglect of Liberal Appointees Responsible in Considerable Measure—Quebec is Growing Faster Than Ontario.

Ottawa, Oct. 18.—The decennial census taken in June last under the direction of Hon. Sydney Fisher is sorely disappointing. The census of 1901 showed a total population of 5,371,315. The late Government promised that the count in June would give a total of eight millions. The total, with only four electoral districts to hear from is officially given by Hon. Martin Burrell last night as 7,081,869. The probable addition to this is only about 70,000.

In view of the revelations of wholesale negligence by census enumerators, as made prior to the dissolution of Parliament, the small total announced yesterday is significant.

Ontario is credited with an increase of 336,955. Quebec has an increase of 351,799. An enormous increase is credited to Saskatchewan, the 1901 total being 91,279 and the 1911 total 453,508.

The result on the Parliamentary representation appears to be that Prince Edward Island loses one member, Nova Scotia two, New Brunswick two, and Ontario four, while the western provinces gain five members each, making a House of 232 members.

Four electoral districts have not yet made complete returns, viz., Cumberland in Nova Scotia, Regina and Battleford in Saskatoon, and Yale-Cariboo in British Columbia which are estimated to give a population of 70,000.

The population of the cities and towns reported may be changed slightly on revision, but it is thought it may be accepted as correct.

Population of Canada by census of 1911, less districts not reported, as compared with 1901:

WHAT better criterion is there to judge the people by than the jewelry they wear?

It's just as true to-day as in the days of early Egyptian, Roman and Athenian life, that the rank, taste and means are manifested by the jewelry possessed

Our people have been gradually educated to a better standard of jewelry quality; and we strive always to keep stock that conforms to the demands of the present.

The Haunted Chamber

"This is the tower," explains Sir Adrian, still acting as cicerone to the small party, who look with interest around them. Mrs. Talbot, affecting nervousness, clings closely to Sir Adrian's arm. In deed she is debating in her own mind whether it would be effective or otherwise, to subside into a graceful swoon within his arms. "Yonder is the door to the chamber," continues Sir Adrian. "Come, let us go up to it."

They all ascend the last flight of stone steps; and presently their host opens the door, and reveals to them whatever mysteries may lie beyond. He enters first, and they all follow him, but, as if suddenly recollecting some important point, he turns, and calls loudly to Captain Ringwood not to let the door shut behind him.

"Their is a peculiar spring in the lock," he explains a moment later; "and if the door slammed to, we might remain here prisoners forever unless the household came to the rescue."

"Oh, Captain Ringwood, pray be careful?" cries Dora, falteringly. "Our very lives depend upon your attention!"

"Miss Villiers, do come here and hlep me to remember my duty," says Captain Ringwood, planting his back against the door lest by any means it should shut.

The chamber is round and has instead of windows, three narrow apertures in the walls, through which can be obtained a glimpse of the sky, but of nothing else. These apertures are just large enough to admit a man's hand. The room is without furniture of any description, and on the boards the dark stains of blood are distinctly visible.

"Dynecourt, tell them a story or two," calls out Ringwood to Sir Adrian. They won't believe it is veritably haunted unless you call up a ghost to frighten them."

But they all protest in a body that they do not want to hear any ghost stories, so Sir Adrian laughingly refuses to comply wtih Ringwood's request.

"Are we far from the other parts of the house?" asks Florence at length, who had been examining some writing on the walls.

"So far that, if you were immured here, no cry, however loud, could penetrate the distance," replies Sir Adrian. "You are as thoroughly removed from the inhabitable parts of the castle as if you were in the next county."

"The servants are so afraid of this room that they would not venture here even by daylight," Sir Adrian goes on, "You can see how the dust of years is on it. One might be clowly starved to death here without one's friends being a bit the wiser."

He laughs as he says this, but long afterward, his words come back to his listeners' memories filling their breasts with terror and despair.

"I wonder you don't have this dangerous lock removed," says Captain Ringwood. "It's a regular trap. Some day you'll be sorry for it."

Prophetic words!

"Yes, I wish it were removed," responds Florence, with a strange, quick shiver.

Sir Adrian laughs.

At this moment Dora's eyes turn slowly towards Arthur Dynecourt. She, herself, hardly knows why she should look at him at this particular time, yet she feels that some unaccountable fascination is compelling her gaze to encounter his. Their eyes meet. As they do so, Dora shudders and turns deadly pale. There is that in Arthur Dynecourt's dark and sullen eyes that strikes her cold with terror and vague forebodings of evil. It is a wicked look that spreads over the man's face—a cruel, implacable look that seems to freeze her as she gazes at him spellbound. Slowly, even while she watches him she sees him turn his glance from her to Sir Adrian in a meaning manner, as though to let her know that the vile thought that is working in his brain and is betraying itself on his face, is intended for him, not her. And yet, with this too, he gives her silently to understand, that if she shows any treachery toward him, he will not leave it unrewarded.

Cowed, frightened, trembling at what she knows not, Dora staggers backward, and, laying a hand upon the wall beside her, tries to regain her self-possession. The others are all talking together, she is therefore unobserved. She stands, still panting and pallid, trying to collect her thoughts.

Only one thing comes clearly to her, filling her with loathing of herself and an unnamed dread—it is that, by her own double-dealing and falseness toward Florence, she has seemed to enter into a compact with this man to be a companion in whatever crime he may decide upon. His very look seems to implicate her, to drag her down with him to his level. She feels herself chained to him—his partner in a vile conspiracy. And what further adds to the horror of the situation is that she knows herself to be blindly ignorant of whatever plans he may be forming.

After a few seconds she rouses herself, and wins back some degree of composure. It is of course a mere weakness to believe herself in the power of Arthur Dynecourt, she tries to convince herself. He is no more than any other ordinary acquaintance. If indeed she has helped him a little in his efforts to secure the love of Florence, there was no great harm in that, though of course it served her own purpose also.

"How pale you are, Mrs. Talbot?" remarks Sir Adrian, suddenly, wheeling arund to look at him more closely. "Has this damp, old place really affected your nerves? Come, let us go down again, and forget in the sunshine that bloody deeds were ever committed here or elsewhere."

"I am nervous, I confess," responds Dora, in a low tone. "Yes—yes—let us leave this terrible room forever."

"So be it," says Sir Adrian, gayly. "For my part I feel no desire to ever re-enter it."

"It is very high art, I suppose," observes Ethel Villiers, glancing round the walls. "Uncomfortable places always are. It would be a treasure to Lady Betty Trefeld, who raves over the early Britons. It seems rather thrown away upon us. Captain Ringwood, you look as if you had been suddenly turned to stone. Let me pass, please."

"It was uncommonly friendly of Ringwood not to have let the door slam, and so imprisoned us for life," says Sir Adrian, with a laugh. "I am sure we owe him a debt of gratitude."

"I hope you'll all pay it," laughs Ringwood. "It will be a nice new experience for you to give a creditor something for once. I never pay my own debts, but that doesn't count. I feel sure you are all going to give me something for my services as doorkeeper."

"What shall I give you?" asks Ethel coquettishly.

"I'll tell you by and by," he replies with such an expressive look, that for once the saucy girl has no answer ready, but blushing crimson, she hurries past him down the stone steps, where she waits at the bottom for the others.

As Florence reaches the door she pauses and stoops to examine the lock.

"I wish," she says to Sir Adrian, in a strange, subdued tone, "you would remove this lock. Do."

"But why?" he asks, impressed in spite of himself, by her manner.

"I hardly know myself; it is a fancy—an unaccountable one, perhaps—but still a powerful one. Do be guided by me, and have it removed."

"What—the fancy?" he asks, laughing.

"No—the lock. Humor me in this," she pleads earnestly, far more earnestly than the occasion seems to warrant. "Call it a silly presentiment if you like, but I honestly think that lock will work you evil some day. Therefore it is that I ask you to do away with it."

The Rev. Dr. MacDonald

This gentleman, editor in chief of the Toronto Globe, has been in St. Paul, Minn., and, as is his wont, through newspaper reporters, airing his views and opinions upon the reasons for the defeat of the reciprocity pact in Canada, the initiation of which, it is not too much to say, he was the father of, having laid the foundation stone when in Washington and other places interviewing President Taft and members of his Cabinet.

Among other things, the St. Paul Pioneer Free Press reports him to have said is "that he believed that $1,500,000 was spent in Canada in defeating the reciprocity treaty. Of this sum the lumbermen contributed $500,000, he says; the paper men, $500,000, while the remaining $500,000 was obtained from varied interests. He told of stories printed in newspapers in small country towns of the United States declaring that this country proposed annexing Canada, and of how Canadian newspapers opposed to the treaty would copy the stories, placing big black "scare heads" above them. Dr. Macdonald believes that enemies of the treaty in Canada caused the stories to be printed in the States. They served to promote the annexation "bugaboo" which was such a strong factor in bringing about the defeat of the agreement."

It is much to be regretted that the Doctor should be so reckless of his reputation as to spin such yarns. It was bad enough to do when in The Globe's editorial chair, but to utter such foundationless yarns when in a foreign land is lamentable. We venture the statement that the gentleman has not the least foundation for saying that "$1,500,000" was subscribed by lumbermen, newspaper men and others, to defeat the pact. It is a common slander upon the people of Canada. It is a bold statement that the vast majority of the voters of Canada are a purchasable commodity, having no opinions other than money. They resented such attacks and such statements on the 21st of September, and will repeat it when the opportunity offers again in December next.

The other utterance of his about the "enemies of the treaty" printing and circulating annexation stories in the States is as unfounded and untrue as his utterances about the $1,500,000 contribution.

Doctor, take your defeat gracefully, and don't draw upon your imagination, which is very vivid, for your facts.

A Clean Slate

Under the above heading there appeared in the editorial columns of the Toronto News of the 14th inst. the following article with which we are in full accord, hence we commend it to our numerous readers for a careful and thoughtful reading. It is to the point and truthful to the letter. A remark, it is said, once made by Sir John Macdonald to a colleague was to "beware of the demands made by friends, which were too often of a character that should not be granted," may well be considered in connection with the advice given in the following article:

> "Looseness of any kind in Federal administration is inexcusable. Surely the time has come for us to make an end of it. The new Ministers are sworn to give true allegiance to the King. They will stultify themselves and make their word of none effect if they conduct the King's business loosely or inefficiently. They should understand at the beginning that the country owes nothing to any individual or clique of individuals. When a Minister of the Crown begins to use public favors or public moneys for the payment of political debts, he fails utterly to appreciate the rudimentary principles of public morals. The Borden Ministry was formed to govern Canada, not to coddle any party.
>
> "The whole system of patronage giving is a Babel of rottenness. Once a Cabinet Minister permits his course to be dictated or even affected by patronage considerations he has opened the door to a host of evils. Every administrative scandal can be traced back to the activity of patronage-seekers, to the ardor of political heelers who demand and receive special treatment at the expense of the Treasury.
>
> "Fifteen years ago the Laurier Administration came to power. It was a Government of great promise. Yet that Government became the most corrupt since Confederation. Its slightest act was dictated by considerations of patronage. Contractors of all kinds, middlemen and heelers fattened at the Treasury. Millions of dollars were wasted every year. Not only were the camp followers fed fat, but the Government used the whole public departments as engines of bribery. Several Cabinet Ministers were under suspicion. The electors have spoken. The Liberal party to-day is a pile of wreckage—not overly clean. Patronage or party jobbery was the cause of the debacle.
> "The new Ministers should clearly understand that they are not at Ottawa to play the political game, no matter how fascinating that gentle pastime may appear. They are there to govern the country as true liegemen of the Crown. It is not of national importance that John Smith should get a contract for dredging because he assisted in the Honorable A. B.'s organization. The question for the country is: Will John Smith do the work better than any one else and at a fair and reasonable price? If a Cabinet Minister dabbles with patronage at all he will be so busy with it that he will have no time left to do the business for which the country pays him—and which, incidentally, he is sworn to do.
>
> "But the long-eared may say that honest government is a Utopian ideal, that we cannot expect an Administration free from the influence of patronage-hunters and patronage-mongers. Why not? A Cabinet Minister can be honest in his own business. He would resent any imputation of crooked dealing in his personal affairs. He must have some strength of character to command preferment to office. Let him use it to resist the politicians for revenue only. He will not lose influence. Indeed he will be enormously strengthened. The hangers-on are noisy but their influence does not count in the country. If a general has an important battle to fight he will not seek the advice of the sutlers and camp-followers, who, perhaps, are his most vocal critics. He will do the job himself.
>
> "We have a new Cabinet. The slate is clean. The Ministers are men of force and distinction. The country is anxious for an improvement in administration. The best way to strengthen the Conservative pa[illegible] and to maintain the Government in power is to kick patro[illegible] out of doors and let the heelers howl. Governing Canada is a man's job. Nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of its efficient accomplishment."

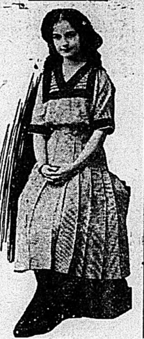
CONGENIAL WORK

Mothers Should Carefully Note Tendencies of Children So They May Be Put to Congenial Work.

Observant parents can usually trace a distinct inclination on the part of their children to take special interest in either one or the other — either head-work or hand-work. One child is never so happy as when given a book which keeps his brain busy; another finds chief satisfatcion in making something with the hands — a wooden boat, a doll's frock, a paper kite, etc., etc.

These marked preferences can be a great help to parents when deciding upon the kind of work likely, later, to prove congenial to a girl or boy. But it is a mistake to allow a child, during school years, to follow only that line which most appeals to him. "Oh, Jimmy isn't cut out for book-learning." or "Janie's fingers are all thumbs, so I let her read," are examples of the kind of remark which should never be made in children's hearing. Instead, it should be taken for granted in their presence that Jimmy can become a good scholar if he but takes the trouble, and that Janie's fingers are as teachable as any girl's fingers. This would help largely to prevent that self-satisfied one-sidedness which so many people exhibit, and which leaves them so terribly at a loss when anything happens to hinder their doing the only work of which they believe themselves capable. Children's head-work and hand-work should go together and balance one another, so that no latent capacity be left undeveloped and unused.



USEFUL SCHOOL FROCK

The Romance of Irish Point Lace

Youghal point lace, of which a complete dress has been made for Queen Mary, is the most beautiful and costly of Irish lace, and originated indirectly from the failure of the potato crop in 1846, though the inspiration was furnished by a piece of point de Milan which fell into the hands of the abbess of a convent at Youghal, County Cork. Hitting upon the idea of setting up a lucrative industry for the half-starved children attending the convent school, she studied this stray bit of lace, unravelled the threads one by one, and finally mastered the complicated details. She then selected the children cleverest at needlework, and taught them separately what she herself had learned. From Youghal the point lace industry has spread to other parts of Ireland, notably to some districts in the neighbourhood of Kenmare, County Kerry. The chief characteristic of Youghal point lace is that it is worked entirely with the needle.

To Walk Well

An artist has lately been complaining that his chief objection to fashionable dress is that it reveals so completely the inability of the average woman to walk well. He says that most of us either slouch or strut, and he gives the following instructions on "how to walk":—

"The head should not be held erect as if by effort — a woman should not look like a soldier on parade. The steps should not be jerky — however quick, they should be 'smooth.' The movement should be from the hips, and the knees bent as little as possible. A slight — a very slight — bend forward is graceful, if the walker be tall and slim. The arms should not swing noticeably, but should hang freely — elbows should be unobservable. The feet should turn out slightly, and walking should appear to be done chiefly on the toes — the heel down first style is unpardonable. But the chief features and charms of a good carriage are its seeming leisureliness, the absence of 'strut' and 'slouch,' and a certain air of unconscious grace."

The same critic recommends daily practice in front of a full-length mirror — exercises to be taken preferably in cycling knickers, as the movement of the limbs can then be better studied.

A woman has always been the bearer of burdens, and if she complains she is treated worse than ever.

It is easy for any woman to be an optimist if her hat matches her gown and her gown matches her complexion.

If all women were alike no man would ever be a bigamist.

Discontent Among the [illegible] Population of South [illegible]

The rapid growth of foreign colonies in South Wales is causing discontent among the native population. The latest protest is from Newport, where many of the residents of the Pigwenlly district, a working-class area, have sent a petition to the Watch Committee, directing attention to the large and rapidly growing settlement of Chinese and other foreigners in their midst, and suggesting that the committee should take measures to check this growth. One of the means proposed is that property owners should be advised not to let premises to foreigners.

In 1889 he was appointed to the egislative Council. Later he was an nsuccessful candidate for the House f Commons in the country of Cape treton. Political success came to im in 1891 when he was appointed lember of the Fielding Administraon, without portfolio. In 1895 he as created Q. C. When Hon. William . HON. G. H. MURRAY
Premier of Nova Scotia.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are just the right medicine for the children. When they are constipated --when their kidneys are out of order —when over-indulgence in some favorite food gives them indigestion —Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills will quickly and surely put them right. Purely vegetable, they neither sicken, weaken or gripe, like harsh purgatives. Guard your children's health by always keeping a box of Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills in the house. They

Keep the Children Wel.

Hon. George H. Murray has retained his seat in the local House with practically no opposition, being either re-elected by acclamation or by a large majority.

HON. A. K. McLEAN

A prominent young member of the Nova Scotia Government, Hon. A. K. McLean is surely destined for yet higher honors in the land of his nativity. During the present parliament Mr. McLean has filled the responsible position of Attorney General, and it may perhaps not be too much to recognise his selection as Acting Premier during severe i. ..ess last winter of Premier Murray as a finger-post that points the way to more than a temporary honor whenever the opportunity should arise.

HON. A. K. McLEAN
Attorney General for Nova Scotia

KINGSTON WEDDING OF LOCAL INTEREST

The Kingston Standard of the 16th inst. has the following account of a wedding of local interest which occurred in the Limestone City yesterday—

This morning at eleven o'clock, a very quiet wedding was solemnized at the residence of the bride's parents when Miss Adelaide Belle, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Toye, Gore Street, was united in marriage to Mr. John Arthur Clyde Lingham, of Montreal, only son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Lingham, of Belleville. The Rev. Dr. Ryckman officated. Only immediate relatives of the bride and groom were present. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore an exquisite bridal robe of ivory satin veiled in embroidered chiffon; the bodice was trimmed with rose pointe lace and a fischu effect of the embroidered chiffon was caught at the left side with a cluster of orange blossoms. The skirt had a wide panel of white satin, with large pearl ornament, and was made en train. She carried a handsome bouquet of white roses and lilies-of-the-valley and wore a Juliet cap of orange blossoms.

Mrs. Toye, mother of the bride, wore a costume of black satin foulard, trimmed with rose pointe lace and jet ornaments.

The drawing-room, where the ceremony was performed, was bright with quantities of golden and white chrysanthemums. After the wedding a buffet luncheon was served in the dining-room, which was prettily decorated with white roses and lilies-of-the-valley.

After receiving the congratulations of those present, Mr. and Mrs. Lingham left on the noon train for Montreal and Quebec. The bride travelled in a smart tailor-made suit of King's blue with blue marquisette blouse. Her hat was of Terry velvet faced with brown velvet and trimmed with French roses.

The only out-of-town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Lingham, and Mr. and Mrs. McKeown, of Belleville, and Hon. T. W. and Mrs. Crothers, of Ottawa, aunt and uncle of the bride.

WOMAN TO WED HER HUSBAND'S SLAYER

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y., Oct. 17.—It was announced at Wappingers Falls to-day that Mrs. Francis Turcho, whose husband, George Turcho, a prosperous Italian merchant, was killed several months ago by Thomas Marschagiano, a friend of the family, was to marry her husband's slayer this month.

Mr. and Mrs. Turcho kept a boarding house on the outskirts of the village. One of the boarders was Marschagiano. One night Turcho and his boarder quarreled over business matters in Turcho's store. It is alleged that on the way home from the store Marschagiano and Turcho renewed the quarrel, and Marschiagiano stabbed Turcho, who died a few days later.

Aids Nature

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not the profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

TORONTO CHINAMEN RAISED $17,000

thousand dollars was sent by Montreal Chinamen through the Bank of Commerce last night to the revolutionists in China. The order for payment is to be presented in Hong Kong.

The collection of the money is directly due to the call made by Dr. Sun Yet Sen, who is now in the United States. Mr. Charley Sing, of Montreal, presided over a meeting of Chinamen yesterday afternoon at which it was decided to raise all the money possible to bring about a new order of things in China.

A cartoon from an Amrican journal, showing the smashing of the old China by the revolutionists was shown by a Star reporter to-day to several leaders of the Chinese colony, and all without exception declared that they were with the revolutionists.

Charley Sing says that at the meeting yesterday it was reported that the Toronto Chinese have sent $8,000 to China, and that Vancouver and New Westminster will send much larger amounts.

COULDN'T GET STRONG

SEEMED TO HAVE LOST ALL AMBITION; WAS PALE AND ANAEMIC.

"I was never actually sick," writes Mrs. La Pierre, wife of a well-known resident of Labeniene, "yet I never could get strong like other women. I ate well enough, but somehow blood rich and red I could never make. When I married I took a great pride in my housekeeping, but it kept me tired all the time. Mrs. Lechance, my neighbor, looked well—she told me her health had been made by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I only thought of pills as a physic, but now I know that Dr. Hamilton's Pills are more, for they quickened my stomach, liver and bowels—made me stouter and stronger, gave me such color in my cheeks as I never had before. They do good to parts in ways I need not mention in this letter, but I sincerely believe that Dr. Hamilton's Pills shoud be used at regular intervals by every woman—that's why I write this letter."

No medicine invigorats a woman like Dr. Hamilton's Pills. 25c. per box, all dealers or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

DYSPEPSIA CLAIMS MANY LIVES.

Woodstock, N.B., Aug. 10, 1910.

"I had a very severe case of stomach trouble which caused me great pain, and a lot of distress. I tried several doctors, but could get no relief. I also tried about all the patent medicines that are recommended for stomach trouble, and still I was getting worse—in fact, I felt like dying, and had to stop work. My friends thought my days on earth were few, and I thought so myself. I had heard a great deal about the wonderful skill of Father Morriscy, and thought I would go and see him. He prescribed his No. 11 Dyspepsia Cure for me, and I took his medicine as he directed, and soon began to feel relieved, and today I am a very well man; have gained in flesh—have no pain in my stomach, and am feeling first-rate. There is no doubt but that he saved my life, and I only wish I could find words to express my gratitude. I hope all who suffer as I did will use his marvelous No. 11 Stomach Remedy."

John H. Mitchell.

The above prescription is not a "Cure-All" or so-called patent medicine. Dr. Morriscy prescribed it for 44 years, and it cured thousands after other doctors failed.

Report on Martin Wreck.

Ottawa, Oct. 18.—The Department of Marine and Fisheries has received the preliminary report of the inquiry into the loss of the Martin, the Georgian Bay tug which was lost with all hands.

According to Captain Dean, the master of the barge Albattross, who with his wife and one sailor, was examined by the investigating officer, Captain Coates, Captain Vert of the Martin, chartered the Albattross on August 20, and the two vessels left Midland in fine weather. Off Point au Baril a storm was encountered, and the vessels tied up at the wharf. Vert insised on going out again. The decision was against Dean's judgment. Some distance out the barge sprang a leak and Dean notified Vert, who took no action. Later the barge, being in distress, Dean sent up a flare signal without any response. He then decided to save those on the Albattross if possible, and they put away in the yawl. The Martin was then visible, but was thought to be still towing.

Miner was the leader of the gang which on February 18 last, held and robbed a Southern Railway train at Gainesville, Ga. He was sentenced to twenty years. He was wanted in Washington State and British Columbia for train hold-ups and escaped from the penitentiary at New Westminster, B.C., where he had been sentenced for robbing a C. P. R. train.

SIX JURORS SELECTED

McNamara Trial Is Progressing More Rapidly.

Counsel For Defence Darrow Passes Half of the Required Number of Talesmen and Another Fortnight May See the Argument Begun—Two Men Are Excused When Challenged and One Is Let Off.

Los Angeles, Oct. 18.—The defence in the McNamara murder trial has passed six talesmen; one had been excused by the court, and two excused because of challenge for cause, when court adjourned last night. This was the most rapid day's work so far.

Of the six talesmen passed at least one seemed virtually sure of rejection before the jury is completed to try James B. McNamara for the death of Charles J. Haggarty, who was killed in The Los Angeles Times' explosion and fire.

The line-up of the passed talesmen last night was as follows:

J. W. Roberts, real estate dealer.
Robert F. Bain, carpenter.
H. Y. Quackenbush, expressman.
A. R. McIntosh, baker.
T. W. Adams, grocer.
G. M. McKee, retired real estate dealer.

Yesterday's rejections were: Z. T. Hiatt, excused by the court because of scruples against capital punishment.

Samuel McCreary, challenged for bias after he had said he had a fixed opinion as to whether or not The Times' disaster was caused by a criminal act.

Edmund S. Johnson, challenged and excused. He said he was prejudiced against labor unions.

Talesman Quackenbush, it was thought last night, would not find himself on the final jury because he did not believe in capital punishment. Talesman Adams said he read as a rule The Los Angeles Times, The Social Democrat and The Appeal to Reason.

At this rate a jury may be obtained within two weeks.

The defence may offer an alibi for McNamara, or may rest solely upon the gas explosion theory, in support of which it has gone as far as Europe for expert evidence.

Ecumenical Conference Ends.

Toronto, Oct. 18.—The Ecumenical Conference of Methodism, which has been in daily session in Toronto since Oct. 4, dissolved yesterday at noon and many delegates prepared for an early departure to their homes in every civilized country from which they had come.

During the fourteen days in which the conference has been in session, 22 regular sessions have been held in addition to many special meetings and events.

At the morning session yesterday almost the entire time of the convention was taken up with the subject of church union, the discussion being closed by Dr. Carman.

Kennough Is Remanded.

Hamilton, Oct. 18.—George Kennough, whose name has been so closely connected with the $8,000 express robbery case, appeared before Judge Monck in the County Court yesterday morning, on the charge of stealing $15 from his former employers, the Canadian Express Co. His counsel, W. H. Wardrope, K.C., declined to elect, and the prisoner was remanded for an indefinite period. The date of his trial will be set probably by agreement between his counsel and the crown attorney.

It is said that Kennough's wife and child are in needy circumstances. They live in Dundas, Kennough's former home.

Boys Caused Wreck.

Toronto, Oct. 18.—An enquiry held by the C. N. O. into the recent mishap at Grafton has revealed the fact that the open switch which caused the trouble had been tampered with by small boys. It appears that the lads had opened the switch, and, being unable to close it again, went away, and left it as it was.

An investigation will be held concerning the matter at Cobourg to-day, when the four boys who are implicated will give their evidence before the crown attorney.

Will Not Annex Egypt.

London, Oct. 18.—In official circles denial is given to the report circulated on the Berlin Bourse that the annexation of Egypt by England was imminent. It is believed, that when the Franco-German agreement with regard to Morocco is concluded, Great Britain may request the consent of the Powers to the abolition of the capitulations of the mixed tribunals. It is thought that the Powers will raise no objections to such a measure, which is calculated to improve the judicial administration.

A Short-Lived Strike.

The matter was adjusted at a conference yesterday afternoon, the company guaranteeing extra pay.

S. Mailloux, 330 Summer avenue, Springfield, Mass., internally injured and may die.

GOVERNMENT HOPEFUL

Chinese Officials Look For Early Collapse of Rising.

Story that Gen. Li Yuan Hang Deserted From Rebel Ranks Is Reported to Be a Government Story to Hearten Troops — Situation at Wuchang Is Unchanged and Revolutionists Are Making No Headway

Pekin, Oct. 18.—The desertion of Gen. Li Yuan Hang from the rebel leaders, is reported to be a Government story designed to encourage the imperialist troops. The legations are strongly of the opinion that the Chinese army will not risk a battle when the investment of Hankow is complete, but will open negotiations with the object of inducing the rank and file to surrender their leaders, on the promise of pardon and a reward for the rebel troops.

The Japanese legation declares that there is no foundation in the report that the Japanese flag will be raised over the Hanyang iron works.

Despatches from Shanghai say that owing to the publication by the native press of statements that the Japanese newspapers are belittling the revolution, describing it as a mere riot, the revolutionaries are circulating pamphlets urging the boycott of Japanest goods.

The Government, which is constantly on the lookout for Japanese machinations directed against Manchuria, is of the opinion that the present Chinese crisis wil prove that Japan's action and policy are entirely correct.

The Chinese Foreign Board has issued an optimistic comminique, announcing the arrival of the troops at Hankow, and anticipating the speedy recapture of Wuchang and Hanyang. Nine troop trains left Paotingfu yesterday. Late advices from Hankow say that 3,000 Government troops are encamped outside of Hankow.

So far as can be learned the situation at Wuchang for the past six days has remained absolutely unchanged. There are no indications that the rebels possess any allies at points elsewhere, and, considering all the circumstances connected with the rising in the Provinces of Hupeh and Hunan, the revolutionists appear not to be making much headway. It is now said that the insurgents number at the most 6,000 drilled men, together with a few armed auxiliaries.

Several detachments of troops from Honan have united with the Government troops from the north, and a joint naval and military bombardment of the city will probably occur on Saturday. This will be followed by an assault. It is predicted here that the collapse of the revolution is only a matter of days. It will, however, have had the effect of intensifying the agitation for the immediate assembling of a National Parliament and of radical reforms in the Provincial Association system, which the throne will be obliged to accept

Admiral Sahchenping, according to official announcement, arrived at Hankow yesterday with eight warships, and there are not less than a dozen foreign warships lying in the harbor. The British vice-admiral, Sir Alfred L. Winsloe, commander of the British eastern fleet, arrived at noon yesterday on the British despatch boat Alacrity. As he is the ranking officer, he may assume command of the combined forces.

Announcement a Surprise.

London, Oct. 18.—The announcement from Berlin that Vice-Admiral Von Krosigk, commander of the German Asiatic squadron, was about to take command of the international forces at Hankow came as a surprise to the British officials. It was stated at the Foreign Office that there had been no arrangement made for the placing of these forces under the supreme command of any one. It also appears that Vice-Admiral Sir Alfred L. Winsloe, commander of the British Eastern fleet, who arrived at Hankow at noon yesterday, is considerably the senior of Vice-Admiral Von Krosigk.

South Essex Recount.

Windsor, Oct. 18.—After several days' work the recount of ballots for South Essex in the recent election was completed by Judge M. A. McHugh, here Monday. Only technical errors were discovered, and Mr. Clark's majority now stands at 201, instead of 212, as shown in the early figures. The general mistake noted throughout was the failure to detach the counterfoil from the ballot, but this Judge McHugh decided to be unintentional, and the ballots were allowed to stand.

Wife-Beater Sentenced.

Hamilton, Oct. 18.—Mike Seban, the foreigner charged last week with brutally beating his wife because she refused to provide him with money with which to leave Hamilton, was sentenced to two monhs in jail yeserday by Police Magistrate Jelfs. The cadi had evidently entertained the notion of having the lash applied to Seban, and told the foreigner if he was again brought up on such a charge he would not get off so easy.

English Students For McGill.

London, Oct. 18.—The Cheshire Education Committee is asking McGill University to accept students holding Cheshire county scholarships for the latter portion of their training, to be undertaken at Montreal. The chairman said this would provide a better outlet for their scientifically educated students than this country offered. The spirit of Imperialism was linking the colonies and they wanted to do the best for their students.

Actress Ends Her Life.

Washington, Oct. 18.—Minnie St. Clair, an actress who was playing at a local vaudeville theatre under the name of Sue Simpson, killed herself by drinking a poisonous disinfectant in her dressing room Monday night. She is said to have been the wife of a well-known song writer and her recent separation from him is given as the reason for her act.

Committed Brutal Assault.

New York, Oct. 18.—The police have arrested Frank Broch, 19 years of age as the man, according to the charge against him, who assaulted and brutally beat Miss Agnes Waugh last Wednesday night as she was returning to her home in Brooklyn. Miss Waugh the police say, identified Broch as her assailant.

Trolley Cars Collide.

A WISE MONKEY FLED FROM SCENCE

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—A intelligent monkey sat in his cage i one of the laboratories at Cornell Medical College yeterday afternoon watching doctor at work under te direction of Dr Arthur Throw. hey were preparing a saline solution ontaining sweepings rom a room thathad sheltered a cae of infantile palysis. It is possiblethat he suspectd their intention of injecting the fitered solution into is spine. At al events, he could be eard for a surprising distance as h voiced his feelings.

Finally the iltration was finished, and the attendnts opened the cage. The monke bounded out leaped to the window, ad vanished by way of the five-inch cping between the first and second stoey windows. Workmen passing b along Twenty-eighth St. were treatd to an unusual exhibition of simian antcs, continued by the truant, wh was deaf to the coaxings from the vndow.

Then tralling west on the coping he came t the space between the co'lege buding and the Manhattan Brass Wors. This space is used for coal, and iis closed by an iron fence The monk tried a flying leap and escaped th spikes, but he found the fence uncmfortable. For his next leap he tok the startled shoulders of one Mihael O'Brien, who was working in the inclosure. Then, before the ma's hands could close upon him, h jumped for the coal pile and disappared. At a late hour last evening th laboratory attendants had been unale to find him.

The Grad Trunk Pacific Railway have procred samples of apples grown in the Kisumkalum Valley, ninety miles east of Prince Rupert. These apples areof different varieties, beautiful in thir coloring, and their flavor is in eerp respect up to the perfect brand grown in Ontario, and entirely unlke the inferior flavored fruit grown under irrigation in the more southerly regions and in practically all of the Pacific Coast States.

The speimens came from the orchard of Mr. D. Stewart, who has about fifteen acrs under cultivation, and they reprecent the first grown on the operated lne of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

In the valleys of the Kitsumkalum, Lakelse and Copper Rivers, with other areas along the Skeena River there should be approximately 300,000 acres of ideal fruit lands placed under cultivation in comparatively few years, and much of this land can be secured by pre-emption in 160 acre lots, the only charge being $1.00 per acre, in addition to the residence requirements of the law. It is confidently predicted that this territory will become the centre of a new and greater fruit district in British Columbia.

At Prince Rupert this summer strawberries grown along the Skeena River and in the valleys of the Kitsumkalum, Lakelse and Copper Rivers came into market for the first time in considerable quantities, and the fruit is reported to be superior to anything grown on this continent, being extremely high colored, and as sweet and fine a flavor as wild strawberries; their size was remarkable, running as large as a good-sized crab-apple, or a small snow apple.

TURKISH FLEET TO FIGHT

VIENNA, Oct. 17.—A despatch from Constantinople says that the Turkish fleet has left the Bosphorous with orders to protect the harbors of Epirus and engage Italian warships should occasion arise. Italy's proceedings in the Aegean Sea are thought here to be intended to force Turkey to accept the loss of Tripoli and negotiate for peace.

FOURTEEN NEW LINES

WINNIPEG, Oct. 17.—At the next session of the Alberta Legislature, the Canadian Northern will seek the right to build and operate no less than fourteen new railway lines in that province. These lines will open large areas of country hitherto untouched by railroad development. One of the most important is a line to be built from Athabaska Landing to Peace River Crossing.

TURKS INCITING ARABS

ROME, via frontier, Oct. 17.—The reports received by the Government from Gen. Caneva, commander of the Italian expedition in Tripoli, show that his attention has been directed chiefly toward making the city of Tripoli an impregnable base from which will be provided the reinforcements and supplies necessady for the campaign in the interior.

News from the interior reaching the Italian commander through friendly natives, describes the Turks as making an active campaign among the Arabs to incite them against the Italians.

SEAT FOR MR. WHITE IN SOUTH LANARK

Though no official declaration has come from Premier Borden, it is now understood in local circles that Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, will be accommodated with a seat in the riding of South Lanark, where Hon. John Haggart, the recenly elected member will retire in his favor. Hon. Mr. White's election in the constituency will be by acclamation as the Liberals do not propose to nominate an opponent.

Hon. George P. Graham, who failed of re-election in Brockville, will most likely receive a seat in South Renfrew also by acclamation, vice Mr. Low, the victorious Liberal candidate, who is retiring.

HANDFUL OF DIAMONDS FOUND IN VOLCANO

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Australian diamonds are the latest novelty in the Maiden Lane jewelry district. They are declared by experts to be of fine quality.

Hundreds of these diamonds were obtained in the space of a few hours in an extensive volcano in the northern part of New South Wales, and were extracted from the loam by the primitive method of hand-sifting the sand in a tub of water. About twenty specimens were sent here for private exhibition.

HEBERT MARRIAGE CASE TO BE TRIED

MONTREAL, Oct. 17.—It was announced at the Superior Court this morning that the now famous Hebert marriage case, brought to issue by the Ne Temere decree, is inscribed for trial and argument this month. The date of the hearing is not yet fixed, and it is quite possible that in view of the large number of cases on the roll, the trial will be postponed until some time next month. The pleading of the case is now settled, and examination shows that the case, if carried to the Privy Council, will mean a decisive establishment of the law regarding the solemnizatoin of marriage in this province, and, incidentally, a decision as to the rights of any religious body to make rules regarding marriage which have the effect of law.

Mr. G. V. Cousins is solicitor for Mrs. Hebert, and, asked this morning as to the likelihood of an appeal to the Privy Council, replied that it would be time enough to consider that matter after the courts of the Province had answered the case.

COWS WENT MAD : FROM THIRST

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Oct. 17.—Two cows which went mad near Fosterville, this county, attacked everything they met and were finally shot. The cows belonged to Selik First, who was arrested on the charge of having tied them to a post so that they were unable to find water or to graze. He was later released from Squire Kieling's court on a bond When Constable Martin Mahoney took the animals to water they shunned it and broke away from him. One of the cows "hooked" a calf which had to be killed, and another a dog.

DISEASED HORSES SOLD AS FOOD

WASHINGTON, D.C., Oct. 16.—"We shall co-operate with the authorities of the State of New Jersey in the prosecution of the Schwartz Brothers Company, the Newark packers, on the charge of disposing of the meat of diseased horses for human consumption," said Dr. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, on his return to-day from the neighborhood of the company's operations.

Dr. Wiley went to New York on Saturday to confer with the inspectors of his bureau, who had left Newark because warrants had been issued for their arrest by the authorities of the suburban town of Kearny. There were three of these officials engaged in an enquiry into the charge that the Schwartz concern packed and shipped the flesh of horses for outside consumption, and while they were so employed the president of the company procured warrants for their apprehension. Rather than take the chances of a local prosecution the federal officers departed from that jurisdiction and called upon their chief for advice.

SAGAGIOUS HORSE SAVED A MAN

MONTREAL, Oct. 17.—The sagacity of a horse saved the life of a man on the Victoria Bridge last night.

John Minogue and Romeo Ethier, carters, in the employ of M. Minogue master carter, were driving across the bridge towards St. Lambert with a load, when the horse stopped in the middle of the bridge, and no matter how much they urged it, it refused to move on.

At last one of the men got down off the wagon, and to his horror he found that he had been trying to urge the animal to trample on the body of an unconscious man. The two men immediately lifted the man into the wagon and proceeded as rapidly as possible towards St. Lambert. They had not gone far, however, before they met the bridgeman from the St. Lambert's end of the bridge, who was looking for the driver of a runaway he had just stopped. It appears that there was a collision between two vehicles on the bridge, and the injured man was thrown from his seat, and his horse ran on down the bridge. The unconscious man was taken to the home of his brother-in-law, Mr. Lebrock, at Greenfield Park, where he soon showed signs of returning consciousness.

Water Has Dropped Over Five Feet.

Kingston, Oct. 18.—The water in the St. Lawrence river has about reached the lowest point in its history. It is now 5 1-2 feet below the mark of three years ago.

Among the Thousand Islands navigation is quite seriously affected, and little motor boats have to move about with caution to avoid rocks. It is said that 500 or more new islands are now peeping above water.

Passenger steamers have quite a time in passing up and down, and wharves are being damaged by the decaying of wood, which heretofore has been under water.

Attempted Suicide.

Leamington, Oct. 18.—A Southerner by the name of Abbott, who has been employed in the fruit belt during the last season, and who has been drinking heavily of late, took the contents of a two-ounce bottle of laudanum yesterday near Ruthven. Dr. Hillier was called and arrived just in time to save the man's life. He was brought to Leamington later by Officers Lamarsh and Wilkinson and locked up.

The officers say he has been engaged in the liquor traffic and is wanted in several places in the south riding.

Couldn't Get the Scotchman.

There was an aged Scotchman who by native shrewdness made a fortune and he did it without the slightest bit of education. One day he and an acquaintance were talking when the latter said to old Duncan: "Say, Duncan, you don't know enough to go in when it rains. Why you can't even spell bird." "B-u-r-d," said Duncan. "I tell you you dont know anything. Why, if you had to spell to make a living you'd have been dead years ago. I'll bet you a hundred you can't spell bird." "I'll tak' ye," quickly replied Duncan. After the money was put up Duncan said "B-i-r-d." "That ain't the way you spelled it the first time." "I wasna bettin' then."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

BASE BALL

ATHLETICS WON THIRD.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—The Athletics are on their way. They showed farther in the front than ever at th Polo Grounds this afternoon, winning the third game of the series for th world's title and beating Christy Mathewson, the idol of Greater New York, by 3 to 2.

It was the first time that Mathewson was ever beaten in a world's series game, but the Philadelphia sluggers would not be denied. "Matty" attempted too much in coming back so soon after being hit hard in th opening game of the series, even thought he won it against the bette hitting of the Athletics, and the eleven srike-outs registered by Chief Bender. Connie Mack's boys have hammered the New York pitching in every game. On the other hand, th twirling of the champions' pitchin staff has made the Giants look lik a very poor hitting team. In spit of the lacing administered to Mathewson, the big fellow pitched a gran game. He did not give a base on ball and did not hit a batter. His steadness and control were remarkabl from beginning to end, but in th respect only was he superior of Jac Coombs. The latter allowed onl two hits, one a fluke, until the eleventh inning, when Herzog opene with a double and eventually scorec His unsteadiness in the early stage had him in trouble, but he improve as the game progressed and was pitching unbeatable ball at the end. Hi fast ball was breaking sharply an he struck out seven to "Matty's" three. The much-talked-of speed o the Giants was noticeably lacking again. They did not steal a base o young Lapp, who threw out five run ners on the base lines. Lapp's pegging was sharp and true, and h would have had another assist to hi credit had Collins held his throw to Second on Murray in the seventh. Th ball beat the runner by three feet.

The Athletics stole two bases o Meyers. The Philadelphians had wide margin in speed on the Giant all over the field, offensive and defensive.

TO ENTRENCH TRIPOLI.

Gen. Caneva Has Troop Fortifying the City.

Rome (via frontier), Ct. 18.—The reports received by the Government from Gen. Caneva, commnder of the Italian expedition in Tipoli, show that his attention has ben directeed chiefly to making the cit of Tripoli an impregnable base fron which will be provided the reinforcments and supplies necessary for th campaign in the interior.

Fortifications are being extended all about the city, making it a thoroughly entrenched camp. Posts will be established all along the line of the advance into the contry in order to make it impossble for the enemy to cut off the invading column from its base of supplies.

News from the interior reaching the Italian commander through friendly natives, describes the Turks as making an active campaign among the Arabs to incite them against the Italians. The intentions of the Italians are misrepresented and their occupation of Tripoli is declared to be an infamous blot on the page of history. The Arabs are told that when Tripoli was taken, there was a general massacre and that those who were spared, suffered something worse than death. Men and women were made slaves and babes in arms were slaughtered. It was the intention of the Italians, the Turks said, to apply the sword and the torch to the whole country. Thus, it is said, it is sought to start a holy war against the invaders. The Turks are also said to hold out the promise of rich booty when the invaders are driven into the sea.

WHO'S WHO IN CANADA

COL. "SAM" HUGHES

The brilliant Irish-Canadian Colonel needs little in the way of introduction to a Canadian audience. He is known of practically all men, either by personal contact or by tales of a somewhat lengthy roll of exciting and daring experiences, by flood, field and battleground.

When the Colonel was baptised in Darlington, Co. Durham, Ont., on 8 January 1853, he was of course plain "Sam", and with a familiar disregard of the military title to a very large proportion of his countrymen he still continues to be "Sam", and is likely to so remain to the end.

Col. Hughes

Col. Hughes comes of a good fighting stock, of a blend of several kinds of fighting progenitors indeed, and this may account for many things that have outcropped during his days on earth. For the father of the Colonel was a County Tyrone man while on the maternal side he has the advantage of a Scots-Irish-Huguenot descent, a combine that could not fail of good results. Educated at the public school, and following, in turn, to Toronto Model and Normal School, and Toronto University, he subsequently held until 1885 the position of Lecturer in English language., Literature and History in Toronto Collegiate Institute. This latter doubtless proved a trifle slow for a young man of his ancestry, and as the initial break for something of a more stirring nature — and usually a very sure one, — he waded into journalism, purchasing the Lindsay "Warder", which he engineered for a dozen years. But of course the Irish-Scots-Irish-Huguenot blood of him had not been content to remain at zero all these years. On the contrary the martial spirit was in outward evidence when he had reached the not very mature age of fourteen, at which time he became a member of the Active Militia. For a time, however, military honors do not seem to have appealed with any sort of conviction to soldier Hughes, for he turned down the offer of the office of Deputy Minister of Militia in 1891, and of Adjt.-General for Canada in 1895. But the fates were strongly in antagonism to the military abilities of Mr. Samuel Hughes being hidden away under the garb of an ordinary officer of Militia, and in 1891 he was prevailed upon to accept the appointment of Lt.-Col. commanding the 45th Battalion and took part shortly thereafter in the Queen's Jubilee celebrations. In course of a stirring life, the Col. has found time to be president of the Dominion Rifle Association; President of the Small Arms Committee, Chairman of the Board of Visitors for the Royal Military College at Kingston; Railway Intelligence officer on Headquarters' staff, and owns a medal won in active service during the Fenian raids in 1870.

The Colonel is not with those who would fain stand aloof from the military work of the Empire. On the contrary, as early as 1872, and on various occasions since, he has been a strong advocate, and has made repeated personal offers, of Colonial military assistance to the Empire in Imperial wars. Individually also, he made offer to raise a corps of capital Canadian fighting men for the Egyptian and Soudanese Campaign, the Afghan frontier war, and the Transvaal war, while in furtherance of his Imperial ideals, he, in 1897-98, visited Australia and New Zealand to help urge the assurance of a Colonial line-up when the old lion at home was threatened with attack. His activity in the South African war will be green in the memories of most Canadians, and the notable appointments during that strenuous campaign as Chief of the Intelligence Staff to Inspector General Settle and subsequently to General Sir Charles Warren, are eloquent testimony that the chiefs in Britains fighting line are ready to recognize ability.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

ONWEGLIDE ASSEMBLY

An assembly under the auspices of the Onweglide Club was held last evening in the Symons' Academy, which was not only largely attended, but was a most pleasant function. A large number were in attendance and indulged in dancing until an early hour this morning. Appropriate music was furnished by the I.O.O.F. orchestra.

BIG MASKINONGE CAUGHT

Messrs. A. P. Carroll, Harry Day and Wm. Day, of this city, were yesterday afternoon trolling in the bay near Grape Island when a maskinonge which gave them a merry time for over half an hour, was hooked. The fish was finally landed, and it was a beauty. It measured 52 inches in length, and weighed 38 pounds. Last evening it was seen and admired by many citizens.

GEROW GORE FESTIVAL

The annual Harvest Festival service was held in St. Mark's on Sunday, 15th inst. The day was beautiful and warm, and the congregation was good. The church was artistically decorated with flowers and fruit and pretty autumn leaves, giving evidence of willing hearts and active hands. The singing, under the direction of Mrs. J. Christie, was hearty. As it should be, hymns that the congregation could join in were sung. The service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Geen, a former Rector of the parish. His text was the 4th verse of the 100th Psalm. During the offeratory Miss Storms sang a solo.

DOUGLAS PONTON vs. C.N.O.R.

Douglas Ponton, of Toronto, owns nearly three acres of land in the township of Sidney. It has been in his family for nearly 80 years, and he says he would not take $6,000 for it. Recently the C.N.O. Railway ran its new line through the property under the impression that they had arranged terms on which they could do so. No arrangements, however, had been made with Mr. Ponton, and he entered suit for damages. The railway then made a county court proceeding to get possession of the property by expropriation. Yesterday morning Justice Teetzel directed that a motion for an injunction brought on behalf of Mr. Ponton should be enlarged pending the decision of the County Court. If possession is granted there, the suit for damages and for an injunction is to be stayed.

MARRIED AT ST. THOMAS

At St. Thomas Church yesterday a quiet wedding took place. The groom was Mr. Albro E. Sprague and the bride Lillian E. Gooding, of this city. The Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, officiated.

GREAT PIANIST COMING

As will be seen by advertisement in another column, Mark Hambourg, one of the greatest living pianists, will give a recital in the City Hall on Wednesday evening, 25th inst. Mr. Hambourg's recital will be a delight to all lovers of music and an education to students of the "divine art." Belleville rarely has an opportunity of listening to artists of such standing and we feel assured that the opportunity will not be missed by the musically inclined people of the city.

SOUTH HASTINGS TEACHERS

Through the kindness of the church officials the meetings of the Association are being held in the Sunday School rooms of the Tabernacle church The meeting was opened by devotional exercises, conducted by the pastor of the church, the Rev. W. G. Clarke, B.A. Singing, scripture reading and prayer, and a short inspiring address on the work and rewards of the teacher. The chair was occupied by Mr. P. W. Fairman, President of the Association. There will be a meeting this evening at 8 o'clock, when Miss McRae, of Peterboro, will give a talk on "Some Pictures that have Lived," illustrated by lime light views. The general public is cordially invited.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CENTENARY

The celebration of the completion of the first century of Sunday Schools in this Province is to be commenced in Brockville next week at the annual meeting of the Provincial Sunday School Convention, which commences at Brockville on Tuesday, the 24th inst. The honor of having founded the first Sunday School belongs to the Rev. Wm. Smart, who was then pastor of the first Presbyterian Church in Brockville, and appropriately it is in this church building that is the successor of the original church, that the convention is to be held. The programme which covers these days is to be addressed by only those who are specialists, chief of whom is Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, of Chicago.

Thomas Stevens, an old man residing in the northern part of the County, pleaded guilty to being drunk and was allowed to return home.

VAGRANCY.

ARE YOU "JUSTIFIED"? DO YOU STAND FIRM OR DO YOU LEAN ON ANOTHER?

Sometimes you see in a [illegible]paper—never in this paper, of course, but in other papers—a few lines badly printed, the top halves or the bottom halves of the letters fading away into invisibility.

Ask a printer about it and he will tell you the type is not "justified."

Press him a little further for an explanation and he will tell you that the letters were not on their feet, that is, the lines were leaning one against the other so that instead of a perfectly level surface an oblique surface was presented to the paper.

So the impression, and the impression is everything with the printer, was spoiled.

Interesting little bit of information you say, but as the Scot asked about "Paradise Lost," what does it prove?

Merely this, that if you want to be a good type of man you must be "justified," you must stand square on your own feet instead of leaning on the next man, and thus produce a good impression.

TRIED TO MARRY ON A HUNTING LICENSE

QUINCY, Mass., Oct. 18.—Aaron Sigelman and Miss Julia Bernstein had joined hand and were about to be pronounced man and wife last night when the clergyman glanced over the license. Then he noticed for the first time that the license permitted Sigelman to hunt deer, but said nothing regarding marriage.

The irate couple immediately departed for the headquarters of the City Clerk in Boston, where the license had been procured, to demand an explanation. The clerk explained by telephone to the clergyman that Sigelman had gone to the desk where hunting licenses are issued and had not mentioned marriage.

The Southern Pacific of Mexico lost all wires at midnight. Up to that time the gale had been blowing for twelve hours.

CANADIANS STUNG BY SPECULATORS

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Canadians who came here to attend the series of baseball games between the Athletics and the Giants to determine the championship of the world, have not been slow in venting their wrath at the outrageous treatment accorded to thousands of baseball fans from the Dominion, who arrived here on Saturday, only to find every available seat for the games in the hands of unscrupulous speculators.

Even delegations which sent representatives ahead to buy seats found themselves at the mercy of the speculators. For the New York Baseball Club had disposed of all but 800 of the seats to the questionable combine.

Many of the indignant Canadians, some of whom did not see the game after travelling thousands of miles, gathered at the Hotel Breslin, which has become the headquarters of Canadians in New York, and unmercifully grilled the baseball authorities for the outrageous manner in which they treated the baseball loving public.

"It is one of the worst outrages ever perpetrated in the sporting world," declared Hubert Larkin, a contractor from St. Catharines, Ont. "It isn't a question of money, but of principle, and I think the National Baseball Commission should take action to punish those responsible for turning over the seats to the speculators."

As a result of the indignation expressed by the Canadian fans at the Hotel Breslin, Assemblyman Cyrus W. Phillips, of Rochester, will introduce a bill at the next session of the Legislature placing baseball under the jurisdiction of the New York State Athletic Commission.

WOMEN KILLED IN AN AUTO ACCIDENT

WAREHOUSE POINT, Conn., Oct. 17.—In an automobile accident here late to-day Mrs. Rose Richards, of Henrysburg, St. Johns County, Quebec, and Mrs. Julia Richards, of North Adams, Mass., were instantly killed, and Mrs. P. S. Mailloux, of No. 330 Summer Avenue, Springfield, Mass., internally injured and may die.

The automobile in which the killed and injured were riding was owned and run by P. S. Mailloux, husband of Mrs. Mailloux. The party were on their way to Springfield from Hartford, and had just descended a steep hill when a rear tire burst, causing the machine to skid sharply, so that before Mr. Mailloux could get it under control it crashed into a telegraph pole, and turned turtle. The three women and Mr. Mailloux were pinned under the car and their cries attracted the attention of people living in that neighborhood. As soon as help reached the spot the car was lifted, so that the four were taken out and to nearby houses, where they were attended by physicians. Mrs. Rose and Mrs. Julia Richards were injured internally and died soon after being rescued. Mrs. Mailloux is injured internally and it is thought that she will not live. Mr. Mailloux, other than a shaking up, escaped without injury. Mrs. Rose Richards was 49 years old and leaves a husband and six children. Mrs. Julia Richards was 75 years old.

DEFENCE FORCE OF AUSTRALIA

OTTAWA, Oct. 18.—That Canada had done wisely in rejecting the advances of her big neighbor to the south, was the opinion expressed today by Sir Albert J. Gould, ex-president of the Australian Senate, a former member of the Australian Cabinet and a lieutuenant-colonel in the country's defence forces, who arrived in the capital to-day.

"You have a big nation to the south of you," he said, "and you need to protect your industries for a while. I see the navy question has also been more or less of an issue. We have contributed, as Canadians doubtless know, a fleet of thirteen vessels, one a dreadnought and the remainder torpedo boats and destroyers, which are to form an integral portion of the British fleet.

We have also just passed a law which provides that every boy of between 12 and 14 years shall undergo physical training; from 14 to 19 years he shall be trained in military drill and shall then pass into the forces until he is 26, during which time he must undergo a period of training in camp. In ten years we will be able to put 2,000,000 men in camp. It is not conscription, but natural training, and will not interfere with the avocation of any citizen."

COUNTERFEIT $4 BILLS

OTTAWA, Oct. 17—Inspector Smith of the Dominion staff, on the border between the United States and Canada, reports that counterfeit $4 bills are being circulated in border cities, presumably by a gang working from the American side. The fake bills are copies of the old style note, and pretty clever ones. The new issue, so far as known, has not been counterfeited. One of these bogus bills was passed on the inspector at Niagara Falls, Ont.

CURRENT COMMENT

The fog was "as thick as a blanket" this morning.

A Grandview man proposes to fast for ten days to cure a cold. Holding his head under water for ten minutes would accomplish the result with even greater certainty.—Vancouver World.

A scientist alleges that one per cent of the population of the world is insane. More than that, we should say, judging by the literature of the world's championship baseball games.

The United States employs 513,851 persons. Of those 358,088 are under the Civil Service Commission, and 80,521 are in the army and 40,832 in the navy. Of those under the Civil Service Commission, 222,278 hold office as a result of competitive examinations.

If a man is only as old as he feels, Lord Strathcona, who has just made the return trip from London to Ottawa in seventeen days, may be able to do the journey by airship before he gets too elderly for these long excursions.

The other day the telephone operators in San Francisco talked with those in Hokuscu, Japan, a distance of 6,000 miles, and every word could be heard distinctly. Man seems destined to conquer even space or a good deal of it. The dream of talking with the people of Mars, if there be such, may in time become more than a dream.—Kingston Standard.

Dispatches from Ottawa indicate that there may be a general enquiry into the administration of the departments of the Government. If so, there will be no blockers' brigade on hand with ability to stop the witnesses from answering questions that bother the politicians, as was the case during the last parliament! Some people may yet have to learn what an embarrassing thing an electoral revolution can be, but not too soon.

There is some comfort in the statement that during the past decade Canada's growth in population exceeded that of any similar period in the history of the United States. The best ten years in the States showed an increase of 24 per cent., whilst Canada's increment was 32 per cent. between 1901 and 1911. Still, per centages are deceptive in that they are apt to decrease as the figures on which they are based increase.

Ontario cannot vote against Sir James Whitney without voting against

1.—The public ownership power policy of Adam Beck.
2.—The prison reform policy of Hon. W. J. Hanna.
3.—The Temiskaming and New Ontario visions of J. L. Englehart.

Is it worth Ontario's while to vote against such a principle, a policy and a possibility, in order to strengthen the hands of a party that has had six years to create an opposition and is still an outfit of Conmee Bill Liberals in its hatred of progress and sympathy with reaction?—Toronto Telegram.

The Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto Star writes: "One interesting question which arises out of the census figures is, what has become of the 1,706,375 immigrants who have come into Canada during the last decade. The actual increase in the population is 1,710,554, or only 5,179 more than the recorded number of increase. Inasmuch as the average rate of natural increase is 15 per cent., there must have been either a remarkable leakage of immigrants across the border, or a lamentable continuance of the exodus of our own folks to the United States. It is hinted that the new Ministers will order an investigation into both questions."

Women will soon have equal suffrage with men in six of the States of the Union: California, Colorado, Idaho, Utah, Washington and Wyoming. The latter named state, then a territory, led in the experiment, forty-two years ago. Colorado followed in 1893, and Utah and Idaho in 1896. In 1910 Washington went on the list. All are western communities. None of the older states concerned appear to have repented of their course; but none seems to be notably better off or better administered than like states where only men have the right to mark a ballot for a legislative candidate. Will not women in politics be much the same as men?

SUFFERERS FROM PILES!

ZAM-BUK HAS CURED THESE.

Friction on the hemorrhoid veins that are swollen, inflamed and gorged with blood, is what causes the terrible pain and stinging and smarting of piles. Zam-Buk applied at night will be found to give ease before morning. Thousands of persons have proved this. Why not be guided by the experience of others?

Mr. Thomas Pearson, of Prince Albert, Sask., writes: "I must thank you for the benefit I have received from Zam-Buk. Last summer I suffered greatly from piles. I started to use Zam-Buk and found it gave me relief, so I continued it, and after using three or four boxes I am pleased to say it has effected a complete cure."

Mr. G. A. Dufresne, 183-185 St. Joseph Street, St. Roch, Quebec, P. Q. writes: "I can highly recommend Zam-Buk to everyone who suffers from piles."

Magistrate Sanford, of Weston, King's Co., N. S., says: "I suffered long from itching piles, but Zam-Buk has now cured me."

Mr. William Kenty, of Upper Nine Mile River, Hants Co., N. S., says: "I suffered terribly from piles, the pain at times being almost unbearable. I tried various ointments, but everything I tried failed to do me the slightest good. I was tired of trying various remedies, when I heard of Zam-Buk, and thought as a last resource I would give this balm a trial. After a short time Zam-Buk effected a complete cure."

Zam-Buk is also a sure cure for skin injuries and diseases, eczema, ulcers, varicose veins, cuts, burns, bruises, chaps, cold sores, etc. 50c box all druggists and stores, or post-free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse harmful imitations.

Welland Liberals.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 19.—The Liberals will hold their county convention on Friday, when it will be decided who shall be the standard bearer in the provincial campaign. Mayor Dores was named some time ago, but it is rumored that he will not run. He stated yesterday that he would make no announcement for a few days, but he did not deny the rumor.

In Trouble Again.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 19.—Only a short time out of the Industrial School, Joseph Pecarello, aged 16, was arrested yesterday, charged with stealing knives from the Ontario Silver Works, where he was employed. When arrested, he wore a gold watch, which the police say they believe he stole. Some stolen knives were recovered.

The flag on the city building to-day was floating at half mast out of respect to the late ex-Ald. Milne.

Five arrests were made by the police yesterday afternoon and last evening—four drunks and a vagrant.

The census returns for Belleville, as well as those for the Dominion, are distinctly disappointing, the enumeration showing a considerably smaller increase than had been anticipated. So far as Belleville is concerned, the increase given by the census for the last decade is but 733, whereas the municipal enumeration shows an increase of more than 2,000 during the past six years. There is evidently "a screw loose" somewhere. Seemingly the work of enumeration was done in a most inefficient manner in the city as a large number of people resident here have complained that they were never called upon by the ellegen census taker, and that such was the case in many other places, it is but fair to assume.) It is to be hoped that Canada's next census will be taken under a system similar to that which is operated in the British Isles.

A Family Medicine

The honest, straightforward statement of Mr. J. J. Vahling of his wife's and his experiences, is convincing proof of the great merit of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

"I very cheerfully recommend Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey to everyone. I was ailing for many years and had severe pains in my back and weakness; but since I used this medicine I am much stronger and the pains have entirely left me. My wife had nervous trouble and headache. Now she is much better, owing to this wonderful remedy. We are thankful to you for what Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey has done for us and will always have it in our medicine chest."—J. J. Vahling, 1862 Menard St., St. Louis, Mo.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

is one of the greatest strength builders and tonic stimulants known to medicine. It strengthens and fortifies the system and assists in building up the weakened tissues, in a gradual healthy manner. It is invaluable to bring restful sleep and for all throat, lung and stomach troubles.

All liquor dealers, or direct, $1.25 a large bottle. Be sure you get the genuine; substitutes and imitations are injurious. Medical booklet, containing rare, common-sense rules for health and testimonials, also doctor's advice, sent free to anyone who writes.

SLAVERY IN TRIPOLI.

Italians Find That Terrible Conditions Have Existed.

Rome, Oct. 19.—Commandator Simonetti, general secretary of the Italian Anti-Slavery Society, which has been working in Tripoli since 1899, gives an appalling description of the slavery still conducted there despite the efforts of the society to liberate those in bondage.

He says that the society provides the slaves with freedom papers which the Turkish officials have disregarded derisively, calling them "papers of the second slavery."

He tells of Turkish steamers engaged in the slave traffic and says that when the slave markets were closed in 1900 the slaves were brought within a day's march of Benghazi, from where they were secretly embarked or returned to the interior. A common trick of the Turkish officials was to declare freed slaves Ottoman subjects because they had come from Mussulmans' regions, and so keep them under an influence favorable to their return to slavery.

The greatest trade, he says, has been among the Bedouins, who sell negroes to the Senussi, who still have public markets at Abeshr in Wadai, State of Central Africa, in the French zone of influence, and at El-Fasher, the capital of Darfur, Egyptian Sudan, under British domination.

The younger of the women slaves, he says, were sent to Tobruk and the Gulf of Solum, Tripoli, and were destined for Turkish harems. These slaves were chained at night and acts of disobedience were punished with death. At Sliten, not far from the City of Tripoli, Simonetti says that a slave was killed in such a barbarous fashion that a woman who was present died of fright. He closes with a statement that he possesses a long list of so-called respectable Turks, who indulge in the traffic of human flesh simply for sport.

Claim Conspiracy.

New York, Oct. 19.—When court adjourned last night 11 jurors had been chosen to try Wm. J. Cummins for grand larceny in connection with the collapse of the Carnegie Trust Co. The specific charge alleges larceny of $140,000 in connection with a note transaction. Questions put to talesmen yesterday by counsel for Cummins continued to indicate that the defence will endeavor to prove that Cummins is the victim of a formidable conspiracy.

New Bank Opened.

Montreal, Oct. 18.—One of the most important developments that has occurred in Canadian banking circles for a number of years took place yesterday, when La Banque Internationale du Canada threw open its doors following on the receipt of its license from the Treasury Department at Ottawa.

The organization of the new bank, with its important Paris connections, has been under way for some time past, so that immediately on receipt of the license from Ottawa, it found itself prepared to proceed at once with its regular business, equipped with a permanent staff and banking connections established throughout the entire world.

HENRI BOURASSA, M.L.A.

The "Nationalist" Leader

Recent events have brought the leader of the "Nationalist" party more prominently to the front than before and the average Canadian citizen will be ready to acknowledge that throughout the past number of years he has contrived to keep fairly well in the limelight.

The entry of Mr. Bourassa into this material world dates from 1868, his entry into the political world come while yet he was a young man.

The son of Napoleon Bourassa, author and poet of some note, in Montreal, and born in 1869, young Henri was educated privately in that city until the age of 18, when residential transfer was made to Montebello, where a few years later he had the mayoralty honor conferred upon him, holding the position for four years. He has also been mayor of Papineauville. Always inclined to politics, and with a fluent tongue that drew to him a large following of the French-Canadian Section of Canada's well mixed family, Mr. Bourassa came out for parliamentary honors in 1896. When the Canadian Government undertook the despatch of troops to join their Colonial brethern in support of the motherland on the South-African battlefields, Mr. Bourassa was amongst the most violent in denunciation of the proceedings, and by way of vindication for his attitude he resigned his seat in October 1899 and appealed to his constituents. That the latter were in accord with the views of their representative on this, and doubtless on all other points, was evident, and it was considered a losing battle to fight his return, and beginning of 1900 he was sent back to parliament unopposed. Conditions were similar in the elections of 1900 and 1904. Mr. Bourassa was returned to the Quebec Legislature at the general election of 1908, and the years have not in the slightest abated his ardor as an opponent to soldiers and navies that might be called to battle alongside contingents from other portions of the British Empire.

He has done very considerable work as writer for and editor of newspapers, and his present holding in that connection is the "Nationalist" 'Le Devoir' founded in Montreal last year.

CROWN PRINCESS LOUISE OF SAXONY

Now known as Mme. Toselli, whose publication of the intimate secrets of European Court life in her memoirs has cost her an allowance of $8,000 per year, provided for her maintenance by the King of Saxony, once her husband. The book, which is now on the market, is expected to net the Princess $50,000, but the cutting off of her pension leaves her dependent upon the charity of her friends and what money her publishers choose to advance for maintenance.

BIG GUN TRIALS

The Orion the First Warship in the World to Have The New Type

Gunnery experts from th[illegible]cellent and Admiralty officials fro[illegible] Constructive Department have been taking part in the gun trials of the new battleship Orion off Owers Lightship. They are quite satisfied with the result, both as to the behavior of the weapons and the resistance to severe shocks which was offered by the structure of the vessel. The gun mountings also stood the test quite satisfactorily. The powerful 13.5 in. guns, of which the Orion possesses ten (being the first warship in the world to be armed with these weapons), underwent an extensive initial test, which included broadside firing, although all ten of the guns were not fired at once. Such an experiment has never been tried on any Dreadnought, experts holding that the tremendous shock which would ensue could not be sustained by any vessel built or likely to be built. The guns, which are so mounted that they are capable of being trained in any direction, were fired singly, in pairs, and in fours, with brief intervals between the discharges, so as to lessen the shock. The trials of the 4 in. guns, constituting the Orion's anti-torpedo armament, were were also satisfactory.

The crew were protected from the nerve-racking concussion caused by the discharge of the guns by wool-lined leather ear-pads, but even then, the shock from the blast, as the 1,250-lb. missiles left the muzzles, is said to have been terrific. The roar of the guns was distinctly heard at Portsmouth, fourteen miles away. A man who was inside one of the barbettes when the guns were fired, says that the six-foot recoil of the gun, was the only indication that the weapon had been discharged. On deck the concussion produced a sensation of numbness.

Incalculable damage would be caused to the hull of a battleship if a complete broadside were fired simultaneously, and such a step would never be contemplated. The energy of each of the 15.5 in. guns is about 70,000 foot-tons, a total broadside being capable of lifting a weight equivalent of thirty Dreadnoughts a foot into the air.

SLEEPER'S LONG WALK

Girl's Tramp Over Rough Country On a Cold Night

An extraordinary instance of a girl walking a long distance on a bitter cold night, while fast asleep, is reported from Monmouth. The girl's name is Annie Mary Smith, and she is a domestic servant in the employ of the Rev. L. M. Abbot.

The girl went to bed as usual. Early next morning Mr. Abbot was awakened by a knocking at his front door. As the knocking was not answered by the servant girl, he called her, and, getting no response, he went to her room. The bed had been slept in, but the girl had gone, and, to add to the puzzle, her clothing was in the room.

He went downstairs, and at the door a messenger told him that the girl during the night had reached her home cold and ill, and clad only in her night apparel. From her bedroom the girl had walked downstairs, unlocked two doors, and made her way across some coal and wood and out of the front of the house, up a side path. She had walked over some rough stones before reaching a gate which leads on to the Hereford Road. On the steep hill leading to Staunton she woke. She knew the district, and decided to call up some friends at Staunton, but then she realized that to arouse them would only give them a fright, and she continued her journey to her mother's cottage, crossing several fields.

Sturdy Food Breeds Sturdy Children

STURDINESS means more than weight and muscle.
It also means energy.
The really sturdy child has its tissue and its energy developed in the right proportion.

That is why Tillson's Rolled Oats are the superb food for boys and girls, as well as for grown folks.

They supply the body with energy and tissue in the ratio of just about 5½ to 1, which is the proportion declared right by science.

About the only other food that does this is milk.

Tillson's Oats and milk are, therefore, the two practically perfect foods. Ask your doctor about it.

Remember this: Milk and a little salt is much better for the digestion than rich cream and a lot of sugar. Try it on your porridge.

The Haunted Chamber

"You ask me?" he queries.

"Yes, if only to please me—for my sake."

She has evidently forgotten her late distrust of him, for she speaks now in the old sweet tone, and with tears in her eyes. Sir Adrian flushes warmly.

"For your sake," he whispers, "what is there I would not do, if thus requested?"

A bitter sneer contracts Arthur Dynecourt's lips as he listens to the first part of this conversation and guesses at the latter half. He notes correctly the kindling of their eyes, the quick breath that comes and goes like happy sighs from the breast of Florence. He hears the whisper, sees the warm blush, and glances expressively at Dora. Meeting her eyes, he lays a finger on his lips to caution her to silence, and then, when passing by her, whispers:

"Meet me in half an hour in the lower gallery."

Bowing her acquiescence in this arrangement, fearing indeed to refuse, Dora follows the others from the haunted chamber.

At the foot of the small stone staircase—before they go through the first iron-bound door that leads to the corridor without—they find Ethel Villiers awaiting them. She has been looking around her in the dimly lighted stone passage, and has discovered another door fixed mysteriously in a corner, that had excited her curiosity.

"Where does this lead to, Sir Adrian?" she asks now, pointing to it.

"Oh, that is an old door connected with another passage that leads by a dark and wearying staircase to the servants' corridor beneath! I'm afraid you won't be able to open it as it is rusty with age and disuse. The servants would as soon think of coming up here as they wouldl of making an appointment with the Evil One; so it has not been opened for years."

"Perhaps I can manage it," says Arthur Dynecourt, trying with all his might to force the ancient lock to yield to him. At length his efforts are crowned with success; the door flies creakingly open, and a cloud of dust uprising covers them like a mist.

"You'll fall into it if you don't mind," remarks Captain Ringwood. "One would think uncanny spots had an unwholesome attraction for you."

Ringwood, ever since the memorable night in the smoking-room, when Sir Adrian was so near being killed, has looked askance at Arthur Dynecourt, and, when taking the trouble to address him at all, has been either sharp or pointed in his remarks. Arthur, contenting himself with a scowl at him, closes the little door again and turn away from it.

"At night," says Sir Adrian, in an amused tone, "the servants, passing by the door below that leads up to this one, run by it as though they fear some ghostly ancestors of mine, descending from the haunted chamber, will pounce out upon them with their heads under their arms, or in some equally unpleasant position. You know the door, don't you, Arthur—the second from the turning?"

"No," replies Arthur, with his false smile, "I do not; nor, indeed, do I care to know it. I firmly believe I should run past it too after nightfall, unless well protected."

"That looks as if you had an evil conscience," says Ringwood, carelessly, but none the less purposely.

"It looks more as if I were a coward, I think," retorts Arthur, laughing, but shooting an angry glance at the gallant captain as he speaks.

"Well, what does the immortal William say?" returns Ringwood, coolly. "'Conscience doth make cowards of us all!'"

"You have a sharp wit, sir," says Arthur, with apparent lightness, but pale with passion.

"I say, look here," breaks in Sir Adrian hastily, pulling out his watch; "it must be nearly time for tea. By Jove, quite half-past four, and we know what Lady FitzAlmont will say to us if we keep her deprived of her favorite beverage for even five minutes. Come, let us run, or destruction will light upon our heads."

So saying, he leads the way, and soon they leave the haunted chamber and all its gloomy associations far behind them.

CHAPTER VII.

Reluctantly, yet with a certain amount of curiosity to know what it is he may wish to say to her, Dora wends her way to the gallery to keep her appointment with Arthur. Pacing to and fro beneath the searching eyes of the gaunt cavaliers and haughty dames that gleam down upon him from their canvases upon the walls, Dynecourt impatiently awaits her coming.

"Ah, you are late!" he exclaims as she approaches. There is a tone of authority about him that dismays her.

"Not very, I think," she responds, pleasantly, deeming conciliatory measures the best. "Why did you not come to the library? We all missed you so much at tea!"

"No doubt," he replies, sarcastically. "I can well fancy the disappointment my absence caused; that black looks and regretful speeches that marked my defection. Pshaw! let you and me at least be honest to each other. Did Florence, think you, shed tears because of my non-coming?"

This mood of his is so strange to her that, in spite of the natural smoothness that belongs to her, it renders her dumb.

"Look here," he goes on savagely, "I have seen enough to-day up in that cursed room above—that haunted chamber—to show me that our game is not yet won."

"Our game—what game?" asks Dora with a foolish attempt at misconception.

He laughs aloud—a wild, unpleasant, scornful laugh, that makes her cheek turn pale. His mirth, she tells herself, is demoniacal.

"You would get out of it now, would you?" he says. "It is too late, I tell you. You have gone some way with me, you must go the rest. I want your help, and you want mine. Will you draw back now, when the prize is half won, when a little more labor will place it within your grasp?"

"But there must be no violence," she gasps, "no attempt at——"

"What is it you would say?" he interrupts sternly. "Collect yourself; you surely do not know what you are hinting at. Violence! what do you mean by that?"

"I hardly know," she returns, trembling. "It was your look, your tone, I think, that frightened me."

"Put your nerves in your pocket for the future," he exclaims hoarsely. "They are not wanted where I am. Now to business. You want to marry Sir Adrian, as I understand, whether his desires lie in the same direction or not?"

"My own opinion is that his desire does not run in your direction," continues Arthur, remorselessly. "We both know where his heart would gladly find its home, where he would seek a bride to place here in this grand castle, but I will frustrate that hope, if I die for it."

He grinds his teeth as he says this, and looks with fierce, defiant eyes at the long rows of his ancestors that line the walls.

"She would gladly see her proud, fair face looking down upon me from amidst this goodly company," he goes on, apostrophizing the absent Florence. "But that shall never be. I have sworn it; unless—I am her husband—unless—I am her husband!"

General Botha on Colonies' Neutrality in Case of War

It were well if Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his erstwhile friend and confidant, Bourassa, who received his inspiration and political baptism from the late Premier, to read and commit to memory the wise utterances of General Botha, on the loyalty of those portions of the Empire lying beyond the seas, and the impossibility of colonies remaining neutral in case of war, without separating from the mother land. The General, though a reebl not many years ago and fought for the independence of his country, now realizes the advantages which the Boers enjoy under autonomy, which they now enjoy in governing themselves, under British protection, and honestly avows it. It were well if those who are glibly prating about Canada surrending her autonomy, from Laurier down to the humblest elector, would realize the force and truth of the General's utterances and govern themselves accordingly:

> In his address to his constituents in the Losberg district, General Botha, referring to the question of the neutrality of South Africa in time of war, said he much regretted the publication in July last of the Volkstem article advocating South Africa's remaining neutral in the event of the United Kingdom being engaged in war, because it had created undeserved distrust and suspicion of the Dutch Africanders' loyalty. He insisted on the necessity to avoid injuring a better understanding between the two white races, and considered that the Volkstem doctrine was unjust.
> There could not be the slightest doubt that only the government of a self-governed colony could decide whether its ships and troops should be sent out from their own territory to fight elsewhere in the event of Great Britain engaging in war, but the refusal to send ships and troops did not amount to a declaration of neutrality. Neutrality would mean the refusing of all facilities to British warships in the harbors of the Union, such as Simonstown, where the British Government had spent millions, or no more facilities than the South Africans dared give to the enemy's warships. It would also mean that every British soldier in South Africa would have to be disarmed, and that Great Britain would be treated on exactly the same footing as the enemy. The least difference in treatment would mean the violation of neutrality.
>
> It would be impossible for any Dominion of the Empire—Canada as little as South Africa—TO REMAIN NEUTRAL WITHOUT CUTTING ITSELF ASUNDER FROM THE EMPIRE. IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE FOR ONE PORTION OF THE EMPIRE TO GO TO WAR WHILE ANOTHER REMAINED NEUTRAL. South Africa to-day was in a position of total helplessness. Therefore the Government would establish a defence force at the earliest moment to relieve the Empire as much as possible of the task of defending the country.
>
> Should the unhappy day ever dawn, said General Botha, when the common Fatherland is attacked, Dutch and English Africanders will be found shoulder to shoulder, defending the Fatherland to the very last.

This declaration was received with prolonged cheering.

What the Jersey Governor Thinks of Canada

Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey, in addressing "a thousand Democrats" at Hackensack, N.J., on the 13th inst., "that Canada was a generation ahead of the United States, in the regulation of corporate business, in her banking system and in her currency system.

"Canada rejected the reciprocity agreement," he said, "because her people feared that by adopting it they would open the door to the evils that prevail in the business system of the republic.

"The present contrast between Canada and the United States," he said, "is that the United States is fretful and distrustful; Canada is absolutely buoyant with confidence and with hope.

"Canada has got through all the deep waters we are now in, or rather she was never in them; she never let herself get in them. While we have been going on from one financial crisis to another, Canada has not had any financial crisis. Canada, if we must admit the truth, feels her economical superiority to the United States because she did some time ago, as a matter of course, the things now called radical in the United States, and which are making business men uneasy."

A Candid Confession

The Toronto Globe commenced an editorial in its issue of the 17th inst. as follows:—

> The Mail and Empire says:—"It is stated by those who profess to know that on account of the disorganized condition of the Liberal party in this Province, as well as the fact that it has no funds with which to carry on a campaign, there will be from 30 to 40 Conservatives returned by acclamation."
>
> The Globe has no knowledge as to the condition of the funds of the Liberal party. The Mail and Empire, however, must not be too sure that an empty war chest means no war. FOR THE FIRST TIME IN FORTY YEARS THE LIBERALS OF ONTARIO MUST FIGHT THEIR BATTLES WITHOUT THE AID OF THE FEDERAL OR PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT, and w[illegible] their opponents strongly entrenched in Ottawa and in the Qu[illegible]s Park. We should not be greatly surprised under these conditions to find that the Liberal party in this Province has no funds to carry on a campaign. The Conservative party will be able to attract all who are in politics for what they can "make."

Comment on the above open confession would be as superfluous as painting the lily or gilding refined gold.

TO LAUNDER WOMEN SUITS

Hints on Washing to Bring Out that "Just Like New" Appearance.

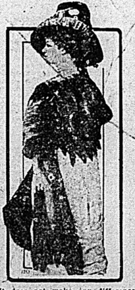
A young woman who has had exceptional success in laundering linen suits this summer says that one factor in achieving the 'just like new' appearance is to avoid wringing or twisting the garments before hanging them out to dry. If you wring a linen suit the material gets pulled awry, and the garment needs considerable manipulation to put it back in shape. Of course, if it has been badly cut to begin with, the first laundering is apt to prove fatal to the 'hang' of it.

For washing linen suits the best quality of soap should be used, made into a lather with soft water, but not rubbed directly on the linen unless it is very much soiled. Usually soaking the garments in warm soapy water for an hour or so will leave them in a condition to be cleaned without much rubbing. Colored linens should not be soaked more than a few minutes before washing, and no soap should be rubbed on them. Rinse all linens in several waters, then put them through the stiffening water. Some stiffening is necessary to give the linen the appearance of freshness which it has when it is new. On the other hand the greatest care should be taken not to have too much stiffening. There is wanted just enough to give the linen body and yet not take away from its suppleness.

To free from the water, fold the garment and press it between the rollers of a wringer, or fold and place it in a sheet and twist the sheet from each end. It requires two persons to do this.

Partially dry the garments out of doors in the air, but do not hang colored linens where the sun will shine on them. Iron before the linen has become quite dry.

PRETTY FUR SCARF



It does not make any difference whether muffs, scarfs and coats, this season are of plain coon, muskrat or skunk. Costly furs will still hold their own, but the woman who cannot wear these on account of their high price, may be assured that she is just as well dressed with a scarf of wolf, coon or black martin around her neck and carrying a muff to match.

Every Husband Knows.

According to a recent issue of Life there are a few facts that every husband knows. First:

That it isn't safe for him to invite any old friend home to dinner without arranging for the privilege a week or so ahead.

That it is wonderful how even the simplest gown has advanced in price, compared with what it was last year.

That the day is coming when he will rise up in his might and assert himself, not suddenly and undignifiedly, but calmly and permanently.

That the household expenses could easily be cut in half if he only had the time to put his gigantic intellect and business experience upon them.

That one and one make four or five.

That there is always one room in the house that simply cannot wait any longer to be decorated.

That the 'little affair" to which a "few friends" are to be invited means in the end about two weeks' hard work, a house full of people, and an expenditure of hundreds.

That his own ideas about disciplining children are always too radical to be carried out.

That everybody works father.

Young Children's Teeth

"When a child has cut all his first teeth and has reached the age of two years, or thereabouts, it is time to begin using a tooth-brush and a very simple powder," says "Health." "The cleansing of the teeth should be very carefully superintended. The brush should be soft and small, and as soon as possible the child should be taught exactly how to use it. The brush should be worked up and down and not crosswise, except very gently."

"When cavities occur in the first teeth they should be filled by a dentist, in order that they may be kept until the second teeth are quite ready to take their place. If the temporary tooth is allowed to decay until the pulp is exposed, great pain is caused and abcesses under the tooth cause a flow of pus into the mouth, which secretion is extremely unhealthy. Have the little one's teeth filled while the cavities are small and spare it future suffering."

He Know Better.

A Scottish minister was startled by the original views of a not very skilful ploughman whom he had just engaged. Noticing the furrows were far from straight he said, 'John, yer drills are no straucht ;that is no like Tammie's wark'—'Tammie' being the man who had previously ploughed the field.

"Tammie didna ken his wark,' observed the man coolly as he turned his team about. 'Ye see, when the drills is crookit the sun gets well in on a' sides, an' so ye can get early tatties."

WHO'S WHO IN CANADA

HON. A. P. McNAB

When the Saskatchewan Government decided there was work sufficient for five cabinet ministers, the portfolio went to Hon. A. P. McNab, a Glengarry native who had migrated westward some years previously, and become one of Saskatoon's strong business men and represented that constituency in Parliament. The Hon. gentleman saw the light in the year 1864 and has followed the grain and milling industry since his youth, and is now president of the Saskatoon Milling and Elevator Co., a concern of very considerable standing in the West. First elected to the Saskatchewan Legislature at the general election in 1908 he was appointed to the Cabinet as Municipal Commissioner on 8 December 1908, and reelected by acclamation on 30 December of the same year. His appointment as Minister of Public Works came in the following month and experience has demonstrated the fact that he is a man in every way qualified for the post. Not only so but indications are not wanting that further and greater honors are in store for the Glengarry Scot.

MISS ELLEN KNOX,

Candian women have taught successfully in such large numbers that the story of the Canadian woman teacher has become a commonplace. No one apparently has recognized what an interesting part has been taken in the development of Canada by the Canadian woman who has taught. Many interesting types of women teachers have been evolved in the short history of the teaching profession in Canada. Toronto's population is considerably increased about the middle of September every year by the incoming of hundreds of girls from all over Canada to attend one of the ten or fifteen successful schools for girls; none of which are more successful than Havergal College which to a large extent owes its progress to the respect in which Miss Ellen Knox, the principal, is held by scholars and parents. Born in Surrey England, she after a splendid education came to Canada to assume the principalship of Havergal which is now one of the largest schools in Canada.

Miss Knox comes of a clever family, her two brothers being the Dr. E. Knox, Bishop of Manchester and Sir George Knox, of the Supreme Court India.

RENNIES OF YORK COUNTY

A real interest in the farm, an ideal life, and satisfactory profits, go hand in hand with the style of farming practised by two farmers of York Co., Ont., Messrs. W. G. Rennie and James A. Rennie, sons of Ontario's famous gold medal farmer, Mr. Simpson Rennie. The Rennie boys are following closely in the footsteps of their father as regards their methods of farm practice. And they are well justified in their practice, as anyone may know who is acquainted with the Rennie farms, and knows of the splendid crops that are grown thereon. The casual passerby can scarcely fail to note on either of these farms — one at Ellesmere, the other at Milliken — something much above the ordinary and indicative of the fact that a real farmer, thorough going and prosperous, lives there. Both of the farms present many striking characteristics, and a stranger looking for either of them need have little doubt as to their identity as he approaches, since they stand out in considerable contrast to neighboring farms although all of the farms in the district are of a very superior order.

To farm successfully as the Rennies do calls for the exercise of a high order of intelligence and an intimate knowledge of the great diversity of things pertaining to the farm, of market conditions, of men, and that rare trait of human nature of being satisfied with a real good thing. Both of these men keep practically no stock whatever during the summer time; thus they are free to take care of their farm and crops to the very best advantage, and they also are to a considerable extent free not only to run their farms but to take real enjoyment out of life as they go along. Later in the season they stock up with feeding cattle and hogs and during the winter months turn their grains and fodders into finished market products, thereby netting the greatest returns and maintaining the fertility of their farms.

Railroad and Safety

The claim upon which Sir Edward Watkin never ceased to insist, that an English railway train was the "safest place in the world," is largely borne out by the annual returns of the Board of Trade in respect of the number of accidents that occur to passengers and railway servants. For instance, in the ten years ending 1909 only one passenger was killed on the average in every 72,000,000 journeys, and one injured in every 2,000,000 journeys! But even these figures — the only ones officially available — do not show the full extent of the security reached upon the railways of the United Kingdom, inasmuch as in the returns no account is taken of the journeys made by season-ticket holders.

To display his son's ball tossing ability, a Montreal fan organized a baseball team. While pitching in a practice game Aaron, the boy, found his father at bat. His "inshoot" hit dad in the ribs. "Son," groaned the father as they hauled him away to the hospital, "I'm proud of that speed, but—but, please try to improve that control."

MISS JANET CARNOCHAN,

Why Not Keep Our Wheat Home and Grind It Ourselves

Don't we want "new mills," "new markets," "new railways," more money in circulation," "bigger pay-rolls," increased value in our land, and all the profitable benefits which this American paper says will go to the people who grind the Canadian wheat crop?

We have the wheat crop. Why not keep it at home and grind it ourselves? Then it will be of us that it can be said:—

"The miller who is able to grind this enormous crop will be the miller of the future; and, where he is, there will be the great mills of the world."

Scottville, Mich.—"I want to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done me. I live on a farm and have worked very hard. I am forty-five years old, and am the mother of thirteen children. Many people think it strange that I am not broken down with hard work and the care of my family, but I tell them of my good friend, your Vegetable Compound, and that there will be no backache and bearing down pains for them if they will take it as I have. I am scarcely ever without it in the house.

"I will say also that I think there is no better medicine to be found for young girls to build them up and make them strong and well. My eldest daughter has taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for painful periods and irregularity, and it has always helped her.

"I am always ready and willing to speak a good word for the Lydia E. Pinkham's Remedies. I tell every one I meet that I owe my health and happiness to these wonderful medicines."—Mrs. J. G. Johnson, Scottville, Mich., R.F.D. 3.

SIR HUGH GRAHAM, LL.D.

Canada is credited with production of about two hundred daily newspapers and fully a thousand weeklies, and Sir Hugh Graham ranks amongst the very few who have made an enormous fortune out of the business. Today he is busy building his pile still higher, or cutting down some of its owers, in an effort to convince his fellow countrymen that in seeking closer trade relationship with Canada, the United States is merely seeking to provide trade for its many thousands of unemployed men to the detriment of those on this side the ne. Sir Hugh, who is an LL.D. of Glasgow, Scotland, and also a Knight Bachelor of the United Kingdom, is a native of Athelston, Que., where he was born in 1848, and took on board a load of education at Huntingdon a remarkable achievement when one considers that there is no other man known who matriculated from that seat of learning. He is founder and proprietor of the Daily and Weekly Star of Montreal, and has besides found time to devote in many directions, personal, political and occasionally philanthropic. In this latter connection he initiated a Fresh air Fund in Montreal, single handed suppressed a smallpox epidemic in 1885; insured for $1,000 each man of the first Canadian contingent that went to South Africa, and organised a Children's Patriotic Fund for families of British soldiers. It was not, however, as recognition of these that he was knighted by King Edward in 1898, but for some political deal in which Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Montreal La Presse, David Russell, and some others had hand.

TO ENTRENCH TRIPOLI.

Gen. Caneva Has Troops Fortifying the City.

Rome (via frontier), Oct. 18.—The reports received by the Government from Gen. Caneva, commander of the Italian expedition in Tripoli, show that his attention has been directed chiefly to making the city of Tripoli an impregnable base from which will be provided the reinforcements and supplies necessary for the campaign in the interior.

Fortifications are being extended all about the city, making it a thoroughly entrenched camp. Posts will be established all along the line of the advance into the country in order to make it impossible for the enemy to cut off the invading column from its base of supplies.

News from the interior reaching the Italian commander through friendly natives, describes the Turks as making an active campaign among the Arabs to incite them against the Italians. The intentions of the Italians are misrepresented and their occupation of Tripoli is declared to be an infamous blot on the page of history. The Arabs are told that when Tripoli was taken, there was a general massacre and that those who were spared, suffered something worse than death. Men and women were made slaves and babes in arms were slaughtered. It was the intention of the Italians, the Turks said, to apply the sword and the torch to the whole country. Thus, it is said, it is sought to start a holy war against the invaders. The Turks are also said to hold out the promise of rich booty when the invaders are driven into the sea.

Summer Evening Wraps.

Evening wraps are unusually novel this season, the great vogue for sheer materials finding a happy expression these more elaborate garments. marquisette wraps are the latest novelties, and while exorbitant prices are asked for them in the smart shops, there is no reason why any woman could not fashion one herself, or at least plan one and have it made at very little expence.

Black, white, Alice blue, gray, gold color and king's blue are good colors for these little wraps. Many of them are cut on extremely simple lines, with the kimono sleeve and plain back and front. There seems to be no attempt to fasten these garments. They are cut so that the front just meet, and are apparently designed to hang free.

WHO'S WHO IN CANADA

HON. E. L. WETMORE

When the Habeas Corpus Act was extended to the North West Territories in 1887, Hon. Edward L. Wetmore was chosen one of the judges called for to fill the seats of power in the five judicial districts then created to form the Supreme Court of the Territories and filling that post to the satisfaction of all lovers of law and order, there came, in 1907, the higher honor of appointment as Chief Justice of Saskatchewan.

Born at Fredericton, N.B., in 1841, young Wetmore got the ground work of his education at the local grammar school, following on to King's College there, now the University of New Brunswick, and at the early age of 23 was called to the bar. This was a particularly good beginning and the townsmen and other admirers who took the liberty of prognosticating, were, as results proved in no way rash when they scheduled for the youthful son of Fredericton, many honors under the legal banner, to arrive well in advance of the average retiral stage. Following on a number of years duty as deputy clerk of the Crown, Mr. Wetmore became a Queen's Council in 1881; was president of the New Brunswick Barristers' Society in 1886-87; and for the same term acted as representative of Alumni Association in the University Senate. In 1853 he took the field as an active politician with designs on a seat in the New Brunswick Legislature. An interesting campaign resulted in his being chosen representative for York County, and during the session that followed he made a very acceptable leader of the opposition. The North West called him in 1887, and since then, in addition to the honors already referred to, the Honorable gentleman was selected Chancellor of the Saskatchewan University in 1907, and chairman of the Committee for the consolidation of the laws of the province that same year. Amidst his multitudinous legal and social calls, Mr. Wetmore finds some spare hours to devote to fishing and shooting, and has put up some good records under both headings. He is also a strong admirer of the game of cricket, and from the earlier days brings the honor of being able to hold up a strong wicket.

Dominion census returns while yet too young to take anything like a live interest in the proceedings, his youthful school days being spent at the Montreal High. In course of time the young man passed on to the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, and subsequently to Toronto University with inclinations towards law, and in 1882 was called to the Toronto bar at the age of twenty-five. Very early his interests centred on things political and half a dozen years later his friends — and they are by no means few — were able to congratulate him as member of the North-West Assembly, where he remained until its dissolution, occupying the Premier's chair from 1897 until the division of the old North West Territory into two new provinces. At the first general election following (1905) Mr. Haultain was returned to the Saskatchewan Legislature, and followed on from the general election of 1908. He represented the North West Territories at the Coronation of His Majesty in 1902.

WHO'S WHO IN CANADA

SIR EDMUND B. WALKER

When at a somewhat tender age, Edmund Byron Walker set his foot on the bottom rung of the ladder, by engaging as general utility boy in the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Hamilton, not even the most sanguine of admiring relations were likely to have dreamt of the heaps of valuable work that he was destined to handle. For that small boy, who doubtless, after the manner of the good old fashioned days "polished the handle of the big front door", is today Sir Byron Edmund Walker, D.C.L., LL.D., C.V.O., and other things too numerous to set out in detail, so numerous that one is inclined to wonder just how he has contrived to handle all the honors and the accompanying multifarious duties and at the same time find a few hours to devote to his own personal affairs.

The appointment as agent for the Bank of Commerce came in 1881, and following on this preferment, honors showered fast and solidly, for, five years later, we find him occupying the General Manger's chair, a position held until 1906 when there came the further honor of a seat on the Board of Directors, of which body he became president in the following year Sir Edmund was still in the prime of life. In his case it could not be said that honors had been deferred to the sere and yellow, for the reins of the presidency were taken over while he was yet on the rightside of the sixties.

SIR. E. B. WALKER
Canada's Most Prominent Banker

In connection with his own particular life's business Sir B. E. Walker has occupied many positions of honor, including chairmanship of the Bankers' Section of the Toronto Board of Trade and Vice-President and President of the Canadian Bankers Association, holding the latter office for two terms. For the meeting in Toronto in 1897 of the British Association for the advancement of science, he was chosen secretary! and when came the Universal Exposition at St. Louis in 1904, he was promptly recognized as the man who was preminently fitted to act as chairman of the Section of Money and Credis in the Department of Economics of the International Congress of Arts and Science.

For a number of years he has been a trustee and senator of the Toronto University and when in 1905 the Ontario Government appointed a Royal Commission to report upon the administration of that Institution he was selected a member, and under the reorganisation which resulted, was Government nominee to first Board of Governors, becoming chairman in 1910.

HON. BENJAMIN F. PEARSON, K.C.
PEARSON, K.C.

Hon. B. F. Pearson is another of our legislators who have graduated from the journalistic field, being president of the "Chronicle" Publishing Co., Halifax, and other journals in Nova Scotia. He was elected to the Nova Scotia Legislature at the general elections in 1901 and again in 1906, and on December 22 of the latter year entered the cabinet without portfolio, and still continues to be a member of the Executive Council. Born at Meastown, Colchester Co. in 1855, the Hon. gentleman had his early education at Pictou Academy and Dalhousie College, Halifax, and for a time was alderman on the Halifax City Council.

HON. W. S. FIELDING

The name of W. S. Fielding will ever be associated with tariff changes and above all with the big reciprocity fight of 1910-11. This veteran statesman who is regarded by thousands of admirers, especially in his native province of Nova Scotia, as the Lion of the Liberal Party, has been a remarkable and outstanding figure in Canadian public life for thirty years. After a successful career as a journalist he entered the political arena in 1882, when he was elected to the Nova Scotia Legislatre. Two years later he became Premier of the province and much of the credit for re-organizing its finances is attributed to him. Mr. Fielding continued to hold the Premiership as well as the portfolio of Provincial Secretary till the great landslide of 1896 which put the Liberals in power when he was returned to the Federal House and was chosen Minister of Finance by the new administration.

Immediately on his appointment to his new office Hon. Mr. Fielding determined to revise the existing tarrif and with this end in view made a tour of the Dominion. The British preferential tarriff was the result. Eight or ten years later he made another tour which was followed by a further revision of the tarriff including an increase in the British preference.

Mr. Fielding has now been in charge of Canada's finances con-

HON. W. S. FIELDING

tinuously for fifteen years. During that period many remarkable changes have come about and several big loans have been successfully negotiated and a Canadian Mint established. Mr. Fielding also had a big hand in the agreement for the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway and was in fact acting as Minister of Railways when the agreement was signed. He was one of the plenipotentiaries appointed by His Majesty to negotiate a commercial treaty between Canada and France in 1907 and was a member of the British Royal Commission to enquire into trade relations between Canada and the West Indies in 1909.

But it was in the recent negotiations for a tarriff treaty between this country and the United States that Mr. Fielding came most prominently before the world. When the American delegation to Ottawa proved unsuccessful representatives of the Canadian Government, were invited to Washington. As all the world knows, Mr. Fielding who was the leader of the deputation, came back with a draft reciprocity agreement in his pocket and has since been the stoutest champion of this now famous pact.

Hon. Mr. Fielding is no longer young, but the vigor of his earlier years does not seem in the least impaired by the strenuous life he has led, and he is as active as ever in advocating any cause he has at heart. In a recent editorial a Nova Scotia Liberal newspaper referred to him as the Greatest Canadian Statesmen of them all', which shows the hold his commending personality has on his followers in the Maritime Provinces.

Thus soreness in the chest is at once alleviated—phlegm is loosened and ejected from the throat, old-standing coughs are removed.

"I suffered from an irritable, weak throat for three years. I had a severe cough, pain over the eyes, constant bad taste in my mouth, and noises in my ears. It was chronic catarrh. Nothing gave me permanent relief until I used Catarrhozone. In one hour it relieved, and in a few weeks drove all trace of catarrh from my system.

Very Convenient.

An enterprising builder was one day in conversation with several friends, when he was accused of using inferior materials in the construction of houses which he had recently built. A hot argument ensued in the midst of which a gentleman arrived who lived in one of the jerry-built cottages, and the matter was referred to him

"Weel, sirs," said he, "I can assure ye they are the maist convenient hooses I ever abode in."

"Oh, haud yer wheest till I explain. When first I cam' to bide in Mr. Jerry's hoose, I had to rise i' the middle o' the nicht an' open the door to let oot the cat; but the cat can gang oot an' come in noo thro' the cracks, an' I'm saved a lot o' bother."

FIGHTING AT HANKOW

Imperial Troops Lose Many But Still Hold Trenches.

Engagement Between Chinese Forces and the Revolutionists Lasted All Day and the Rebels Were Forced to Fall Back on Wu-Chang—Government Announces a Great Victory—May Have Checked Insurrection.

London, Oct. 19.—A special despatch from Hankow last night says that the Imperialists still hold the trenches, but they have lost several hundred men, killed and wounded. The fighting lasted all day. The revolutionaries after repeated but unavailing bayonet charges, fell back to Wuchang. Trainloads of wounded were brought into Hankow.

Victory Exaggerated.

Pekin, Oct. 19.—The Chinese Government claims to have won a great victory at Hankow, and it announces that the Government troops held the station, where troop trains are arriving rapidly. Although this appears to be an exaggeration of facts—the fight still continuing—the feeling prevails here that the Government has really achieved an important moral victory.

The belief has been held in Pekin that if the first encounter between the revolutionists and the loyal troops proved decisive, the supremacy would be settled there and then. Only a few unimportant towns outside of Hankow, Wuchang and Hanyang have taken part in the rising. Nanking, Changsha, Canton and other cities of known revolutionary tendencies, have not responded to the call of the insurgents, so far as can be learned. They are seemingly awaiting the result of the first encounter. Had the rebels overwhelmingly won the battle yesterday, it was expected that the provinces below the Yangtsekiang would be theirs. With other important cities in rebellion the Government would have been unable to concentrate its strength against the three Hupeh divisions.

The rebel leaders have shown the characteristic national weakness in not following up their early victories. During the past four days many miles of railway could have been taken under control by any really modern army.

No news was received yesterday from Szechuen province; even consular reports are lacking.

Acceptance of the office of viceroy of Hupeh makes Yuan Shi Kia's appointment a military one, his duty being to fight for possession of the provincial throne, and make it secure by restoring order in the two large provinces of Hupeh and Hunan. It is reliably stated that Yuan Shi Kai demanded permission to raise his own division of 10,000 troops, and also to cash a personal grant of 3,000,000 taels ($2,000,000). To this humiliation the regent agreed.

Many officials, previously dissatisfied with the progress of ref[illegible] are rallying to the support of the [illegible]ment, as they now believe t[illegible] chances for securing reforms are greater by aiding the dynasty than by supporting the present rebellion.

Acceptance in the presence of the real emergency, which confronts the Government, is a vindication of Yuan Shi Kai's loyalty. He occupies a striking strategal position with respect to his old friends and supporters. Gen. Chao Ehr-Feng, who is combatting the rebellion in Sze-Chuen, supports his right flank and is the man who, by a military expedition to Lahassa in 1910, amazed foreign militarists. At his back he has Hsi-Liang in control of railways, and at his left and rear Yang Shiang, viceroy of Chihli.

Owing to the censorship, even the officials are unable to obtain reliable news, which they are eagerly seeking from the correspondents and the foreign legations. The British and Japanese reports fail to confirm the announcement that the situation at Nanking is critical.

The Russian troops have been ordered to suppress immediately any excesses by revolutionaries or bandits near the railway in Manchuria, without waiting for further instructions. A consular report says that several revolutionaries have been decapitated at Mukden. Except the Japanese there are few foreign consuls beyond Harbin and Vladivostok; hence reports of Russian activities depend entirely upon Russian sources. There are no newspapers represented in the outlying Manchurian districts, even along the railway.

From Hankow comes the report that detachments of Japanese and German infantry are expected to arrive there soon.

An edict has been issued forbidding the exportation of rice from Pekin. A division of the old style troops, which arrived here Tuesday, are quartered in camps and the temples around the various city gates, and in the city streets in which the high officials live.

To Connect With Canada.

New York, Oct. 19.—Newman Erb, president of the Minneapolis and St. Louis and the Iowa Central Railway Companies, who returned yesterday from an inspection trip, said that preliminary arrangements had been made for extending the Minneapolis and St. Louis to the Canadian border.

Engineers were instructed to make a reconnaisance for two routes to the Canadian border, one from Minneapolis to Emerson, where a connection would be effected with the Canadian Northern, and another from Watertown to a point on the border, where a connection would be made with the Grand Trunk Pacific as well as with the Canadian Northern.

A Big Boat.

Duluth, Oct. 19.—The big steel ore carrier, Col. James M. Schoomaker, the largest bulk freighter on fresh water, cleared yesterday for her first trip down the lakes.

The Schoomaker is 617 feet long, 64 feet beam, 33 feet molded depth, and is said to have a maximum carrying capacity of 14,000 tons at a draught of 21 feet. At Messaba ore dock the Schoomaker took on 10,768 tons.

Antarctic Mails.

The Postoffice Department of the Dominion of New Zealand announces that a postoffice named "Victoria Land" has been established for the convenience of the members of the British Antarctic expedition, 1910, at Cape Evans, McMurdo Strait, Victoria Land, and that a mail will be despatched to that place early in December next.

Mail matter of all classes, including parcels, addressed to Victoria Land will be despatched from this country to New Zealand by steamer leaving Vancouver on the first of November. Correspondence of all classes should be prepaid at the rates for New Zea-

CENSUS DISAPPOINTING

Western Cities Are Dissatisfied With Their Figures.

Moosejaw and Saskatoon Are Very Sore Over the Increase Credited to Them In the Lists — Woodstock Complains That Government Falls Nearly a Thousand Below the Assessor's Total—Others Also Object.

Winnipeg, Oct. 19.—A feeling of disappointment is prevalent in the cities and towns of the west, arising from the low rate of population accorded them by the recent census. Regina alone is throwing bouquets at herself, her thirty thousand count boosting her percentake ahead of her provincial rivals. For many years the keenest rivalry has existed between Regina and Moosejaw, and when the latter learned that she had been altogether eclipsed, a sense of injustice was aroused.

Saskatoon also feels that she has been hardly dealt with, being placed lower in the list than Regina. Calgary and Edmonton are strong in their refutation of the accuracy of the figures, while other towns in the west also discredit their respective enumerations. Practically all, however, affirm that the census in their particular district was taken in an inefficient manner, and all credit themselves with a goodly number above the published figures. Vancouver, for instance, claims 30,000, while of the smaller towns Saskatoon claims an increase of 5,000 more, Port Arthur 3,000 and others in like manner affirm that the figures accredited to them should be swelled by an addition of 25 per cent. upwards.

Ottawa Disappointed.

Ottawa, Oct. 19.—That the population of Ottawa as estimated by the Dominion census-takers is far below the real population of the city is the contention of Assessment Commissioner Stewart.

The estimate given in the census returns is 86,340. Last year the estimate made by the assessment department of the city's population was 86,106, and this was really below the real figure at that.

Brantford Also.

Brantford, Oct. 19.—The census enumeration as given out from Ottawa is 1,000 short of the count made by the assessors. The population of the city was given at 23,046, and considering that the enumerators were not trained in the work, the result is favorably received.

And Woodstock.

Woodstock, Oct. 19.—Woodstock is disappointed at the figures given out in the official census report and the citizens are inclined to put more reliance in the figures of the city assessor than in those of the Dominion enumerators. The city assessor in his sworn report to the City Council gives Woodstock a population of 10,091, whereas the census report places the total at 9,321. That the assessor's figures are correct there is no reason to doubt.

Want Free Paper Repealed.

New York, Oct. 19.—At a meeting yesterday of the executive committee, officers and board of managers of the American Protection Tariff League, a resolution was adopted urging that industrial interests make common cause "against the enemies of American business," and in the fulfilment of this action all members of the league should work for the defeat at the polls of the candidates of whatsoever party who are not protectionist and vote for all candidates who are protectionists.

Other resolutions adopted opposed piecemeal revision of the tariff and requested the repeal of the agreement with Canada permitting the import of print paper free of duty.

Family Nearly Killed.

Toronto, Oct. 19.—When Francis Rea, 1,427 West Bloor street, returned to his home for breakfast yesterday morning he found the house filled with gas. He had left the house just before 7 o'clock and returned at 9. When he left, everything seemed all right, but when he searched for the source of the deadly fumes he found that a supply pipe to a gas stove had become disconnected.

He rushed upstairs and found his wife and two children. His wife had evidently been overcome while in the act of dressing, for she was perfectly clothed. Medical aid was summoned and all were revived.

Banquet to Borden.

Halifax, Oct. 19.—The Conservatives of Nova Scotia some time ago determined to tender a complimentary banquet to Hon. R. L. Borden, to be held in this city. A telegram was received from him accepting the invitation for the night of November 2. It is expected that more than six hundred guests will be present. Invitations have been extended also to the members of Mr. Borden's Government and already acceptances have been received from Hon. Messrs. Monk, Reid, Hazen and Foster.

Sugar May Drop.

Brussels, Oct. 19.—The International Sugar Conference has been summoned to meet at Brussels next week to consider a request made by Russia that she be permitted to denounce the agreement of 1907, whereby her sugar exports were limited until 1913. Russia's reason for this request is the exceptional crop. Her stocks are overwhelming, and she wishes to increase her exports. If the request is granted, the price of sugar will fall in all European markets.

Big Stock Sale.

Brockville, Oct. 19.—A big sale of thoroughbred Holstein cattle was conducted at the farm of Gordon Manhard, near Brockville In all about eighty head were disposed of, but the prices were disappointing. Alberta Maid brought the highest figure, $650, paid by Dr Harwood of Montreal. A large number of stock raisers were present from various points in Ontario and Quebec.

THE MARKETS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18.—Active buying here on the part of foreigners helped lift the price of wheat. There was also a lively demand from non-professional speculators in this country. The Argentine, Russia, Germany and Kansas all sent advices unfavorable to the bears. Close was at a net advance of 5-8 to 1 1-8c. Other leading staples also showed a unanimous gain, corn 5-8 to 1 1-8c, oats 1-4 to 3-8c to 1-2c and provisions 12 1-2 to 15c to 40c.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ¼d to ¾d higher than yesterday on wheat, and ¼d higher on corn. Antwerp wheat closed unchanged; Paris, ½c higher.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Oct. 18.—A feature of the grain trade was the much stronger feeling in the market for oats and prices advanced ¼c to ½c per bushel. The local demand was good, including sales of 50,000 bushels of No. 2 Canadian western, at 48¼c ex-store. The foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat was better and the prices bid in some cases were 1½d to 4½d higher and there were also bids in the market from New York buyers for No. 3 northern, which were flat on the market at the close. A good local trade continues to be done in flour, but bids from abroad were again out of line. There was an increased demand for bran and sales of some round lots were made for export account. A fair trade is passing in cheese, butter and eggs.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Oct. 18.—At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market the receipts of live stock for the week ending October 14 were 1875 cattle, 2235 sheep and lambs 2325 hogs and 550 calves. The offerings on the market this morning were 1000 cattle, 1200 sheep and lambs, 1000 hogs and 700 calves.

A feature of the trade was the weaker feeling in the market for cattle and prices declined fully ¼c per lb. for good to choice stock and half a cent for the lower grades. This weakness was attributed to the fact that the supply was largely in excess of the requirements of the trade, there being 500 head left over at the close, owing to the fact that the demand from butchers was very limited, as they were already well supplied with stock for the balance of the week.

The trade thruout the day was dull and dragging even at the above reduction in prices noted, and if it had not been for the demand from canners for supplies, who bought about 400 head at 1½c to 2c per pound for cows and at 2½c to 3½c for bulls, the condition of the market would have been much worse than it was. The prospects are that prices will go still lower in the near future, as the number of cattle in sight is large.

A few choice northwest steers sold at $5.65 to $5.75, but the bulk of trading done in top grades was at $5.50 to $5.60; good, at $5 to $5.25; medium, at $4.50 to $4.75, and common, at $3 to $4 per cwt. Good butcher cows brought from $3.25 to $4.25, and medium, $3 to $4 per cwt. The demand for milch cows is very good at $55 to $75 per head for good to choice milkers, and at $25 to $35 for common and medium.

Supplies of sheep and lambs were also in excess of the demand and in consequence the tone of the market was weaker and prices ruled lower. Sheep, ewes, sold at 3½c to 3¾c, and bucks and culls, at 2½c to 3¼c per lb. Lambs, weighing from 80 to 85 lbs., brought 5c to 5½c per pound.

There was a good demand for calves, of which the offerings were ample to fill all requirements and sales of extra choice heavy ones were made at $15 to $20 each and the commoner ones at from $3 to $10 each.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for hogs, prices being about steady under a fair demand from packers and sales of selected lots were made at $6.25 to $6.50, and heavy lots at $5.75 to $6 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

WIFE DEAD FOUR DAYS.

Montreal Man Drunk In Same Room With Body.

Montreal, Oct. 19.—Her face blue, her body swollen, bloodstains on her clothes and on the bed covers—this was the condition in which the police found Mrs. William Dooit, as she lay dead on the bed in a squalid little room on the third floor at No. 72 Inspector street.

His eyes bleary, his breath heavy, seated in the midst of whisky and beer bottles, dead drunk — this was the condition in which they found her husband, who sprawled on the floor at the foot of the bed.

The woman evidently died on Saturday or on Friday night. Every day the man passed in and out of the room as though nothing unusual had occurred. The fearful odor of the past two days caused the landlady, Mrs. Mary Hardy, to tell the man that he must leave at once. Tuesday night the occupants of the house heard him shaking his dead wife and telling her that she must get up, that they had to get out of the house at once. Those who heard did not know that the woman was dead. That was not discovered till yesterday morning.

The autopsy will decide whether William Dooit, who now lies in a cell in the police station, too drunk to murmur a word of explanation, shall be held on a more serious charge than drunkenness. The woman may have died of heart disease. But when she was examined at the morgue yesterday morning, merely a cursory examination, it was thought better not to wash the blood from what appeared to be a bad cut in the head.

Use Canada as Pawn.

London, Oct. 19.—The Manchester Guardian deals very sarcastically with Tuesday night's meeting at Chelsea, which was convened to celebrate Canada's rejection of reciprocity with the United States.

"With its aspersion upon a vast mass of loyal Canadians, with its criticism of the British Ambassador at Washington, with its sneers at the Unionist leader from his own followers and its endeavor to associate the Dominion Government with a rather coarse exhibition of party politics, this Chelsea meeting was a very pretty exhibition of how to consolidate the Empire."

There appears in the same paper a letter signed "Canadian Conservative," which says: "Those in Canada who, like myself, were opposed to reciprocity were actuated by two motives. First, through resentment to what seemed like American dictation and secondly through fear of drifting away from Britain. It was astounded to find at the meeting last night that we had been making an appeal to England to put a tax on wheat."

The Chats' Falls Sale.

Ottawa, Oct. 19.—Confirmation of the announcement that the Dominion Government sold fourteen acres of Victoria Island at the Chats' Falls after the election is contained in the registration of a deed of sale here. The deed gives the date of sale as Oct. 2, and is signed by Thomas Mulvey, Under Secretary of State, and J. B. Hunter, Deputy Minister of Public Works. The exact area disposed of is 4.71 acres, and the price paid is $1,471.

OCTOBER NUPTIALS IN SIDNEY

On Wednesday morning, Oct. 18, a large number of carriages were seen wending their way to the home of Mr. Francis Graham, of the Township of Sidney. Precisely at twelve o'clock noon, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends of the contracting parties those magic words which make two persons one were spoken by the Rev. A. R. Sanderson, of Belleville.

While the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march were filling the spacious home, Miss Mary Osabell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Graham, came into the parlor, which had been specially prepared for the event, leaning upon the arm of her father, who led her to the altar, where she was united in holy wedlock to Mr. Nelson Schryver, of Thurlow Township.

The bride was becomingly gowned in blue messaline silk, and carried a large bunch of cream roses. The bridesmaid was Miss Helen Graham, and she was also tastefully dressed in messaline silk and carried pink roses.

After the signing of the register and the congratulations of the guests, the bridal party sat down to a sumptuous wedding breakfast. The presents were of the most useful character and bespoke the high esteem in which the bride is held. Mr. and Mrs. Graham gave their daughter a cheque, while the groom's gift was a pearl necklace, which the bride wore; to the bridesmaid he gave a pearl crescent, and to the groomsman a locket.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Bristol, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Bristol, Madoc; Mr. and Mrs. F. Reid, Corbyville; Mr. and Mrs. F. Alyea, Trenton; Mr. and Mrs. J. Little, Johnstown; Mr. and Mrs. F. W. McCready and Mr. Oscar Fargey, of Roslin; Miss Cassie Elliott, Tweed; Miss Maggie Coulter, Tweed; Miss Dora Schryver, Toronto; Miss Alice Sweetman, Lindsay; Mr. and Mrs. S. Brown, Colborne, and others.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS ORDERED TO REVISE

The following, copied from the Hamilton Times, fully bears out some remarks on the subject which appear in another column under the heading "Current Comment":

The enumerators in the recent census-taking in Hamilton are beginning to realize that they undertook a bigger job than they at first expected. Yesterday afternoon most of the two score of workers received large envelopes with schedules and instructions to go over various parts of their district about which the census official washed moire information, and in view of the fact that the Government is holding back ten per cent. of their pay until everything is marked O. K., it looks as if they will have to complete the work or forfeit the money. It is understood that the same condition prevails in all the large cities. The schedules were all revised and marked by the local census commissioners before they were shipped to Ottawa, and it is not through any fault of theirs that some of them have to be gone over again. The Government desires some additional information, but it is not expected that it will take very long to furnish this, and then, if all is well, the enumerators and commissioners will receive the balance of their accounts.

It is said that a patient in the local asylum tried to borrow a quarter from a member of the city council. Poor fellow!

Mr. Wellington Boulter, of Picton who was in town last night, was congratulated by many friends on the recent happy celebration of his golden wedding.

For years "The Gateway to the Cariboo," has been through Ashcroft where freight and passenger traffic has had to be hauled by waggon and stage.

With the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific this condition will be entirely changed next spring, when the probabilities are that a steamer service will be operated between Tete Jaune Cache, that will be the end of steel at that time, and Fort George during the construction of the line between these two points. Ashcroft will lose its northern trade with startling suddenness. By the same token Edmonton will replace Vancouver at the same time as the supply point for British Columbia's Central Interior. Freight will be carried west from Edmonton by rail to the Cache, and barged down river to Fort George, Quesnel and Soda Creek much more cheaply that it can be waggoned from Ashcroft to Soda Creek, a distance of 167 miles. It is a simple matter of economics. 1td.

MRS. W. J. HUDSON.

After an illness of more than two years' duration, Mrs. Cassie Hudson wife of Mr. W. J. Hudson, passed away last night at the age of 59 years. The deceased, who was the daughter and only child of the late Daniel H. Mullett, of Cannifton, was born at Picton and at an early age removed with her parents to Cannifton, where she lived until her marriage, since which time she had resided in Belleville. Mrs. Hudson, who was a member of St. Andrew's Church, was greatly esteemed and respected by a wide circle of friends, whose warmest sympathy will go out to the bereaved husband and relatives.

PETER MILNE.

At an early hour this morning Mr. Peter Milne passed away at his late residence, Mill Street. Deceased had been in failing health for the past five years and his demise was not unexpected. Mr. Milne, who was 67 years of age, was born in the township of Thurlow and had lived all his life in this community. For a number of years deceased had conducted a wood yard business in this city. He was a man well known and much respected. A few years ago he was a member of the City Council, being one of the representatives from Bleecker Ward. Deceased was a member of St. Michael's church. He was twice married and is survived by his second wife and a family of three sons and one daughter. The sons are Peter, of Spokane, Wash., James, of Peterboro, and Wm. of this city. The daughter is Miss Lizzie of Toronto. The bereaved ones will receive the heartfelt sympathy of their many friends.

SLAYER OF FOURTEEN

Is Ellsworth, Kan., Ex-Convict a Wholesale Murderer?

Charles Marzyek Is Beng Sought For the Death of Five Members of the Showman Family and His Divorced Wife Says He Has a Fiendish Desire to Kill People—Connects Him With Other Terrible Crimes.

Ellsworth, Kansas, Oct. 19.—That Charles Marzyek, ex-convict, sought by the county authorities in connection with the murder of the five members of the William Showman family here Saturday night, had been in Colorado Springs, where the six members of the Wayne and Burnham families were slain and was acquainted in Monmouth, Ill., where three persons were murdered recently, was the startling statement made to the authorities yesterday by Mrs. Minnie Vopat, Marzyek's divorced wife. All these fourteen victims were killed with an axe.

Samuel Showman, brother of William Showman, head of the murdered family, yesterday started at the head of a possee to search the county. Marzyek is believed to be hidden in the neighborhood. If he is found a battle is expected.

Marzyek not long ago served a term for stealing grain from James Vopat. Tuesday night Vopat, who is the husband of Marzyek's former wife, saw the ex-convict in a field near his house. Vopat and his family, terror-stricken, locked their house and fled to the home of a Slav fellow-countryman, five miles distant.

All the members of the Slav community who had any connection with the conviction of Marzyek went armed yesterday, for he is reported to have sworn vengeance on those responsible for his imprisonment.

Ira Lloyd, the attorney who defended Marzyek in the wheat stealing case, said yesterday:

"I believe Marzyek will remain in the neighborhood until he completes his vengeance. After his sentence he told me that when he was released he would come back and kill the people who were responsible for his conviction, and also their children. 'I will put them all in hell,' he said."

Evidence furnished by Mr. and Mrs. William Showman is said to have been largely responsible for Marzyek's conviction.

James Vopat, Mrs. Minnie Vopat, who obtained a divorce from Marzyek immediately after his sentence, and married Vopat nine months later; their two children; one ten months old and the other three years; John Katke, father of the murdered Mrs. Showman, who testified against Marzyek; Mrs. John Katke and the three Katke children, Emile, aged 17; Annie, aged 18, and Mary, aged 20.

As to a possible connection between the Ellsworth and other tragedies, Mrs. Vopat said her former husband was convicted of forgery in Colorado Springs a few months ago. She said it was not improbable that he had been in Monmouth lately. The same insane cruelty on the part of the slayer is evident in the Burnham and Wayne tragedies at Colorado Springs, in the murders of William E. Dawson, his wife and daughter in Monmouth, and the killing of the Showmans.

A Graceful Act.

Quebec, Oct. 19.—Yesterday morning Messrs. Bozanquet and Bourquet, the French delegates to the ceremonies attending the unveiling of the Montcalm monument, in company with Sir Louis Jette, Hon. A. Turgeon, Lieutenant-Colonel Wood, George Bellerive and M. Raymond, French vice-consul at Montreal, deposited on the base of the monument to Gen. Wolfe a beautiful crown of flowers. The crown bore the inscription: "Hommage des dèlegues du comite Francais du Monument a Montcalm, a la memoire du General Wolfe."

In depositing the crown, M. Bozanquet spoke of the distinguished honor which he felt rendering homage to the memory of the great British general.

Lieutenant-Colonel Wood made an appropriate reply thanking the French delegates on behalf of the English populace for their thoughtful act.

Will Put Up a Fight.

Berlin, Oct. 19.—It is said here on reliable authority that it is the intention of both the South and North Waterloo Liberal executives to put men in the field in the forthcoming Ontario general elections. It is known that a meeting was held yesterday afternoon in the Bowman House here, which was attended by leading Liberal workers in South and North Waterloo, at which it was decided to enter the fray. In North Waterloo there is a likelihood of a three-cornered fight, ex-Mayor Allan Huber yesterday afternoon announcing himself as a candidate.

Rains Cause Drownings.

Pittsburg, Oct. 19.—Heavy rains throughout eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania the last few days were responsible for the loss of five lives during Tuesday night.

Mrs. Robert Mejana, her eight-year-old daughter Elsie, and Mrs. Charles Mejana were drowned while attempting to ford a short creek near Rayland, Ohio, and Mrs. Edward Moher and her four-year-old daughter were drowned near Greenville, Pa., while crossing a creek near their home.

Tampered With Switch.

Cobourg, Oct. 19.—Two boys from Grafton, 9 and 10 years of age, appeared before Magistrate Boggs here yesterday charged with tampering with the C.N.R. switch at Grafton.

It will be remembered that the switch was opened and a special train on the C.N.R. ran into it on the day of the opening of the new Toronto to Trenton line, fortunately without loss of life.

The boys were let go and the case dismissed.

Small Heads Dont Mean Small Brains. .

The fact that you take a small size in[illegible] does not necessarily mean th[illegible] have a small brain. A man wit[illegible] small head may be much cleverer than a man with a large one. Moreover, the size of the brain is not everything, since, if undeveloped, it is no more likely to produce anything of value than land which is not fertile. There are people with large heads who display so little intelligence that one almost expects to hear their brains rattle when they move, like a shrivelled kernel in a nut.

BOXING

MOORE BEAT NELSON.

BOSTON, Oct. 17.—Clever boxing gave Pal Moore, of Philadelphia, the decision over Battling Nelson, former lightweight champion of the world, in a twelve-round bout at the Armory Athletic Association to-night.

Moore landed blows on the former champion on his body and head at will, but with little effect. Nelson devoted his time to infighting almost entirely. His body blows were terrific and at times winded his opponent.

WHITE AND DRISCOLL DRAW.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 17.—Jack White, of Chicago, and Boyo Driscoll of England fought eight fast rounds to a draw before the Southern Athletic Club last night. Both fought cleverly and both left the ring practically unmarked.

The first fall came in fifteen minutes and twenty seconds; the second in five minutes nineteen seconds. Yousiff Mahmout failed to throw Jesse Reimer, of Des Moines, in a thirty-minute handicap match.

RESULT IN CANADA IMPERIAL VICTORY

Election of the Conservativ Government Celebrated at Chelsea Town Hall

LONDON, Oct. 18.—The meeting held this evening in Chelsea Town Hall to celebrate the victory of Imperialism in the Canadian elections was of a most enthusiastic character. Not only was the hall crowded to its fullest extent, but two overflows were necessitated. The platform was gaily bannered with Union Jacks and Canadian flags were carried by those attending. Earl Stanhope took the chair, and those present included Lord Willoughby de Broke, Mr. Pagecroft, M. P., Mr. L. J. Maxse, Mr. Hoare, M. P. The Chelsea and Tariff Reform League was fully represented. Before the speeches, patriotic songs were rendered, including "Land of Hope," "Rule Britannia," and "The Maple Leaf," which last was sung standing.

The chairman's opening words were brief, but telling. If the dominions, said he, were truly self-governing, they in England could not interfere road that led to wider nationality and and as Imperialists they would not if they could. Mr. Taft had time and again told the people of the Dominion of Canada they stood at the parting of the ways. They were to-night rejoicing that Canada had taken the road that led to wider nationlaity and closer union. The Conservative party in Canada had a policy of high ideas, yet practical politics, and stuck to it, through thick and thin.

Lord Willoughby de Broke, the principal speaker of the evening, said they were glad Canada had decided to remain in the Empire. She had taken the decision in the face of pressure from the United States, pressure from within, which was also legitimate, and sho has, as he had said taken it in the face of pressure from the outside, and pressure a great deal nearer Westminster than New York, and pressure which he did not think could be called legitimate pressure.

Mr. Pagecroft said the greatest bribe which had ever been offered to a young nation was that which the United States had offered the Dominion. To the whole agricultural community, and to many other interests there was an enormous pecuniary gain in the proposals which the United States proposed, but to the glory of the community let it be said, the soul of that nation had triumphed. She was going to cling to the National Policy of Sir John Macdonald, which had made Canada great.

Mr. Maxse said that in a national review from the Canadian victories which they celebrated, many morals could be drawn for the Unionist party. If they wished to win the great political contest they must urge their views on the electorate in season and out of season. Unionism stood for everything that patriotic Englishmen hold dear, and he appealed to the rank and file to neglect no opportunity of bringing pressure to bear on men at the top, in order first that the constructive work of the Unionist party might be placed on the statue book.

WHAT CANADIANS ARE DOING

W. S. DINGMAN

Editor and proprietor of the Daily Herald, Stratford, Ont., Mr. Dingman was born at Lambton Co. in that province in 1858, coming of United Empire Loyalist stock, his father's family having settled at Bay of Quinte district in about 1783. After completing his education at Sarnia public and grammar schools he decided on a journalistic career and made beginning on the Strathroy Dispatch which he conducted until 1884, when he went over to the Daily Sentinel at Port Arthur. But young Dingman aimed higher, he aimed at being a newspaper owner and his chance came in 1886 when he succeeded in founding the Stratford Herald, a newspaper which, under his skilful guidance has kept going to the front all the time. He has also found time from the multifarious duties that fall on a newspaper proprietor who edits his own journal to act as President of the Canadian Press Association for a term and for ten years a member and one year chairman of the College Inst. Board. Mr. Dingman has also gone through the Municipal mill of his adopted town, having been three years alderman prior to his election as mayor in 1909.

HON. WM. TEMPLEMAN,

Hon. William Templeman, P.C., M.P., Minister of Inland Revenue for Canada under the administration which recently came to a close down, is an Ontario man, having first seen the light in Packenham village, on 28 September 1844. Educated at the public school there his early aims and ambitions carried him to the ranks of journalism, and at the comparatively early age of 23 he launched out as newspaper proprietor with the Almonte Gazette, which he held and managed for seventeen years, developing a journal of considerable local influence, and with some financial results. The year 1884 found Mr. Templeman on the westward trek, and in that year appeared the "Times" of Victoria B.C., a newspaper that has, under his experienced guiding hand continued to grow in importance and in prosperity.

HON. W. TEMPLEMAN
Minister of Inland Revenue.

With his journal well established Mr. Templeman, as has been the case with so many Canadian journalists, let his mind run in the direction of parliamentary honors. His three initial efforts to enter the House of Commons were failures however, being unsuccessful in 1891 and on two occasions in 1896. The following year Mr. Templeman was called to the Senate and in February 1902 sworn of the Privy Council and entered the Government without portfolio. Elected to the Commons as representative of Victoria B.C., his worth was promptly recognized in the appointment of Minister of the Inland Revenue Department, and on the creation of a Department of Mines in May 1907 Mr. Templeman was assigned the Ministerial duties. At the 1908 election, however, there came a reverse, but only to be followed soon afterwards, by an acclamation return as representative for Comox-Atlin.

LOUIS-JOSEPH TARTE

One of the prominent leaders in French Canadian journalism, Mr. Tarte was born at L'Assomption, Que., on Christmas Day 1872, his father being another Canadian leader J. Israel Tarte. Louis had a well grounded education in the Quebec Commercial Academy, and progressed to journalistic stage in early life, and is today president and general manager of "La Patrie", Montreal.

L. J. TARTE

ALPHONSE VERVILLE, Canada's Only Labor M.P.

To the island of Montreal belongs the honor of being the birthplace of the only labor member of the late lamented Government, and, moreover, to have as part of her royal territory the constituency which sent him to help steer the country's legislative bark in the track it ought to go. The Maisonneuve electors selected him on February 1906 to fill the vacancy resulting from the death of the Hon. R. Prefontaine, he was re-elected in 1908 and the men of Maisonneuve claim they made no kind of an error in their choice. Mr. Verville was born at Cote St. Paul in 1864, and his bustling fellow townsmn by the banks of the canal are not a little proud to claim him as a man and brother. He was educated at Sault-au-Recollet and made an unsuccessful effort to reach a chair in the provincial assembly in 1904.

Three Canadian Heroes.

Pittsburg, Oct. 19.—Edgar A. Current will receive a bronze medal and $2,000 in cash towards paying for his education, as a result of his heroism in saving a boy from drowning at Toronto on June 27, 1909. This was one of the interesting announcements made here yesterday by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission. Forty-seven bronze and 12 silver medals were awarded at the fall meeting of the commission. Besides cash awards of $53,306, pensions amounting to $315 a month were left to survivors of men who had risked their lives to save others. Thirteen of the heroes paid with their lives their devotion to humanity.

Other Canadian participants in the awards of the commission are William H. Shaw's mother, who gets a silver medal and $1,000 to liquidate a mortgage on her property, as a result of the heroism of her son in trying to save a companion from drowning at Medicine Hat, July 18, 1909, and the father of Lars C. Risvold, who lost his life trying to save two well-diggers from suffocation at Aylesbury, Sask., Nov. 22, 1907. The father gets a bronze medal and $800 in cash.

FIVE DOCTORS GAVE UP ALL HOPE

Said she Would Die of Kidney Trouble

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" CURED HER

MOUNTAIN, ONT., Dec. 14th. 1910.

"For six years, I suffered from dreadful Kidney Disease. My legs and lower part of my body were fearfully swollen, and the pain was awful. My people thought sometimes I was dead, as I would faint from the agony. Five different doctors attended me, and all said it was kidney trouble and gave me no hope of getting well. A kind neighbor told me to try "Fruit-a-tives" and mentioned the case of Mrs. Fenwick, who was cured by them.

I took "Fruit-a-tives"—and in a short time, I began to feel better, the swelling went down, the pain was easier, and then "Fruit-a-tives" entirely cured me. All my friends look upon my recovery as a miracle, and I am unable to praise "Fruit-a-tives" enough."

(MISS) MAGGIE JANNACK.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the most scientific remedy ever discovered for Irritation or Congestion of the Kidneys, frequent Pain In The Back, and Swollen Limbs. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

THE NEW CURLING RINK.

Mr. Charles Vanderwater, who has the contract for the concrete work in connection with the new curling rink, to-day started his portion of the work on the structure. The erection of the building will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible.

COMING TO BELLEVILLE.

Frank Birch, electrician, with Harvey J. Milne, Bagot street, is leaving Sunday, for Belleville, where he has accepted a position with an electrical concern there. Mr. Birch is one of the best known young men of the city, and his many friends will wish him success in his new position.—Kingston Whig.

FOOT BADLY CRUSHED.

A man named McFadden, employed on the construction of the C.N.O.R. here, yesterday afternoon met with a painful accident. He was assisting in unloading some ties when one fell upon his left foot, crushing it severely. The unfortunate man was taken to the hospital where his injuries were attended to. No serious results are anticipated.

BORNE TO THE TOMB.

Although the funeral of the late Mrs. Wm. J. Hudson was announced as private, there were a number in attendance at the obsequies, which took place this afternoon. An impressive service was held in St. Andrew's Church, being conducted by the pastor, Rev. A. S. Kerr. Upon the casket were deposited a number of beautiful floral tributes. Interment took place at the Belleville cemetery. The bearers were Messrs. E. G. Porter, M.P., S. S. Lazier, J. Taylor, C. H. Vermilyea, S. A. Lockwood and Col. Stewart.

FRONT ST. IN BAD SHAPE.

Although it is impossible at this late season of the year to make permanent improvements to the roadway on Front Street, it could at least be placed in a passable condition, which at present it scarcely is. Within the past few days springs to vehicles have been broken owing to the ruts and holes in the road. These defects are especially noticeable near the crossing in front of the footbridge and the crossing just south. A few loads of material, which would not be expensive, could be distributed on the street and be appreciated by those who are compelled to drive that thoroughfare.

THE BOYS HAD GONE.

The police were last evening called to a residence on the west hill, it being reported that some boys were helping themselves to apples from a tree in rear of the premises. It is needless to say the boys had decamped before the officer arrived on the scene.

LICENSE REDUCTION.

The movement for the reduction in the number of hotel licenses in Kingston has been launched and the present indications are that the fight will be a warm one. The temperance forces have been organized and already they have commenced work. The question will probably be submitted to the people next January.

THE MILK QUESTION.

A meeting will be held in the city building to-morrow afternoon, when addresses will be given by Mr. A. F. MacLaren, of Toronto, Mr. P. P. Farmer and others in reference to the milk question and the discovery of the new process of heating milk mechanically. This is a matter which is of great importance to this section of the community, where much milk is produced.

FISHERMEN COMPLAIN.

The Deseronto Post says: Complaint is being made by those engaged in fishing in the bay that some persons are interfering with their nets. We were given to understand that some unprincipled person, not satisfied with robbing the net of fish, destroyed one belonging to Tom Warren, doing damage to the extent of $30 or $40. It seems a great pity that men who have paid a license to carry on a legitimate business should be molested in this way.

COL. STEWART RETIRES.

Transfer of the command of the 15th Regiment takes place to-day. Col. Stewart, whose term has expired, will be placed on the reserve of officers, and will be succeeded by Major Marsh. Col. Stewart, who has served seventeen years in the regiment, from captain upward, has been a most popular commanding officer and will have the best wishes of all who have ever been under his command, of his brother officers and of the general public in his retirement. During his command the armories were built and the organization was increased from a six company battalion to an eight company regiment.

DR. SPROULE CHOSEN SPEAKER OF HOUSE

Veteran Representative of East Grey to Preside in the Commons

OTTAWA, Oct. 19.—Dr. T. S. Sproule, the veteran representative of East Grey, is the Government's choice for Speaker. His elevation to the Speakership was definitely decided upon this afternoon, and Dr. Sproule, who is now in the captial, is already receiving the congratulations of his friends. The choice will meet with general approval. For thirty-three years he has been continuously a member of the Commons, a record surpassed only by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. John Haggart among the members-elect. He is personally popular on both sides of the House, and no man has a better knowledge of the rules of procedure and debate. By reason of seniority and long party services Dr. Sproule had a claim to Cabinet preferment, but did not press it, nor in fact did he seek the Speakership. The honor has been thrust upon him. The appointment, apart from his personal fitness for the post, is also politically expedient. Dr. Sproule's election to the Speakership will be the first order of business when Parliament assembles on Nov. 15.

The Speakership of the Senate, as has already been intimated, will almost certainly go to Senator Landry.

Mr. P. E. Blondin, member for Champlain, will be appointed Deputy-Speaker. He is practically the only French-Canadian member-elect with Parliamentary experience who speaks English fluently, available for the position.

THIEF CAUGHT IN HIS OWN WAGGON

TORONTO, Oct. 20.—William Swain of 23 Lutrell Avenue, was arrested yesterday afternoon on a charge of theft. His arrest, which was made by Detective Mitchell was of a novel character. He had been suspected for some time, as a result of which he was being watched by Detectives Cronin and Mitchell in the vicinity of the Manning Cold Storage Co., on Colborne Street.

Yesterday was Detective Mitchell's turn to watch and he was standing behind some cases, when a dray belonging to the East Toronto Cartage Co. drove up. The driver, who happened to be the accused, stopped and loaded four cases of butter and then drove away. The detective was too quick for him, and jumped on the back of the waggon. The accused drove to Front Street and turning around, saw Mitchell standing behind him. He then knew that he was caught and admitted stealing the goods.

The firm has missed more than $100 worth of butter recently, and it is alleged that the accused took it all. A watch had been set out for him last week, but he was found at fault only yesterday.

MILLIONAIRES ARE NOT LOVED

"Nobody loves a millionaire any more," he said. "Once millionaires were the popular heroes of the nation—the brilliant exemplars set up for youth to follow. But now everybody is throwing bricks or making laws to hurl at the rich. The millionaire, following the instinct of self-protection, has taken a back seat. It's awful. The millionaire daren't show his head in Government affairs any more, for somebody is around ready to throw something. All we can do these days is vote. Is a millionaire sent to the Senate. Well, right off, someone accuses him of buying his seat.

"Is he given a Cabinet position? Well, no President dare do such a thing if he values his political life.

"A millionaire has no chances any more. Instead of sending successful men of affairs to Washington and to our State Legislature to make our laws we are sending men who could not run a peanut stand—political incompetents who can get votes. The corporations are being hampered by too much legislation."

AVIATOR KILLED WHILE FLYING

MACON, Ga., Oct. 19.—Eugene Ely, the aviator, fell thirty feet while making a flight at the State Fair grounds to-day. He died eleven minutes after the accident. He regained consciousness just before the end long enough to say: "I lost control. I know I am going to die."

Eugene Ely was one of the best known aviators in America. His reputation was international as an expert, conservative and experienced pilot. He has probably done as much, or more than any other American aviator in furthering military experiments in connection with the U. S. navy. [illegible] was Ely who first made the flight [illegible] a warship, successfully started from the U. S. S. Birmingham, off Norfolk, Va., in November 1910.

Ely joined Glen H. Curtiss at Minneapolis in June 1910, and since then has made hundreds of exhibition flights.

GEORGE'S BUDGET AN EXPENSIVE LUXURY

Eleven Million Pieces of Land will Have to be Valued—An Almost Endless Task

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 19.—The Unionist press is seized with justifiable glee over the report of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, showing how Lloyd George's 1909 budget is operating with regard to the land tax. The bitter feeling that this aroused at the time is not recalled by many critics. For the purpose of assessing and collecting the reversion and undeveloped duties then imposed, it was necessary to undertake the work of a complete valuation of all the lands of the United Kingdom. Lloyd George set about drawing up a new Domesday Book with a light heart.

The interest and revenue report now shows that there are eleven million hereditaments of different plots of land to be valued. For this work a veritable army of officials has been instituted. There are 172 permanent civil service officials, with aggregate salaries of $338,000, with 1,376 assistants of various kinds—draughtsmen, technical assistants and others—bringing the total salary and payroll up to the estimated amount of $1,408,000. To this there is to be added $25,000 for office accommodation.

The reports give the number of hereditaments at a value of $369,000. The actual yield in revenue so far has been $5,810. At the present rate of progress it is caluculated that the work will require twenty-nine years, at a cost of $40,000,000. But since March the number of officials has been greatly augmented. The increased number of first-class appraisers adds $68,750 to the yearly salary list.

It is now pointed out that the famous budget, which started the recent parliamentary revision, directs that all hereditaments owned by statutory companies, such as railroads, shall make new valuations in 1914. The report also shows a marked shrinkage in the values of estates passing to new owners by the death of former ones. In 1906 the total value of such estates was £298,000,000 sterling, or $1,490,000,000. In 1909 it had shrunk to £283,000,00, and in 1910-11 to £272,000,000.

The budget also miscalculated the number of the "very rich" liable to supertax. There were 30,829 forms issued to the end of the year, but only 10,257 cases were disclosed as liable to pay the additional impost. The total income reported by these is £128,992,000. The amount of the supertax is £2,458,000.

The number of the 'very rich,' that is those whose incomes rareoev xzfi'l is, those whose incomes are over £5,000 a year, and who pay 60 cents on the sovereign, in these the income tax is shown to be slightly over £10,000,000.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LEADERS CONFER

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 19.—At a meeting here to-day of the Executive Committee of the World's Sunday School Association, which was attended by Sabbath school leaders from Europe, Africa and America, it was voted to hold the seventh world's Sunday School convention in Zurich, Switzerland, on July 8 to 16, 1913. Wm. N. Hartshorn, of Boston, Vice-President of the World's Associatoin, and President of the International Sunday School Convention, made a lengthy report of his recent visit to European cities in the interests of world-wide Sunday School work.

Bishop Hartzell, LL.D. of Maderia, West Africa, addressed the Executive Committee at length, stating that because of the inspiration of the World's Association in 1907, organized mission work has been inaugurated in North Africa and for the first time in centuries.

It happens to be the Methodist Episcopal Church, which is engaged in work on the shores of the Mediterranean along the thousands of miles of coast from Egypt to Gibraltar. There are now twenty-seven missionaries at work.

Those attending the conference represented 285,000 Sunday Schools and 28,000,000 scholars. Among those in attendance was the Hon. John J. MacLaren, Toronto.

IMPERIALISTS RETREAT

(Intelligencer Special.)

SHANGHAI, China, Oct. 20.—A wireless message from Hankow received here at noon to-day says the Government troops have retreated up Seventy Mile Creek, while the Chinese warships have withdrawn down the river out of sight. The revolutionaries claim a great victory. Hankow itself is quiet. The retreat of the Imperial forces is confirmed in other despatches from Kiu Kiang, which state that the Chinese warships are retreating to that place.

THE REBELS WON

WOMEN TO BE WINDOW MODELS

The delegates from Cincinnati who attended the convention in Chicago of the National Association of Window Trimmers, have inaugurated a plan which if perfected will soon supplant the old-fashioned "dummies" wearing garments with human models.

The move was favored at the convention for two reasons. In the first place the "wearability" and style of the garment are shown to poorer advantage on the dummy than on the human form. Then, again, a pretty woman would attract attention to the whole window display. If the plan is adopted generally a new occupation—that of window model—will be found.

PURE MILK HAS CUT DEATH RATE

The following, in view of the public meeting which is to be held here to-morrow, will be read with interest.

A delegation of ladies from St. Ann's ward, Montreal, who were connected with the pure milk station in that district, waited upon the Controllers and presented a report, showing the excellent work which had been done during the past summer by the distribution of milk. The infant death rate in the district had been cut down from fifteen per cent. to seven per cent. It was held by the delegation that the distribution of milk should be continued during the winter, as it would mean the saving of many lives. To continue this work it would be necessary, however, for the Controllers to vote more money. The Board decided to vote $100 for the present; later on, more will be given.

The scheme proposed for adoption here would, it is claimed, be even more efficient in cutting down infant mortality than that which has been adopted in Montreal.

When we look at some men who say they were sent to save the world we can't help laughing.

The total estimated loss by fire in London, England, in thirteen years amounts to $34,187,979, or an average of $2,629,830 a year. That speaks of solidity of construction and good fire protection.

If the example of the man who attended church at Orangeville on Sunday last and threw the preacher out of the pulpit because he did not like the sermon were to become contagious, there would be "doin's" in some of the churches here and elsewhere every Sunday.

The value of lumber, timber, lath and shingle production of Canada during the calendar year of 1910 was $83,989,197, according to a report which has just been issued by the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior. "What," asks the Toronto Star, "are the Conservative members waiting for in regard to offering Hon. W. T. White a seat? Are they expecting that some Liberal member will make way for him?" Why not? The Conservative Premier has given a high office in the Cabinet to a Liberal. The Liberals might be equally magnanimous in giving a seat in Parliament to a member of their party who has been thus exalted in public life.

The people of Stratford are talking about placing the management of their public utilities under commissions. Here the commission plan works very well in some cases and not so well in others. It all depends upon the kind of men chosen as commissioners. The right man will make his presence felt under almost any system, and no system can be expected to work very well unless it is well carried out. Possibly the people of Stratford are such a position that no change is likely to be for the worse. In that case the change to the commission plan may be for the better.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

MINER'S ADVICE TO JAIL OFFICER

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 20.—"Old Bill" Miner, the famous train robber, who escaped from the State Prison Farm at Milledgeville last Tuesday, and who is still at large, is having fun with the officers of the Georgia Penitentiary. Over his own signature, the highwayman, who should now be serving a 20-year sentence in the Georgia Penitentiary for robbing a Southern Railway passenger train, near Gainesville, boasts that when he secured a transfer a few weeks ago from the roads of Newton County to the State Farm at Milledgeville, on the plea that he was seriously ill, he was only carrying out a plan to escape. To-day Chairman Robert E. Davidson, of the Georgia Prison Commission, received a card in "Old Bill's" own handwriting, reading as follows:

"My Dear Sir,—I write to thank you for your kindness in putting me at Milledgeville. My dear sir, don't trust a prisoner, no matter how sick he is or makes out he is.
"Yours truly,
"B. MINER."

The card was dated Oct. 17, and bore the postmark of a railroad post office. This State, the Southern Express Company and the Southern Railroad, have offered large rewards for "Old Bill's" capture. "Old Bill" cached a lot of the money he secured when he held up the Southern Railway train, and it is believed he has secured the money and is headed for the Far North-West, where he formerly operated.

WHAT better criterion is there to judge the people by than the jewelry they wear?

It's just as true to-day as in the days of early Egyptian, Roman and Athenian life, that the rank, taste and means are manifested by the jewelry possessed

Our people have been gradually educated to a better standard of jewelry quality; and we strive always to keep stock that conforms to the demands of the present.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system. THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.

THE ONE REMEDY so good that its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle-wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.

It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION. The Haunted Chamber

"You have brought me here to—" she ventures idly.

"Ay, to tell you what is on my mind. I have said you want to marry Adrian; I mean to marry Florence Delmaine. To-day I disliked certain symptoms I saw, that led me to believe that my own machinations have not been as successful as I could wish. Before going in for stronger measures, there is one more card I will play. I have written you a note. Here it is, take it"—handing her a letter folded in a cocked hat fashion.

"What am I to do with this?" asks Dora, nervously.

"Read it. It is addressed to yourself. You will see I have copied Adrian's handwriting as closely as possible, and have put his initials, 'A.D.' at the end. And yet"—with a diabolical smile—"it is no forgery, either, as 'A.D.' are my initials also."

"Can you—will you meet me tomorrow at four o'clock in the lime-walk? I have been cold to you perhaps, but have I not had cause? You think my slight attentions to another betoken a decrease in my love for you, but in this, dearest, you are mistaken. I am yours heart and soul. For the present I dare not declare myself, for the reasons you already know, and for the same reasons am bound to keep up a seeming friendliness with some I would gladly break with altogether. But I am happy only with you, and happy, too, in the thought that our hearts beat as one.

Yours forever, A. D."

Dora, having finished the letter, glances at him uneasily.

"And—what is the meaning of this letter? What is it written for? What am I to do with it?" she stammers, beating the precious missive against the plam of her hand, as though in loathing of it.

"You will show it to her. You will speak of it as a love letter written to you by Sir Adrian. You will consult her as to whether it be wise or prudent to accede to his proposal to meet you alone in the lime-walk. You will, in fact, put out all your powers of deception, which"—with a sneering smile—"are great, and so compel her to believe the letter is from him to you."

"But———" falters Dora.

"There shall be no 'but' in the matter. You have entered into this affair with me, and you shall pursue it to the end. If you fail me I shall betray your share in it—more than your share—and paint you in such colors as will shut the doors of society to you. You understand now, do you?"

"Go on," says Dora, with colorless lips.

"Ah, I have touched the right chord at last, have I? Society, your idol, you dare not brave. Well, to continue, in your own sweet, innocent way"—with another sneer that makes her quiver with fear and rage—"to account for Adrian's decided and almost lover-like attentions to her in the room we visited, that you had had a lovers' quarrel with him some time before, earlier in the day; that, in his pique, he had sought to be revenged upon you, and soothe his slighted feelings by feigning a sudden interest in her. You follow me?"

"Yes," replies the submissive Dora. Alas, how sincerely she now wishes she had never entered into this hateful intrigue!

"Then when you have carefully sown these lies in her heart, and seen her proud face darken and quiver with pain beneath your words"—oh, how his own evil face glows with unholy satisfaction as he sees the picture he has just drawn stand out clear before his eyes!—"you will affect to be driven by compunction into granting Sir Adrian's supposed request, you will don your hat and cloak and go down the lime-walk to encounter—me. If I am any judge of character, that girl, so haughty to all the world, will lower her pride for her crushed love's sake, and will follow Adrian. Are you listening?"

She is indeed listening with all her might to the master mind that has her in thrall.

"You will remember not to start when you meet me," he continues, issuing his commands with insolent assumption of authority over the dainty Dora, who, up to this, had been accustomed to rule it over others in her particular sphere, and who now chafes and writhes beneath the sense of slavery that is oppressing her. "You will meet me calmly, oblivious of the fact that I shall be clad in my cousin's light overcoat, the one of which Miss Delmaine was graciously pleased to say she approved yesterday morning."

His eyes light again with a revengeful fire as he calls to mind the slight praise Florence had bestowed in a very casual fashion on his coat. Every smile, every kindly word addressed by this girl to his cousin, is treasured up by him and dwelt upon in secret, to the terrible strengthening of the purpose he has in view.

"But if you should be seen—be marked," hesitates Dora, faintly.

"Pshaw! am I one to lay my plans so clumsily as to court discovery on even the minutest point?" he interrupts impatiently. "When you meet me you will——But enough of this; I shall be there to meet you in the lime-walk, and after that you will take your cue from me."

"That is all you have to say?" asks Dora ,anxious to quit his hated presence.

"For the present, yes. Follow my instructions to the letter, or dread the consequences. Any blunder in the performance of this arrangement I shall lay to your charge."

"You threaten, sir!" she exclaims, angrily, though she trembles.

"Let it be your care to see that I do not carry out my threats," he retorts, with an insolent shrug.

The next day, directly after luncheon, as Florence is sitting in her own room, touching up an unfinished water sketch of part of the grounds round the castle—which have—alas—grown only too dear to her, Dora enters her room. It is an embarrassed and significantly smiling Dora that trips up to her, and says with pretty hesitation in her tone:

"Dearest Florence, I want your advice about something."

"Mine?" exclaims Florence, laying down her brush, and looking, as she feels, astonished. As a rule, the gentle Dora does not seek for wisdom from her friends.

"Yes, dear, if you can spare me the time. Just five minutes will do, and then you can return to your charming sketch. Oh"—glancing at it—"how exactly like it it is—so perfect—what a sunset, and what firs! One could imagine one's self in the Fairies' Glen by just looking at it."

"It's not the Fairie's Glen at all; it is that bit down by Gough's Farm," says Florence, coldly. Of late she has not been so blind to Dora's artificialness as she used to be.

"Ah, so it is!" agrees Dora, airily, not in the least discomposed by her mistake. "And so like it, too. You are a genius, dearest, you are, really, and might make your fortune, only that you have one already made for you, fortunate girl."

"You want my advice," suggests Florence, briefly.

"Ah, true; and about something important, too!" She throws into her whole air so much coquetry mingled with assumed bashfulness that Florence knows by instinct that the 'something' has Sir Adrian for its theme, and she grows pale and miserable accordingly.

"Let me hear it, then," she urges, leaning back with a weary sigh.

HON. JOHN HAGGART

John Haggart crossed the threshold of parliament when some of its present luminaries were being cared for in the nursery, and he has been one of its most picturesque and interesting figures ever since.

It was in 1872 that John Haggart, mayor of Perth, an ambitious and handsome young politician, first went to the electors as the Conservative candidate. His majority was some nine hundred odd. The men who voted for John in seventy-two are nearly all passed from this vale of tears, but their sons and their sons' sons have been steadfastly voting for the old war-horse ever since.

He is, perhaps, the oldest-man that ever sat in the Dominion House. If he lives until November 14 he will celebrate then his seventy-sixth birthday, which it must be admitted is some age to be stumping and canvassing a constituency. Laurier is five years his junior, Hon. Wm. Paterson is three, and as for Fielding, he is quite a juvenile beside Hon. John. In the Senate, Sir Richard Cartwright is a year older, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell can look down upon the Lanark member with the added weight of thirteen winters.

He is one of the genuine picturesque figures who wend their way around Parliament Hill. In his younger days, they say he was one of the handsome men in the House and one of the best groomed. He is still debonair, ruddy-cheeked, with a fine mop of white hair; a sprightly and gay veteran is John Haggart.

The Age of Fish.

Recent observations show that the rings on the shells of the freshwater mussel are usually annual rings, though sometimes two rings are laid down in one year. The concentric markings on the scales of fishes enable us to determine the age, and we can even tell from the salmon's scales whether it has spawned or not. The age of a fish can also be told from its otoliths — small limy concretions in its ear — and even from some of its bones.

WHAT CANADIANS ARE DOING

LT.-COL. FRED. WHITE

Canada's Great North West has been settled without anything in the shape of the lawlessness that marked the dawn of white civilization in certain other sections of the American Continent. Those who have "gone in" have, with possibly a few exceptions, been of a good breed, anxious to make their way, willing to abide by the law written and unwritten, and with determination to leave behind them a blazed trail that the follower-on would approve. This big family had, notwithstanding, a few to whom the law of self made stronger appeal than that of the general welfare; men with a cross in their temper and a gun on their hip. For such as these, arrangements had to made. And the North West Mounted Police came into being.

LIEUT.-COL. FREDERICK WHITE

With the administrative work in connection with the raising of this estimable body of peace-preservers and guardians-in-general of the inhabitants of these territories will ever be associated the name of Lieut.-Col. White, C.M.G., who has held the appointment of comptroller of the Royal North West Mounted Police since 1878 after a short term service as chief clerk.

Col. White saw the daylight at Birmingham, England, in February of 1847, and spent his alaphetical days there. The bigger latitudes and longtitudes of the Dominion attracted him in early manhood, however, and he "broke away" for the west Atlantic shores. Railroad life appealed to him, as it has to many thousands of lads from the old Country, and as a start-out on life's real business journey, White set his feet on the first rung of the ladder at Montreal by getting his name on the payroll of the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company. This did not hold him for any extended length of time however, for we find him at Ottawa in 1869, in which year he started in to hold down an appointment in the Department of Justice, and to such extent did he make good at the Capital, that the administrative work in the North West followed.

During the years 1880-82 White acted as private secretary to Sir John MacDonald, and in course of the following year was honored with the status of a Deputy Minister.

Col. White started on his career military while in Montreal, where he served in the ranks of the 3rd Victoria Rifles, and later held a commission in the Governor General's Foot Guards at Ottawa, in which he attained the rank of Captain. In recognition of his services in connection with the raising, and the equipment of a contingent to fight alongside the Brother Britons in South Africa Captain White was accorded the rank of Lt.-Colonel in the Canadian Militia in 1901, and the title of C.M.G. followed in 1902; that of Commissioner of the North West Territories being added three years later.

NERVES UNSTRUNG, WAS "DOWN AND OUT."

Feels 10 Years Younger

After Taking Morriscy's No. 14 Blood Tablets.

MONTREAL, P. Q., May 16, 1911.

I was all rundown and felt all out of sorts. My appetite was bad—my complexion sallow—my spirits low, and I didn't seem to have any ambition to do my ordinary housework. I was in this condition for about a year, although several physicians prescribed a tonic for me, and I tried several well advertised remedies, but all without success. About three months ago one of your booklets was left at my house, and I read of the wonderful success of Dr. Morrisey and of the remarkable cures that his medicines were making, and decided to try his No. 14 Tablets. I used one box, and before it was half gone I began to feel better, and it gave me courage to keep on. I have just finished the third box, and only wish I could tell you how much better I feel. My work is now a pleasure to me, and I feel 10 years younger. You certainly have the best real Blood Tonic and blood maker that I have heard of, and anyone in need of such a remedy will find yours the very best and most reliable. Mrs. Anna Hafferty.

The above prescription is not a "Cure-All" or so-called patent medicine. Dr. Morrisey prescribed it for 44 years, and it cured thousands after other doctors failed.

What a Calamity

About a year ago the New York Herald established a newspaper bureau in Ottawa, for the purpose of politically educating, through the columns of The Herald, what it considered the benighted Canadian, and at the same time prepare the people of the United States for an addition to its already numerous States of the Union—thinking, poor silly dupes that they are, that Canada was ripe to "drop," as Sir Wilfrid termed it, "from the parent tree," and ready for absorption by our greedy friends south of the line.

The result of the Dominion elections on the 21st of September last opened their eyes and disabused their too credulous minds as to the true feelings of the British people of Canada.

The Herald, disappointed and disgusted with what it considers the stupidity of Canadians in not dropping into its net, has withdrawn its educating agents and closed its bureau in Ottawa. In announcing the fact The Herald on the 18th inst., says:—

"There is no necessity to hunt for a hidden motive. There is none. We merely thought the Canadians had good business sense. Manifestly we were mistaken. There was nothing surreptitious in what the New York Herald did in Canada. There was nothing mysterious. The Herald began a campaign in Canada to develop news, to cultivate good relations, and to do what it could to bring about a commercial rapproachement between the two countries. To avoid further misconception, we have decided to close our Ottawa bureau for the present, leaving time to bring Canadians to a realization as to where their true interests lie."

Poor Canada! Will it survive this affliction? We think so, and that, too, much more respected by our neighbors than it ever was.

In Course of Fulfilment

One of the predictions which were made by the Conservative party during the late Dominion election campaign was that, were the pact which was proposed by the Laurier Government for their adoption rejected by the people, there would be a great influx of manufacturers from the United States, who were anxious to share in the prosperity of Canada, but would not cross the line if, under reciprocity, they could procure raw material from Canada free of duty for working up in their industries over the border. The proponents of the Taft-Laurier bargain ridiculed this prediction, but it is neverthelss being amply fulfilled, as the following information, gathered from our exchanges, conclusively proves.

Pulpwood.

As to lumber and pulp wood, the Canadian Lumberman says:—

The most noticeable result of the defeat of the reciprocity proposal at the recent Dominion elections, so far as the lumber and paper making industries of Canada are concerned, is the fact, already apparent, that United States paper manufacturers are looking definitely to Canadian forests for the raw material for their paper mills. It has been freely predicted and speciously denied that this would be the case, but the test of the pudding is in the eating thereof, and it is to be noticed that the paper manufacturers of the United States are already coming forward for a share of the Canadian raw material. If reciprocity had been passed, possibly the same results would soon have occurred on account of the irresistible force of natural and economic laws. But now that all uncertainty about the action of Canada has been removed, the United States manufacturers will be quicker to realize that for the perpetuation of their business they must have Canadian pulpwood. To have it they must now build their mills in Canada and manufacture the pulpwood into wood pulp or paper in Canada. The newspapers of the United States and Canada are now printing almost daily reports of the decision of additional United States manufacturers to follow this course. One of the most noticeable is the case of the Bayless Company of Austin, Pa., whose dam recently broke causing a great loss of life and property and destroying the company's mill. This company had already secured pulpwood areas in Canada and they will now, it is reported, build a mill in Quebec and manufacture paper there. Another instance is that of the Berlin mills, of Berlin, New Hampshire, which are arranging to build paper mills at Three Rivers, Que.

The following further information has been gathered from other sources:

Niagara Falls, Ont.

"Irving Schaffer, secretary-treasurer of the Richelieu Securities Co., Buffalo, fiscal agents, has about completed negotiations for the establishment here of a Canadian branch of the American company, manufacturing vacuum cleaners. He said that a plant would be in operation by the spring. He is also negotiating for the establishment of a Canadian branch of the Stotts Railway Signal Company.

"I know at least a score of large American concerns that will establish branches in Canada since voters were wise enough to turn down reciprocity. They did not finally decide to locate in Canada until the pact was turned down," said Mr. Schaffer.

Toronto.

Following the defeat of reciprocity, Harton Walker, broker, has received many enquiries for factory locations from American manufacturers. Negotiations have already been completed whereby a large Pittsburg manufacturer will acquire a large piece of land in the west end of the city for factory purposes.

Windsor.

The Hupp Motor Car Company, which has for some time been assembling cars in leased premises here, has closed a deal for the purchase of a site including a little more than three acres. The company will erect two factory buildings at a total cost of about $25,000, and will start with a force of 150 to 200 men.

The A. E. White Machine Works of Eau Claire, Wis., have closed a deal for an acre of property adjoining the site of the Hupp Company, and will erect a cement factory building, costing $6,000, for the manufacture of sawmill machinery. In each case the company is to be given the customary exemptions.

Welland.

An American firm is arranging to make peat and moss into paper at the marsh located northwest of here. It is securing options on 5,000 acres, and will probably be a large industry, as the raw product is very largely extended. Some years ago a large amount of money was spent on making this peat into fuel, but the experiments were not successful.

Brantford.

Already Brantford is commencing to reap the first fruits of the defeat of reciprocity.

The moment the pact was licked the Pratt & Letchworth Company, who have a branch in this city, announced large additions to their works—works which under reciprocity would probably have been closed.

Hall & Sons also announce greatly enlarged operations—operations which it is known were held in abeyance until it was seen whether reciprocity would be defeated.

On top of these there is an announcement from Montreal that packing plants are to be enlarged, including the one at Brantford, and even the Expositor admitted that under reciprocity such concerns would be hard hit.

Brantfordites made no mistake when they helped to swat the reciprocity brat.—Courier.

The condition that confronts us is one that invites them to invest in Canada and give Canadian workmen employment. That they will do by scores and hundreds. This promising field will lure them to this side of the boundary line. Branch and independent plants created by American manufacturers will be one of the chief features of Canada's industrial life which is bound to show much additional strength before the lapse of another year. The convinced American manufacturer is even now preparing to get into the game in Canada. He will receive from us a hearty welcome.

And not only will British and foreign manufacturers be induced to locate in Canada by the assurance of adequate protection which has been given them, by the emphatic verdict of the people when they decided on the 21st of September, to follow the British direction at the "parting of the ways," but the manufacturers who are now operating in Canada will be encouraged to enlarge their facilities, being assured that the home market will be secured to them against unfair competition. These are results which [illegible] assure the prosperity of the Dom[illegible] so long as the conduct of its affairs shall be entrusted to the Liberal-Conservative party, and that their term of office will be a long one is beyond reasonable doubt.

WORK OF INCENDIARY.

Toronto Fire Bears Every Sign of Having Been Set.

Toronto, Oct. 20.—What looks very like a fire set to cover the entry and looting of the safe in the Taylor Printing Co.'s office in the basement of the Toronto Paper Co.'s new building on the north side of King, west of Bathurst street, was discovered by L. Spence of 189 Jameson avenue, as he was running his motor car in West King street at 10.55 last night. He turned in an alarm, and when the firemen, with Deputy Chief Noble, entered, they found that an entry had already been forced by a man who was seen walking to the north end of the basement. This man helped the men in with first lay of hose and they hurried back to the hoist shaft, where the fire was running to the upper floors. A stream was shot up this and another carried up the rear fire escape and the fire was soon subdued.

The damage to the box company was $2,500, fully covered by insurance, and that to the printing company was less than $500.

After the fire had been extinguished it was found that a little office of the printing company in the basement under the stairs had been entered, the glass door being forced and a small safe inside was opened by someone who knew or was able to manipulate the combination. Whatever was in it had been taken save a receipt for an insurance of $1,000 in the Home Insurance Co. The empty cashbox lay on the floor in front of the safe.

The fire bears every appearance of having been set. It started at the foot of the hoist shaft where it would gain the most rapid headway and where nothing appeared as a natural explanation of its origin. The firemen are quite sure that there was a man inside when they arrived.

Might Have Been a Wreck.

Brockville, Oct. 20.—The keen observation of the engineer in charge of the International Limited to Montreal averted what might have proved a terrible wreck. After the train pulled into Brockville he made the usual inspection of the engine and was quick to detect a noticeable defect in the axle of the front driving wheel, which was badly cracked. The engine was promptly replaced by another and sent to the shops for repairs.

RECIPROCITY IN WATER WAYS MAY BECOME NEXT NATIONAL QUESTION

Reciprocity in Natural Products Having Become a Dead Issue Canada and United States Turn Again to Century Old Problem of Regulating International Waterways—Champion of LowCost of Living Who Spent Only $82 in a Year is Here—Montreal Suprised at Discovery of Drastic Blue Laws

MONTREAL, Oct. 19.—Reciprocity in water is the next question of international importance to worry the minds of legislators here and in the United States. Unlike the recent reciprocity conflict, no general elections will be necessary to reach a decision, and no political party will rise or fall on the result.

The whole matter will be settled by the International Waterways Commission, composed of three eminent legal lights from this country and three from the States. One meeting has already been held in Washington for organization purposes, and a further session will be held shortly, probably the latter part of this month.

The chief questions at issue concern the division of water at Niagara for power purposes by manufacturers and others on both sides of the line, the diversion of the waters of the St. Mary's River in Alberta, a most intricate and interesting phase of international rights, and the daming of the St. Lawrence River at the Long Sault Rapids.

Decision on this last question is probably the most important to the Dominion as a whole. When Mr. James W. Rickey, the water power expert and engineer, let it become known that he had fallen asleep on one of the historic banks of the good old St. Lawrence and dreamed a dream, other engineers smiled at him indulgently and told him to wake up. The dream was so stupendous that, at first telling, it seemed impracticable.

Since then the dream has been worked into blue prints and maps, figures and reports, until to-day Government engineers of both Canada and the United States freely admit that Mr. Rickey and his associates have evolved one of the most wonderful—if not the most wonderful—power producing propositions in the world.

In a word, it is proposed to harness the Long Sault Rapids, turning their thousands of wild horses into beasts of burden for the people who live along their shores. As the St. Lawrence at this point is an international stream the International Waterways Commission have jurisdiction over it and must first approve of these power development plans before actual development may be commenced.

When the proposition was first placed before the public, some three or four years ago now, considerable opposition developed on the Canadian side.

Drastic Blue Laws.

That Montreal, if the blue laws as they actually stand on the statute books at present were enforced, would make early New England Sundays seem exciting is one surprising result of the effort now going on to determine if flying is to be classified as a sport, a pastime or a scientific demonstration. A merry war has been raging over this point since the promoters of a recent flying meet held competitions for prizes on Sundays and charged admissions. The church forces immediately began a crusade to prevent such flights. The law specifically prohibits on Sunday public games or contests to which an admission is charged and on this point the clergy took their stand. The promoters pointed out that the law was passed in 1883 when flying was unknown, and naturally says nothing concerning it. Moreover, they argue that the exhibition is purely a scientific and educational demonstration and therefore entirely legal. The matter has not been yet decided, but the controversy has served to show that the public in its ignorance of the laws commits violations by the thousand every Sunday. The law prohibits playing, and were it rigidly enforced in this respect it would probably terminate not only the recreation of the youngsters in the front yards, nursery or barns, but also deprive their seniors of Sunday golf, tennis and other games, giving this city Sundays so blue as to make indigo seem pale in comparison.

SLEPT SIX WEEKS

When the strange case of the Iowa woman who had slept constantly for 43 days was reported, many people who could not sleep at all wished that they might have a similar experience.

You would be surprised to know how many people there are right around here who hardly ever get more than two or three hours' sleep at night, owing to bad health, general weakness and worn-out condition. Miss Louisa Ludwig, Newrak, N. J., who went through all thsi has written a letter saying:

"Having felt weak, tired, and badly rundown, with little appetite, and inability to sleep well, I began to take Vinol which I had heard was the best remedy for that condition. It has done me great good by building up my strength, improving my appetite and enabling me to sleep soundly."

If you are worn out and weak and want new strength so you can eat well, sleep well, and be well, Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron remedy is what you need, and we guarantee it to satisfy you. Red Cross Drug Store—J. S. McKeown, Belleville.

The latest door lock is built on the phonographic principle and can only be opened when talked to by its owner. It might be easier, of course, for some people to talk into the keyhole than to insert a key in it on occasions but at such times the lock might have a difficulty in recognizing its master's voice, and the last state of the man might be worse than the first.

FELL FROM A HAY LOFT

Suffered Tortures With His Kidneys Until He Tried Gin Pills

You might think that Mr. Baker needed a surgeon more than GIN PILLS. But there were no bones broken. His back was strained, which was harder to cure because nothing seemed to do any good. It is the same with a sprained ankle and broken leg. You can set the fracture and it will be well in six weeks—but the sprain may take months to get well.

AULTSVILLE, ONT.

"I have been a great sufferer from Kidney Trouble from an injury to my back caused by falling from a hay loft about six years ago. This left my kidneys weak, so that every cold I got would settle in my kidneys and cause intense suffering. I was advised to try GIN PILLS. I found, to my surprise, after taking two boxes, that the pains were relieved and I began to feel better. I am still taking GIN PILLS and feel sure I will be completely cured. I recommend GIN PILLS to all who suffer from any Kidney Trouble". C. BAKER.

A BAD FALL

You see, the fall had strained the kidneys and they were affected by the slightest chill. GIN PILLS immediately strengthened the kidneys—soothed any irritation and thus enabled the kidneys to overcome the effects of the fall.

If you are having pain in the back—or trouble with kidneys or bladder through accident or overwork—do just as Mr. Baker did—take GIN PILLS. They will help you—cure you—or we will promptly refund your money. Buy six boxes at your dealer's. If, after taking them, you feel that Gin Pills have not helped you, return the empty boxes and get your money. We will take your word for it. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50. How to Keep Insects fron Fruit and Roses—A Simple and Inexpensive Process

To keep insects from destroying fruit: About the last week of April cut a strip of the bark of the trees, apples, pears, etc., about four inches in length and put under it as much sulphur as possible. Fold the bark back into place and bind with a piece of cloth to hold it firm. Nature will do the rest, sending the sulphur with the sap to all parts of the tree.

It is said that insects will not touch blossoms of trees treated in this way.

Rose bushes can be treated in the same way.

Do the work a few inches from the ground.

Montreal's Population.

Montreal, Oct. 20.—Judging from the inquiries received and the complaints made at the assessment department, the present Dominion census of the city of Montreal is about 26,000 short of its actual population, at a conservative estimate. This statement was made yesterday by P. W. Collins of the muncipal assessment department, in discussing the returns from Ottawa. Mr. Collins also said that the best method of taking census in cities was through the assessors. The assessment department had a complete list of the houses in town, and the assessors would prepare cards for each house for filling out. This was a scientific plan, and omissions could be readily detected.

"If the census enumerators had even come to us after they took the returns we could have checked the figures and told them of omissions."

Mr. William Robb, the city treasurer, said that the assessment commissioners were going to recommend to the Board of Control that they should be instructed to take an annual census of the city.

Dr. Louis Laberge, medical health officer, said that according to his estimate, the enumerators were at least 4,000 short in their count.

Last Rail Laid.

Montreal, Oct. 20.—The last rail on the new grain route from Victoria Harbor to Bethany was laid Wednesday morning. Word to that effect was received at the local headquarters of the C. P. R. yesterday afternoon, and as soon as the ballasting has been completed the line will be ready for regular traffic. This should not take more than a couple of months at the most, as the greater part of the ballasting is already finished. What ballasting that will have to be done before the line is ready for traffic is in the vicinity of Lindsay and Bethany. At Lindsay, where the biggest bridge of the line is being finished, the builders have a big staff of men at work and it is expected to be completed in a very short time. There are several other bridges on the line, but the only one of importance is where in line crosses from Lake Simcoe to Lake Couchiching. Here there is a 160-foot span swing bridge.

On Eve of Marriage.

Montreal, Oct. 20.—While working overtime in order to earn more money, as he was to be married in a few weeks, Robert Wills, an employe of the Canadian Rubber Co., was electrocuted here yesterday morning while installing new wires.

Wills, who was employed in the electrical department, worked all day Wednesday, but hearing that work was to be continued through the night, asked to be allowed to work overtime, saying he was about to be married. His foreman, Robert Tees, gave his permission, and he and another electrician, J. Bastian, went upstairs to connect some wires. In the early morning Wills inadvertently touched a live wire and was killed.

THE FATHER OF THE CURB IS DEAD

E. S. Mendels Organized the Broker's Association Thirty-Seven Years Ago

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—When the stock brokers who carry on their business out of doors in the "curb" market assembled yesterday, it was announced that Emanuel S. Mendels, "father of the curb" had died yesterday at his home in Newark.

It was thirty-seven years ago when curb brokers carried on their business in hallways, on the sidewalk, or wherever they chanced to meet, that Mr. Mendels became one of them. When the "curb" grew to such size that the public assigned it a fixed station on the pavement in Broad street, Mr. Mendels took the lead in organising an association of which as "curb" agent he was the head for years. Last year as the result of a long fight for a house-cleaning, he brought about the formation of the New York Curb Market Association, which was organized with the idea of exercising supervision over the trading and preventing frauds.

Mr. Mendels had for many years held a curious position in the financial district. As curb broker, he assumed at first a sort of secretaryship, but soon he became recognized as the one through whom all routine business of the market should be transacted. From that time he became the recognized "proctor" of the curb, and it was to him that the street brokers looked to care for their interests and to keep the market running smoothly. He passed on all securities which were traded in on the street exchange, and many worthless mining stocks were weeded out in his effort to raise the standard of the market. Brokers, too, who were dishonest, or whose reputations were questionable were dropped from the membership through his influence, and while many "fake" securities were sold on the curb during the years of his proctorship, it was through no fault of his.

The New York Curb Market Association has a body of officers which passes on the securities listed and acts as a supervisor over the market. Mr. Mendels staunchly defended the curb brokers to every attempt made to dislodge them from Broad street, and testified for them before the White Investigation Committee.

It is only the very young man who wants to paint the town. An old man is satisfied if he can fresco the corners.

RECENT GOLD DISCOVERIES IN SHINING TREE DISTRICT

Samples Sent to Belleville Contained Gold Ranging in Value from Forty Cents to Six Dollars a Ton, According to a Government Report

At the request of Prof. Miller, Provincial Geologist, R. B. Stewart, demonstrator in mining at the University of Toronto, has made a complete and exhaustive report, which is preliminary to another to be made later, concerning the West Shining Tree district. This report was submitted to T. W. Gibson, Deputy Minister of Mines, and is as follows:—

The region visited includes the townships of Asquith, MacMurchy, Churchill and Fawcett. West Shining Tree Lake, near which gold was discovered first, lies in the townships of Asquith and Churchill, and is 70 miles north of Sudbury, 60 miles south of Porcupine, and 20 miles west of Gowganda.

The territory was reached by C.N.R. from Sudbury to Gowganda Junction on Blue Lake, and by canoe the rest of the way through Blue, Oshawong, Shoo Fly, Meteor, and Opickinimika Lakes and the Opickinimika River. The route leaves the latter river about the centre of the west boundary of Asquith, passing through two small lakes into West Shining Tree Lake.

The country around West Shining Tree Lake is one of low relief. While level and with no prominent elevations it cannot be called swampy, as a general level is well above the water of the numerous small lakes that occur in that region. The area for the most part is not heavily drift covered, but owing to the level nature of the ground the rocks are not exposed extensively excepting that part of the country that has been burned over. The forest growth is chiefly spruce, jack pine, balsam, birch and small cedar.

The geology of the area is rather complex. Numerous samples of rock were brought down, but have not yet been examined carefully. The rocks were the claims are located are of Keewatin age. They consist of greenstone, altered diabase and schist. Associated with these are porphyry, rhyolite, and a rusty weathering rock which, I believe, corresponded to the ferrodolomites of the Porcupine district. Very fresh looking diabase was found in several places, and may prove to be Post-Huronian. The schists are a rule, have a strike several degrees north of east, and are nearly vertical, but tipped slightly to the north. An area of Laurentian granite lies to the south. Outcrops of the granite were observed along the Montreal river across the township of Fawcett and on the first small lake south of West Shining Tree Lake in the township of Asquith. Occasional outcrops of granite were observed along the route into the district as far south as the north end of Meteor Lake.

The discoveries, for the most part, are located on zones of weathered schist containing veins and stringers of quartz that usually conform to the strike and dip of the schist. As to their extent but little can be said as very little stripping had been done at the time of my visit. The quartz widens in places to several feet, but does not carry in this width far until it breaks up into stringers or disappears. On one claim where some work had been done one of these zones had been traced for 8 or 9 chains. The quartz is usually whit and contains considerable rust, but on three properties, a bluish quartz was found. In some placec the quartz and schist contains considerable iron pyrites. Small amounts of galena were observed in two places.

While the most of the quartz veins and stringers have a strike conforming to the general strike of the schist, that is, a few degrees north of east, it was noticed on three properties that the strike of the quartz outcrops was in a north-westerly direction. These suggested that a second system of veins occur in the district.

The following properties were visited:—

A. Gosselin's, (2195-96), east of West Shining Tree Lake.

S. Jepson's (2277), east of West Shining Tree Lake.

R. Cryderman's, near 2312.

M. Caswell's, (2393), north east corner of Fawcett.

Jefferson's (2504), south west corner of MacMurchy.

T. Seville's (2535-36), south west corner of MacMurchy.

MacIntyre's, south east of 2501.

Caswell's (2532, 2512), south west corner of MacMurchy.

G. Bennett's, (2514), south-west corner of MacMurchy.

Free gold was seen in places at Gosselin's, Jefferson's, and Caswell's (2532). Gold was seen panned from the decomposed material on Cryderman's claim.

The property known as Gosselin's has attracted more attention than any other in the district. The stripping already done reveals what is apparently a very large body of quartz with free gold in several places. What is evidently the same body has been revealed in several places for over 10 chains with a width of three of four chains. The rock associated with the quartz is a rusty schist, and also a hard, flinty rock, in which a schistose structure has been developed in places. The rocks in places are intersected with quartz stringers which form at times, probably one-half of the total. In a place where the most stripping has been done the quartz shows continuously for two chains. A trench at almost right angles shows quartz for about 70 feet, but with some streaks of schist. The stripping has been done in a north westerly direction, which may prove to be the strike of the ore body.

Another property that attracted attention is that known as Clark's about one mile in a south easterly direction from Gosselin's. Work done on this property shows a large mass of quartz and a greenish rock that weathers very rusty. A great deal of pyrite crystals occur in the quartz. No gold was seen here, but it is claimed that gold can be panned from the decomposed material. This was the most extensive showing of what was considered the carbonate rocks that I saw in the district.

At the time of my visit to the region definite information regarding many of the properties was difficult to obtain as many men hd gone out to the front or were prospecting in other localities.

"Since wrtiing the above," concludes Mr. Stewart, "I have received the results of assays from the Belleville office on seven samples of quartz I collected from different properties where no golld was to be seen. One of these samples did not contain fold, and the others carried values ranging from 40c. to $6 to the ton.

KNOWS NOW.

Doctor Was Fooled By His Own Case For a Time.

It is easy to understand how ordinary people get fooled by tea and coffee when doctors themselves sometimes forget the facts.

A physician speaks of his own experience:

"I had used tea and coffee for years and really did not exactly believe it was injuring me, although I had palpitation of the heart every day.

"Finally, one day, a severe and almost fatal attack of heart trouble frightened me and I gave up both tea and coffee, using Postum instead, and since that time I have absolutely no heart palpitation except on one or two occasions when I tried coffee, which caused severe irritation and proved to me that I must let it alone.

"When we began using Postum it seemed weak—that was because we did not make it according to directions—but now we put a little bit of butter in the pot when boiling and allow the Postum to boil fully 15 minutes which gives it the proper rich flavor and the deep brown color.

"I have advised a great many of my friends and patients to leave off tea and coffee and drink Postum, in fact I daily give this advice." Name given by Canadian Postum Company, Windsor, Ont.

Many thousands of physicians use Postum in place of tea and coffee in their own homes and prescribe it to patients. "There's a Reason."

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY

To His Lordship, Mr. Justice Middleton:

We, the Grand Jurors for the County of Hastings, for the sittings of Assize, Nisi Prius, Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery at the Autumn Assize, 1911, beg to report to Your Lordship as follows:

1.—We beg to extend a hearty welcome to the newly appointed Governor General of the Dominion of Canada, His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, and hope that in the near future we will have the pleasure of extending to him a royal reception in the City of Belleville.

2.—We congratulate Your Lordship on making your first visit to this County and trust you may long be spared to administer justice to the inhabitants of this Province.

3.—We reciprocate Your Lordship's congratulations on the absence of serious crime in the County, as shown by the fact that no bills of indictment were presented to us during our session.

4.—In accordance with Your Lordship's recommendation we visited the House of Refuge, in the township of Thurlow, where we found seventy inmates, being carefully cared for and comfortably housed. The building, being almost new, is in good order, and the Master and Matron, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, seemed to be devoted to their duties. All the premises are in a thorough state of cleanliness, as are also the inmates, and we are of the opinion that the administration of this charity is in capable hands.

5.—On the same day we visited the Belleville Hospital and found that great improvements have been made thereto during the past year, a new wing having been added and an elevator placed in the old building, which is a very great and necessary improvement. We were shown over both the old and the new buildings and found the premises and outfit greatly improved by reason of the new buildings and additions. The officials and nurses seemed very attentive to their patients and are thoroughly interested in their welfare.

6.—We also visited the Deaf and Dumb Institute and found over two hundred afflicted children being carefully looked after and educated under the superintendence of Dr. Coughlin and his able staff. The buildings, which are now nearly forty years old, might perhaps be improved upon, and we think the time is approaching when they will required to be increased in capacity and, perhaps, remodelled. The children seemed bright and contented and we were informed that there has been no serious case of illness among them since they re-assembled in September last. All the buildings were in an exceptionally clean and sanitary condition.

7.—We also visited the County Jail where we found four women and thirteen men confined for various offences. We found that two of the inmates of the jail had been committed as being of unsound mind, one of them having been incarcerated since July 1910, and we would recommend that they be removed to one or other of the Provincial Asylums where they could get the benefit of trained medical treatment. The premises are clean and well-kept, and the inmates have no complaints to make as to their treatment. We are satisfied that both the jailer and the turnkey are zealous and kind in the performance of their duties.

8.—We would recommend that hose or extinguishers, or both, be supplied for the interior of the Court House and addition, so that in case of fire occurring it might be dealt with before the delay incident to the calling out of the brigade. With this exception we think that the appliances for extinguishing fire in all the buildings were adequate and particularly in the Deaf and Dumb Institute, which is well supplied with hose and sprinklers.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GREAT COMET LIGHTED UP SHIP

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 18.—Night was turned into day by a fiery comet that lighted up the decks of the ship William P. Frye, which arrived at the Spreckles sugar refinery last night from Honolulu. The crew, particularly the Japanese, were so badly frightened that they thought the world's end was near. The comet was visible from September 25th until October 1st, according to Bernard Seiler, mate of the ship, who declared that the phenomenon was the most unusual he had witnessed in his long experience as a navigator. The brilliancy, he declared, was largely due to the comet being near the planet Mars and both working in unison.

Mate Seiler said the light was intense and that the men were kept in their bunks despite the warm weather and all of the crew prohibited from sleeping on deck, fearing their eyesight might become impaired by the penetrating rays.

G. T. R. Outside Party Politics.

London, Oct. 20.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—At the Standard Oil Co. of Canada meeting yesterday, the chairman said that while the balance sheet was not as satisfactory as he would like he very shortly hoped to be able to report a more prosperous state of things.

Chairman Smithers, interviewed anent the effect of the change of Government in Canada on the G. T. P., says that the G. T. R. has nothing to do with the Government's railway policy, and is outside the arena of party politics. Regarding trans-Pacific ocean steamships, it was altogether premature to make any statement. He derided the notion that Canada is likely to receive any setback.

A BALD-HEADED WOMAN

SHORN OF HER CROWN OF BEAUTY LOSES IN LOVE AND MARRIAGE.

Hair is certainly most necessary to woman. Who could love and marry a bald-headed woman? What charms could one array to offset such a disfigurement?

A woman's goal is usually love and marriage. Her crowning glory is her hair. The loss of her hair mars her beauty, happiness and success. Yet, right here in Belleville, there are thousands of women who are neglecting or injuring their hair to such an extent that it is only a matter of time when it will be utterly ruined.

Many women destroy the beauty of their hair through thoughtlessness or ignorance of certain facts. They use curling irons over-heated, or to excess, which destroys the natural oil of the hair, causing it to split, break, and come out. They do not shampoo their hair often enough, or too often. They use soaps or ingredients positively harmful to the scalp and hair.

As a result of such treatment, dandruff is created, the hair loosens, loses color, falls out, and baldness commences, unless proper and prompt precautions are taken in time. Then, again, microbes and certain diseases bring about unhealthy scalp and hair conditions.

Almost any woman may rid herself of dandruff and diseased scalp and hair if she will but use the right remedy. We have that remedy, and we positively guarantee that it will either cure dandruff and baldness or it will not cost the user anything.

That's a pretty broad statement, but we will back it, and prove it with our own money. We will return your money if you do not find that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is an entirely satisfactory remedy that will promote hair growth and overcome scalp and hair troubles; that it will grow hair even on bald heads, unless the life in the hair roots has been extinguished, the follicles closed and the scalp is glazed and shiny. It gets its name from the fact that it grew hair in 93 out of 100 cases, where it received a thoroughly hard, impartial, and practical test.

We want you to try Rexall "93" Hari Tonic at our risk. You surely cannot lose anything by doing so, while you have everything to gain. You had better think this over and then come in and see us about this offer. You will be well repaid for your visit to our store. Remember, you can get Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store—The Rexall Store—J. S. McKeown, Belleville.

OXO IN CUBES

EVERY mother should remember these two points about OXO Cubes. . . . .

An OXO Cube, in a glass of hot milk, increases the food value of milk enormously—and greatly assists digestion.

OXO Cubes are foods in themselves, and add to the value of other foods by helping digestion.

WILL SUPPORT MACKAY

Prominent Ontario Liberals Pass Vote of Confidence.

At a Meeting Held In Toronto of the Opposition Members of the Legislature and Those Liberal Candidates Who Have Been Thus Far Nominated, Draw Up a Statement of Shortcomings of Government.

Toronto, Oct. 20.—The leading Liberals of the province, to the number of about thirty, assembled yesterday afternoon in the reform headquarters here to discuss the provincial situation and size up their chances. They also discussed the Hon. A. G. MacKay, and just before adjournment the caucus unanimously passed a resolution of confidence in his leadership.

The caucus was attended by all the Liberal members of the Legislature and by the Liberal candidates who have already been nominated for the coming election. Mr. MacKay was also there. From what could be gathered later the meeting was fairly harmonious.

A statement was officially handed out in the evening by C. M. Smith of Sault Ste. Marie and was as follows: "The unanimous conviction was expressed that the Whitney Government had failed to live up to the expectations of the people of Ontario. The census returns just published, coupled with the conspicuous inability of the administration to take advantage of its great opportunities in the north country were cited as evidences of the necessity for a change of Government at Toronto."

"It was felt that the agricultural policy of the Whitney Government so far as old Ontario is concerned and the colonization policy for the agricultural lands in New Ontario is entirely inadequate. The census returns show that the Whitney police has not only not retained the natural increase in the rural population of old Ontario, but has absolutely failed to secure any part of the large immigration for either new or old Ontario. So much so that the rural population of the whole province has actually decreased during the regime of the present Government.

"Before adjournment on motion of Mr. Daniel Reed, M.P.P., for Wentworth and Mr. J. D. Elliott, M.P.P., for West Middlesex, the caucus passed an unanimous resolution of confidence in the leadership of the Hon. Mr. MacKay."

Chinese Liberal With Cash.

San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 20.—A Chinese laborer, Lee King Hon, yesterday, laid a sack containing $1,000 gold, his life's savings on the counter of the revolutionary office. He was given $2,000 in the paper currency of the republic. This currency will be redeemed in gold if the revolt is successful.

Brakeman Loses Both Legs.

Guelph, Oct. 20.—Grand Trunk trainmen who are inclined to be superstitious approach Guelph Junction with grave misgivings. Three accidents have occurred, two of which have already proved fatal, and the third may cost James Pattens, brakeman, running between Toronto Junction and London, and residing in the latter place, his life.

Patten was running along the top of his train Wednesday midnight, when there is said to have been a sudden jerking of the locomotive, which threw him. Both legs were severed.

Serious Obstacle Withdrawn.

London, Oct. 20.—It is officially announced that as a result of a final conference yesterday between Chancellor Lloyd-George and the representatives of the Friendly Societies, at which concessions were made by the societies, opposition to the Chancellor's national insurance bill, which has been a most serious obstacle, has been withdrawn and the support of the societies pledged. The bill will be taken up when Parliament reassembles on Oct. 24, and pushed through.

WILL STAY IN THE GAME.

Hon. W. L. M. King Says He Will Not Desert Politics.

Berlin, Oct. 20.—At the dinner tendered to Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King here last night, some very caustic remarks were made by Thomas Hilliarc as to the ignorance of the electors at large. The majority of voters did not vote against reciprocity, but against annexation, the navy, the ne temere decree, he said. He was perplexed because of there being a different policy in every province and concession.

Mr. King, who rose to speak shortly before midnight, and continued to the 'wee sma' hours o' the morning," said that he was amazed at the results that had been attained with the difficulties that had to be contended with.

"It was useless for me," declared Mr. King, "as a Cabinet Minister to state that the Government would not go any further than the agreement stated, because the Conservatives had used every argument to generate fear in the hearts of the people. I admit that the manner in which the pact was presented was not the best form possible. But when we come to realize the great task of trying to fight against ignorance, passion, prejudice we in North Waterloo cannot but feel somewhat elated over the results."

Mr. King made no definite statements as to his future. He denied the rumor that he was going into the United States. He said: "I have purposely refrained from making any definite statement as to what the future has in store for me." Already Liberals in Ontario (federals) have offered me their seats, but public life has demonstrated to me the necessity of mastering the important questions that affect the lives of the laboring classes, whom I have learned to love, and with this in mind it will take some months to decide as to what action I will take.

"I hope to remain in Canadian politics for a long time to come, because Canada is one of the most important assets in the British Empire, which is the greatest agent of peace and justice on this earth at the present time."

MISS SMITH DROWNED

Young Teacher's Body Is Found in the River.

Parry Sound Schoolmistress, For Whom the Whole Countryside Has Been Searched For the Past Ten Days, Has Been Discovered Floating In River a Quarter of a Mile From Her Boarding-House.

Parry Sound, Oct. 20.—Word has been received here that the body of Violet Smith, the school teacher who has been missing for ten days, and for whom the whole countryside was being searched, has been found floating in the River Shebashekong, about a quarter of a mile from the house of Peter Ramsay, with whom she was boarding.

Captain Brock Batten of Port Arthur, Miss Smith's brother-in-law, and Wm. Beatty recovered the body, which was allowed to remain in the water attached to a small boat, pending the arrival of Coroner Davis.

Miss Violet Smith, who came from Collingwood, had many friends in Toronto, she having lived at 54 McGill street while studying at the Normal School, and all who knew her, speak of her in the highest terms. She is described as extremely retiring and diffident, and her failure to pass her final examination last summer is attributed to lack of self-confidence, as she appeared to be clever and painstaking. The cost of her studies was defrayed by a brother, Joseph, to whom she was deeply attached.

Being anxious to undertake the teaching profession, she accepted the opening at Dillon Port in September last.

Miss Smith's mother passed away on Nov. 14 of last year.

Prostrated with grief and on the verge of collapse through nervousness and excitement, the dead girl's two sisters, Evelyn and Birdie, are staying for the time being at Herman's restaurant on Yonge street, and are both under the doctor's care. They scout the idea of suicide and maintain that their sister must have been murdered.

There is no knowledge among her friends and relatives here in Toronto of any love affair, or jealousy which might have led to the tragedy. In writing to her sisters, Violet remarked that the reports she had heard before coming to Dillon Port that it was a "rough" place, were true, and the longer she stayed the more she realized how rough it was.

Miss Smith had commenced to teach school there at the opening of the fall term, and had intended to stay till the Christmas holidays, anyhow. She had only been in Dillon Port five or six weeks before her mysterious disappearance.

Mr. Herman, who was well acquainted with Miss Smith, says she never was melancholy, but always quiet and reserved. Her hair was dark in color and she was small and slender in physique. She was 19 years old, and quite clever, having passed her matriculation when she was 15. In languages she was particularly proficient.

Her two sisters are anxiously awaiting particulars of the tragedy, which are expected to-day. If it is found that Violet has been done away with, not a stone will be left unturned to bring the culprit to justice.

Important developments in the case are expected by the dead girl's friends in Toronto.

Slave Horrors In Tripoli.

Rome, Oct. 20.—The missionary, Father Apollonio, head of the home at Benghazi, Tripoli, for young negroes who had been freed from slavery, says that the slave trade in the north of Africa is flourishing.

Small children are packed two, and even three, in a bag for transportation, while the larger ones are tied in chains, the desert being stained with their blood. Those who collapse are abandoned to die of starvation or to be the prey of lions.

On one occasion, the missionary says, the leader of the caravan, enraged because a female slave exhausted, was unable to proceed further, cut off one of her arms, using the member subsequently as a weapon with which to beat others of the unhappy party.

Germany Interferes.

Canada vs. Australia.

London, Oct. 20—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Commenting upon the Canadian census returns, The Daily News says that the proximity of the Dominion to the United States and Europe, combined with greater natural advantages and a generous emigration policy, explains how Canada has been outstripping Australia in the matter of population in the short space of twenty years.

A despatch from Sydney, N. S. W., says: "The Hon. Mr. Beeby, Minister of Lands, promises to throw open a million acres of land on leasehold tenure next year. Hon. ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOUTH HASTINGS TEACHERS' CONVENTION

Routine Business Transacted—Interesting Report from the Public School Department of the Association—Addresses by the President and Others—Miss McRae's Instructive Lecture

After the regular routine business had been disposed of the Association proceeded to the election of the following committees:—

On Resolutions—H. J. Clarke, I.P.S.; Mr. Wilkin and Mr. Thrasher.

On Physical Culture—H. J. Clarke, Mr. Barragar, Mr. Simpkins, Mr. Fairman and Mr. Whitney.

Reports of the delegates to the O.E.A. were next in order.

Miss E. M. Adams gave a very carefully prepared and exhaustive report of the proceedings of the Public School Department of that Association. The other delegate, Mr. S. A Gardner, followed with a report of what disposition had been made of a series of resolutions that had been discussed the previous year. A vote of thanks was tendered to the delegates.

Afternoon Session.

"The Teacher's Work" was the subject of the President's address. Mr Fairman's paper was an excellent one, carefully prepared, full of thought for the thoughtful teacher, and an inspiration to urge teachers to higher ideals of their duties and responsibilities. The paper showed that Mr. Fairman is abreast of the latest thought on educational lines.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was then proceeded with resulting as follows:

President—Mr. D. Barragar.

Vice-President—Miss E. M. Adams

Sec.-Treas.—Mr. L. Ross.

Representatives — Belleville, Mr Simpkins; Trenton, Mr. Fairman Deseronto, Miss Smith; Thurlow, Miss Carpenter; Sidney, Mr. Lott.

Delegates to the O.E.A.—Mr. Whiting and Mr. Wilkin, Miss Leah Phillips and Miss Laura Phelps.

Miss Free, teacher in Grier Street School, gave a vocal solo entitled "You Looke Just Like the Girl Who Used to Go to School With Me."

"The Value of Art in the Public School," by Miss J. C. McRae, art specialist, Peterboro' Normal School was the next subject. Miss McRae who is a very enthusiastic teacher of this subject, as well as a student of art in its more extended sense, was formerly teacher in the High School here, and a Belleville girl whom our citizens are delighted to honor. She explained the many benefits that follow the study of this subject, its application to the various industries, its influence on the character, on home life and surroundings. Miss McRae's visit and talks at this Association will do much to stimulate a greater interest in this much neglected study

A few minutes of intermission, so as to give teachers a chance to become acquainted with each other, followed.

Miss E. J. Guest, M.A., Belleville High School, gave an interesting and instructive talk on what the Public School could do in literature. After explaining that in reality the High and Public Schools were not two but a unit, Miss Guest proceeded to show how literature composition, oral and written, and kindred subjects can be successfully taught in a Public as well as in a High School. To those who heard Miss Guest, it will be no wonder why she is so successful in her work in her classes, nor why she is able to leave her impress of the subjects she teaches on the minds of her pupils.

On motion, votes of thanks were tendered the President, Miss McRae and Miss Guest on their interesting and instructive talks.

After a few complimentary remarks from Mr. William Johnson and the Rev. W. G. Clarke, the Association adjourned.

Evening Proceedings.

Last evening the school room of the Tabernacle Church was filled with an appreciative audience to listen to Miss McRae's talk on "Some Pictures That Have Lived."

Stereopticon views of many of the world's greatest pictures, such as the Sistine Madonna, the Madonna of the Chair, Mona Lisa and others, were thrown on a screen, and the history and incidents connected with each were given by Miss McRae, and a critical analysis of each. The address was a revelation to many present of what could be seen in such paintings.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn, K.C., presided. The intervals between the talks were filled in by a violin solo from Master Lorne Deeton and Miss Harriet and Master John McIntosh with a duet.

Mr. Peppin, of the Institute, with his stereopticon, threw the views on the screen.

On motion by Dr. Bishop, seconded by Mr. W. N. Ponton, a hearty vote of thanks was tendered Miss McRae, who made a suitable acknowledgment of the same.

A vote of thanks to Lorne Deeton, Harriet and John McIntosh and Mrs. Deeton and Miss Sheffield, who had added so much to the evening's entertainment, was moved by Mr. Gordon and seconded by Mr. Fairman.

Mr. Wilkin moved, seconded by H. J. Clarke, I.P.S., a hearty vote of thanks of to Mr. O'Flynn, after which the National Anthem was sung and the meeting was closed.

WOMEN'S AILMENTS CAUSED BY NEGLECT

ARE QUICKLY CURED, AND ROBUST, SOUND HEALTH RESTORED BY DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS.

Women are on the whole more sickly than men. One reason is that there system is more complicated; another, and more important reason is that they put off measures of relief too long. At the beginning constipation is the caus of nine-tenths of women's ailments. The blood becomes weakened and polluted—the nerves suffer and a run-down condition takes root.

Because of their mildness of action as a system regulator, because of their undoubted power to remove constipatoin, irregularities, no medicine for women can compare with Dr. Hamilton's Pills. The kidneys quickly respond to the remedial action of Dr. Hamilton's Pills and the result is as you would expect—pain in the back and side, shortness of breath, and bad color disappear—the functions of the body then operate naturally, congestion and pain are prevented and perfect health returns.

Thousands of happy women say Dr. Hamilton's Pills are the greatest and best blood-purifier; the finest complexion renewer, the most certain regulating medicine known. All dealers, in 25c. boxes, or the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Canada.

LOOKED FOR WORK WITHOUT SUCCESS

Sad Story of Maggie Harrison or Pearson, Killed At St. Thomas

ST. THOMAS, Ont., Oct. 19.—Further investigation into the cause of the death of Maggie Harrison, or Pearson, and her three-year-old child has failed to convey to the authorities any impression other than that the woman committed suicide by either plunging in front of the train wtih the babe in her arms or lying down on the track. It has been learned that she applied at several places near the scene of the accident to secure work, but was unsuccessful, and she told one woman that she could easily get work were it not for the babe, but people would not have her around. Later she was seen on the track east of the scene of the accident. The woman came here from Walkerville, where she was working, in search of Pearson, who had just returned from a trip to the old country, and on the afternoon of her death left the home of Mrs. Martin, who was sheltering her in order to have a talk with Pearson. Mrs. Martin says the babe was singing as they left the house.

Pearson declares the woman's story that she is his wife is untrue. Three years ago he was in Sarnia Police Court on a charge of seduction laid by the woman. He was let go when it was shown that he was under twenty-one years of age. The woman wore a wedding ring at the time of her death. An inquest was started to-day, but after viewing the remains the jury adjourned until Tuesday next.

FOUND BESIDE TRACK WITH BROKEN NECK

TORONTO, Oct. 20.—Richard Gray, 60 years old, of Beeton, was found last night lying beside the rails in the Grand Trunk yards at John Street with a broken neck. He was picked up by Conductor Hynes of a C.P.R. train from Detroit, and removed to the Western Hospital in the ambulance. At an early hour this morning he was reported to be in a precarious condition.

Mr. Gray had been visiting in the city, and had called on friends at 25 Nelson Street. At the latter place he stated that he had started for the station after completing a business transaction. Just how the accident happened is not known.

WHAT MAKES A COMPLEXION

The season's programme of evening parties, social events, etc., is before you. Why not look your best? Why not enspre a good complexion? Matter of time and perserverance only if you will use Zam-Buk.

Zam-Buk is a skin food; and complexion is purely a matter of skin health. Zam-Buk smeared lightly over the face, each night, acts as a skin tonic. It stimulates the cells beneath the cuticle to healthy action, makes the capillaries and blood vessels work, and the vigorous circulation thus started, carries away secreted impurities. Waxy, sallow deposits are thus removed. That yellow tinge gives place to the pink of health.

Isn't this wiser than relying upon talcum powder and cosmetics? Zam-Buk builds up a complexion from blood and tissue. It lasts!

A special session for the coming voters—boys and girls, was held in the Presbyterian Church, addressed by Mrs. Ada McLachlan, Hamilton Dominion Superintendent of S. T. L. and Mrs. Jackson, Kemptville.

On motion a new department was added to the organization in connection with the children's work, and Mrs. McLachlan of Hamilton was appointed Secretary.

On motion of Mrs. McAllister, a resolution was passed to memorialize the Government requesting them to provide a Provincial colony for tramps.

A splendid mass meeting was held on Wednesday evening, the chief speakers being Mrs. McKee, Mrs Gordon Wright and Rev. Mr. Gunter, Toronto. Mrs. Wright gave a thrilling address on the reclamation of the drunkard. Mrs. Wright has just arrived in Winchester and is en route for the Dominion W. C. T. U convention to be held in Sherbrooke Que., next week.

The following delegates were appointed to attend the Dominion Convention in Sherbrooke: Mesdames Asa Gordon, M. E. Cole, J. W. Garrett, A. D. Fisher, H. S. Campbell and Miss L. Helmer for the Y's.

Trooper Mulloy, the famous blind hero of the Boer War, was introduced to the convention amid vociferous applause. A clever speech by Mr Mulloy was a delightful break in the routine of business.

SUCCESSION DUTIES NOW OVER A MILLION

TORONTO, Oct. 20.—With the close of the financial year, still two weeks away, succession duties paid to the Provincial Treasurer have already passed the hoped-for million mark.

The total amount received up to yesterday was $1,027,081, which means that over $75,000 has been paid in since the first of the month. Two of the largest payments this month came from the estate of the late Andrew Gunn, which returned the Treasury $15,578, and that of the late F. J Phillips, which paid in $18,539.

In two previous years the total of succession duties was over a million but in each year exceptionally large estates were probated.

Another revenue increase is expected to come from the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway. Hon. Mr Matheson has not received the figures but he is looking for the earnings of the Government line to come up to the estimate. Last year the estimate was $625,000, while receipts were but $420,000. For this year the Provincial Treasurer put the estimate at $500,000, which sum, it is expected will be turned over to the Province.

FOREIGNERS ARE SAFE

Cruisers in Harbor at Hankow to Protect Them.

German Legation at Pekin Denies the Report That Kaiser's Troops Are Engaged In the Fighting — Little News Is Received at Hankow, But Rebels Are Believed to Have Made Long Detour and Attacked Troops.

Pekin, Oct. 20.—The foreign legations in Pekin have received no despatches from Hankow since 6 o'clock Wednesday evening. The last message from the American consul-general, Roger S. Greene, stated only that the fighting had begun. It is believed, however, that the concessions in Hankow are safe, as ten or twelve foreign cruisers and gunboats in the harbor are ample protection, even from the joint Chinese army and navy.

But it will be impossible to prevent stray shells from threatening the foreigners, conflagrations and looting by the rabble. It would be difficult to cordon the concessions, because they are not surrounded by a wall. Only narrow streets cut them off from the densely packed Chinese city.

It is hoped that all the women and children have already been safely removed from Hankow, as it is feared that the defeat of the revolutionaries might be followed by excesses on the part of the mob, careful enquiries indicating that the people have more fear of the revolutionaries than sympathy for them.

The German legation at Pekin has made denial of the report that German troops had been engaged in the fighting in the streets of Hankow.

The Board of Communication early Wednesday evening received two despatches. One mentioned Siaokan, in Hupeh province, as having been captured by the rebels; the other was interrupted while being transmitted.

A report has reached here that imperialist troops have refused to detrain at Hankow. Other reports state that the Chinese gunboats took little part in Wednesday's fighting. Their inactivity is explained by the fact that a direct fire would have endangered their troops, while a flank fire would have involved a bombardment over foreign concessions.

Signs of discontent at Hankow are subsiding after Wednesday's fight. The rebels who retreated because of shortage of ammunition and the arrival of Government reinforcements, retired in a southerly direction. Some of them re-entered the native city of Hankow, while others made their way towards Wuchang. The loyal troops were not sufficiently strong to press home any advantage they had gained.

The American attache, Lt.-Col. Wm. D. Beach, and Capt. J. H. Reeves, returned to Pekin Wednesday night because they were not permitted to accompany the troops to Hankow. They say that the orderliness and precision with which the troop trains are being sent southward is admirable. The food supply seemed to be abundant and the troops were in good spirits. The rapidity with which 20,000 men have been despatched to the south has surprised the military attaches.

Capt. Reeves gave it as his opinion that the Imperials have made a great mistake in taking the field, instead of the mountain guns, as the lack of roads makes mule-carried cannon preferable.

An edict issued yesterday gives Yuan Shi Kai, as viceroy of the disaffected provinces, authority over the War Minister, Yin Tchang, who is now serving as a general in the field.

A strict censorship was established yesterday on all trans-provincial messages regarding military movements and also on all code messages, except consular and legation despatches. Even the legations are deprived of news by the interruption of the wires, and there is anxious suspense, as the last messages received described the continuance of desultory firing, with rebel reinforcements crossing the river.

According to a consular despatch, the rebels, after crossing from Hanyan, on the night of Oct. 17, evidently marched all night long in a northeasterly direction around the foreign concessions and attacked the Imperialists shortly after daylight at their camp near the railway. The station at which the encounter took place was not that immediately behind the concessions, but seven or eight miles to the eastward, on the Yangtse. The other station, which has frequently changed hands and at which the disarming and slaughtering of three Imperial soldiers took place, is evidently the main station, immediately behind the concessions.

Officials of the Chinese Foreign Board reiterate that the recapture of Wuchang is only a matter of days. The attitude of the Chinese here towards foreigners cannot be criticized and not the slightest danger is anticipated.

The Province of Szechuen continues to be isolated. There has been no news from that quarter in several days.

Did Warships Mutiny?

San Francisco, Oct. 20.—A despatch from Shanghai records a rumor that three Imperial warships have surrendered and raised the flag of the republic. It is also said that the rebels have captured Wangchow, Province of Hupeh, occupied the forts and telegraph office there and are advancing towards Sheungyang.

Other messages say the American consul at Nanking has asked the American legation at Pekin for warship protection, expecting serious trouble there.

U. S. PAROLE CONVICT ORDERED TO CANADA

DETROIT, Oct. 19.—Sending Michigan parole convicts over into Canada is somewhat of an innovation, but that is what Governor Osborne has done in the case of James Burke, who was sent to Iona prison in 1908 to serve from seven to fourteen years for robbing a bank.

On the parole, which allows Burke his liberty to-morrow, Governor Osborne has written that within seventy-two hours after his release Burke is to proceed to Canada, where he is to remain until the expiration of his maximum sentence, less good time. Burke's presence in the United States anywhere between October 21, 1911, and May 12, 1919, will be construed as a violation of this instrument.

Burke, who is a native of Canada, was the man who tipped off the plot to blow up Jackson prison.

Small Heads Dont Mean Small Brains. ..

The fact that you take a small size in hats does not necessarily mean that you have a small brain. A man with a small head may be much cleverer than a man with a large one. Moreover, the size of the brain is not everything, since, if undeveloped, it is no more likely to produce anything of value than land which is not fertile. There are people with large heads who display so little intelligence that one almost expects to hear their brains rattle when they move, like a shrivelled kernel in a nut.

BOARD OF EDUCATION CONDEMNS CIGARETTE SMOKING BY BOYS

School Population of the City Shows a Steady Increase—A Short but Business-Like Meeting Last Night

At a regular meeting of the Board of Education held last evening, the business transacted was purely routine and the session was not prolonged.

A resolution was passed in reference to the use of cigarettes by the youth of the city and an effort will be made by the Board and Principals of the schools to discourage the use of same.

The members present were: Messrs. W. P. Hudson, chairman; Wm. Johnson, F. C. Sharpe, W. S. Smith, A. E. Bailey, F. E. O'Flynn, C. M. Reid, J. F. Wills, T. E. Ketcheson, W. C. Reid, P. Harrison and Col. Ponton.

In the report a year ago the number registered was 1157, and the average atendance was 987.

The report showed the increase in the number registered and average attendance was satisfactory.

In regard to the teaching staff the Inspector said the new teachers were proving satisfactory.

The report recommended that the principals of the schools be provided with stationery, designating the schools they represent.

The Committee recommended that the Governor-General's medal, won by R. Doxsee of Grier Street school be procured and sent to him at once.

The committee recommended that the salary of Mr. P. C. McLaurin be increased $50 from 1st of September last.

The Committee expressed their appreciation of the valuable report presented by the Inspector, Mr. H. J. Clarke.

On motion the Board went into Committee of the Whole on reports. Mr. C. M. Reid in the chair.

The Committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

MARRIAGE AT CALGARY.

A quiet wedding took place in Calgary, Alta., on Saturday, October 14, 1911, when Miss Lillie Emeline Dunbar, of Winnipeg, was married to Mr. Norman Chase, of Calgary. The bride was until a few years ago, when she removed with her mother to Winnipeg, a resident of this city, and her many friends here will wish her every happiness. They will reside at 1524 Eleventh Avenue West, Calgary.

A BEAUTIFUL ANIMAL.

Mr. C. J. Bowell has purchased from Mr. Clarence Vermilyea the high-class young mare, "Lady Olympia," 3 years old, by the registered Hackney sire imported "Woodland Performer," dam a standard bred mare. "Lady Olympia" stands 15 hands 1 in. high and is a golden chestnut in color, with blaze in face and is of beautiful conformation; withal she is a fine acter and an absolutely fearless driver. As a show horse she won five firsts this season and was well placed wherever shown. In all respects "Lady Olympia" has the qualities desired in a gentleman's road horse.

It's what you are doing now that counts; not what you are going to do.

BOARD OF TRADE.

The Board of Trade meets Monday night.

FINED FOR POACHING.

Robt. Boomhour, for shooting partridge out of season, was fined $5 and costs on Saturday. A charge against Jas. and Elijah Boomhour for shooting deer was dismissed.—Bancroft Times.

Interment took place at St. James' Cemetery. The bearers were Messrs. W. Hogan, R. Brown, W. Smith, W. Finnegan, B. Ives and W. McCarthy.

CONCERT AT ALBERT.

The concert held at Albert College last evening was one of unusual interest and merit. The programme was as follows:—

Organ solo—Selected Mr. Ivor Thomas
Songs—"The Rose" (Johnson), "Hindoo Song" (Bemberg) .... Miss G. Faulkner
Reading—"Who's Afraid?" (Cooke).. .... Miss L. Stewart
Songs—"On Wings of Song" (Mendelssohn), "Life's Lullaby" (Lane) .... Miss R. Andrews
Piano—"Valse Arabesque" (Lock).. .... Miss M. Baxter
Song—"The Vesper Prayer" (Brackett) .... Miss Free
Reading—"The Call of the Wild" (Service) .... Mr. G. Andrews
Song—"Face to Face" (Johnson) .... Miss H. Ketcheson
Piano—Nocturne (Rubenstein) "Raphsodie" (Brahms) Mr. Ivor Thomas
Vocal duet—"Elcelsior" (Balfe).... .....Messrs Staples and Cameron
Reading—From "As You Like It" (Shakespeare) .... Miss Field
Aria—"Show Me Thy Ways" (Torrenti) .... Mrs. A. P. Allen
Vocal duet—"The Passage Birds' Farewell" (Hildach).... Mrs. Allen and Mr. Cameron.

This was the first opportunity of hearing Prof. Thomas, and all realized at once his ability and skill at the piano. His rendition of the Nocturne by Rubenstein was especially pleasing. We hope to have the pleasure of hearing Mr. Thomas often.

Miss Field's selection received excellent attention. She possesses a wonderful interpretation of Shakespeare and excels along that line.

Perhaps the one number that received the heartiest applause was the duet by Mr. Cameron and Mr. Staples. They very kindly responded to an encore.

Mrs. Allen never pleased an Albert audience more than she did last evening, her voice being remarkably clear and full. As an encore she sang "Annie Laurie" most beautifully.

At the close all present declared it was long since they had heard a more enjoyable entertainment at the college.

UNPLEASANTNESS IN WORLD'S SERIES

Very Heavy Rains at Philadelphia, Consequently no Ball Game Today

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 21.—Torrential rain which fell all night has converted Shibe Park into a pool. To-day's championship baseball game has been postponed until Monday.

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—The Giants and Athletics are both dissatisfied with the National Baseball Commission over the latter getting all the money for moving picture concessions. Veteran ball players say this, added to the ticket scandals and other unpleasantness will kill the world's series for years.

BOY UNBALANCED BY BASE BALL

WESTFIELD, N. J., Oct. 20.—His mind unbalanced as a result of feverish interest displayed in the outcome of the Giant-Athletic contest while watching the bulletin board returns here, Allan McGyre, 14 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. John McGyre, of 160 Dudley Avenue, disappeared from his home last night. The parents on discovering his absence, notified the Police and Fire Departments and a search was began.

Under the direction of Poice Sergt. Caufield and Fire Chief Decker, hunting parties scoured the mountainside, Scotch Plains and other nearby hamlets. More than 200 men equipped wtih lanterns participated in the search. Shortly before midnight young McGyre was discovered sitting on a doorstep a few blocks from his home.

According to his parents the boy returned home highly excited over the defeat of the Giants. Shortly after the result of the eleventh inning was posted the boy left the bulletin board downcast, and later was found lying across a trolley track by E. H. Low, who took him home.

And many a girl has landed a slow man by leading him to believe that she is on the ragged edge of marrying some other fellow.

CURRENT COMMENT

So Belleville is to vote on local option at the municipal election.

A woman's idea of heaven is a place where all the other women wear last season's haloes.—Washington Post.

An Ontario man is suing a couple of who said that he voted Grit. He ought to get at least a million dollars. —Calgary Herald.

The rustle of the falling leaves may sound poeticl, but the only awords which the average householder thinks of that rhymes with rake is ache.

A Fitchburg woman has left her husband because he cares more for dogs than her. Usually it is the husband who has to divide the wife's more or less valuable affections with a dog.

W. L. M. King is to lecture on the Forests of the United States, a subject of which he ought to be tolerably well informed, since he and his friends got lost in the reciprocity woods.—Mail and Empire.

Very thoughtful it was in the Italian authorities to prevent the war correspondents from going to the front because "hostilities were about to begin." Those rash men might have been hurt in the fray.

The Indianapolis woman who delivered the funeral oration over the grave of her husband had the satisfaction of being absolutely certain of having the last word.—Vancouver Province.

> Yes, Joseph Downey, ex-M. P., is in charge of the Orillia Asylum, and its a greater pity that more of Mr. Whitney's supporters are not under his care.

Whatever your political associations may be, and whether you approve or dissent from the verdict of the constituencies, you must admit that the institutions which permit of prompt effect being given to public opinion approach very closely to perfection in popular government.—Victoria Colonist.

The people of Chicago have lately observed the fortieth anniversary of the fire which, between October 7th and 11th, 1871, destroyed a third of the city's buildings and left over a third of the population homeless. It left in its wake a death roll of nearly three hundred persons and a property loss of between two and three hundred million dollars.

Stock-taking at the great Ecumenical Conference shows Methodism to be a force to be reckoned with. It has:

Ministers	55,000
Churches	99,000
Sunday Schools	87,000
Officers and teachers	885,000
Sunday School scholars	8,000,000
Members and adherents	32,000,000
Incresea in last ten years	4,000,000

There still lingered among us a foolish notion that everybody else must admire us because we admired ourselves, and that American citizenship is a peerless boon for which all intelligent people are openly or covertly athirst. Canada's refusal even to do business with us, lest that lead to political association, ought to extinguish this lingering notion. Whoever, after this election, talks of annexation as though Canada were ready to fall into our arms must be a surprising blockhead.—Saturday Evening Post.

An echo of the Ne Temere decree was heard from Rev. A. E. St. James, at the Baptist Convention held in Montreal on the 19th inst., who detailed the difficulties he had encountered in building up a church and Sunday school in the east end of Montreal. The priests went around to all of his congregation who had French names and such of them as had been sprinkled in their churches, but had been converted and married by Mr. St. James, who were assured they were not legally married. The sooner men who go about breaking up families are given severe punishment the sooner they will get their deserts.

One hundred and six years ago today, the battle of Trafalgar took place. The British fleet was under command of Admiral Lord Nelson, who expired when his victory was complete. The battle took place in the ocean off Cape Trafalgar in Spain, between 33 ships of the combined fleets of France and Spain and 27 British ships, of which latter, three were of inferior force. The combined fleets exceeded the British by nearly one-fourth in men and guns as well as in ships, but they were totally routed, nineteen of their vessels being captured and their loss being about three thousand men. The effect of Nelson's victory was to break up the alliance between France and Spain with the ultimate result of sending Napoleon to St. Helena.

AMUSEMENTS

It is doubtful if a play has been seen in this city in many years that has attracted such wide attention as that accorded "The Girl From Rector's." The piece had its initial offering and was brought to Weber's Music Hall simply for a metropolitan try-out, but its success was so great it continued an uninterrupted run of three hundred nights and played to the biggest business in the history of the house. Critics declare it is one of the few productions of its sort ever made that carries with it a high class plot and still contains a laugh in every line of the dialogue. Paul M. Potter, the author of the work, who was also responsible for "Trilby," and many other stage successes, received more royalties from "The Girl" last season than was paid any other writer for a single work in such a short space of time.

The story of "The Girl" is that of a young society woman of Battle Creek, Mich., who is interested in every charity there. For recreation, however, she comes to New York and through occasional visits to Rector's earns the title. When she returns suddenly to her home she finds many of her metropolitan friends there, and entanglements ensue which are not explained until just before the fall of the curtain on the last act. "The Girl" will be seen at Griffin's Opera House on Friday, Oct. 27th.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

A meeting of extraordinary interest has been arranged for Sunday afternoon at 4.15 in the Baptist Church, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The speaker will be the Rev. Dr. Carman, about whom such great interest centered in connection with the recent great Ecumenical Conference in Toronto. Messrs. Dyer and Wrightmyer will sing.

A meeting of the Boy Scouts has been called for Monday night at 7 o'clock in the Y.M.C.A.

To-night is the date set for the organization of a foot ball team in connection with the Y.M.C.A. All those interested are asked to be on hand at 7.30 p. m.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 20.—Commenting on the affection prevailing among the members of the family before her death, Mrs. Rebecca Jeffries, mother of James Jeffries, former heavyweight champion of the world, in a codicil to her will which was filed for probate to-day, and disposes of $99,325 in property, nevertheless provided for the cutting-off of any member of it who should oppose her last testament.

The bulk of her estate Mrs. Jeffries leaves to her seven children, Almeda F. Boyer, Lydia A. Southworth, Lillie M. Metcalf, Willis E., J. H., James J., and C. M. Jeffries, who get share and share alike. To her husband, Alex C. GIANT "OLYMPIC" SOON TO RESUME.

The Montreal offices of the White Star Line have just received cable advices that the repairs to the mammoth "Olympic"—the largest steamer in the world, which was rammed by the British cruiser, "Hawke" in September, are progressing satisfactorily and it has been definitely determined that the steamer will resume regular sailings, leaving Southampton Nov. 20th and New York Dec. 9th.

While the steamer is undergoing repairs, the passenger accommodation has been increased by the addition of a large number of suites, and when the vessel is turned over again by the builders, she will be even more complete in every detail than when she made her maiden voyage in June last.

Matching For a Dog

It Seemed the Only Way to Determine Its Ownership

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

A boy of seven on being told to write a story about a dog wrote it as follows:

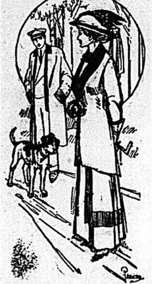
I love Shep, and Shep loves me.

That was all there was of the composition.

Shep was a collie dog, and a very intelligent one. The only other case I have ever known of equal love between a human being and a brute was between my pointer Rex and myself. I used Rex for hunting woodcock. How I did love that dog, and how he did love me! Why in the world he couldn't speak to me I don't know. He could talk with his eyes, though not with his tongue. Many a conversation I have had with him, I speaking with my voice, he with his eyes.

Rex was stolen from me, and I didn't see him again for several years.

One October I was hunting in another field. I had possessed other dogs than Rex, but did not get attached to any of them, and often would hunt without one. This was the case with me on this autumn morning. As I stalked through a wood, kicking up dead leaves—a favorite amusement of mine—I heard some animal bounding toward me, and through the bushes between the trees came a dog. I recognized Rex at once. He ran to me, put his fore paws on my shoulder, and if ever a dog cried for joy he did. As for me, I put my arms around his neck, and I'm not sure but my eyes, too, were wet.



"CALL HIM, PLEASE."

The next thing I was conscious of was looking at a very pretty girl with a big hat on her head, a pair of gauntlets on her hands and a whip such as ladies use when walking out with a dog. I lifted Rex's paws from my shoulders and my hat from my head. There was fire in the girl's eye which my deference did not allay.

"What's the matter with my dog?" she snapped, laying great stress on the word "my."

"Your dog?"

"Yes, my dog. Whose else should it be?"

"Mine."

What a laugh came out of that pretty throat! It wasn't really a laugh, but an expression of anger, contempt, irony, derision. I confess I was a bit miffed by it.

"You say the dog is yours," I said, trying to speak pleasantly. "If he is yours he will follow his mistress. Call him, please."

"Jack! Come here. Jack! Do you hear me?"

Rex looked at her and wagged his tail, but did not move.

"You don't even know the dog's name," I said. Then, moving away, I called, "Come, Rex," and he bounded after me. But I noticed that he kept looking back at his mistress. After moving some twenty paces I stopped.

If ever there was a mad girl that one was.

"How dare you try to steal my dog?" she snapped viciously.

"Steal your dog? I don't need to steal your dog. He knows his master and follows him."

"Jack! Come here." She stamped her little foot in a vain attempt to enforce obedience.

"Let me have your whip," I said. "I'll see if I can drive him back to you."

I took the whip from her hand and, giving the dog a cut, ordered him away from me. He got down on the ground and cringed and whined, but he wouldn't leave me. The girl was beside herself with anger and disappointment. It was plain that she loved him as well as I did.

"Pardon me," I said to her. "I should have explained to you that this dog once belonged to me. I lost him, and he now appears to be your property. He's the nearest to a human being of any brute I ever knew."

"He isn't a brute; he's a human animal."

"And should be treated as a human animal. His affections should not be interfered with."

"Nor my affections either."

"He should be permitted to dwell with the one he loves best."

This was a thrust that didn't suit her. "You mean," she said, "that he should live with the one who loves him best."

"Very brightly turned, but woman's logic—a conclusion based on no premises. It seems to me this is a triangular affair."

She opened her eyes, as if wondering what that could be.

"You love the dog; I love the dog. The dog loves you and loves me. One leg of the triangle is missing."

"Which leg? What leg?"

"The one between you and me. There is love between you and the dog and love between me and the dog, but none whatever between you and me."

"I should think not!"

I repressed a smile. "Well," I said, "what are we going to do about it?"

"I bought Jack—Jack, I say. He is not Rex, as you call him, at all. I bought Jack for $10, and he's my dog."

"I didn't get the $10."

"That's nothing to me."

"I'll match you for him."

Now, while by matching her for the dog I meant to play at heads and tails with a coin, she was so pretty, so feminine in her bursts of impotent anger, that in my heart I intended to convey the impression that I wouldn't mind settling the ownership of the dog by a union of claimants.

"What do you mean by matching for him?" she asked.

I took two coins from my pocket and gave her one, laid the other covered on the back of my hand and asked her to show one side of the coin I had given her. She showed me "heads." I uncovered my coin, and it was "tails."

"The dog is mine," I said.

Again she bristled.

"You were to match me and failed." I added.

"Well, I declare!"

She could not evidently find words to express her horror and contempt at my taking such an advantage of her. She tossed the coin at me viciously, but I caught it.

"That method of deciding the matter between us doesn't seem to please you."

"I should say not. Besides, there's nothing to decide. The dog belongs to me."

"But how are you to prevent his going home with me? You saw that I couldn't drive him away."

This was a stumper. She made no reply. She was evidently trying to think of a way out of it.

"You will tire yourself standing," I said. "Won't you be seated on this log?"

"No, I thank you."

"Then you will pardon me for sitting while you stand. I'm very tired, and I see no way of coming to an agreement."

I sat down, took a pipe from my pocket and proceeded to fill it, asking if she would mind my smoking. She did not reply, and since silence gives consent I lit the pipe.

"I suppose," she said presently, "I'll have to pay you for the dog. It's very mean of you, but"—

"I don't wish to sell him."

"Then what in the world are we going to do?"

"I think we'd better have a conference."

"We seem to be having one, a very long and—disagreeable one."

"If you will sit down and talk reasonably I believe we can come to a satisfactory agreement."

She looked a long while at the log and finally sat down on its other end.

"Now," I said, puffing a cloud, "what do you propose?"

"What do you propose?"

"I proposed a match, but you didn't appear to like that way."

"It's perfectly absurd."

"Nevertheless I'm quite resolved that it shall be settled by that plan."

She thought for some time while I read what she was thinking in the expression of her face. By matching she would have an equal chance of winning the dog. By refusing she would surely lose him, for he would go with me. I got out the coins again.

"I match you this time," I said. "Best two in three."

She sat looking straight ahead of her, not deigning to notice the coin I had laid out on the log for her. Glancing at it, I saw "heads" was up. I cried "tails!" Then, examining her coin and mine, I told her she had won on the first trial. This induced her to take some interest in the proceedings. I took care that she should win again and told her the dog was her property.

"But how am I to get him away from you?" she said in a more pleasant but puzzled tone.

"I don't see how you can," I replied, "unless I go with you."

"That's the plan," she said, much pleased. "You go with me, and I'll chain him to his kennel."

"Are you sure you won't chain me too?"

"How ridiculous!"

It certainly was ridiculous, for she had me chained already, but I wasn't locked for a year afterward, when my matching plan, as I really intended it, was carried out and the dog passed into our united possession. All of which was nice for the dog, nice for the girl and lastly delightful for me. I often twit my wife upon her stupidity in not having understood my double meaning on our first meeting, whereupon she says she saw through the whole thing.

And I'm not quite sure but she did.

Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher, Liverpool Unchanged—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 20.—The easier feeling displayed in America yesterday, notwithstanding bullish private advices regarding shortage prompted some selling for profit here, which resulted in a decline. Following the opening there was some show of strength on predictions of small Russian shipments this week and expected light world's, other than America. During the morning further easiness developed on the increasing offers of new Plate wheat and the weakness in Buenos Ayres with the weather in Argentine favorable. There is a smaller inquiry for cargoes in all positions. At the close prices were unchanged from last night.

CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—A new high-price record for the season was made to-day in wheat. Rain and snow northwest hurried up investors, who had been hoping in vain that a reaction was just at hand. The close, tho nervous, was at 1-4c and 1-8c advance. Corn finished 1 1-8c to 1 3-8c above last night. Oats was up 1-4c to 3-8c, and hog products dearer by 7½c

Montreal, Oct. 21.—Paul Engel and Elizabeth Ernst were passengers on the Lake Erie, which arrived at Quebec on Thursday. They were engaged and were on their way from Germany to New York, where they were to be married. The United States immigration officials told them that they could not cross the border under that arrangement, so they asked a few of the friends they had made on board to go with them to the minister's in Mountain Hill, and were married.

The New Speaker

It has been announced that Dr. A. S. Sproule, M.P. for East Grey, would be the Government candidate for Speaker of the House of Commons and that Mr. P. E. Blondin, M.P. for Champlain, will be Deputy Speaker. The choice of Dr. Sproule for Speaker will give satisfaction to all the members of the House, irrespective of party. He has been a member of the House continuously since 1878. He is familiar with the rules of the House and will make an admirable Speaker.

Election Protest

The Globe's threat, when a protest was entered by Mr. Alex. McColl, of Norfolk, against the return of Mr. W. A. Charlton for corrupt practices, that if the Conservatives commenced protesting Liberals, protests would be entered against Conservatives, has been acted upon, and a counter-protest has been filed by Mr. Charlton against Mr. McColl, charging him with illegal corrupt practices. Is this with a view to a saw-off?

The defeated candidate in East Elgin, Dr. Miller, has protested the return of Mr. Marshall.

Let there be no saw-offs.

Booming Sir Wilfrid Laurier

A telegram from Ottawa of the 18th inst. says:—

The Department of Public Works is to be investigated. Hon. F. D. Monk has been installed there as Minister little more than a week, but meanwhile he has come across things which made plain the need of enquiry and reform. He has asked the Cabinet for the appointment of a commission to go into the whole situation, and this was approved at today's Council. This commission will enquire into all contracts, transactions and leases, including those of water powers, etc., made by the late Government, and report to the Minister as to conditions which have prevailed, along with recommendations for future action. What has been necessarily a superficial enquiry by the Minister has brought forth abundant evidence of many questionable transactions, and more careful investigation will doubtless lead to interesting developments. Mr. Monk proposes to run the department on a business basis. As intimated previously, it is highly probable that all the spending departments will be enquired into, but a start is to be made with the Department of Public Works. The Minister does not propose to accept as a patrimony from his predecessors a condition of things which affords many evidences of reckless and corrupt administration.

This action on the part of Mr. Monk is highly commendable. If it be found that the business of the department has been properly conducted, it is but justice to the outgoing Minister to have the numerous charges of improper conduct cleared up, and if, on the contrary, it is found there has been misconduct, let them be exposed.

The investigation should not be confined to contracts alone. The sham investigations which took place under the late Government brought out sufficient to justify the conclusion that there was much behind which was smothered up, by blocking further investigation. In justice to all let the investigation be an exhaustive one or none at all.

A Good Beginning--Monk Begins Right

Portions of the Conservative press and some of our public men, who have during the past fifteen years been exhausting the adjectives of the English language in condemnation of the administration of the affairs of the Dominion by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, have been booming that gentleman for appointment to the highest position in the gift of the Cabinet, that of High Commissioner to represent Canada in England. Such an appointment would be a reflection upon every Conservative who has been opposing the late Premier during the whole of his official life. It would be tantamount to a declaration that there is no man in the Conservative ranks fitted for the position.

It is argued that while many of his Cabinet colleagues were guilty of acts which would not bear the light of day, and which should have driven them from power long ago, his skirts were clean. This is all habberdash; to suppose for a moment that he was not cognizant of all that was being done and that he did not approve or wink at it, would be to adjudge him much more incompetent for the position he held than even his most severe opponent supposed him to be, hence he was equally blamable with the offenders. True, he has a pleasing manner, is affable, courteous, and eloquent in speech, but all that does not cover up an official life of maladministration of the affairs of the Dominion, nor does it provide a reason for elevating him to the position of High Commissioner of Canada in London.

A contemporary diagnoses the claims set up for his promotion in unvarnished language, which cannot be misunderstood or controverted. It truthfully says:—

"It is true that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the leader of the Federal Liberal party, has poise and finish and balance. He has eloquence and personal distinction. Outside of public affairs, where these qualities should be particularly displayed, he has integrity and steadfastness.

"It is just as true, however, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier entered office with an outfit of convictions and principles, nearly all of which were dissipated or abandoned in office. He rode into power on a fiery protest against re-establishing Separate Schools in Manitoba. He used the power thus obtained to impose Separate Schools on Alberta and Saskatchewan.

"He captained perhaps the most corrupt Administration that ever existed in Canada. For a parallel one must go back to Bigot and the French regime. Keeping his own skirts out of the mire he gave his authority to infinite waste and innumerable prodigalities and rascalities.

"It is just as true, however, that Sir should be told since Sir Wilfrid Laurier clearly has determined to continue as permanent leader of the Liberal party, since he is now directing its reorganization and planning to strengthen its forces in Parliament and since an active Liberal press is seeking industriously to magnify the Liberal leader and to restore the prestige which was so thoroughly broken by the verdict of September 21st."

Sir Wilfrid is now the leader of a discredited party, which would, if it again secured control of the country, re-enact all its iniquities of the past, hence, let us have no more of the fulsome adulation of a politician whom those who are booming him have been condemning for years. Either this, or let them confess that all their opposition has been unwarranted, and bow down and worship their idol. He is in opposition what he was in power, and will be if he ever again secures possession of the Treasury benches.

ITALY'S CHARITABLE QUEEN

The Queen of Italy, who is a remarkably original woman, recently instituted a charming charity, which has added greatly to her popularity. Fifty of the most poverty-stricken motherless babies in Italy have [illegible] collected and brought to a white [illegible] overlooking the sea, which her Majesty has purchased at her own expense, and here they are to live and be educated under the immediate supervision of their benefactress until they are competent to look after themselves. The Queen visits her creche at frequent intervals, accompanied by her children, plays with the small inmates, who call her "mother" and are all known as the "Queen's children."

Utilizing Waste as Fuel.

The greatest work which has been carried on by the British in Egypt, since their occupation of that country has been the construction of dams along the Nile for the purpose of providing water for irrigating the Nile Valley. As a result of this work vast areas, previously waste, have been brought under cultivation and the output of the country vastly increased.

Another enterprise, of little less importance, is now under way. This is for the purpose of utilizing sudd, a thick tangle of water plants in the Nile bed. This growth has for generations seriously interfered with the navigation of the Nile. It has recently been discovered that it can be utilized as a fuel. The new fuel is known as suddite.

And too often good advice means bad luck if you follow it.

RAILWAY OVER SINK HOLES.

Canadian Builders Find One They Are Not Able to Fill.

The Canadian Northern has encountered a number of bad sink-holes on the extension now being built between Duluth and Virginia. Many of these were filled directly with small dump cars, but in two instances the surface did not break through until after the track was laid over them and construction trains were running.

At the larger one, located at milepost 56, soundings taken for a distance of about 1,500 feet showed a depth of from 20 to 45 feet of soft mud. The surface crust appeared to be fairly solid, and it was hoped that it would hold up, but it broke through early last spring after trains had been running over it but a short time. About the middle of April this hole became so bad that it was impossible to operate trains over it and steps were taken to fill it.

To support the track timbers were laid about 30 feet out on each side of the centre line and parallel with it. Large white and Norway pine and tamarack logs were laid across these outside timbers at intervals of three feet. The track was then laid over this grillage, and the cars were dumped between the cross-timbers. In the first 100 feet of the hole an average of 200 12-yard cars were dumped each day for three weeks before the material appeared above the surface of the water, for after the crust of the swamp was broken there was nothing immediately below the track but water and liquid mud.

About a week after soundings were begun new soundings were taken, says the Railway Age Gazette, and where they had formerly showed a depth of soft material of 35 feet they now showed a depth of 60 feet, indicating that there were harder layers of material in the soft mud. This was borne out by the action of the embankment, which would be brought up nearly to grade and would then drop suddenly a distance of 15 or 20 feet.

After spending over six weeks of steady work at this hole, and after filling only about 500 feet of it, it was decided to try to prevent the rest of the swamp from breaking through. Contractors were ordered to crossway it with heavy timbers for a width of 50 feet and a depth of at least two feet where it had not already broken through, which work is now under way.

In constructing this grillage, timbers are first laid close together longtitudinally and with broken joints for the 50-foot width. On top of this cross-timbers 50 feet long are laid close together. A layer of brush is put on top of this, and the embankment dumped on the brush. In addition to this cross-laying a dredge is now digging a ditch 12 feet deep for a distance of two miles to drain the swamp and solidify its surface. It is expected that these measures will remedy the trouble at this point.

At mile-post 69 two sink-holes were encountered close together, with a small ridge between them. Each hole was about 600 feet long and one had a maximum depth of 35 feet, while the other showed no bottom at a depth of 50 feet. Both of these have been filled solidly, using the same method as at mile-post 56. They required about six weeks' work, dumping an average of 180 12-yard cars a day.

DUCKS TRAINED TO CALL WILD BIRDS.

With ropes tethered to a collar on their legs, 30 wild mallard ducks, owned by duck hunters of Clark County, British Columbia, are being daily rehearsed for their prospective roles of live decoys, which they will play, starting with the opening of the hunting season on Oct. 1.

Six weeks ago the birds were feathered balls of fuzz, but with careful treatment and feed they have developed into splendid specimens.

Under the constant tutorage of Jess Troeh the ducks are learning by constant practice to call to their wild brothers and sisters in the air.

Thousands testify to this—thousands who have suffered from Eczema, Psoriasis and other skin troubles, until they heard of the simple cooling wash of Wintergreen, Thymol and other ingredients known as D.D.D. Prescription.

J. Samuel Lewis writes:—"I used three bottles of D.D.D. Prescription, and now my skin, once a mass of fire and irritation, is as smooth and soft as a child's.

Of all remedies for the skin that we know we can especially recommend the D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema. Just a mild, soothing wash—but it cleanses and cools the skin as nothing else can. And it takes away the itch instantly!

We would like to tell you more about D.D.D. Prescription if you will call or write the D.D.D. Laboratories, Dept. B. I., 49 Colborne Street, Toronto and get a free trial bottle.

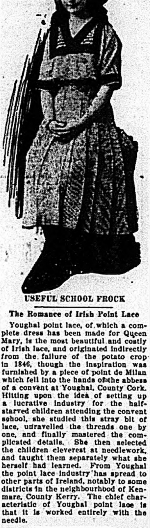
MY LADY'S COLUMN.

CONGENIAL WORK

Mothers Should Carefully Note Tendencies of Children So They May Be Put to Congenial Work.

Observant parents can usually trace a distinct inclination on the part of their children to take special interest in either one or the other — either head-work or hand-work. One child is never so happy as when given a book which keeps his brain busy; another finds chief satisfatcion in making something with the hands — a wooden boat, a doll's frock, a paper kite, etc., etc.

These marked preferences can be a great help to parents when deciding upon the kind of work likely, later, to prove congenial to a girl or boy. But it is a mistake to allow a child, during school years, to follow only that line which most appeals to him. "Oh, Jimmy isn't cut out for book-learning," or "Janie's fingers are all thumbs, so I let her read," are examples of the kind of remark which should never be made in children's hearing. Instead, it should be taken for granted in their presence that Jimmy can become a good scholar if he but takes the trouble, and that Janie's fingers are as teachable as any girl's fingers. This would help largely to prevent that self-satisfied onesidedness which so many people exhibit, and which leaves them so terribly at a loss when anything happens to hinder their doing the only work of which they believe themselves capable. Children's head-work and hand-work should go together and balance one another, so that no latent capacity be left undeveloped and unused.



USEFUL SCHOOL FROCK

The Romance of Irish Point Lace

Youghal point lace, of which a complete dress has been made for Queen Mary, is the most beautiful and costly of Irish lace, and originated indirectly from the failure of the potato crop in 1846, though the inspiration was furnished by a piece of point de Milan which fell into the hands of the abbess of a convent at Youghal, County Cork. Hitting upon the idea of setting up a lucrative industry for the half-starved children attending the convent school, she studied this stray bit of lace, unravelled the threads one by one, and finally mastered the complicated details. She then selected the children cleverest at needlework, and taught them separately what she herself had learned. From Youghal the point lace industry has spread to other parts of Ireland, notably to some districts in the neighbourhood of Kenmare, County Kerry. The chief characteristic of Youghal point lace is that it is worked entirely with the needle.

To Walk Well

An artist has lately been complaining that his chief objection to fashionable dress is that it reveals so completely the inability of the average woman to walk well. He says that most of us either slouch or strut, and he gives the following instructions on "how to walk":—

"The head should not be held erect as if by effort — a woman should not look like a soldier on parade. The steps should not be jerky — however quick, they should be 'smooth.' The movement should be from the hips, and the knees bent as little as possible. A slight — a very slight — bend forward is graceful, if the walker be tall and slim. The arms should not swing noticeably, but should hang freely — elbows should be unobservable. The feet should turn out slightly, and walking should appear to be done chiefly on the toes — the heel down first style is unpardonable. But the chief features and charms of a good carriage are its seeming leisureliness, the absence of 'strut' and 'slouch,' and a certain air of unconscious grace."

The same critic recommends daily practice in front of a full-length mirror — exercises to be taken preferably in cycling knickers, as the movement of the limbs can then be better studied.

A woman has always been the bearer of burdens, and if she complains she is treated worse than ever.

Panama hats are now to be made in Panama, but the Frankfurter, the Hamburger steak and the Havana cigar will continue to come from any old place.

PUNISHED FOOD RIOTERS

Sentences Imposed by the Court on Austrian Youths

The provisional criminal court imposed the severest possible sentences on the participants in the recent food riots in Austria. There were 23 defendants, mostly under 20 years of age, who received sentences amounting in the aggregate to ten years and seven months. The material charges against them were a slight wound to a policeman's ear, and the breaking of 13 street lamps. The average penalty for stone-throwing was one year's hard labor. A youth who shouted "Hurrah for Anarchy!" was sentenced to three months' hard labor, and a 16-year-old lad, for tripping up a policeman, two years' hard labor.

THAT OTTAWA WATER POWER

A despatch from Ottawa of the 19th says:

The Ottawa Citizen makes a sharp attack on the Laurier Government with regard to the leasing of the fourteen acre portion of Victoria Island at the Chats Falls by Mr. Pugsley to Mr. Harty and his associates.

It says: "Unless the Citizen is greatly mistaken before many weeks or months elapse the late Laurier Administration will stand revealed before the people as probably the most shamelessly corrupt Government that Canada has ever had the misfortune to endure."

Referring to the Victoria Island case, it says:—

"This is a case in which a magnificent water power worth from $150,000 to $200,000 was turned over to the friends of the Laurier Government before it had been defeated for about $1,400. It was never advertised as being for sale, nor was the public given an opportunity to bid on it. If there is any worse instance of corruption on the part of a Canadian Government since Confederation it has never come to public attention."

Demands Investigation.

The Citizen goes on to demand an investigation, urging the importance of the matter to Ottawa which has been endeavoring to obtain control of the power at the Chats Falls which are about twenty-five miles up the river from the city.

It is apparent that Mr. Monk has a job before him to clean up his department.

Clyde Liner In Peril.

New York, Oct. 21.—The Clyde Line steamer George W. Clyde is disabled and lying at anchor in a rough sea with a stiff northeast wind blowing 31 miles northeast of the Cape Charles lightship, according to a wireless message received here yesterday afternoon. The position of the vessel is given as latitude 37.30, longitude 75.20. The main shaft of the steamer is reported broken. The despatch stated that the vessel's owners had been notified by wireless of her plight.

The revenue cutter Onondaga, which intercepted the wireless message, has gone to the Clyde's assistance.

Insurance Agent Fined.

Toronto, Oct. 21.—For issuing fire insurance policies on behalf of companies not registered in Ontario, Wm. McD. Douglas, an insurance agent in Cochrane, was fined $20 and costs in each of six cases. Mr. Douglas admitted the charges against him, but pleaded he was unaware that he was violating the law. The companies in question are the Cosmopolitan Insurance Co. and the Metropolitan Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania.

Attorney-General Foy stated yesterday that he would be glad if any person would communicate with his Department at once.

Got the Wrong Ashes.

Kingston, Oct. 21.—An uncanny disclosure was made at Cataraqui cemetery, when the supposed cremated remains of David W. Trotter of Long Beach, Calif., were about to be interred. Friends of Mr. Trotter had received a small case by express and had taken it to the cemetery, where a burial service was to have been said, when it was discovered that the wrong case had been sent. The label intimated that the steel box contained the ashes of Mrs. Ophelia Farrinton, aged 82.

Will Sue the City.

Brantford, Oct. 21.—Local merchants are talking of bringing action against the city for the tearing up of Front street corner here by the railway company, where a $16,000 crossing is being laid. Traffic has been shut off and merchants claim they have been occasioned loss owing to the inactivity of the city council in having the work expedited.

Abandoned His Flight.

Pasadena, Cal., Oct. 21.—Aviator Fowler abandoned his proposed transcontinental flight yesterday afternoon. His manager wanted him to return to Los Angeles and make a flight over the Hippodrome there on Sunday. He refused to do so.

NEW WAY TO TELL CRIMINALS.

A New York Policeman Went to Paris to Learn a Special System.

When Captain Joseph A. Faurot, the police expert in Bertillon measurements and finger prints in the bureau of criminal identification, at headquarters, returns from a course of three months' study in face reading in Paris he will train the detective force in a thorough knowledge of physiognomic morphology, with the intention of letting no criminal who possesses eyes, ears, nose, cheeks, mouth, chin and forehead escape.

Captain Faurot is aboard the American liner Philadelphia and expects before he gets back to master all the science of Bertillon from head to foot, with special concentration on the head, the classifying of faces and features in such a way that by a minute description any detective may seize the guilty aquiline nose, the raveled hair, the pear shaped ear, the convex cheeks or the receding chin.

The entire police force must be authority on the definitions of convex and concave faces, protruding, receding chins, facial furrows and grooves, distorted nostrils, crimped and scalloped ears with tight or flying lobes. They must carry in their minds eyes the location of dents, dimples, moles know that the texture of a beard is of the porcupine, bramble, briar or thistle variety; if the eyes have abnormal slants or squinting slits; if the black and blue eyes possess violet, maroon, red or yellow glints; if the nose is of the snub formation or if it is characterized by an expansive bridge; if the teeth are hollow or plugged with gold, silver and diamonds; if the eyebrows meet—and if so, where?—New York Telegram.

WHY HIS RENT WAS RAISED.

A man whose identity we are going to keep secret has been notified that his rent is to be raised $5 monthly, for the reason that he improved the property at his own expense in a number of ways. He sowed a peck of dandelion seed in the lawn and garden. This is indeed a horrible revenge.—Johnstown (Pa.) Democrat.

That's nothing. We once whitewashed the printshop we occupied before the fire and persuaded our "office devil" to hang up a clean towel and sweep the floor. We also hired a man to wash the windows. The landlord happened in just after and remarked: "How sweet everything smells; how perfectly beautiful everything looks; how splendid the light; this is certainly a model place." We assured him it was. The day following we received notice that our rent was raised 20 per cent!

BUT ONLY $100 WAS HERS.

In a Singular Will a Woman Gave Away $700,000.

A singular will was that of Miss Cora Johnson, who resided in an apartment at 819 Beacon street, Boston, and who died in September, 1910, at a hospital in that city. The value of her entire possessions when inventoried was found not to exceed $100, and she was buried by friends; yet by her will she created bequests and legacies amounting to $700,000; she claimed that she was entitled to a large fortune from the estate of an unnamed person living in New York.

Miss Johnson, it is said, never revealed the name of this person and even her attorney, who drew her will, was not acquainted with it; all she disclosed was that she expected a large estate from a wealthy, elderly woman, who made her will in her favor, and became insane, and was in a sanitarium in New York, and this will could not be changed by reason of the insanity of the testator. Evidently she had a firm conviction that the estate must reach her in any event.

That part of the will referring to the promised millions reads:

"Whereas, it is possible that at the time of my decease I shall not be the owner of property sufficient in amount to pay the foregoing bequests, and

"Whereas I have been credibly informed and believe that there is in existence a certain will made by a prson now an inhabitant of the city and State of New York by which will certain property is devised and bequeathed to me, and

"Whereas I have been credibly informed and believe that in said will it is provided that in case I shall die before the maker of said will, the property herein bequeathed and devised to me shall pass to and be paid over to persons, corporations and objects which I shall in my last will name, select and appoint:

"Now, therefore, I do hereby exercise any and all powers of appointment contained in and given to me by any such will by any person, if any such will there be, desiring and intending that whether or not I survive the maker of said will, the persons, corporations and institutions hereinbefore named, shall be benefited in accordance with and to the extent of the terms of this instrument, either as legatees hereunder in case of my survival of the maker of said will or as my appointees thereunder in case of my pre-decease."—From Ancient, Curious and Famous Wills.

The Age of Fish.

Recent observations show that the rings on the shells of the freshwater mussel are usually annual rings, though sometimes two rings are laid down in one year. The concentric markings on the scales of fishes enable us to determine the age, and we can even tell from the salmon's scales whether it has spawned or not. The age of a fish can also be told from its otoliths — small limy concretions in its ear — and even from some of its

Discontent Among the Foreign Population of South Wales

The rapid growth of foreign colonies in South Wales is causing discontent among the native population. The latest protest is from Newport, where many of the residents of the Pigwenlly district, a working-class area, have sent a petition to the Watch Committee, directing attention to the large and rapidly growing settlement of Chinese and other foreigners in their midst, and suggesting that the committee should take measures to check this growth. One of the means proposed is that property owners should be advised not to let premises to foreigners.

The Ministry of Commerce has announced that an exhibition of stamps will be held next autumn in Vienna. A novel feature of it will be the famous Jugent or juvenile collection. NEGRO STRUNG UP IN HEART OF TOWN

MANCHESTER, Ga., Oct. 20.—Because he knocked down a white man last night, Jerry Lovelace, a negro, was taken from jail at 2 o'clock this morning and lynched. There were about thirty men in the mob and they took the negro to Ferndale park, in the heart of Manchester, and hanged him.

Last night Lovelace was arrested and jailed on a charge of having assaulted Yardmaster W. F. Kernan, of the Atlantic & Birmingham Railroad There was much feeling and after midnight a mob formed, captured City Marshal Collier and secured the jail keys and the officer's gun.

Leaving the marshal bound, the mob unlocked the jail, secured the negro and lynched him. After the lynching the mob returned to Marshal Collier, unbound him and returned the jail keys and his gun.

Manchester is a comparatively new place. It has been extensively advertised and was known as the "model town."

A VERY EXTENSIVE BOUNDARY SURVEY

VANCOUVER, B.C., Oct. 19.—J. D Craig, Chief of the Canadian Boundary Survey, here from Alaska to-day, says the past few months have been devoted to running a line along the 141st meridian from Mt. St. Elias, to the Arctic Ocean. This line is the boundary between the northern parts of the United States and Canada. The survey started this year at the Arctic Circle and completed the line to within 30 miles of the Arctic Ocean. The work consists of cutting paths 20 feet wide through the dense timber, putting up bronze monuments at average distances of three miles apart and of mapping the country. The expedition consists of 90 men and 200 horses Canadian surveyors composed about half of the joint party

The survey of the boundary between the northern possessions of the United States and Canada, is costing the two Governments jointly about $2,000,000. The work has been going on for the past fourteen years, but will be completed probably next year Work on the 141st meridian has been under way for the past five years. With the extension of the line from Davidson's Mountains, where it was left this year, to the Arctic Ocean, the entire survey will have been completed. The Davidson Mountains are about 8,000 feet high and are very rugged and inaccessible.

Natural Cure for Catarrh Obviates Taking Drugs

IT HAS SUPERSEDED THE OLD-FASHIONED STOMACH-DOSING REMEDIES, AND INVARIABLY CURES QUICKLY.

It was their inability to reach the real source of catarrh and bronchitis that caused the medical profession to drop liquid cough medicines and adopt "Catarrhozone" instead. Catarrhozone provides a method of breathing right into the lungs certain rare medicinal vapors which are so healing and comforting as to entirely banish coughs, catarrh and throat trouble in a very short time.

The most wonderful thing about Catarrhozone is, that no matter where the germs of bronchitis or catarrh are hidden, Catrarbozone will reach and destroy them.

"About five years ago I took a cold in the head and Catarrh set in. It kept increasing by leaps and bounds, I kept putting off getting anything until at last I found I would have to. After trying several things I heard of your remedy, Catarrhozone, and procured a bottle and began using it. I was not long in finding out I had struck the right thing. I am recommending Catarrhozone to all who have catarrh, etc.

(Signed) Everton L. Wassan,
"Blair P. O., Queen's Co., N. B."

Catarrhozone has made an astonishing record of cures. Its method is right; no drugs, just healing balsamic vapors, that bring instant relief to Catarrh and all throat, bronchial and chest colds. Get the large size, lasts two months, is sure to cure you, price $1.00; smaller size, 50c.; sample or trial size, 25c. All dealers, or The Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N. Y., or Kingston, Ont.

WRONG REMAINS SENT FOR BURIAL

KINGSTON, Oct. 20.—A shocking disclosure was made on Wednesday afternoon, at Cataraqui cemetery, when the supposed cremated remains of David W. Trotter, of Long Beach, California, were about to be interred. Friends of Mr. Trotter had received a small case from the Dominion Express company and had taken it to Cataraqui cemetery, where a burial service was to have been said by Rev. Mr. McConnell, Methodist minister of Pittsburg circuit.

At the cemetery the package was uncovered, when the startling discovery was made that the wrong case had been sent. The label intimated that the steel box contained the ashes of Mrs. Orphelia Farrington, aged 82 years, who deid some months ago and her body cremated.

Friends here cannot explain the mistake other than that in packing the two boxes they got into the wrong wrappers. Either that, or a box had been received which had hitherto held remains and the label had not bee removed. However, the case was placed in a vault at the cemetery, and the undertaker at Long Branch has been written to for an explanation.

The discoverey proved to be quite a cause for agitation to the friends of the deceased, who formerly lived in Pittsburg, and until explanations can be made and the proper sahes returned to them, they will continue to be in a state of worry.

EXPLOSION VICTIM MARRIED A WEEK

RIGAUD, Que., Oct. 20.—Little is yet known as to the cause of the explosion yesterday afternoon at the premises of the Curtis Explosives Co

The wife of the dead man, Eugene Seguin, when she heard the news, gave birth to a child. The shock of the explosion was so great that nearly all the windows at the Bourget College were broken and the ceiling fell down. Mrs. Chevrier, at Chute-a-Blondeau, telephoned to ask if there was an earthquake at Rigaud.

Folfred Malette, another of the victims, had only been married a week, and was engaged by the company only two days before. Besides the killed the dangerously injured are Emile Faubert and Elzear Thauvet, and two Poles and one Russian has disappeared. Their fate is at present unknown.

As far as is known Mallette and Castonguay were carrying dynamite in a bucket containing nearly one thousand pounds of this explosive when it exploded, setting off the stuff stored in the shed. Mr. Adrienne Sabourin, superintendent, was in one of the other buildings, and had a narrow escape, a tree trunk five feet long and six inches through knocking his hat off

WAS A CAPTAIN FOR THREE MONTHS

Edward Richter, a German engineer and traveller, who was captured by Greek bandits and held nearly three months for a $5,000 ransom, has gone to Vienna for a briest rest before rejoining his wife and aged mother in Jena, Germany.

While he was mapping for a German geographical society on Mount Olympus, in the wild frontier region between Turkey and Greece, brigands seized Herr Richter in Turkish territory, killing his escort of Turkish gendarmes.

Letters from Lallos, the band's leader, demanding a ransom were delivered by Turkish villagers. The German Government remonstrated promptly and strongly, and a small army of Turkish troops was sent to rescue Richter. Agents of Germany and of the geographical society scoured the mountains. They had the money to pay the ransom. After weeks the search was abandoned and the freebooters, seeing that they had nothing to gain by keeping or killing Richter, placed him where he fell into the hands of the Turkish troops.

"My captivity was an awful ordeal for me. Soon after my capture, the bandits hurried me across the frontier on the Greek side of Mount Olympus and kept me in a cave nearly three months. The sufferings I had to endure was indescribable. All sorts of vermin, noxious insects and lizards crept over me at night, so that sleep would have been impossible even if I had not feared the bandits who often plotted my death. At first they treated me pretty well and brought me sufficient food, consisting of eggs, bread and butter, but when they saw that the ransom money was not forthcoming they became infuriated, threatened to kill me, and left me without food for a considerable time, so that I was nearly starved when I was freed.

"They were very pious and said their prayers at nightfall and on getting up in the morning. The cave was well chosen for defence and could have been held for a considerable time against a large force.

"This is my third and last visit to Olympus and will always be remembered by me with a feeling of horror. Olympus, in spite of its historic associations, is, strange to say, still relatively unexplored, and in my book I am going to give a description of the district which should interest students of Greek archaeology."

HE WANTS A BACHELOR GIRL

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—Because so many of his women stenographers leave to get married just about the time they are becoming useful in his office work, Edward S. Black, a Newark lawyer, with offices in the Prudential Insurance building, inserted an advertisement in the newspapers yesterday which read:

> Wanted—Young woman stenographer who will sign contract not to get married; life position; best salary. E. S. B.

Mr. Black is determined that his next stenographer will not give him a simple promise. Instead, he has a hard, matter-of-fact, binding legal document awaiting in his desk for the next stenographer he employs.

The document runs like this:

I, Edward S. Black, party of the first part, agree to pay——, party of the second party, $20 weekly to do stenographic work in my office daily, excepting Sundays and holidays, between the hours of 9 a. m., and 5 p. m., on the following conditions:

That the party of the second part shall not marry; that she shall not attend dances; that she shall refrain from entertaining the company of young gentlemen and not accompany gentlemen friends to any place of amusement or recreation; that she shall not go to theatres or other places of recreation by herself or with other girl friends more than once a week; that she will in all ways discourage marriageable men from seeking her company by absenting herself from places where she is most likely to meet them; that she will not listen to girl friends if they try to dissuade her from living a girl-bachelor life; that she shall not affect puffs, powder, rats or paint, or in any other way make herself attractive to look upon.

It is the opinion of a good many Newark damsels that Mr. Black will have his own troubles trying to find a woman stenographer to take the position offered by him, and they also doubt that his form of contract is legal.

HAVING A GOOD CRY

Likewise an Exciting Time and Then Consolation.

By DONALD ALLEN.

Pretty Viola Craydon had come down to visit her aunt in her country home, and for a week she had been supremely happy. There were chickens and ducks and geese, there were guinea hens and doves and rabbits, there were innocent lambkins and frolicking calves, and she had tried to milk a cow, fallen off a fence and churned two pounds of butter. But for Arthur Tyson this dream of bliss might have continued another week, and pretty Viola might have climbed to the roof of the wagon shed, sold paper rags to a tin peddler and gone blackberrying down in the meadow as a continuance of her romantic adventures.

Arthur Tyson had not only fallen in love with her, but he was intending to ask for her hand. He hadn't published his intentions in any of the journals or told the country postmistress what was in his mind, but Miss Viola had a line on him. You can't fool a girl about such things. The man who is courting her may talk about the joys of bachelor life and pretend to be a cynic on affairs of sentiment, but she can read him like a book. When Arthur had said that he would arrive at Viola's aunt's on the 14th—running down in his auto in the forenoon and running back to the city again in the evening—there was a look in his eyes that said there would be something doing.

The 14th came, and then things began to happen. A letter arrived from Arthur to say that his grandmother wanted him to hurry to her dying bedside; a big bumblebee came droning along, even as Viola was reading the letter while seated on the veranda, and stung her on the bare arm; a windmill man called on business and tried to flirt with her, she was chased out of the barnyard by a calf and chased back again by a turkey gobbler, the dog got hold of her cute summer hat and chewed it up, and she fell down cellar while going after preserves and landed on top of the family cat.

Several other vexatious things occurred between the morning of the 14th and noon of the next day, and an hour after dinner Miss Viola made up her mind to have a good cry. If she cried in the house her aunt, who was a sharp eyed old lady, would see her tears and ask questions; if she went to the barn to cry among the cackling hens and new mown hay the hired man would come stumbling in; if she hid away behind the grape arbor or the currant bushes there were bugs to crawl down her back as soon as she was off her guard.

Down across the meadow and half a mile from the house there was a small grove, and the disconsolate girl finally made up her mind that her tears of sorrow should be shed around the roots of those trees. Her manner of dodging her aunt and getting out of the house and down to the grove would have been called "making a sneak" by some, but a pretty girl who is looking for a crying place should not be judged too harshly.

She found the grove a capital place for her business. There were shade and quietness and the whispering of the summer breeze through the leaves, and Miss Viola went at it and let the tears fall, her chin quiver and her sobs frighten away the lone chickadee that was taking a daytime nap on a branch above her head.

Mr. Tyson hastened to the bedside of his dying grandmother, thinking that it would be a whole week before she would die and be buried and the will mentioning him as sole heir read. Upon his arrival a glad surprise awaited him. It was a case of bilious colic only, caused by eating too heartily of corned beef and cabbage at the advanced age of eighty-three.

He would have hastened away at once, but the grandmother objected. She had a story to tell—a story of how that colic grasped and gripped her and lasted ten hours before the doctor could bring relief. It took her all day to finish the story, and then it took her nephew several hours in addition to convince her that if he did not hasten back to town the whole United States would turn turtle.

He made things hum when he got started, but it was midafternoon of the 15th when his auto arrived within cannon shot of the farmhouse which sheltered the girl he meant to make his wife and of the grove wherein a sad eyed maiden sat and wept—that is, she wasn't sitting there just then. She had other business on hand.

At 1 o'clock that afternoon at the railroad station, two miles away, a train bearing 100 lunatics on their way to a newly completed asylum had been shunted on to the side track to let the express pass. They were given refreshments, and all of a sudden, while the guards were about their hospitable work and their vigilance relaxed, a dozen of the unfortunate people, men and women, escaped from the cars and scattered over the country.

Of course they were instantly pursued, but three or four of them got a long start. Guards and farmers and farmers' boys and farmers' dogs took up the pursuit with avidity.

As Miss Viola sat in her grove and sobbed and wept and threw sticks at the bugs crawling about she was startled by whoops and yells and shouts. She brushed away her tears and repressed her sobs and stepped out of the shelter of the grove to see what was up.

She had heard of a rabbit being routed out of a wood pile and a whole county joining in the chase, and it dashed across her mind that this was an occurrence of the sort. She was soon undeceived. Three men, four boys and two dogs came running toward her, and as she was seen there were cries of:

Men and boys and dogs bore down on the helpless maiden, and almost before she could scream she found herself grasped by both arms and being hurried along. She had been boosted over a fence and hustled through a thistle patch before she could gather her wits. Then she began to struggle and protest. It was useless to struggle, and the men and boys laughed at her protestations. When fright made her weak and she sank down one of the men took her on and kept business moving. Before reaching the station and the train they were met by one of the guards. The girl revived sufficiently to protest anew, but he answered her:

"Of course she's one of 'em, and a cute wench she is! This is the third time in two years she has escaped us. Bring her along."

Miss Viola was in a distressful condition when the station was at length reached. Her captors were met by shouting men and barking dogs and wails and screams from the two carloads of lunatics, and just then an auto came whooping up and had to pause for the crowd to clear the street. It is useless to conceal the fact that it was driven by Arthur Tyson.

"What's the matter?" he asked of an excited farmer as the machine came to a halt.

"More fun than I've seen in twenty years," was the answer. "Those two cars are full of crazy folks. About a dozen got away, and we've been chasing 'em down. They've just got the last one."

Arthur stood up to look over the crowd. A woman had apparently fainted away, and two or three men were about to pick her up and carry her across to the train. As her shoulders were lifted up he caught sight of her face, and next instant things were happening again.

He sprang down into the crowd, elbowed men and kicked dogs right and left and in a moment was beside the woman. The woman's hair was down and her face covered with dust and grime and her dress torn from neck to shoulder, but love makes no mistakes in such matters.

The young man had knocked down two men and had the girl on his arm before he asked for explanations. Before they were tendered he had to lay his burden down and perform further pugilistic feats, but in due time the guards, the farmers, the farmers' boys and the farmers' dogs admitted that a mistake had been made.

When the auto resumed its journey the girl was a passenger. She had come to and realized that she was not being taken off to an insane asylum.

It was some hours later, when the harvest moon was shining and the whippoorwills were singing, that she told her story, and, though her aunt was sitting right beside her and holding her hand and calling her "poor dear," the story had only been finished when Arthur Tyson leaned forward and kissed her and said that he proposed to see from that time on that she had the legal and moral right to weep in any grove she wanted to without being hustled around the country as an escaped lunatic. The proposal hadn't come in just the romantic form expected, but Miss Viola was a girl of sense and realized that when exigencies arise the machinery of romance may be thrown out of gear.

Italian Beads.

A girl who has just come back from Italy wore around her neck over a dark blouse a necklace of rope gold tied loosely at the bust line and finished with two long tassels.

Every one who saw this chain spoke of its beauty, thinking it an heirloom. The chain was nothing but a rope of tiny gilt glass beads bought in Venice for about 40 cents. "I am sorry now," she said, "that I did not get more of them. I brought one for a friend, and we have both had the same experience. Every one thinks it one of the old gold chains of colonial days. Over there they are so plentiful that it cheapened the chain to my own mind."

The friend, who was up in beadwork, straightway copied this chain for herself. She strung twelve strands of coarse yellow silk with the tiniest gilt beads to be found in this country, twisted them into a tightly coiled rope and finished the end with a big gold bead, from which hung tassels of the small ones.

The effect was not so good as in the Venetian chain, for the same delicate beads could not be found, but a showy and unusual ornament was achieved to brighten a dark blouse.

Fashion's Fads.

The long seamless shoulder remains in excellent vogue.

Handkerchiefs of the finest linen are edged with black chantilly lace.

The true empire suit has yet to be evolved, and it is doubtful if it would prove worth while should it ever be represented among fashionable models.

Cut ostrich feathers are now being made into braids for trimming hats and dresses. These come in all colors that are adapted for street and house wear.

Many overskirts come within a few inches of the bottom of the skirt and are edged with a trimming which does not catch in the skirt, but merely gives a finish to the tunic.

The touch of red so dominant in the winter's fashions has spread to the artificial flower, and the deep tone of the old fashioned fuchsia now adds warmth to a corsage bouquet of violets.

Beautiful bags with ornate frames, heavy with repousse work, are seen in silk, satin, velvet, suede or other fine leather. The frames are often oval or pointed at the tops, and the bags more often than not are rounded at the bottom.

Every Husband Knows.

According to a recent issue of Life there are a few facts that every husband knows. First:

That it isn't safe for him to invite any old friend home to dinner without arranging for the privilege a week or so ahead.

That it is wonderful how even the simplest gown has advanced in price, compared with what it was last year.

That the day is coming when he will rise up in his might and assert himself, not suddenly and undignifiedly, but calmly and permanently.

That the household expenses could easily be cut in half if he only had the time to put his gigantic intellect and business experience upon them.

That one and one make four or five.

That there is always one room in the house that simply cannot wait any longer to be decorated.

That the "little affair" to which a "few friends" are to be invited means in the end about two weeks' hard work, a house full of people, and an expenditure of hundreds.

That his own ideas about disciplining children are always too radical to be carried out.

That everybody works father.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

MORAL EFFECT GREAT

China Now Finding Out That Rebels Were Victorious.

Battle at Hankow Is Now Known to Have Been a Severe Defeat For the Imperial Forces and Result Will Be Demoralization to the Troops Now Mobilizing—Another Province Is Reported to Be Up In Arms.

Pekin, Oct. 21.—It is apparent here that the Imperial Government knew the result of the battle at Hankow between its forces and the rebels for more than twenty-four hours' before it became public here. Reports of the rebel victory gradually leaked out during the day, but the first positive account of the defeat of the Imperial troops was delivered to the Foreign legations last night by the Associated Press. It created a profound impression.

The success of the revolution has been considered here to hinge upon the result of the first encounter, as its moral effect would be far-reaching in China, as probably nowhere else would be the case, when the fugitive Imperialists reach the main army, which is mobilizing near Sin Yang Chow, the news of the repulse, it is believed, will utterly demoralize the troops, while on the other hand the news as it goes along the Yangtse River probably will result in further important adhesions to the rebel cause.

The foreign legations here believe that yesterday's news from Hankow and Yan-Nan will mean that the provinces south of the Yangtse and also some on the north side of the river sooner or later will secede.

The Government acknowledges that there is a serious situation in Chang-Sha, Province of Hu-Nan, which it is believed in Pekin means that Chang-Sha has joined the revolt.

Foreigners whose business it is to study China think that the northern provinces, which are not deeply affected by sedition, may rally around the Manchus. Everything, however, seems to depend on an immediate and successful advance by Minister of War Yin Tchang, who now commands 20,000 men within one hundred miles of Hankow, but only the Foreign Ministry pretends to enjoy confidence in his promised attack.

Already Yin Tchang is issuing proclamations in which he is offering pardon to all who desert the rebel standard, and it is believed he will rely on proclamations and negotiations, fearing or being unable to move his army.

At midnight last night a report from Yin Tchang was published in the official gazette. It does not refer to Wednesday's fight at Hankow. It says the twenty-second regiment arrived at Hankow Sunday, and that the rebels attacked twice, but were repulsed, and that three rebels were captured. His spies report that the rebels are preparing for a defence of Wu-Chang and Hankow. Many desertions from the rebel ranks are reported. Yin Tchang says he has made Sin-Yang-Chow his temporary headquarters, and will proceed southward after the arrival of the fourth division of the troops.

An edict which also is published sanctions Yin-Tching's proposals, and says it hopes he will lose no time in suppressing the rebels. Another edict expresses compassion for the people in those provinces, which are suffering from drought and rebellion, and orders 200,000 taels from the late Empress Dowager's hoard to be paid to Yuan Shi Kai, who will arrange for its distribution among the distressed people.

Red Cross In Field.

Hankow, Oct. 21.—During Wednesday's battle the Red Cross for the first time in history put Chinese workers in the field. The Red Cross has not yet obtained recognition by the Imperial troops, and consequently many of their wounded who were left on the field, were killed and mutilated by civilians who are in sympathy with revolt. The foreign nurses remained on the battlefield to take care of the wounded despite the advice of the consuls that they leave. The mission hospitals have now become Red Cross stations.

Many of the down-river towns report disturbances. A newspaper correspondent found at a railway station in the midst of a deserted camp, three frightened Chinese, who asked him to escort them to Hankow. The presence of foreigners is considered protection wherever there are revolutionists.

SORRY TO LEAVE CANADA.

But Glad to Be Back in England Again, Says Grey.

Liverpool, Oct. 21.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Earl Grey, accompanied by Ladies Sybil and Evelyn Grey, were given a royal welcome on their arrival here yesterday. They were received by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, wearing his chain of office, Harold D. Bateson, chairman of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce; Lieut.-Gen. Sir Henry Mackinnon, general officer commanding the western command; Gen. Bingham, whose son has been acting as A.D.C. to Earl Grey in Canada; and W. J. Doll, general manager of the Allan Line. His Excellency, invited to give a public message, said:

"It is impossible to be too sanguine as to the future development of Canada. It is a splendid country. It is going ahead as fast as anyone could desire. The more it increases in strength, the greater will be the accession of strength to the Empire.

"I am glad to be back in England after seven eventful years. They have been seven happy years in a land of open sunshine, and, although I am glad to be back among those who are carrying on practically singlehanded the whole burden of the British Empire, I confess I was sorry to leave the Dominion.

"As to the Canadian climate, I can only say that I thoroughly enjoyed it, whether in summer or winter, and I am not sure that before the present winter is over I shall not wish to be in Canada again."

Earl Grey and family later journeyed to London by special train, in which was reserved a royal saloon, decorated with choice flowers, the gift of the Canada Club, the Allan Line, and the C. P. R.

Barrie, Oct. 21.—Haughton Lennox, M.P. for South Simcoe, says there is no justification for a published report that he might vacate his seat in Parliament to make way for Hon. W. T. WOULD CURB JUDGES

Roosevelt Says Popular Control Is Necessary.

Ex-President, In Speech In New York on Conservation of Womanhood and Childhood, Says United States Judiciary Is Prone to Block Reforms and Must Obey the Will of People—Must Move Cautiously.

New York, Oct. 21.—The judiciary of the United States must be brought within the control of and answerable to the well-thought-out judgment of the people, in the opinion of Theodore Roosevelt, who spoke last night on "The Conservation of Womanhood and Childhood," before the civic forum. This control, in Mr. Roosevelt's judgment, should be, "exercised more cautiously and in different fashion than the control by the people over the legislator, and the executive, but the control must be there."

Control of the judges, Mr. Roosevelt said, was but half—although by far the more important part—of a program which should be carried out for the proper conservation of manhood, womanhood and childhood. The first half of the program, he said, consisted in placing upon the statute books of the nation and the various states, legislation to remedy existing defects.

The ex-President spoke at length of what he termed "crying abuses connected with child labor." He referred to the need of laws to prevent the employment of children as young as ten years in the canneries of this state, and to other legislation for the protection of children.

"I most emphatically believe that we have been wise in giving great power to our judges, including this power of judicial interpretation of statutes to see whether they conform with the fundamental law of the land. But I also most firmly believe that like any other power, this power can be abused, and that it is a power with which the people have merely temporarily parted and not one which they have permanently alienated.

"Used cautiously and moderately and only in the clearest cases, it is fraught with the utmost good to the body politic. Used recklessly, wantonly and foolishly, where the case is so doubtful that the judges themselves may be divided nearly equally on the two sides, it results in very great evil, as it has resulted again and again in this State of New York; and it may result in even greater evil, for it may, in the end, cause such a revulsion in the minds of the people at large as to result in totally taking away this power from the judges—action which I should deplore.

"During the last twenty-five years the courts here in New York, helped, I am sorry to say, once or twice by the supreme court of the nation, have thrown what have at times proved well nigh or altogether insurmountable obstacles in the path of needed social reforms.

"It is, I believe, an advantage to have fixed in the court the power to state that a legislative act is unconstitutional, but only provided that the power is exercised with the wisdom of self-restraint. If the courts continue to use it with the recklessness that has too often been shown in the past it is almost inevitable that efforts will be made to amend it. It is a rank absurdity to hold that the violation of the constitution is evident in a case where the present chief justice of the United States and enough of his colleagues to come within one of a majority, of a court holding strongly the opposite view.

"I believe that the only ultimate safety for our people is in self-control; not in control from the outside. I do not believe in snap judgments. I do not believe in permitting the determination of a moment to be transmuted into a permanent policy, but I do believe that the serious, sober, well-thought-out judgment of the people must be given effect; I do believe that the people must ultimately control its own destinies, and cannot surrender the right of ultimate control to a judge any more than to a legislator or an executive."

Check Emigration Figures.

Ottawa, Oct. 21.—A system will be established for a record of emigration, not only to the United States, but to other countries, and the figures will be used in checking over the next census returns.

The presence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Premier Borden's office yesterday morning started the report that they were conferring in regard to acclamations for the new Ministers, and Messrs. Fielding and Graham, defeated Ministers. It is learned, however, that they simply discussed the status of the private secretaries of the late Ministers.

To Divide Supreme Court?

Ottawa, Oct. 21.—In Government circles a proposal is mooted to divide the Supreme Court of Canada into two sections, east and west, though there is much doubt as to whether it will be carried out.

Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Interior, is one of those who favor the proposition as designed to lighten the cost of litigation to the west.

PUT UP A HARD FIGHT

Arabs Stubbornly Resisted Landing at Benghazi.

The Tribesmen Kept Up the Struggle Long After the Turkish Garrison Had Fled and Many Were Taken Prisoner By the Italian Forces—Casualties Heavy on Both Sides—Four Thousand Men Were Landed.

Tripoli, Oct. 21.—In the fighting at Benghazi Thursday between the Italians and Turks and Arabs there were numerous casualties on both sides. When finally the Italians rushed the trenches, the Arabs made a strong resistance, while the Turks fled. The Italians took many Arabs prisoners.

The Italian fleet under Rear-Admiral Aubrey bombarded Benghazi Thursday and landed 4,000 men, who, after a brisk battle, occupied a portion of the town. The greater part of the troops, however, camped on the beach Thursday night.

The expeditionary force instructed to occupy Benghazi arrived in the roadstead Wednesday morning, convoyed by the Italian battleships Vittorio Emanuele III., Roma, Napoli and Regina Elean, the cruisers Amalfi and Etruria, five smaller warships and two torpedo boat divisions.

Rear-Admiral Aubrey sent an officer with a white flag to the Turkish commander demanding surrender of the town. The Turkish commander promptly refused, and subsequently was notified by the Italian commander that unless he changed his mind and capitulated before 6 o'clock the town would be bombarded at that hour. No reply having been received, the bombardment began at the hour set. The shelling of the fleet continued until 9, when a detachment of sailors and troops was debarked. Other landing parties followed. The first Italians to come ashore were received with a sharp rifle fire from the Turks. The Italians bore themselves well and established a position near the water's edge, and stood the Turkish fire. They were rapidly reinforced from the fleet and later in a forward movement the Italians took the barracks in the village of Sidi by assault. They also took and held a part of Benghazi.

Altogether 4,000 men were landed. Late in the day temporary quarters were established on the beach.

Separation of Queen's.

Kingston, Oct. 21.—The bill for the separation of Queen's University from the Presbyterian Church, which is to come before the next session of the Dominion Parliament, will provide for a settlement upon the theological faculty of $200,000, as its share of the endowment fund, and for building, fuel, light, and attendance.

The General Assembly Commissioners are holding out for the transfer of the old arts building, now occupied by the faculty of theology, but the trustees do not want to give so much as that. The trustees promise, however, to erect a building for theology within five years.

"Halsbury Club" Excites.

London, Oct. 21.—The formation of the Halsbury Club has aroused intense interest in political circles throughout the country. The Radical newspapers are naturally delighted, but the moderates in the Unionist party are shocked. The "die-hards" continue to be firm in their demand for a resolute and uncompromising leadership.

Mr. Balfour speaks in Edinburgh and Glasgow, and comes to London on Sunday. It now seems almost certain that a meeting of the party leaders will be held on Monday to discuss the situation.

COMMISSION REPORTS.

British Railway Arbitrators Recommend Conciliation Boards.

London, Oct. 21.—In a report issued yesterday by the Railway Commission of Enquiry, which was appointed in August last, to endeavor to effect a settlement of questions at issue between the railway companies and their employes who were then on strike, opposition is expected to recognition by the companies of the men's unions. "The commissioners think," the report says, "that with their great responsibilities the companies cannot and should not be expected to permit any interference by their men on the subjects of discipline and management."

The commission recommends the adoption of a new scheme, to be in force until Jan. 6, 1914, by which all questions affecting hours of work, wages and conditions of service that cannot be settled by negotiations shall be referred to a conciliation board, to be formed along the lines of the existing sectional boards of conciliation. It is proposed also that the existing agreements between the companies and the men shall remain in force until Jan. 7, 1912.

The commissioners recommend in conclusion that men on strike shall not be allowed to coerce by threats or intimidation other men who wish to work.

J. E. Williams, chairman of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, in an interview last night said he was certain the report would not meet with the approval of the railway men. In some respects, Mr. Williams said, the recommendations made for a slight improvement in the old scheme, but in other respects were much inferior.

Says Thaw Whipped Her.

New York, Oct. 21.—A Paris cable says: If Miss Ruth Lambert, of Boston, can help it, Harry K. Thaw, who killed Stanford White, will not eat his Christmas dinner with his family. Miss Lambert, who has lived in Paris for the last twelve years, is armed with documents which, it is asserted prove Thaw's insanity. One of these is a statement that Miss Lambert having met Thaw in Maxim's, accepted his invitation to drink a glass of champagne in his apartment, having been induced to go there on Thaw's plea that he wished to show her his flat. Arriving in the apartment, Thaw tied Miss Lambert's hands behind her back, whipped her and poured hot water over her. She succeeded in getting on the balcony and calling for aid. By means of sheets she succeeded in making her escape. Certificates signed by a doctor describe the serious nature of the girl's wounds and bruises. She names several persons who will confirm her story.

Twelve Miners Drowned.

Hibernia, N.J., Oct. 21.—Twelve men were drowned 300 feet below earth's surface here yesterday when a blast destroyed a partition between two shafts in the iron mines of the Wharton Steel Co. and get a great quantity of water accumulated in an old shaft, flooded the gallery.

Those who lost their lives were unable to swim, or were pushed down by the crowd, struggling like drowning rats, while the water gained rapidly upon them.

Slaight, the foreman, was in a position of safety, but rushed into the submerged shaft to assist the drowning men and was caught.

Italy's only danger is that some of it's guns will blow up. Chances may be taken even in a war in which the enemy does not fight bck.

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION CLOSING SESSIONS

Interestings Proceeding at the Sittings on Friday Morning and Afternoon

Friday Morning.

The opening exercises were conducted by the Rev. A. H. Drumm, pastor of John St. Presbyterian Church.

"The Teacher's Responsibility" was the subject of a very practical discourse by the Rev. Mr. Drumm. Many of the teachers will go back to their schools after hearing this address with new ideas of their great responsibilities to God, to the child, to the parent and to the State. Especially should this be the case of those who think with, unfortunately, many of the parents, that the teacher's responsibility begins and ends in cramming children to pass a promotion examination. Our responsibilities are measured by our opportunities, and no one, not even the pastor, has such an opportunity as the teacher to build and mould character. Will some one in the future, whose life has been a failure, say of any one of us: the teacher could have saved me, but did not. It is not the mile we are compelled to go, but the one we go without compulsion that is to be to our credit. So it is not the duty we are to do, but the one that we do without compulsion that will count at the last. On no one rests greater responsibility than on the teacher.

On motion of Mr. Clarke, seconded by Mr. Barragar, a hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Drumm.

An animated discussion on teaching spelling was introduced by Mr. Simpkins, in which part was taken by Mr Wilkin, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Colling, Miss Ault, Mr. Knight, Miss Vandervoort, Miss Harold and others.

Miss McRae gave a talk on elementary art, or the teaching of art to First and Second Book pupils. It was a continuation of the address of yesterday applied to junior classes, with definite instruction for teaching children just starting to school how to represent their ideas of objects by means of drawing. Miss McRae had brought a large number of drawings that had been made by the children of those classes, and she was thus able to illustrate the gradual growth of the crude efforts of the beginner with those of the class later on.

Afternoon Session.

The Committee on Resolutions brought in a recommendation that Mr. H. J. Clarke, I.P.S., Miss Ault, Mr. Simpkins, Miss Bruce and Mr Thrasher be a committee to interview the local member on the subject of a superannuation scheme.—Carried.

Inspector Clarke introduced a discission on examinations, their aim and method. He gave many valuable suggestions on how to conduct them, examination and marking of papers, the comparative value of oral and of written examinations, how to utilize the knowledge gained of child's inability to answer correctly so as to help the pupil. An examination should be a fair test of what the child has learned and of what had been taught.

Mr. Colling, Principal of the High School, also took part in the discussion.

Art in the advanced classes of the Public School or the Third, Fourth and Fifth classes, was the next subject. Miss McRae gave very full and explicit instructions on teaching art in these classes, on the materials employed, the subjects chosen and in water colors, the method employed in mixing colors, laying them, etc. As in the former case, she had with her many pieces of work done by pupils of those grades and which excited the admiration of the teachers and wonder that children should be able to do such beautiful work in so short a time. At the conclusion Miss Urquhart moved, seconded by Miss E. J. Guest, M.A., that a hearty vote of thanks be tendered Miss McRae for her excellent addresses.

Miss Foster, of Thurlow, gave a vocal solo.

The last subject was "School Garden," by A. D. McIntosh, B.S.A., who explained the nature of what was required by the Government in order to constitute a school garden, and of the value of these gardens as a factor in education, discipline and character building. At the conclusion of his address prizes were distributed to those who had taken part in the weed competition.

First prize, Miss Steen; second, Miss Melwin; third, Mr. Smith.

It was decided to carry on the same next year, providing at least thirteen enter the competition.

Votes of thanks were tendered Mr. McIntosh for his address and the interest displayed in regard to the weed competition.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the officials of the church for their kindness in offering the use of the school room for the purpose of holding the meeting in.

The National Anthem was then sung, and the meeting was closed.

In the opinion of all those present the convention was the best ever held in South Hastings.

CANADA MAY ANNEX BAHAMAS

OTTAWA, Oct. 20.—The annexatoin of the Bahama Islands by Canada was discussed to-day by Premier Borden, representing Canada, and Sir William Grey Wilson, Governor General of the Bahamas. The Bahamas six months ago petitioned the British Government for annexation to Canada, and the proposal was presented to Sir Wilfrid Laurier by the British Government last spring at the time of the Imperial Conference.

The Laurier Government did not look with favor upon the extension of Canada's administration to a small group of islands a considerable distance from the Dominion and with a population almost entirely black.

The Bahama authorities are now taking advantage of the change in administration in Canada to bring the proposal forward again.

A CLEVER AND ELOQUENT DEBATER

Among the best known members of the House of Commons is W. B Northrup, M.P., of Belleville, who has represented East Hastings at Ottawa for several terms: Always faultlessly attired, one would never think that the dapper M.P. was elected through the votes of farmers, for his constituency is largely rural, extending to the farthermost point north in the large County of Hastings with its twenty-four townships. When he rises to address the House, he is off like a race horse. Verbally he travels at times at the rate of two hundred words a minute or more, and the Hansard men are kept at top speed. It is no easy matter for even these expert stenographic writers to follow the whirlwind debater, who has been dubbed the "General Ben Butler of Canadian lawyers." Butler was the most famous American attorney in his day for celerity of utterance, but Mr. Northrup would give him a close contest on the stump or before a jury.

Mr. Northrup was speaking at a small village in his riding during the recent election campaign, when a young interrupter in the back of the hall started to hiss. The candidate paid no attention, but, on the succession of sibilant sounds being renewed with increased vigor, he paused and looking sraight at the offender, said: "My friend' There are three things that hiss--a snake, a goose and a fool. Will you please stand a moment in order that the audience may judge which of the three you are?"—Saturday Night.

MARK HAMBOURG

It is with warm appreciation of the magnificent genius of Mark Hambourg that we suggest that the music-loving public of Belleville go to hear him at the City Hall, October 25. Those who have once heard Mark Hambourg render his masterpieces upon a Heintzman & Co. piano do not wonder that he is styled the greatest pianist in the world. The above instrument will be used by him on the 25th instant. It is worthy of note that the piano is Canada's greatest make—Heintzman & Co.—and may be tried at the warerooms of W. B. Riggs, Front Street.

WAR IS COSTLY

Enormous Expenditure a Struggle Between Two European Powers Would Entail

The enormous expenditure that a war between two great European powers would entail can be seen from the following details of the cost of the Franco-German War of 1870, which appears in the current issue of the "Army and Navy Gazette":—

"The cost from July 17, 1870, to the 18th of the following May, on which day the treaty of Frankfort was ratified, was 1,912,000,000 francs—or about $385,000,000—this being for war charges, properly so called. This sum works out at something like $1,560,000 per day."

But if the charges for the provisioning of Paris, the support of the families of soldiers, the maintenance of the invading armies, contributions imposed by the enemy, loans, succor for the victims of the war, repair of damage done, or other indirect charges, and the vast indemnity of five milliards, with its interest be added, the total cost of the war is brought up to the colossal figure of $1,973,000,000 and to a rate of some $8,100,000 per day.

"The cost of the war to Germany is estimated, with contingent charges and the reorganization of the army but not the ordinary military budget, to have been $675,000,000.

"In modern conditions, a year of war would cost France $2,200,000,000, while for Germany the outlay would be something approaching the vast sum of $5,500,000,000."

Crespin's order affects nearly a thousand families in the poorer quarters of Paris. These people have banded together to resist her edict, and serious trouble is expected. It is said the increase in Mme. Crespin's rentals is due to her lavish social expenditures.

WHO'S WHO IN CANADA

Mr. JOHN STANFIELD,

In addition to being parliamentary representative for Colchester, in the late House of Commons, Mr. Stanfield is president, and guiding light of Stanfield's Limited, operating the concern formerly known as the Truro Knitting Mill & Company at the town of that name in Nova Scotia. The arduous duties in connection with this company does not, however, prevent his devoting the time on demand to help keep the ship of Dominion more or less before the wind, and like all good conservatives, he no doubt considers his influence on the handlers of the helm has been all the time for good. He is indeed generally recognised as the strongest representative of the sea-side province.

Born at Charlottetown, P. E. I., in the merry month of 1868, the future M. P. removed to Truro with his parents in early life, and had the ground work of his education laid there by men of mark in the four R's, — with some extra frills in scholastic work thrown in. At a bye-election in 1907 he won first Parliamentary honors, and at the general election of 1908 the voters of Colchester decided they had no good and sufficient reason in sight to try a change of representative. Mr. Stanfield is married and has a family of one son.

JOHN STANFIELD
Pres. Stanfield's Ltd., Truro

Dr. J. G. RUTHERFORD, C.M.G.

The Department of Agriculture loses a particularly capable outfit of brains in Dr. J. G. Rutherford, C.M.G., Veterinary Director-General and Live-Stock Commissioner of Canada, who leaves the Government service for work that will bring him more money and doubtless greater peace of mind. Dr. Rutherford knew his department work from A to Z. He had been a member of Parliament and knew what the people wanted. He had been a farmer and knew what the farmers wanted. He was trained as a veterinary surgeon in the thorough English school and knew what the animals wanted. When he took hold in 1902 he found nothing to his hand except an Act of Parliament which was so much waste paper. In nine years he had created a health-of-animals branch, a meat and food inspection service with a hundred inspectors, a biological laboratory with a staff of trained pathologists, and a live-stock branch that is doing much to promote friendly relations between breeders and their market. Quarantine work has been systematized and the importation of live stock into Canada is now thoroughly under the control of the department. Hog cholera has almost disappeared; glanders has been stamped out except in Saskatchewan; cattle mange, horse mange, sheep scab, and many other minor diseases have been effectively handled. Dr. Rutherford brought unusual powers of special investigation to his duties. For example, when an epidemic broke out among the cattle in Nova Scotia he discovered that it was due to a poisonous weed. He brought in sheep that throve on the weed and put an end to the epidemic. As president of the American Veterinary Medical Association, Dr. Rutherford had the chief hand in forming the International Commission for the Control of Bovine Tuberculosis, whose good work has just begun.

DUNCAN McMARTIN.

The story of the poor lad who leaves home to make his way in the world, and who returns to his native place as a self-made and honorable man of affairs can never lose its charm.

This is the lifestory of Duncan McMartin, the Conservative candidate for the county of Glengarry in the present federal fight.

Born thirty-seven years ago at St. Raphaels, on one of Glengarry's historic farmsteads. Duncan inherited from his father Alan McMartin, the priceless advantage of United Empire Loyalist blood in his veins, and pioneer stamina in his constitution. Glengarrians still cherish the memories of that party of seventy-five Loyalists, consisting mainly of McMartins and their kinsfolk, who forsook the United States in 1783, abandoning their homes and all the comforts of life rather than swerve in their devotion to the British throne.

Mr McMartin went West from the old farm while yet in his teens and after encountering all kinds of hard work success got him. Years of close application and tireless activity, combined with a phenomenal business acumen, have brought their sure rewards, and Mr. McMartin now finds himself not only on Easy street, but a multi-millionaire.

Most people are found wanting without the trouble of weighing them.

DOCTORS GAVE ME UP

But "Fruit-a-tives" Cured Me.

MOORFIELD, ONT., March 25th, 1910.

"I suffered from severe indigestion and dyspepsia for nearly two years. I could not take food without fearful distress. I could not do any work and became so run down and weak that I could hardly walk. I was attended by two experienced doctors and they both pronounced my case incurable, that they could do nothing more for me as they thought my disease was HEART FAILURE AND INCURABLE. The doctors gave me up and I looked forward for death in a short time.

At this time my son asked me to try 'FRUIT-A-TIVES', and from the outset of taking these wonderful tablets I was better, and gradually this medicine completely cured me. I took a large number of boxes, perhaps a dozen, and now I am entirely cured and I have gained over thirty pounds in weight."

HENRY SPEERS, J.P.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c. box—6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c.—or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

COST OF LIVING BECOMING HIGHER

Dun's Bulletin of Saturday, October 21st, says of Montreal trade:—

The generally favorable business conditions outlined last week are well maintained and collections show improvement, one representative dry goods house reporting that of payments falling due on the 13th, 90 per cent, were met. In this connection it is gratifying to note that the failure list is a particularly light one, only tow distinct failures being reported for the week, with liabilities of about $12,000.

Hardware men report a good steady trade with the country, while there is a sustained active city demand for all sorts of building requisites. Metal manufacturing plants are well employed.

Manufacturers of boots and shoes have rarely known so quiet a summer and fall, and jobbers in this line are still reported as backward in the placing of spring orders. As a natural sequence trading in leather is not active, but prices are steady.

Sorting orders in dry goods are still coming in briskly, while owing to the favorable outlook for spring, wholesalers are placing a good many repeats with manufacturers.

A good average trade is reported in all staple groceries, but the continued advances in many lines is intensifying the living problem for people of moderate income. For canned tomatoes some jobbers are now quoting $1.85, almost 100 per cent, above the average; new prunes are quoted at very high prices, and all the late advances in sugar, rice, etc., are fully held.

Shipments abroad of cheese and apples continue large. There is also continued active export enquiry for hay, not only from Britain and the United States, but also from Belgium and other European points, which are generally exporters to Britain. Our farmers in some sections are reported as making fancy prices out of their meadows, realizing $8 a ton after threshing out the seed. The late rains will prove of incalculable good to the country where wells and water courses have been going dry, while navigation has been quite seriously affected of late, but much more is still needed.

TO PREVENT THEFTS

An Apparatus to Guard Against a Repetition of the "Mona Lisa" Affair

The curator of Prince Leichtenstein's gallery at Vienna, the largest private gallery in the world, has given a demonstration of an apparatus he has invented to prevent such thefts as that of the "Mona Lisa." It consists of special electric contacts hidden in the wall behind the frame, and so arranged that the least touch on the frame or the picture makes a bell ring in a central office. Here there is a board with numbers like those in hotels, so that the guardian can see at once which picture has been disturbed and proceed there direct without loss of time.

Toronto, Oct. 20.—A tunnel through Mount Royal, which will cost about $25,000,000, will be constructed by the Canadian Northern Railway. The necessary application for authority to construct and operate such a tunnel, with the necessary approaches and works, will be made at the next session of the Dominion Parliament by the Canadian Northern Montreal Tunnel and Terminal Co., Ltd.

Vol. 45 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1911. No. 289

"I have just received this letter," says Mrs. Talbot, taking from her pocket the letter Arthur had given her, and holding it out to Florence, "and I want to know how I shall answer it. Would you—would you honestly advise me, Flo, to go and meet him as he desires?"

"As who desires?"

"Ah, true; you do not know, of course! I am so selfishly full of myself and my own concerns, that I seem to think every one else must be full of them, too. Forgive me, dearest, and read his sweet little letter, will you?"

"Of whom are you speaking—to whose letter do you refer?" asks Florence, a little sharply, in the agony of her heart.

"Florence! Whose letters would I call sweet, except Sir Adrian's?" answers her cousin with a gentle reproach.

"But it is meant for you, not for me," says Miss Delmaine, holding the letter in her hand, and glancing at it with great distaste. "He probably intended no other eyes but yours to look upon it."

"But I must obtain advice from some one, and who so natural to expect it from as you, my nearest relative? If, however"—putting her handkerchief up to her eyes—"you object to help me, Florence, or if it distresses you to read——"

"Distresses me?" interrupts Florence haughtily. "Why should it distress me? If you have no objection to me reading your lover's letter, why should I hesitate about doing so? Pray sit down while I run through it."

Dora having seated herself, Florence reads the false note from beginning to end. Dora's heart beats furiously as she does so, and her color comes and goes; but her voice is quite steady when she speaks again.

"Well," she says, putting the paper from her as though heartily glad to be rid of it, "it seems that Sir Adrian wishes to speak to you on some subject interesting to you and him alone, and that he has chosen the privacy of the lime-walk as the spot in which to hold your tete-atete. It is quite a simple affair, is it not? Though, really, why he could not arrange to talk privately with you in some room, in the castle, which is surely large enough for the purpose, I cannot understand."

"Dear Sir Adrian is so romantic," says Dora, coyly.

"Is he?" responds her cousin, dryly. "He has always seemed to me the earnest of men. Well, on what matter do you wish to consult me?"

"Dear Florence, how terribly prosaic and unsympathetic you are to-day," says Dora, reproachfully; "and I came to you, so sure of offers of love and friendship! I want you to tell me if you think I ought to meet him or not."

"Why not?"

"I don't know"—with a little simper. "Is it perhaps, humoring him too much? I have always dreaded letting a man imagine I cared for him unless fully, utterly, assured of his affection for me."

Florence colors again, and then grows deadly pale, as this poisoned barb pierces her bosom.

"I should think," she says slowly, "after reading the letter you have just shown to me, you ought to feel assured."

"You believe I ought, really?"—with a fine show of eagerness. "Now, you are not saying this to please me—to gratify me?"

"I should not please or gratify any one at the expense of truth."

"No, of course not. You are such a high principled girl, so different from many others. Then you think I might go and meet him this evening without sacrificing my dignity in any way?"

"Certainly."

"Oh, I'm so glad," exclaimed Mrs. Talbot, rapturously, nodding her "honorable" head with a beaming smile, "because I do so want to meet him, dear fellow! And I value your opinion, Flo, more highly than that of any other friend I possess. You are so solid, so thoughtful—such a dear thing altogether."

Florence takes no heed of this rodomontade, but sits quite still, with downcast eyes, tapping the small table near her wtih the tips of her slender fingers in a meditaive fashion.

"The fact is," continues Dora, who is watching her closely, "I may as well let you into a little secret. Yesterday Sir Adrian and I had a tiny, oh, such a tiny little dispute, all about nothing, I assure you"—with a gay laugh—"but ti seemed to us quite important. He said he was jealous of me. Now just fancy that, Flo; jealous of poor little me!"

"It is quite possible; you are pretty—most men admire you," Florence remarks coldly, still without raising her eyes.

"Ah, you flatter me, naughty girl! Well, silly as it sounds, he actually was jealous, and really gave me quite a scolding. It brought tears to my eyes, it upset me so. So, to tell the truth, we parted rather bad friends; and, to be revenged on me, I suppose, he rather neglected me for the remainder of the day."

Again Florence is silent, though her tormentor plainly waits for a lead from her before going on.

"You must have remarked," she continues presently, "how cold and reserved he was toward me when we were all together in that dreadful haunted chamber." Here she really shudders, in spite of herself. The cruel eyes of Arthur Dynecourt seem to be on her again, as they were in that ghostly room.

"I remarked nothing," responds Florence, icily.

"No—really? Well, he was. Why, my dear Florence, you must have seen how he singled you out to be attentive to you, just to show me how offended he was."

"He did not seem offended with any one, and I thought him in particularly good spirits," replies Florence, calmly.

Dora turns a delicate pink.

"Dear Adrian is such an excellent actor," she says, sweetly, "and so proud; he will disguise his feelings, however keen they may be, from the knowledge of any one, no matter what the effort may cost him. Well, dearest, and so you positively advise me to keep this appointment with him?"

"I advise nothing. I merely say that I see nothing objectionable in your walking up and down the lime-walk with your host."

"How clearly you put it! Well, adieu, darling, for the present, and thank you a thousand times for all the time you have wasted on me. I assure you I am not worth it"—kissing her hand lightly.

For once she speaks the truth; she is not indeed worth one moment of the time Florence has been compelled to expend upon her; yet, when she has tripped out of the room, seemingly as free from guile as a light-hearted child, Miss Delmaine's thoughts still follow her, even against her inclination.

She has gone to meet him; no doubt to interchange tender words and vows with him; to forgive, to be forgiven, about some sweet bit of lover's folly, the dearer for its very foolishness. She listens for her footsteps as she turns along the corridor, dressed, no doubt in her prettiest gown, decked out to make herself fair in his eyes.

An overwhelming desire to see how she has robed herself on this particular occasion induces Florence to go to the door and look after her as she descends the stairs. She just catches a glimpse of Dora as she turns the corner, and sees, much to her surprise, that she is by no means daintily dressed, but has thrown a waterproof over her dress, as though to hide it. Slightly surprised at this, Florence ponders it, and finally comes to the conclusion that Dora is so sure of his devotion that she knows it is not necessary for her to bedeck herself in finery to please him. In his eyes, of course, she is lovely in any toilet.

TWO BIG CAMPAIGNS

Against Home Rule in Ireland and Disestablishment in Wales

There are two great "anti" campaigns going on at present. One against Home Rule in Ulster and another against Disestablishment in Wales, and both look very much like losing ventures. The defenders of the Welsh Establishment represent the Established Church in Wales, as a thoroughly national concern; while at the same time they are striving to excite English churchmen to join in an agitation against the Welsh national demand for Disestablishment on the ground that the Welsh Church is only a local branch of the English Church, and it would be most unjust, as they contend, "to single out for separate treatment four dioceses of the Province of Canterbury." In the campaign against Home Rule, it is urged that the measure has been twice defeated at the polls. At a Belfast meeting the other day one of the speakers said: "The English people have on two previous occasions given a most decided vote upon this question. They turned the Liberals out in 1886, and then later on, they were thoroughly beaten when they went to the country upon Home Rule."

One paper, however, replies to this as follows: "In 1886, it is true the Conservatives were returned to power, but official statistics show that though actual result in seats was a Conservative majority of 104, the majority warranted by voting strength was a Liberal one of 18. At the election of 1892 a government elected for Home Rule, or on a basis of Home Rule, as Mr. Balfour put it, was returned to power. The second Home Rule Bill followed in the same year, passed the Commons and was only defeated in the Lords. The next general election which resulted in a Tory victory did not take place till 1895, and was fought on different issues, Mr. Chamberlain's old age pension promise being one of them."

MARRIAGE SWINDLE

How a Man and Woman Made $10,000 in a Few Weeks

A man named Schilmann and a woman named Tururier, who passed as his daughter, have been sentenced to eight and to two years' imprisonment and to a fine of $100 in the Paris law courts for an amusing marriage swindle, out of which they had made $10,000 in the course of a few weeks.

Schilmann advertised for a wife, and received several answers from middle-aged ladies. He wanted a wife, he explained, to be a mother to a grown-up daughter (this was Mlle. Tururier), and to give him $2,000 to put into a comfortable business in London. Schilmann, the prospective bride, and Mlle. Tururier set out for London, but the would-be bride invariably lost the other two on the journey, and always lost them after Schilmann had taken possession of her $2,000 "for safety." This little swindle was successfully carried out five times, as five disappointed brides gave evidence. A sixth fiancée was a female detective, who succeeded in unmasking the swindlers.

BACON AND SHAKESPEARE

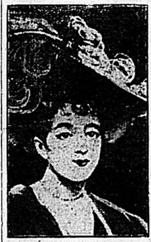
Dr. Owen Searches for Evidence of the Authorship of Shakespeare's Plays

Dr. Orville W. Owen has not abandoned his search in the bed of the River Wye at Chepstow for the hidden manuscripts which, he is convinced, will prove to the world that Sir Francis Bacon was the author of Shakespeare's plays. "I shall resume operations shortly," said Dr. Owen. "I am more convinced than ever that I am on the right track, and if I can only get the permission of the Duke of Beaufort to dig near the historical castle walls, we shall there, I believe, find the buried manuscripts."

The excavations, it will be remembered, were abandoned for a time, mainly on account of the drought.

Famous Epitaphs

"The famous epitaph placed on the monument over her husband's grave by a woman up in Maine, 'Rest in peace until I join you,' has almost a duplicate in a sign on the door of a doctor's office in a downtown office building," says George A. Schneider. "This sign reads—'Do not absolutely abandon hope until you have seen me.'"



THE DUCHESS OF TALLEYRAND

Former wife of the Marquise de Castellane, and heiress to the Gould millions, whose lavish purchases of the famous grapes of Fontainebleu has been explained by the illness of her two-year-old son, the Duke de Sagan. Grapes were ordered for the little Duke, and his mother, the former Anna Gould, purchased vast quantities of them at $24 a bunch from the "wine stalks of the King" at Fontainebleu.

THE NEWEST SUFFRAGETTE

Declines to Pay Taxes and is Sent to Prison

The first instance of a suffragist being committed to prison for non-payment of taxes as a protest against the disfranchisement of women, occurred when Miss Clemence Houseman, an authoress, and sister of Mr. Laurence Houseman, was taken to Holloway Gaol by the sheriff's officer. Similar protests have previously ended in distraint, but Miss Houseman had no distrainable goods, and was accordingly committed.

Miss Houseman, who belongs to the Women's Social and Political Union, and is on the committee of the Women's Tax Resistance League, refused to pay for the taxicab in which she was taken to prison, and the sheriff's officer paid the fare of $2.50, which, curiously enough, was the amount of the tax she originally declined to pay.

PASSING OF THE HORSE

The London Cabby is Being Replaced by the Chauffeur

In a calm and matter-of-fact statement the London General Omnibus Company has announced an impending event that marks an epoch in the history of London. At the end of the present month the last horse omnibus of the company's equipment will be withdrawn from the London streets and thenceforward the entire fleet will be motor-driven. After the close of October a few horse omnibuses, belonging to smaller proprietors, may continue to drag weary wheels along surburban by-routes, but not for long.

HIS EIGHTIETH VOYAGE

Captain Herbert Edward Greenstreet, now on his way to the Antipodes in command of the New Zealand Shipping Company's steamer Remeura, is on his eightieth voyage round the world. His is a record of which any shipmaster might be proud. He has covered hundreds of thousands—even millions—of miles across the trackless ocean without a single mishap. Captain Greenstr. has sailed or steamed altogether about 2,050,000 miles.

LIVING IN GERMANY

The Rise in the Cost of Necessaries Has Been Enormous

While Germany comparatively few years ago was one of the countries in Europe where living was cheapest, the rise in the cost of all the necessaries of life has reecntly been enormous and is telling severely on all classes in the empire except the very wealthy. Meetings of protest and suggestions are now being held almost daily in every town and city. The pressure, of course, is felt by the poorer classes, who must buy retail and in small quantities, but it is rapidly affecting the middle classes. A woman of the working class says that while two years ago she could keep herself, her husband, and his aged mother on $3 a week, she has now to spend nearly $8 for the same amount of food.

Take the case of bread alone. Last year the working classes got 6 pounds of bread for 10 cents, while now they only get 4 pounds for the same money. Other necessities have risen, some more, some less, but the result, on the whole, especially when the increased pressure of taxation is taken into account, is to arouse feelings that sooner or later are bound to find expression in tumults if not violence.

As to the causes and remedies, opinions differ. Popularly the rise is believed to be due to the new taxes imposed in 1909 and the pro-agrarian policy of the government. There is a general demand, therefore, for a diminution of the duties on foreign grains for throwing open the frontier for the admission of Argentine meat, and in some quarters for a campaign against the cartels which correspond in Germany to the trusts of America. At the present moment each city is anxiously deliberating the local measures it can adopt to lessen the evil as it affects the poorer part of their populations.

A CAT'S LONG WALK

Tatters Covered 133 Miles in Returning to Its Old Home

Tatters, a half-Persian cat, has just finished a walk of 133 miles from Kingston-on-Thames to its old home at Glastonbury. The cat, which is an abnormally large one, was sent by its mistress, Miss Pearce, to a home at Kingston last April, but it disappeared a day or two later. Nothing was seen of it for several months until it arrived at its old home. The cat was not recognized at first, and was refused admission, but later got inside. It jumped on its old chair, and its mistress exclaimed: "Why, it's Tatters come back!"

CROWN JEWELLERS

Interesting Purchases of Centuries Ago Revealed in an Old Ledger

Messrs. Garrard & Co., the Crown jewellers, whose business was started in the days when snipe shooting could be indulged in near Hyde Park corner, have opened at their new premises in Albermarle Street, West. Priceless gold and silver plate and enormous quantities of jewellery have been conveyed to their new home from the shop in the Haymarket, at which business has been done for nearly 200 years. The time-worn ledgers in the firm's strong rooms are full of famous names of bygone generations. An entry made as early as 1737 shows that the Princess and Prince of Wales ordered a service of plate, which cost $15,000. In 1776, "divers teapots," belonging to Sir Joshua Reynolds, were mended. Speaker Onslow about this time ordered a silver cistern, which weighed 2,000 ounces and cost $2,800. The Duke of Kingston, husband of the "Amazing Duchess," bought twenty-six silver coat buttons for $15. In 1788 Queen Charlotte was a frequent customer at Garrard's, and purchased, among other things, two gold toothpicks.

It was in 1721 that one, George Wickes, started as a jeweller at "The Sign of the King's Arms" in the Haymarket, and founded what is now one of London's oldest firms. The business became the property of William Garrard in 1791.

Many a self-made man merely offers an explanation that doesn't explain.

THE RAILROADS OF THE FUTURE

Light, Rapid Trains, Running at Frequent Intervals, May Replace Present System

In a very interesting lecture on railroads of the future at the Royal Geographical Society, Mr. C. R. Enock said the other day: "As to the railroad of the future, we may discover that the hurling of heavy masses of iron and timber through space, as practiced with our present type of rolling stock, is unscientific. In my mind, rather than heavy long trains, the new system takes the form of light, rapid, individual vehicles, running at frequent intervals, upon a light structure of uninterrupted line, under conditions where collision and derailment would be impossible. These vehicles will flash from city to city at double or treble the present speeds, and at a tithe of the present cost.

"It is possible that a system involving light elevated railroads is worthy of consideration and experiment. Not, however, of the ponderous and unsightly type of structure which defaces the side streets of New York, but a structure in which lightness, appearance and low cost are the elements for success. Such a line may be conceived as running across hills and valleys, consisting of little beyond light trussed steel beams carried on columns set in the ground at such a height as to clear ordinary obstacles of roads, hedges, etc., and of a character such as would leave the ground beneath it free for agricultural purposes. Single light vehicles would run upon this structure at high rates of speed, and their stability upon the line against lateral movement would be provided for, possibly by side wheels set horizontally above the centre of gravity revolving against side rails. Thus such vehicles could not run off the line.

"Following out this line of thought, and giving play to the imagination a little, experiments might be made upon the plan of a combination of rail and aeroplane—a semi-flying vehicle using both earth—or rather rail—and air as supporting and even propelling elements. Under such a system it is conceivable that the air-planes forming part of the vehicle would lift it very slightly off the rails, the driving-power then being derived from the side wheels, before mentioned, working against the side lines, which might take the form of thin bars or plates, so allowing for a small rise and fall of the vehicle. These and the other wheels would be rubber-tired. A similar rail overhead might be necessary to keep the vehicle down, and thus the carriage would become a species of enclosed flying machine. If such a scheme were found practicable, the problem of mountain railroads, among others, would be solved. The monorail and the gyroscope might have their adaptions in such a scheme."

NEWS PARAGRAPHS ACROSS THE SEAS

Items of Human Interest from England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales

The death is announced of the Rev. Mother Mary Frances Healy, a native of Dublin, which took place at the Presentation Convent, George's Hill, Dublin. The deceased had been sixty-six years a nun, and had reached the age of ninety.

Irish in Workhouse Schools

At a meeting of the Newry Board of Guardians Mr. Murphy inquired if the teaching of Irish had been introduced into the workhouse school. It was far more important, he said, that they should maintain their individuality as a people by learning their native language than wasting their time on vocal music and kindergarten.

Attacked by Wasps

A lady has had a terrible experience with wasps at Holywood, County Down. Some boys disturbed a nest of wasps. The insects swarmed out and attacked their tormentors, who beat a hasty retreat. The lady, unfortunately, passed at this moment, and was surrounded by a cloud of angry wasps, which speedily spread themselves on her face, head and hands, stinging her again and again. Half mad with pain and terror, the lady presently fainted.

New Temperance Movement

A "national forward movement in temperance" to commemorate the Coronation year was considered at a meeting of the Irish Temperance League in Belfast, Rev. Dr. McIlveen presiding. It is proposed to increase the membership of the juvenile temperance societies, and the Queen has become patron of the "million more scheme." The scheme was approved and recommended to the Churches and temperance organizations.

Leap from Blackfriars Bridge

Pushing a barrow load of sand up the incline on the south side of Blackfriars Bridge, Thomas Bartlett, a general dealer, living at Hertford Street, Kingsland, asked a passer-by to give him a hand. The man did so, and when the summit was reached, Bartlett, after remarking, "You have saved my life," leaped over the parapet into the river and was drowned.

Lazy Wife

At Warrington, Margaret Riley and James Riley, were charged with neglecting their children. Mr. A. Browne, who prosecuted, said the husband was not as much to blame as the wife, who had brought on such a sad condition of things owing to pure laziness. Drink was not the cause in this case. The husband gave his wife about $5 each weeek. The charge was withdrawn against the husband, and the wife was sent to gaol for one month.

Model Cottages

The village of Ashton, in Northamptonshire, has just been entirely rebuilt by Mr. H. N. Rothschild, the landlord. Ever ycottage in the village has been pulled down, and the new picturesque cottages erected are to be let to farm laborers at $25c. a week. They have five rooms, large gardens, hot and cold water, and baths. They are built of stone, with brown reed thatch from the Fen country. Only those employed on the farms on the estate are accepted as tenants.

Pulled a King from Bed

The attention of the War Office has been drawn to the case of George Rose, the oldest inhabitant of Woodstone, Peterborough, who has just celebrated his ninety-first birthday. He enlisted when seventeen years of age in the 89th Regient, and in 1842 he volunteered to join the 84th Regiment to go to the Cabul war. During that campaign they were ordered to Secunderabad, and whilst there they marched out about 200 miles to capture the King of Kilburger. When the King was at length captured, Rose was amongst the number who raided the palace and extricated the Eastern potentate from beneath his bamboo bed, where he had hidden.

Mr. Carnegie's Birthplace

For some time the Carnegie Dunfermline trustees have been effecting improvements at the little dwelling where their founder was born. They have torn down the adjoining property, and they are repairing Mr. Carnegie's birthplace in keeping with its old-world aspect in order to preserve it for future generations. They have applied to the Dunfermline Dean of Guild Court for permission to erect certain outside premises for the use of the caretaker and of a boundary wall to enclose the area behind the property. Permission was granted.

STRIKE OF STUDENTS

Mayo Students Demanded the Abolition of the Cane

A strike of forty students has taken place at St. Murdoch's College, near Ballina, County Mayo, Ireland. They demand Wednesdays off and the abolition of the cane. They escaped out of the college and fled across the country towards the mountains. The professors were summoned and were soon in pursuit of the youths. The students, however, managed to elude their pursuers, and the next that was heard of them was in a telegram asking for an arbitration committee to be appointed to settle their grievances. The telegram gave the necessary clue to their whereabouts, and they were all captured by Professor Moran playing a game of handball at Foxford, nine miles away. They were brought back by the mail train to Ballina.

HON. WILLIAM PUGSLEY

Mrs. Pugsley was launched in the world in 1850 and into the whirl wind of political life in 1885 when he was chosen a member of the New Brunswick Legislature. A couple of years later he was appointed speaker, and thus seemed fairly well started on the road that often leads to much higher things — and often does not. In 1890 Mr. Pugsley resigned to become Solicitor General and two years later retired out of politics to devote his energies in another direction. Returned to the Legislature in 1899 he was chosen Attorney General the year following, chief honors coming in 1907, which, however, he surrendered shortly after, on being appointed Minister of Public Works for Canada, having taken his seat in the House of Commons as representative of St. John, N.B., which constituency sent him along on acclammation.

HON. M. PUGSLEY.
Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Pugsley is a remarkable man, inasmuch as his wealth as well as that of his friends seems to grow with leaps and bounds.

JOHN R. BOOTH

Pioneer Lumberman and Railroad Builder.

The recreations of Mr. J. R. Booth have been brought under the one terse heading of "worth". And to those who have followed his career from his early days to the present, the description will appeal as being peculiarly apt, for during all the years that have come and gone since emerging from the educational stage of youth, his mind, and his hands, were ever in the direction of advancing the material interests of the country of his birth.

Born at Shefford, Que., on April 5, 1826, and educated at Waterloo, Mr. Booth passed into the industrial world a young man well equipped for life's battle, and his first venture in business was as bridge carpenter. This, however, did not quite fill the demands of a nature that has all the time kept calling still for "more", and the early fifties found him Ottawa way, where he was destined to take rank as one of the pioneers in the lumber trade of the Ottawa valley, his mill at Chaudiere Falls being recognised today as the largest concern of the kind in all Canada.

But Mr. Booth was not content to remain all the time a lumberman, even as one of its kings. His natural abilities, and an inclination to be doing things, led him into the realms of railroad building, and under his guidance 500 miles Canadian Atlantic track was successfully comleted in 1882, the Ottawa and Parry Sound line following in 1896. At the ripe age of 70, when, following an arduous life, the average man would have had his mind directed towards a time of leisure, it was, instead, bent on still further ventures in the commercial world, and to mark the three score and tenth milestone, he laid the foundation stone of a large pulp and paper mill at Ottawa, which he still owns and operates.

Now that women's culture has come to the front in Canada with its consummation in women's clubs it is well for the world that the Dominion has such leaders as Mrs. McKellar to help along the work. FAMOUS GOVERNORS OF CANADA

by G. M. Cook

(Copyright by Publishers Press Limited, Montreal.)

In view of the arrival of a Royal Governor-General it may be well to recall Canada's past famous governors.

We have been singularly fortunate in the long line of distinguished soldiers and statesmen who have served her in the capacity of governor, protecting her in the early and difficult years of a young colony, guiding her through many a political crisis, enlarging and safeguarding her interests, and gradually fitting

EARL GREY.
Whose popularity is such that that his term was extended.

her for the complete control of affairs purely Canadian which she enjoys today. The men who, as governors, have helped to make the history of Canada, are also the men who have made the history of the British Empire in other parts of the globe, and it is with a thrill of pride that we realize that the names of Durham and Dufferin, and Elgin, and Stanley, and Grey, which mean so much to Canadians, stand also for great achievments in India and Egypt and South Africa, and for high distinction in letters and diplomacy, and this seems to make the unity of Empire a very real thing.

In the early days the governor was the hardest-worked man in the country, and was usually chosen for his powers of active leadership in warfare, his capacity for organization and sustained toil, and the qualities of authority and inspiration so invaluable in a leader. His work was practically to do everything in particular, and to do it very well. Nowadays the office of Governor-General of Canada is a notable distinction in the gift of the Crown, second only to that of the Empire of India and though the position demands high qualities of tact and judgment the work is not so strenuous as in the old days. The position is chiefly a social one, and the rank of Commander-in-Chief of the Canadian militia is purely hononrary.

Samuel de Champlain

Very different was the condition of affairs when in 1607 Samuel de

FRONTENAC
The famous French Governor

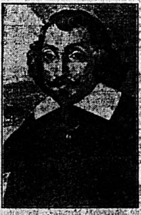
Champlain became first governor of the infant colony. Born at St. Malo beside the sea, he spent most of his life upon it, and had all the sailor's daring and love of adventure. He was a sailor and a soldier too, for he had fought beside the King in the civil wars. His courage and resource, his refusal to consider defeat, eminently fitted him to be a leader of men, and for thirty years he lived for Canada, toiling with unfailing patience to establish the power of France in the wilderness, and to convert the Indian tribes to Christianity. In 1608 he founded Quebec, a city which has always held a unique regard in the minds of the Governors of Canada. Champlain's tact and firmness in dealing with the colonists, his wise policy with the Indians, his energy and strong enterprise made him greatly beloved. When the French were forced to surrender to the English in 1629, he was sent to France, but in 1633 he returned to Quebec, this time accompanied by his child-wife. He now represented the authority of the Hundred Associates, and at once resumed his work, but not for long, as in December 1635 he died.

De Tracy

The name of the noble de Tracy who became Viceroy of the French possessions in 1665, will always be associated with the famous Carignan Regiment which he brought out from France and notable for the complete subjugation of the Mohawks which he effected.

Frontenac

In 1672 Count Frontenac, a tried and skilful soldier in the armies of France and one of the most remarkable governors Canada ever had, came to Quebec. He was extraordinarily proud and haughty and could bear no oppositon of any kind, but he gained immense influence over the Indians who held him in great awe. He built a strong fort at the outlet of Lake Ontario, where Kingston now stands, and gave it his own name. In 1682 Frontenac, and the Intendant Duchesnau with whom he quarrelled incessantly, were recalled to France When Canada seemed on the brink of destruction owing to the folly of Denonville, Frontenac was again sent out to take matters into his own hands and he speedily made his power felt. When the English admiral Phips demanded his surrender, he made his famous reply, "I shall answer the English by the mouth of my cannon." The English retired, and as a lasting memorial of Frontenac's triumph the church of Notre-Dame des Victoires was erected in Quebec. The gallant old warrior died



SAMUEL DE CHAMPLAIN
Born at Brouage, France, in 1567; died at Quebec in 1635.

The English Governors.

After Canada surrendered to the English in 1760, General Murray was appointed first governor. He was so anxious to be just to the French, that he antagonized the English colonists. He was succeeded by Sir Guy Carleton, afterwards Lord Dorchester who was also in strong sympathy with the French-Canadians. It was by his efforts that in 1774 the Quebec Act was passed. The terms of this important act were, (1) That civil cases were to be tried by French law; Criminal cases by British law. (2) A Legislative Council was appointed to assist the Governor in law-making (3) The Roman Catholic Church was to enjoy complete religious freedom, and Roman Catholics could hold public offices. (4) The boundaries of the province were extended on the west.

Lord Dorchester was an extremely able man, both wise and just, but he lived in the troublous times of Canadian history. The unwise policy of Great Britain toward her colonies in maintaining the right of parliament to tax them, caused great irritation and ultimately led to the revolt and the American Revolution. When the Americans under Arnold and Montgomery invaded Canada, [illegible] held out as well as he could with his few supporters but was forced to abandon Montreal. He expelled all whom he suspected of disloyalty, from Quebec, and prepared for siege. He repelled Montgomery and Arnold, and when British reinforcements arrived in May, he cleared Canada completely of the invaders.

The Americans made their headquarters in Montreal, in the Chateau de Ramesay, the residence of the French Governors. This interesting historic building is now a public museum, and contains most interesting relics of our early history, and of the heroes of Canada — priests, and soldiers, and statesmen.

After an absence of eight years, Lord Dorchester in 1786 was again appointed to the Governorship of Quebec, the occupant of which was henceforth to act as Governor-General of all the British-American provinces. His great good sense and warm feeling endeared him alike to the Loyalists and to the French. By his efforts the British Government prepared the Constitutional Act, the first step toward self-government, and passed it through parliament in 1791. Lord Dorchester's wise and temperate rule continued for five years more.

The Reformers and Their Demands.

About 1817 the harsh rule and mismanagement of the Family Compacts caused the growth of a political body who called themselves the Reformers, promient among whom were Gourlay, Mackenzie and Baldwin. They bitterly resented the Family Compacts, and demanded that the executive council should be responsible to the assembly and that the assembly should control the supplies of public money, and receive accounts of its expenditure. In the election of 1874 they gained a majority in the assembly, but the proposals they made were all defeated in the legislative council, or vetoed by Sir John Colborne whose sympathy were with the ruling party. He was a man of strong character and great ability, and an excellent leader. When the Home Government determined to allow the Canadians a few reforms of minor importance, Sir John Colborne was recalled in order that these might be more easily carried out. He was succeeded by Sir Francis Bond Head. Later on he returned to suppress the rebellion of 1837.

Educational Institutes.

King's College in Windsor, Nova Scotia, was founded in 1788. Dalhousie College established by the Soldier-Governor of that name was opened at Halifax in 1820, and is now a University. The Seminary of Laval at Quebec dates of course from 1637. In 1830 the most important educational institution in the Upper province, Upper Canada College, was founded.

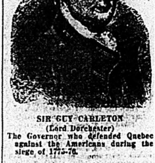
H. R. H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT
Governor General of Canada

A Great Statesman.

John George Lambton, Lord Durham, was one of the greatest statesmen and most distinguished men who have ever held office in Canada. He was one of the four persons who drew up the Reform Bill in the administration of Lord Grey. From 1835 to 1837 he was ambassador to St. Petersburg. In 1838 he was sent out to Canada, where the Constitution was superseded owing to the revolt in the lower province. His measures were prompt and statesmanship, but very dictatorial, and the House of Lords voted disapproval of some of his acts. He returned to England within five months and issued his report on Canada which has become a classic, and which led to the union and to the establishment of responsible government. His personality was attractive, but he was very proud and very determined. His dying words were, "Canada will one day do justice to my memory."

The Reciprocity Treaty of 1854.

Lord Elgin who was appointed to Canada in 1846, was a man of great diplomatic gifts, and by repeated visits to New York, and a personal campaign, he himself negotiated the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854. Lord Elgin came of a remarkable family and had a career of immense distinction. He was educated at Eton and Oxford. He was appointed Governor of Jamaica where he made a great success. He had serious difficulties to contend with in Canada, but he met them with unfailing tact, and carried on a most successful administration.



SIR GUY CARLETON
(Lord Dorchester)
The Governor who defended Quebec against the Americans during the siege of 1775-76.

A Brilliant Diplomat.

The Marquis of Dufferin and Ava G. C. B. etc., was probably the most brilliant of statesmen and Governors, and the most accomplished, witty and fascinating of personalities who have ever graced the Vice-regal position. No account of his life and work seems to be able to do justice to the extraordinary charm he exercised upon all who came in contact with him, or to the intense love and admiration he inspired. He was an extremely able writer, and had a diplomatic career in Syria, India, St. Petersburg, and Constantinople of more than ordinary brilliance. In India he strengthened the frontier and annexed Upper Burmale. In Canada his tenure of office was a triumphant one. He was immensely popular, the most delightful host and the most charming guest. The social functions given by him in Quebec and Montreal have never been surpassed in splendour, and he was greatly beloved.

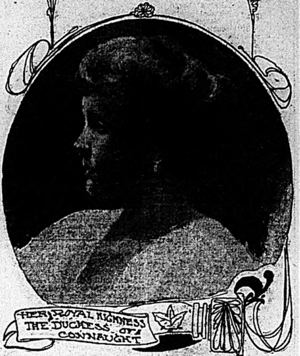
A Royal Vice-reine.

The Marquess of Lorne, now Duke of Argyle, who became Governor in 1878 was married to the Princess Louise, Queen Victoria's daughter. They received a splendid ovation, and a most warm and enthusiastic welcome upon their arrival in Halifax in November. The Queen cabled, "Delighted at reception. Say so."

In March 1879 the Protectionist Budget was passed.

Governors Before Confederation

The names of Sherbrooke, Richmond, Lisgar, Sydenham, Sir Charles Bagot, Metcalfe and Cathcart, though not so prominent in Canadian history as some others, are still held in honourable esteem, and are perpetuated in various public buildings, or streets.

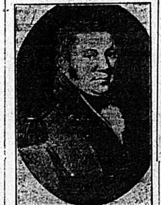


OUR NEW VICE-REINE

Charles Poulett Thomson, Lord Sydenham, indeed holds a place apart. He was an exceptionally faithful and devoted servant of the country, and took a special interest in municipal improvement, building excellent roads in Quebec and Montreal, etc. He made Kingston the capital of United Canada and carried on his own shoulders the main burden of Government. He died in 1841, and was by his own wish buried in Kingston.

Since Confederation 1867.

Men of such diverse character and gifts as Lords Monck, Lansdowne, Stanley, Aberdeen, Minto and Grey have all contributed to the service of Canada and the Empire. Lord Lansdowne has had a political career of more than common brilliance. Lord Aberdeen has twice held office in Ireland and Lord Minto went direct from here to India, where he filled his eminent post admirably.



JOHN GRAVES SIMCOE
One of the early English Governors

The Vice-Reines.

The wives of the Governors — except the child-wife of Champlain who preferred the court of France to a wilderness full of Indians — have always evinced the greatest desire to take their part in the duties attached to the great position of vice-royalty, and are not only society leaders, but also take an active interest in charities, in promoting industries, and in hospital work. Lady Aberdeen founded the excellent institution of the Maycourt Club in Ottawa, and the Lady Grey Cottage Hospital, is the direct outcome of Her Excellency's interest in the care and prevention of tuberculosis.

Our Retiring Governor-General.

His Excellency Earl Grey came to Canada in 1904, and his extended term of office expires in September upon the arrival of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. Lord Grey will carry with him when he leaves, the sincere affection of all Canadians. His rule has been a most happy and prosperous one, and his tact, simple good-fellowship, and unusual ability have made him the friend of all classes

No Governor-General has been more sincerely respected, and he will be greatly missed. He has always shown a specially warm interest in things French-Canadian and has made many close friends in Canada. Lady Grey, too, has endeared herself to very many during her six years in Canada, and the departure of Their Excellencies is looked upon with genuine regret.

The Coming of a Royal Governor.

The first member of the Royal Family to came out to Canada as the representative of the King, is awaited with peculiar interest and enthusiasm. The feeling of patriotic devotion to King and Empire which has always been specially warm in Canadian hearts will be even stronger and deeper when the representative of His Majesty is so closely connected with him.

Loyal Canada is waiting to acclaim with profoundest enthusiasm the brother of our late beloved King Edward, and the uncle of our present Sovereign, and to once more, and more properly, express her recognition and appreciation of the signal honour done her.

EARL OF MINTO
Whose term at Rideau Hall was marked with splendid prosperity in the Dominion.

A Capital Dodger

Carol's grandfather had served in the war, and Carol liked to hear of the many battles in which he had fought. One day, after listening to the vivid recital of many heroic deeds, Carol said:

"Grandfather, you went through all those battles?"

"Yes."

"And the shot and shell fell all around you?"

"Yes."

"And soldiers were falling and dying everywhere?"

"Yes."

"Well, grandfather, what a fine dodger you must have been!"

The Sultan of Turkey has seventy-one titles, and on the parchment containing them are the words, "As many more as may be desired can be added to this number." Among the titles are "Abdul Hamid, the Eternally Victorious," "The Eternally Smiling," "The Eternally Invincible," "Distributor of Crowns to the Heroes Seated on the Thrones,' and "Shadow of God on Earth."

The Triumph of the Horse.

It is a curious thing that all the dismal prophecies about the extinction of the horse after the introduction of motor-traction and the invention of the aeroplane have not only been falsified, but that the horse, as the noblest friend of man, has attained a new position of favor... The truth is that after the first wild enthusiasm for mechanical traction, people have realized that for pleasure, as well as for many kinds of work, the horse is still the greatest servant of man. The army is not yet mounted on flying-machines, and needs more horses than are easily obtained. The old Shire horses are still supreme in the fields, and the first attempts to supersede them by heavy traction engines have failed ignominiously.

The Art of Listening

The clever listener will invariably outshine the clever talker, because a man suspects a woman is clever if she talks well, but he knows she is clever if she listens well to him talk! His imagination supplies all the thoughts she does not utter. Listening is a great charm in either sex.

SHE GOT WHAT SHE WANTED

This Woman Had to Insist Strongly, but it Paid

Chicago, Ill.—"I suffered from a female weakness and stomach trouble, and I went to the store to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but the clerk did not want to let me have it—he said it was no good and wanted me to try something else, but knowing all about it I insisted and finally got it, and I am so glad I did, for it has cured me.

"I know of so many cases where women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I can say to every suffering woman if that medicine does not help her, there is nothing that will."—Mrs. JANETZKI, 2963 Arch St., Chicago, Ill.

This is the age of substitution, and women who want a cure should insist upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound just as this woman did, and not accept something else on which the druggist can make a little more profit.

Women who are passing through this critical period or who are suffering from any of those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of the fact that for thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills. In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

MISS CARRIE DERICK (M.A.)

It is not given to members of the gentler sex to shine in a science which has always been a close preserve for man, but since Miss Derick has made Botany her special subject the world of science and now agriculture — at least in Canada — is raised to the scientific level, the world of agriculture are the richer by the studies of this remarkable woman. McGill University is the present home of Miss Derick, where she is on the staff as Assistant Professor of Botany.

Born in the little village of Clarenceville, Que., of U. E. Loyalist stock Carrie Derick commenced her brilliant career in gaining the Prince of Wales Medal at McGill Normal School after becoming Logan Gold Medalist at McGill University. Then came research work, in United States, England and Germany. Then a position as demonstrator in Botany at McGill (the first woman to be appointed on the staff) finally attaining in 1906 the coveted position she now holds.

Miss Derick's energies have not, by any means, been confined to the laboratory, as a few of the public positions she holds show — Chairman of the Local Council of Women, Vice-President of the Natural History Society, and member of many societies. Surely a good record for a woman.

Personally Miss Derick has nothing of the blue stocking about her — her sweet graciousness and courtesy always give one the feeling that a good woman is chatting with you — a feeling that grows as one knows her better.

It is not known just how long mosquitoes can live, but their average life is much longer than is ordinarily supposed. Thousands of them live through winter, hibernating or asleep in dark places, and even though the temperature may fall far below freezing they are not winter killed, but on the approach of warm weather become active again.

Canada Now Consumes 80 Per Cent. of Her Own Produce

"Under protection the country has made wonderful progress, our population has grown rapidly, our business with Great Britain has largely developed, we have built up an immense interprovincial trade, national sentiment has strengthened, and all classes are prosperous and content, said Hon. Clifford Sifton. Our home markets have so increased that they are taking 80 per cent. of our total farm products, while 20 per cent. of the balance is being taken by Great Britain. Under those circumstances were there any valid reasons for our entering into any negotiations with the United States? We have been told that the very best of reasons was that both political parties in Canada for the last 40 years had strongly desired reciprocity in natural products and that, therefore, the proposition needed no consideration. The objection to that statement is simply that it is untrue. In the House of Commons in 1899, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said: "If we know the hearts and minds of our people at present, I think I am not making too wide a statement when I say that the general feeling in Canada is not in favor of reciprocity."

THEY LIKE PROTECTION

American Farmers Know Its Benefits, Hence Fight Reciprocity

The farmers of the United States have been given an opportunity through the present reciprocity agitation to show their real feeling on the subject of protection. An element in this country has been wont to set the farmers up against the manufacturers, to say that the tariff protection enjoyed by manufacturers was afforded at the expense of agriculture, and that the farmers were just waiting an opportunity to burst the chains with which they were bound. But what are the facts? In no country in the world has the principle of protection to industry been carried to such great lengths as in the United States. On many articles the tariff runs up to one hundred per cent. or higher. This has been the condition almost continuously for a generation, so that there has been ample time for the people to learn the merits or demerits of the system. Yet the reduction in the tariff proposed in the Reciprocity Agreement has met with practically unanimous opposition among the farmers of the United States. They want well enough left alone. They know the prosperity which they have enjoyed in common with other classes of the population under the present system, a prosperity which is based on full employment for all with an expanding home market. Such prosperity is not to be jeopardized lightly. The farmers of the United States know from experience that there is one outstanding test of the success of any system of economics. Give us a system, they say, which will afford the opportunity of work to every citizen, the opportunity of work presupposing a scale of remuneration which will be adequate to the service and to the cost of living. Providing all citizens are profitably employed, what is lacking for prosperity? Judging the protective system as in force in the United States by this standard the farmers are in no doubt as to its success. Therefore they have protested with all their force against a deviation from that system. We in this country should profit by the experience of the United States.

WHAT WOULD HAPPEN?

The Canadian Farmer Would Not Get as Much for His Butter

As far as butter is concerned, the Reciprocity agreement would mean:—

(1) Lower prices for the Canadian farmer.

(2) The loss of what little export trade he now enjoys.

(3) The loss of what small revenue now is realised from imports into Canada.

(4) A general demoralization of the dairy industry in Canada due to the inevitable lowering of prices and mixing of foreign and home grades of butter.

Canada's export trade in butter is not so great at the present time that her farmers can afford to emperil their dairy industry by a tariff scheme that would, in all probability, make the country's imports in this article greater than her exports. In the year ending 1910 Canada shipped only 4,815,880 pounds of butter, worth $1,010,274. Canada's imports of butter on the other hand amounted to 687,454 pounds, worth $104,301.

WHAT THE DEAL AMOUNTS TO

A Big Loss in Egg Revenue to the Canadian Home

Do the farmers of Canada wish to give away their home market in eggs, and, by so doing, effect the following results:—

(1) The subtraction of at least 2 cents per dozen from the prices which their wives and daughters now receive.

(2) The disappointment among the women in the farm homes and the consequent lack of former comforts and bright adornments.

(3) The loss of that independent position of contro[illegible] one's own home market and the h[illegible]iation of having a fine economic [illegible]on undermined by cheap foreign eggs.

(4) The loss to the national treasury of $70,000 per year, and the resultant reduction of that amount from expenditures on services of use to the farmer and others in the country.

BROKE WIFE'S ARM TO CRIPPLE HER

A Russian Judge Punished a Tartar For Cruelty to His Wife Dionora

A remarkable light has been thrown upon Tartar marriage customs by a case which has been disposed of by the St. Petersburg courts. Abul Schabal had lived in St. Petersburg five years when his father called him home for the purpose of marrying him to a neighbor's daughter. This neighbor, a Tartar, named Mullah, had two daughters—Mariaka, who was very pretty, and Dionoro, who was not noted for her good looks. Abul Schabal bargained with Mullah. The latter wanted three hundred roubles for Mariaka and one hundred for Dionoro. Finally a bargain was struck. Abul Schabal would be permitted to marry Mariaka for one hundred and fifty roubles. Now a Tartar never sees his bride until after the wedding. Abdul had seen the Mullah girls when they were children, and knew that one was pretty and the other plain. After the wedding he discovered that he had been tricked. He had been married to the plain Dionoro instead of to the pretty Mariaka. He ordered his bride to go back to her father, but she refused to go. It was only when he used the knout as an argument that she consented. But her father would not receive her back, and she returned. In order to secure a separation the Tartar beat his wife until her body was black and blue. Still Mullah would not take his daughter back. As a last resort, the Tartar resolved to cripple his wife. It is a belief among the Tartars that when a wife becomes a cripple her husband can receive another woman in the house. Abdul Schabal therefore broke his wife's arm. But he found that this custom of crippling wives was not recognized by Russian judges. His wife took an action against him for having made here a cripple, claiming 150 roubles damage. Abdul Schabal was sentenced to three months' imprisonment and ordered to pay the damages claimed.

ROMANTIC OLD LADY

Mrs. Betts, Even at the Age of Ninety, Would Not Yield to Misfortune

A romantic personality is removed from North-East London by the death, at the age of ninety-five, of Mrs. Charles Fitzgerald Betts, of Lauriston Road, who was at the same time a retailer of cat's meat and claimant to the title and estates of the Knight of Glin, of Glin Castle, County Limerick. Mrs. Betts, who was the daughter of Thomas Fitzgerald, M.D., of Glin Castle and Trinity College, Dublin, contracted a marriage which her relations did not approve, and her little savings were lost in the Liberator crash. The spirit of the warlike Geraldines, one of whose numerous Irish titles she claimed, possessed Mrs. Betts, for she declined to bend her head before misfortune. She went into business as a purveyor of cat's meat and dog's meat, and for years her aristocratic voice might be heard calling her wares in the streets of North-East London. Even when health was failing her, Mrs. Fitzgerald Betts did not yield. She refused to seek an old-age pension, pursued her calling in a bath-chair pushed by an old family retainer, and, withal, maintained the family dignity despite all attempts by either customers or fellow-traders at familiarity. It is understood that the "Lady of Glin" has disposed in a will of the property she did not possess, one of the clauses providing a soup kitchen for the poor of South Hackney. Mrs. Betts was associated in her early days with Florence Nightingale, and in the East End the part she played during the smallpox epidemic of 1864 is still remembered.

A man has reached the age of discretion when he is willing to admit that other men may have opinions different from his without being fools.

NOBLEMAN INVENTS INVISIBLE AIRSHIP

Mirror-Like Surface of Huge Craft Will Reflect Its Surroundings and Effectually Hide It

The recent disaster to the great naval airship at Barrow, England, and the sharp criticism of the British press, it is said, at last has caused the British Admiralty and War Department to adopt different views with regard to the development of military aeronautics in England. Four aeroplanes have now been ordered from the Bleriot Company in France, and a British War Office expert is now in France attending the military competitions for heavier than air machines that are taking place at Rheims.

This complete change of official attitude is primarily due undoubtedly to the remarkable lessons taught by the Army manoeuvres held recently, and almost simultaneously, in France and Germany. Comparatively little notice has been taken in Great Britain of the part played by aeroplanes at those manoeuvres; yet the results obtained in utilizing the heavier than air machine for purposes of war cannot but have been most important. One may judge this from the fact that as soon as the operations came to a conclusion the Kaiser, in one of his characteristic speeches, declared that the money spent on military aviation in Germany was quite insufficient. A few days later a semi-official announcement was issued to the effect that there would be a substantial increase for the purpose of aeroplanes in the German Budget over the $375,000 voted last year. Similarly in France the Budget for 1912 for military aviation was at once raised to nearly $3,400,000.

Curiously enough, simultaneously with the British Government's decision to give up further experiments with dirigibles, came the news that a young engineer of noble birth, Baron A. Roenne, has just been granted patent rights in England for an improved airship, which promises to be a wonder—if the invention can be successfully worked out.

Baron Roenne, who has already designed and built a number of dirigibles, believes he has solved the problem bearing on the equal distribution of weight in a lighter than air vessel. According to him the number of accidents to airships would have been almost nil had the constructors given greater importance to the question.

In order to preserve this essential requirement of "flight," the inventor's airship will be so built that the passenger-car will be exactly of the same length as the framework.

"As planned by myself," said Baron Roenne, "the new airship will have accommodation for 400 passengers, and be capable of remaining aloft for at least a week. She will be fitted with fifteen motors, each developing 120 horsepower, and this aggregate power of 1,800 will, I am confident, enable her to travel at a speed of 48 miles an hour, and this in a 40-mile wind."

Another wonderful feature of Baron Roenne's projected airship is that at a height of 3,000 feet she will be absolutely invisible. It is by the method of equalization of light and shade that the inventor claims that it is possible to secure invisibility for the airships while in the air.

The cover, or envelope, of the airship is made of chromium, a metal possessing a highly-polished surface, which is perpetually retained by a covering of transparent varnish. Therefore, the metal is equivalent to a mirror, and it is by reflection that the invisibility is obtained. The surface and sides of the polished envelope naturally must reflect the same color—bright or murky, according to the weather, and blend with its environment. The device has been submitted by the inventor to the officials at the Greenwich Royal Observatory, who declare that it is thoroughly scientific and certainly practicable.

ANCIENT VILLAGE FOUND

Remains of Houses and Utensils Used By Prehistoric Man

What is claimed to be a Neolithic walled village has been discovered near the main road between Harrogate and Bolton Abbey at a spot a few miles from Otley, by Mr. W. Storey, of Fewston, a member of the Royal Archaeological Society of Great Britain and Ireland.

The discovery may be divided into two parts. In a dell behind a hill are 24 stone circles, varying in diameter from 20 feet to 3 feet, the whole being surrounded by evidences of a stone wall.

One of the stone circles was a well. A number of stone implements, which experts ascribe to the Neolithic period, have been found.

On a site above the village is a 20 foot stone circle commanding a magnificent view for miles down the valley, and evidently at one time used as a look-out.

On the other side of the hill are two stone circles connected by a huge stone slab, a small stone circle, filled with smaller circles, about 8 inches in diameter, and 2 feet deep, containing charcoal, and two large circular erections, supposed to have been used as a place of worship and a crematorium.

Panics seem to come periodically in the United States. They rise usually in the New York stock market, lead to scarcity of money, hamper industrial operations and the movement of crops, smash banks, ruin depositors by the thousand, and spread desolation and "hard times" throughout the Republic. But their highest waves break ineffectively upon the barriers of Canadian fiscal independence.

"SWIMMING AND TEA FROM FIVE TO SEVEN"

The Paris Fashionable Set Have a New Idea for Entertaining Their Friends.

The latest novelty in Parisian society is the issuing of cards bearing the inscription "Swimming and tea, from five to seven," and if you happen to be in the rue de Chasselles, near Parc Monceau, between these hours, you will see a procession of smart motor cars and broughams depositing well-known clubmen and fashionably gowned women before the "piscine" kept by Dr. Guimard. The central swimming pond occupies three sides of a square, with one end roped off for children and beginners. The rest is deep water for those who dive and swim and play at waterpolo. The baths are got up in an art-nouveau style of architecture, with platforms running out over the water, supported by mosaic columns. The sides are lined with mirrors, and the pond is lit from the ceiling, which is dotted with myriad electric bulbs. Mixed bathing is permitted, or rather it is one of the attractions. The establishment cost $400,000 to equip, and is the most up-to-date "institute medical" of its kind. The bath is filled with Paris drinking water and before it reaches the pond it is boiled, filtered, and clarified with lime. So that there is small risk of anyone being poisoned, especially as it is changed twice a day. There are 300 cabins, and so great is the rush on the baths on some days that the people have to wait their turn.

DOGS IN WARFARE

They Are To Be Used In Scenting Ambushes

For the first time trained dogs are to be used by a British force on active service. Two big and strong Airedales from Major Richardson's kennels are to accompany a punitive expedition on the Indian border to scent ambushes.

The expedition, consisting of a Ghoorka regiment, is to cross the Assam border to punish the Abor tribe for the murder of Mr. Noel Williamson and his party. Much of the country through which the Ghoorkas will have to pick their way is dense scrub, and these Airedales have been trained to utter a low growl to warn their friends of the vicinity of strangers. They have the faculty of "winding" game or people over a mile away, and have been trained not to bark.

Although nearly all the Continental countries, and Japan and the United States only, count among their military units a dog corps, British military authorities have held divided views as to the utility of these four-footed scouts, some officers contending that they would by barking disclose, not only the presence of an enemy, but also warn the enemy of attack.

Major Richardson, who has devoted much care and thought to the breeding and training of war, police, and watch dogs, stated in an interview in the "Daily Telegraph" that for many reasons his choice fell upon Airedales—not the show dog of that breed, but the larger and heavier old-fashioned type, which was strong, very plucky, not apt to be afraid of anything, and not gun shy.

"The great advantage, in my opinion," said Major Richardson, "of a dog to a sentry or outpost picket is that at once the value of his services is more than doubled. A picket accompanied by a dog will never give a false alarm, and in the case of attack the approach of an enemy is noticed by the dog owing to its extraordinary keen sense of smell and sound long before the man has any definite idea of their presence.

"During the Matabele War a police patrol had turned in in their blankets for the night, leaving one of the number on guard. They had an old retriever with them. The night was very dark. The sentry saw and heard nothing, but the dog was restless and growled. Thinking something was wrong, the sentry roused his comrades. They were up, and had just prepared for an attack when a party of natives attempted to rush them. But for that dog that patrol would in all probability have been wiped out.

"It may interest you to learn," added Major Richardson, "that since the Borkum spy affair dogs patrol those fortified islands day and night."

CANNIBALS STILL EXIST

Expedition Sets Out From Oxford for Goodenough Island

A remarkable expedition, headed by a scientific expert from Oxford university has just left London for New Zealand whence it will proceed direct to British Guinea. Goodenough Island, the most northerly district in the Deutrecasteaux Archipelago, itself in the extreme south-easterly corner of British New Guinea has been selected at the headquarters of the expedition, and to this island the work of observation and exploration will be confined. The district has been chosen chiefly because of the fact that up to the present it has been absolutely untouched, notwithstanding the fact that it is the most accessible portion of Paqua. Nothing at all is known of its people, who are believed to be an intermixture of the Melanesian and Paquan tribes. It is a well-known fact that cannibalism is practised on the island very extensively. There is one mission station on the coast, and occasionally a Government official pays a visit to the island, the interior of which, however, remains unexplored. Goodenough Island is of volcanic origin, 40 miles long and 30 miles across. The highest mountain is 8,000 feet, and it is believed to be the highest island of its size in the world.

WHAT CANADIANS ARE DOING

Dr. RUTHERFORD'S RESIGNATION

Farmers and stockmen in every part of Canada will hear with regret that the decision of Dr. J. G. Rutherford, Dominion Live Stock Commissioner and Veterinary Director General, to resign his position at Ottawa is final. Few men could have done so much for the live stock interests of Canada as has Dr. Rutherford, and although Dr. Rutherford will no longer hold his position at Ottawa, the results of the good work that he has done in past years will live after him and bear strong testimony to the whole-hearted way in which he has always worked for the extension and improvement of the live stock industry in Canada.

Dr. Rutherford has many years of usefulness still before him and Agriculturists are asking why his services were not retained by the Dominion Government? It is understood that internal friction in the department has forced Dr. Rutherford to take his step and the Honorable Sydney Fisher should be able to give an account of the why and wherefore.

Dr. Rutherford retires taking with him the good will and good wishes of all the live stock men of Canada.

Dr. J. W. DANIEL, M.R.C.S.

Dr. J. W. DANIEL, M.P.
St. John, N.B.

One of the most prominent men in public life in New Brunswick is Dr. J. W. Daniel particularly in St. John where the doctor is known and respected by every man and woman in the city by the sea. Born in 1854 at St. Stephen, N.B., Dr. Daniel was educated in England where he took his degree in surgery. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1904 though his public duties have not been confined to parliamentary life. He was mayor of St. Johns for two years and is a member of many societies. He is a Surgeon Lt.-Col. in the Militia (Long Service Medal).

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN, K.C.

Mr. E. B. Devlin, K.C., who succeeded Sir Wilfrid Laurier as parliamentary representative for Wright County, Ont., is a native of Aylmer, and has for a matrimonial partner the daughter of a gentleman who was perhaps one of the closest political friends of Sir John A. MacDonald — Hon. Col. L. R. Masson, of Terrebonne who was minister of Militia, and for a period president of the Privy Council in the MacDonald Cabinet.

Mr. Devlin received his early education in St. Mary's College, Montreal, and subsequently attended college in Derbyshire, England. Returning to Canada, he took B.A. degree at Laval University, Montreal, his M.A. degree at Canisius University, Buffalo, and the degree of B.C.L. at the law school of McGill University in 1895.

In 1895 Mr. Devlin began the practice of law in Montreal, where he soon took his place as one of the leading criminal lawyers at the Quebec bar. He acquired a lucrative practice, and was a prominent figure at a number of important trials held in his native province. In 1900 Mr. Devlin received the Liberal nomination for parliament in St. Anne's division, Montreal, but he withdrew from the contest before polling day. In 1901, he moved to Hull, where he has had a paying law practice ever since. He was appointed K.C. in 1907. Mr. Devlin is a brother of Hon. C. R. Devlin, minister of mines, fisheries and colonization in Sir Lomer Gouin's present Quebec cabinet, and a nephew of the late Bernard Devlin, Q.C., formerly M.P. for Montreal central division.

Bigamist Gets Eighteen Months.

Toronto, Oct. 19.—William Donnelly was sent to prison for 18 months for bigamy from the police court yesterday. He had already admitted a plurality of wives. His justification was that his first wife had refused to live with him. His second wife swore that she knew nothing of her predecessor, and has two children by him.

Railroad and Safety

The claim upon which Sir Edward Watkin never ceased to insist, that an English railway train was the "safest place in the world," is largely borne out by the annual returns of the Board of Trade in respect of the number of accidents that occur to passengers and railway servants. For instance, in the ten years ending 1909 only one passenger was killed on the average in every 72,000,000 journeys, and one injured in every 2,000,000 journeys! But even these figures — the only ones officially available — do not show the full extent of the security reached upon the railways of the United Kingdom, inasmuch as in the returns no account is taken of the journeys made by season-ticket holders.

HON. JOHN HAGGART

John Haggart crossed the threshold of parliament when some of its present luminaries were being cared for in the nursery, and he has been one of its most picturesque and interesting figures ever since.

It was in 1872 that John Haggart, mayor of Perth, an ambitious and handsome young politician, first went to the electors as the Conservative candidate. His majority was some nine hundred odd. The men who voted for John in seventy-two are nearly all passed from this vale of tears, but their sons and their sons' sons have been steadfastly voting for the old war-horse ever since.

He is, perhaps, the oldest man that ever sat in the Dominion House. If he lives until November 14 he will celebrate then his seventy-sixth birthday, which it must be admitted is some age to be stumping and canvassing a constituency. Laurier is five years his junior, Hon. Wm. Paterson is three, and as for Fielding, he is quite a juvenile beside Hon. John. In the Senate, Sir Richard Cartwright is a year older, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell can look down upon the Lanark member with the added weight of thirteen winters.

He is one of the genuine picturesque figures who wend their way around Parliament Hill. In his younger days, they say he was one of the handsome men in the House and one of the best groomed. He is still debonair, ruddy-cheeked; with a fine mop of white hair; a sprightly and gay veteran is John Haggart.

Quits When He Hits

Despite all warnings, a patient who suffered from overeating was obliged to call upon the doctor every few weeks for remedies. But when several months passed without a summons the doctor wondered, and, meeting his patient on the street, he asked.

"How is it I haven't heard from you in so long? Are you taking my advice or my prescriptions, or have you joined the ranks of the food-faddists?"

"I have done none of these things," responded the former dyspeptic, "and I believe I am done with the doctors for ever. I have found a perfect rule. When I sit down at the table I am careful to see that I measure just six inches from the table. Then I eat and eat and when I hit—I quit."

Her Own Fault

The wife of a pugilist was denied a divorce on the ground that her husband blackened her eyes. It was probably contented that the pugilist was only making a sparring partner out of his partner for life. This is only reasonable. A wife should be willing to help her husband in his profession and to take an active interest in it. If a lady is prejudiced against black eyes she should not marry a pugilist.

SLEEPER'S LONG WALK

Girl's Tramp Over Rough Country On a Cold Night

An extraordinary instance of a girl walking a long distance on a bitter cold night, while fast asleep, is reported from Monmouth. The girl's name is Annie Mary Smith, and she is a domestic servant in the employ of the Rev. L. M. Abbot.

The girl went to bed as usual. Early next morning Mr. Abbot was awakened by a knocking at his front door. As the knocking was not answered by the servant girl, he called her, and, getting no response, he went to her room. The bed had been slept in, but the girl had gone, and, to add to the puzzle, her clothing was in the room.

He went downstairs, and at the door a messenger told him that the girl during the night had reached her home cold and ill, and clad only in her night apparel. From her bedroom the girl had walked downstairs, unlocked two doors, and made her way across some coal and wood and out of the front of the house up a side path. She had walked over some rough stones before reaching a gate which leads on to the Hereford Road. On the steep hill leading to Staunton she woke. She knew the district, and decided to call up some friends at Staunton, but then she realized that to arouse them would only give them a fright, and she continued her journey to her mother's cottage, crossing several fields.

TO HONOR SHAKESPEARE

The New Theatre in London Will Cost a Fabulous Sum

The executive committee of the Shakespeare National Theatre Fund now feel almost certain that an immense theatre facing Trafalgar Square will not only be an accomplished fact, but that it will be actually opened on April 23rd, 1916, the tercentenary of Shakespeare's death. The site alone will cost about $2,500,000, and the theatre itself an even larger amount. The fund now possesses only $500,000, but this money has been raised without appealing to the public. Such an appeal will now be made, and the committee expects to raise the necessary $5,000,000 in two years.

"As to the repertoire," says the secretary of the committee, "it will include, on an average, at least one Shakesperian and one other English classical play per week, and will also embrace new or recent plays, English and foreign, of the first order of merit.

"The architectural features of the theatre are matters for the future. The design will be the subject of competition, of course. We hope to secure the endowment before we put up the building."

A POET, A PALACE, AND A PUBLIC SCHOOL

One Day's Jaunt From London-Town

BY AGNES DEANS CAMERON

Author of "The New North."

(Copyright by Publishers Press, Ltd.)

It really was a record-breaker. Immediately after breakfast we started, five of us, Canadians and Americans, mixed. Our London rooms are in classic Bloomsbury, the district which the guide-books say is "given over to the economical American and the Hindoo student." Now, we are not Hindoo students, so we know how the English brother classifies us.

ENTRANCE TO ST. GEORGES' CHA PEL WINDSOR

We go by 'bus to Paddington, for, "although on pleasure we are bent," like Mrs. John Gilpin, "we have a frugal mind," the guide-book is quite right. Turning up Edgware Road from the Marble Arch, we pass Tyburn Tree where they used, in this pleasant land to hang traitors, and others. One American remarks, "Pleasant and joyous folk, these ancestors of yours!" And from a Canadian is the retort courteous. "Yes: but we've given it up, we're hopelessly out of date, not one nigger lynched, mobbed, or burned in England or Canada last year."

At Paddington we get through tickets for Windsor for seventy-five cents, return, third class. Every one travels third-class in England, except the peerage. The difference between third class and first is that the third is half the price of the first, and in the first you have an antimacassar. It has just dawned on me that the derivation of this word shows it to be a preventive device designed to keep macassar oil from coming off the head on to the chaste mural decoration of the railway-carriage, a scheme by which the passenger pays and the railway benefits. For this and other reasons we travel third class.

MISS AGNES DEANS CAMERON

It takes between half an hour and an hour to get to Windsor. At Slough we leave the main-line and two miles farther on arrive at the station called, "Windsor and Eton." Spoken English can be acquired only on the spot. Slough is pronounced to rhyme with plough. I had thought it rhymed with snuff. Others of us had hazarded "sloo" and "slow." In England you never can tell. My sympathies always went out strongly to the American girl who returned across the Atlantic saying she had met in "Darby" an English girl who spelled her name, "C-ho-l-m-o-n-d-e-l-y", and pronounced it, "Marsh-banks."

We hired a man to take us round the Castle at Windsor, which is only five-minutes' walk from the station. Through our eyes came successive visions of the beautiful, the grand, the historic; through our ears the fearsome English of the eleemosynary guide; the effect on our brain of the two wireless messages was grotesque in the extreme. "The Harchway by which you henter is the hatchway where Hanne Bullen hentered when she came from 'Ever Caw-sel in Kent to be the wife of 'Enry the Heighth."

To enjoy Windsor Castle we must dismiss the guide and wander along in quiet by ourselves, recalling all we can of the English history lessons of the little red schoolhouse. The Castle stands a hundred feet above the Thames, occupying a site which, "in the beginning" was given by Edward the Confessor to the monks of Westminster Abbey. William the Conqueror took the land back again and built a fortress on it. Henry the First added to the fortress a chapel, in which with great magnificence he was married to his second Queen, Adelais of Louvain. In this castle John was besieged by his angry barons; here was born the great Edward the Third. It was this latter king who rebuilt the castle, making the famous William of Wykeham foreman of the job, and giving him a dollar and seventy-five cents a week for his expert help. There were no labour unions in those days and no strikes.

The rival kings of the Wars of the Roses, the Fourth Edward and the Sixth Henry, are both buried here. Far back in 1544, after they had been married at Winchester, Bloody Mary with her spouse, Philip the Second of Spain, made grand public entry into Windsor. Within these walls the unfortunate Charles the First kept court and was afterward held a prisoner in the same apartments. Good Queen Anne planted elms and beeches here, and after her came the German Georges, and Victoria, the Great and Good. In Windsor, as in all England, it is the personal touch, not the architectural beauties or architectural horrors or curiosities which attracts and holds us.

From the Library Terrace we get through the trees a distant prospect of Eton School and remember Gray's lines, — (I quote from memory) "Alas regardless of their doom, the little victims play; no fears have they of ills to come, nor cares beyond to-day." Why should they have? Are not these great "Public Schools", so-called — Eton, Harrow, Winchester, — forcing-frames of the fortunate, elegant anchorages of the elect? In these institutions the masters address the boys as "the ruling classes", and ostensibly teach them how to govern and direct In the unaspirated "Board-Schools" the boy proletariat of Britain is taught how to serve, "to behave lowly and reverently to his betters", to be "content in that station of life to which it has pleased God to call him." It is fore-ordination from the cradle.

From here we see, also, the spire of the church of Stoke Poges, "the country churchyard" where the poet, Gray, wrote his immortal Elegy, and took seven years to do it. Beyond, glistening white among the trees five miles away, are the roofs of the old family-home of William Penn, true son of Quakerism and Father of the pleasant forest-land of Pennsylvania. It would be impossible to go up in a flying-machine and be dropped down on any corner of England which is not historic ground, rich and lush in human interest.

You cannot see Windsor in a day nor write of it in a column. One can but glance at the Round Tower, the old Royal prison; this is "The Mayden's Tower" where the Earl of Surrey, because he did not keep Lent in the fashion approved, was sent to reflect on his crimes. The old moat round the Tower is now partially filled up and turned into a sweet meandering sort of garden, beautiful with clematis and roses.

To see the State Apartments, you pay twenty-five cents, "one bob" lawful coin of this realm, and to hear the guide is alone well worth money. He is such a solemn owl, like St. Paul he magnifies his office, and takes himself most seriously. If one interrupts him with a question, he repeats his sentence word for word, much slower, and just a little louder. It is with him a case of English spoken, American tolerated. In the State Apartment, he shows us two pictures, one by Guido Reni, one by Heintz. A little girl from South Dakota asks him, if the latter is one of the 57 varieties, but it is all lost on Jeemes.

Really, one should go twice to Windsor, once to satisfy the Jekyll in one's nature, and once the Hyde. The time to enjoy original Correggios, Holbeins, and Claudes, is not just after the guide has halted you in the Queen's Audience Chamber, to look at Verrio's ceiling painting of Catherine of Braganza, the Queen of Charles the Second. Catherine, presented to you as Britannia, sits in a triumphal car drawn by swans, the whole party proceeding merrily toward the Temple of Virtue. There are goddesses in attendance, and others. The guide makes all plain with, "Er Majesty: riding in state; hattended by virtuous females; striking down Henvy, 'Atred and malice."

We get as far away from this man as possible, his dislocated h's spoil our mental vision. We see the two silken flags in the guard-room, which are placed here anew each year on the anniversary of Blenheim by the Duke of Marlborough; should he forget to renew them one year, all his magnificent estates will be confiscated to the Crown.

All ages and all places are made to pay tribute to this Palace of Kings. In the Waterloo Room is a carpet woven in one piece and weighing three tons, which was made by the convicts at Agra; in the Grand Vestibule we see that black flag of Kalifa which Kitchener carried from Khartoum.

To one born in Canada or America all England is a mighty sarcophagus, the Past is ever more insistent than the Present. So here in Windsor the memorials of the dead are more compelling than the rooms of the living. The Albert Chapel, embellished by Queen Victoria in memory of the Prince Consort, has one of the most resplendent interiors in the world, and holds at the east end of the room a Cenotaph in antique marble where the Prince is shown as a recumbent figure in full armour with his favorite hound, Eos, at his feet.

In St. George's Chapel rests all that is mortal of many Kings. When one pauses at the Royal vault in the centre of the choir and reads that Henry the Eighth rests here buried "by his own desire with his true and loving wife; Jane", one wonders fatuously if Jane fittingly appreciates this mortuary and uxorious selection, — Jane with her two predecessors and her three successors.

One monument over which we linger long and reverently is that sculpture in white marble which pictures to us the boyish figure of the Prince Imperial who at the age of twenty-three was killed by the assegais of the natives in the Zulu War. The inscription in Latin may be freely translated:—

> "This well-beloved youth, the comrade of our soldiers, slain in the African war, and thence carried to the tomb of his father, Queen Victoria embraceth as her guest, in this holy domicile of kings."

And so we pass out into the sweet, warm, summer sun, from all this glory of the present and pomp of the past, "Sceptre and crown must crumble down; Death lays his icy hand on Kings." After luncheon we drive along the Long Walk, surely one of the most noble avenues in the world, where for three miles we are shaded by elms, a double row, planted in 1679 or 1680, when King Charles the Second was giving tardy assent to the great liberty-charter of Habeas Corpus! Even the trees at Windsor preach to us of kings dead and things ancient. At Frogmore are buried Queen Victoria and the Consort she loved so well.

We cannot drive away without seeking out some sign of those "Merry Wives" whom all the world associates with Windsor. We find it in Herne's Oak. Local tradition has it that one of the forest-rangers of Elizabeth, a good Master Herne, committed some more or less flagrant peccadillo, and was afraid to face the music and his Queen. To make short shift, he hanged himself on an inviting oak. It is here that Falstaff "larded the lean earth as he walked along", here that his amorous length (and width) was cooled of its ardour in the stripling Thames, here that we and the Merry Wives leave him.

Home Building Hints.

When the location of the lot will permit, it is best to place the kitchen in the northwest corner or at least somewhere on the north side of the house. The kitchen is always warm enough during the winter and during the summer it being far warmer than any other room in the house, it should be located on the north side. When located on the south side, the hot glare of the sun during the morning when most kitchen work is done, added to the heat created within the kitchen makes it almost unbearable. Also, during the summer the prevailing winds being from a southerly direction, and the windows and doors being open, the cooking odors are carried through the house, most of the odor and smoke going up the stairway which acts as a flue. When the kitchen is located on the north side, this annoying feature is not experienced, since a draught goes entirely through the house before it reaches the kitchen, and the odors are carried from the kitchen out doors.

There are many little conveniences which can be easily provided in every kitchen, for example, two or three shallow shelves set into the wall above the sink, the same as in the bathroom medicine cabinet, only without the doors, always proves convenient as a place to set a clock, toilet soap, matches, etc.

Not for Scottish Readers

Did you ever notice how a piper prances up and down as he pipes? He never sits, he never stands still, but up and down, round and round, to and fro, he struts continually. A little boy, listening to the weird skirl of the bagpipes of a street performer, once said to his father:

"Father, why does the piper keep on the move all the time he plays?"

"I can't say, my boy," the father answered, "unless it is to prevent anyone getting the range with a cobblestone."

The happiness of your life depends upon the character of your thoughts; therefore watch well over them, and entertain none that are contrary to purity and truth, so that if your soul were laid open there would appear nothing but what would bear the light and call up no blush.

15,000 Miles of New Roads

Illustrating the tremendous impetus that lately has been given to the nation wide movement for improved public highways, the United States Office of Public Roads has just prepared a chart, which shows that nearly 15,000 miles of transcontinental, interstate and trunk line roads are contemplated in various sections of the country.

The chart prepared by the Office of Public Roads shows the extent to which the good roads movement has taken hold of every part of the United States, North, South, East and West, the improved roads, some merely planned, other actually under construction, literally making a network covering the whole country.

If all the plans contemplated are carried out by the men and communities back of them it will be possible to drive wagons and automobiles from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from Vancouver, B. C., to Tijuana, Mex., and from Montreal, Can. to Miami, Fla. The map prepared by the Office of Public Roads, merely for the purpose of gauging the extent of the good roads movement as fostered by individuals, associations and communities, shows many great highways in contemplation or actually under construction.

A Frightful Hurricane, Indeed

"The terrors of the deep," remarked the captain of a transatlantic liner, "were perhaps never more thrillingly set forth than in the description by a young lady who last year made her first trip abroad. She kept a diary, very much like that of Mark Twain, when for seven days he recorded the to breakfast."

"There was, however, one important exception. When she crossed the Channel the experience was so trying that she felt impelled to describe it. 'I am firmly resolved to stay on deck,' she wrote, 'although the tempest increased to such a frightful hurricane that it was only with the greatest difficulty that I could hold up my parasol!'"

In youth we think we shall be able to build palaces for men, but when it comes to the point we have our hands full with the business of clearing away their dirt and rubbish. This disgusting work requires great resignation; but it must be done — Goethe.

VALUE OF DOING NOTHING.

Why the Average Man does not get Proper Rest-Value out of his Yearly Vacation.

In finding a reason for the fact that the average business man on return from a vacation, feels more tired and less inclined to work than before he went away, and why on retiral he is apt to become discontented and miserable, scientists incline to place the blame partly on the demon of unrest and partly on humanity for not mastering the art of doing nothing and giving the body a real rest whenever we have an opportunity.

Ungrammatical as it may sound, we apparently don't know how to "do nothing." We don't know how to rest during vacation, or how to settle down to a life of ease, after striving, toiling, and saving for years with that very state as our goal.

Doing nothing is often the hardest kind of hard work for one who has not learned how to do it. If it could be remembered that the problem of how to grow old gracefully is one that necessarily comes to all who live the allotted span of life, and if in preparation for this condition, a broad physical and mental development were insisted on for the youth of the nation, grumblings at the frailties of advancing years would be less frequent, or might disappear. For not only would the bodily energies last much longer, but, what is of equal or even more importance, the ability for finding employment in life with even much restricted capacities would fill with peace and satisfaction the quiet years that follow years of tireless activity.

One important reason why men (and women, too) are unwilling to withdraw from their occupations, either gradually, or suddenly, is the feeling that without their guidance the particular business or pursuit in question will be utterly demoralised, and soon go to rack and ruin.

It is the eternal desire to be doing something all the time, that is the bane of modern life. People are not content with what they have accomplished, but are discontented because they do not accomplish more.

One reason for this discontented restlessness is that many people have not the gift of optimism, or rather, do not cultivate this gift, which, to a greater or less degree, is surely common to all. If only they would try to make the best, instead of the worst, of everything, to see the good that they have accomplished, and not think so much of their failures, it would be a comparatively easy matter for them to be more satisfied with their daily life.

Quite Unexpected.

When he proposed marriage she asked him for time to think over it. "This is so unexpected," she said. He gave her the necessary time, and she finally decided that he fulfilled all the requirements of the situation.

Then they reached a point where they could discuss matters calmly.

"Of course," he said jokingly, "it wasn't really unexpected at all."

"Oh, yes, it was," she replied.

"Absurd!" he exclaimed. "A girl always says that. She knows what is coming, because she is naturally an expert in such matters."

"I thought I was, but you fooled me," she insisted.

"And it was a complete surprise?"

"It was."

"I don't understand it," he commented.

"Well," she explained ingenuously, "you had overlooked so many splendid chances that I gave you for a proposal that I had begun to think nothing ever would [illegible] you nerve enough to speak out; [illegible]eally was unexpected."

"Oh!" he said, [illegible] was all. There didn't seem t[illegible]thing else to say.

He Know B[illegible]

A Scottish minister was startled by the original views of a not very skilful ploughman whom he had just engaged. Noticing the furrows were far from straight he said, 'John, yer drills are no straucht; that is no like Tammie's wark'—'Tammie' being the man who had previously ploughed the field.

'Tammie didna ken his wark,' observed the man coolly as he turned his team about. 'Ye see, when the drills is crookit the sun gets well in on a' sides, an' so ye can get early tatties.'

WHAT CANADIANS ARE DOING

HAUGHTON LENNOX, K.C.

To the average reader, Mr. Haughton Lennox, K.C., member of the late House of Commons, will probably bulk more largely to date as the man who put up the strong fight behind his amendment to the Railway Act to prevent companies contracting themselves out of liability for death or injuries to their employes. Mr. Lennox who is a native of Innisfil township, in Simcoe County, Ont., began the practice of law in 1875 when he was twenty five years old, and in course of an all round successful career has made his mark, with more than a local reputation, as a handler of criminal cases. In 1900 he hit the political trail as a candidate for House of Commons honors and came out on top, re-election following in 1904 and 1908.

Mr. J. F. MUNRO

Of whom Pembroke is proud

Mr. J. F. Munro, president of the Massey Lumber Company, with headquarters at Pembroke, and a candidate for parliamentary honors in North Renfrew is one of the many self-made men, men who have climbed high from a very lowly position round the roots of the tree, of whom Canada is so justly proud. Today, numbered amongst the largest ratepayers of his town, Mr. Munro is not of those who take each and every opportunity to cover up the fact that he was not born amongst big bank bills and much gold. On the contrary he recalls with a degree of satisfaction that he began in the ranks of physical workers, and is not averse to pointing his friends the location where with pick and shovel he helped establish the Pembroke water system.

A native of Fitzroy harbor he migrated to Pembroke in 1890 when seventeen years old, and so determinedly did the farmer's boy set to work that ere many years had elapsed he emerged from the laboring level to that of an employer. That was not quite ten years ago, and today Mr. Munro is in the proud position of being head of the Massey Lumber concern, vice-president of Pembroke Woolen Mills Ltd., director of the Lee Manufacturing Co., and of the Pembroke Electric Lighting Co., and a stockholder in various other concerns of standing in the district. Mr. Munro is a Liberal and a strong supporter of the Georgian Canal scheme.

Mrs. E. L. JONES

The growth of the club movement is one of the outstanding features in connection with women's work in Canada at the present day, and the ladies in combination bid fair to exercise considerable influence in many directions for the general weal of the districts in which these clubs are located. Some indeed already aim at wider field. That of Winnipeg, for instance, of which Mrs. E. L. Jones is at once a charming and businesslike president, aims at securing from the Government, an expansion of the Homestead Act so as to recognise the right to its benefit of all British born women who have attained their twenty-first birthday. Such privilege is enjoyed south the line, and President Mrs. Jones argues, with show of reason, that British women ought to be similarly circumstanced. It may be added that the Winnipeg club was the second formed in the Dominion.

OSWALD S. CROCKET, B.A., M.P.

As befits a man who carries the name, Mr. Oswald S. Crocket is an enthusiastic lover of Scotland's ploughman bard, an active member of the St. Andrews Society, and as chairman of the New Brunswick Burns Memorial Committee did much to help along the movement which resulted in the erection of a Burns monument in 1906. Mr. Crocket, both of whose parents were of the name by the way and both of Scotland, was born in 1868 at Chatham, N.B., his father, Mr. Wm. Crocket, LL.D. being for some time chief superintendent of Education for the province. After education at Fredericton Commercial and High Schools, he finished at the New Brunswick University, and was admitted an Attorney of the Supreme Court there at the early age of 23, and had Barrister to his name exactly one year later. Leanings towards things political also came in early life, and 1904 found him occupying a seat in the House of Commons for York, holding the representation of that constituency until recent events called a halt in Parliamentary doings for the time being. Mr. Crocket was latterly chairman of the publicity committee of the Conservative party and is generally recognised as one of the promising young men of his side. Mrs. Crocket is a daughter of the late Mr. Charles M. Stevenson, M.P., for Coaticook, Que.

Mr. WILLIAM PRICE,

Mr. Wm. Price, M.P., for Quebec west in the late Parliament, is one of the prominent lumber merchant of that city, and has been in it long enough to claim a solid knowledge of everything pertaining to timber. Born in Chili in 1867, young Price migrated to the colder latitudes of Canada in company with his parents, when he was eleven years of age, and promptly began to study the things scholastic that are calculated to lead on to success in life's battle. After some years spent with profit to himself and credit to his teachers at Bishop's College, Lennoxville, Que., young Price crossed the Atlantic to complete his educational career at St. Mark's school in England, embarking on a business career in the old Capital soon after his return. At the age of 31, having, to his satisfaction, well-established himself commercially, Mr. Price allowed his mind to incline towards the higher things in political live, and, as stated, he succeeded in catching the eye and the vote of West-Quebec. In addition to being a politician, Mr. Price occuples seats of honor on the Boards of various commercial enterprises, including that of vice-president of the Union Bank and has also served as an officer in 8th Royal Rifles of Quebec. Mr. Price is married and has four sons and two daughters.

Treasured by Queen Victoria.

At Windsor Castle may be seen two objects of small intrinsic value, which Queen Victoria is said to have valued more highly than most of the costly gifts showered upon her during her long reign. The first is an old and much-worn Bible which Gen. Gordon carried with him throughout his great campaign in China. It was presented by Gordon's sister to Her Majesty, who had it preserved in a beautiful casket of crystal and enamel. The second object is a fitting companion to the first. It is the Koran formerly used by Gordon's murderer, the Mahdi. It was given to Queen Victoria by Lord Kitchener.

WHO'S WHO IN CANADA

Mr. JOHN STANFIELD,

In addition to being parliamentary representative for Colchester, in the late House of Commons, Mr. Stanfield is president, and guiding light of Stanfield's Limited, operating the concern formerly known as the Truro Knitting Mill & Company at the town of that name in Nova Scotia. The arduous duties in connection with this company does not, however, prevent his devoting the time on demand to help keep the ship of Dominion more or less before the wind, and like all good conservatives, he no doubt considers his influence on the handlers of the helm has been all the time for good. He is indeed generally recognised as the strongest representative of the sea-side province.

Born at Charlottetown, P. E. I., in the merry month of 1868, the future M. P. removed to Truro with his parents in early life, and had the ground work of his education laid there by men of mark in the four R's, — with some extra frills in scholastic work thrown in. At a bye-election in 1907 he won first Parliamentary honors, and at the general election of 1908 the voters of Colchester decided they had no good and sufficient reason in sight to try a change of representative. Mr. Stanfield is married and has a family of one son.

Dr. J. G. RUTHERFORD, C.M.G.

The Department of Agriculture loses a particularly capable outfit of brains in Dr. J. G. Rutherford, C.M.G., Veterinary Director-General and Live-Stock Commissioner of Canada, who leaves the Government service for work that will bring him more money and doubtless greater peace of mind. Dr. Rutherford knew his department work from A to Z. He had been a member of Parliament and knew what the people wanted. He had been a farmer and knew what the farmers wanted. He was trained as a veterinary surgeon in the thorough English school and knew what the animals wanted. When he took hold in 1902 he found nothing to his hand except an Act of Parliament which was so much waste paper. In nine years he had created a health-of-animals branch, a meat and food inspection service with a hundred inspectors, a biological laboratory with a staff of trained pathologists, and a live-stock branch that is doing much to promote friendly relations between breeders and their market. Quarantine work has been systematized and the importation of live stock into Canada is now thoroughly under the control of the department. Hog cholera has almost disappeared; glanders has been stamped out except in Saskatchewan; cattle mange, horse mange, sheep scab, and many other minor diseases have been effectively handled. Dr. Rutherford brought unusual powers of special investigation to his duties. For example, when an epidemic broke out among the cattle in Nova Scotia he discovered that it was due to a poisonous weed. He brought in sheep that throve on the weed and put an end to the epidemic. As president of the American Veterinary Medical Association, Dr. Rutherford had the chief hand in forming the International Commission for the Control of Bovine Tuberculosis, whose good work has just begun.

DUNCAN McMARTIN,

The story of the poor lad who leaves home to make his way in the world, and who returns to his native place as a self-made and honorable man of affairs can never lose its charm.

This is the lifestory of Duncan McMartin, the Conservative candidate for the county of Glengarry in the present federal fight.

Born thirty-seven years ago at St. Raphaels, on one of Glengarry's historic farmsteads. Duncan inherited from his father Alan McMartin, the priceless advantage of United Empire Loyalist blood in his veins, and pioneer stamina in his constitution. Glengarrians still cherish the memories of that party of seventy-five Loyalists, consisting mainly of McMartins and their kinsfolk, who forsook the United States in 1783, abandoning their homes and all the comforts of life rather than swerve in their devotion to the British throne.

Mr McMartin went West from the old farm while yet in his teens and after encountering all kinds of hard work success got him. Years of close application and tireless activity, combined with a phenomenal business acumen, have brought their sure rewards, and Mr. McMartin now finds himself not only on Easy street, but a multi-millionaire.

A child has been baptized in a Manchester church with the Christian name of George Veto.

People who take the will for the deed never break into the millionaire class.

THE NEW HOME

A Gradual House-Furnishing is Productive of Most Delight to the Bride.

The furnishing of the future home is always a subject of surprising interest to the prospective bride, and she is apt to feel aggrieved if every item, both of ornament and utility cannot be installed in the house ready for the return from the honeymoon. The desirable thing, she thinks, is to order everything in complete suites and sets direct from a furnishing firm so that nothing is left for her to do but to arrange the pieces to the best advantage in the space available.

Yet it is from gradual furnishing that she will derive most of the delights of house fitting and decorating. If she starts with the absolute minimum of furniture required for comfort and convenience, she is at liberty to add this, that, and the other, as the need arises, and, as the opportunity occurs, for obtaining that which exactly expresses her individual tastes. A room slowly furnished in this manner is far more likely to bear the impress of the occupant's personality than is one hastily supplied with the orthodox suite, which, as often as not, quite over-crowds the small sitting-room with chairs that are not needed, while leaving no space for other items which may be needed. Especially is it desirable to add slowly to the ornamental items, and to choose each of these separately for some marked and special attraction of its own, and not merely for the sake of filling up some vacant space on wall or mantlepiece. There are said to be people who choose pictures by their frames: there are certainly housewives who choose ornaments mainly for height and width rather than for shape, colour, design, etc. The charm of home-furnishing is greatly increased if one takes the trouble to learn a little about "period" furnishing, and knows the story of a class of pottery or the romance attaching to the painter of a picture — though the picture be but a painted copy of the well-known original. An intimate interest of this sort gives value and meaning to the objects around and prevents the boredom prone to follow the best laid ready-made plan.

A PRETTY RUSSIAN

PAOLONIA PAJITYKAIA

Karsavina is said to be the most beautiful woman that ever graduated from the Czar's ballet school. Kschesinska was known as "solo dancer to the czar," and, until this season, saving one appearance in Paris for the Messina earthquake sufferers, she has never been permitted to appear before other than a Russian audience.

Cut Flower Hints

It is a mistake to mix flowers when arranging them. Generally speaking, they are infinitely lovelier if each kind is kept by itself. There are, however, some which are more effective in combination, as, for example, mignonnette. The latter is nice with any flowers not having foliage, as it supplies the required green.

When flowers have short stems and one wishes to arrange them in a shallow, wide bowl, the matter is simple if a glass be placed in the middle. In this, filled with water, the first flowers are placed. The others, put in the bowl, will entirely conceal the central receptacle, and the result is more symmetrical than could be had otherwise.

Green pottery, either in shallow dishes or jars, rarely can be improved upon for holding flowers, while some of the terra cotta jars from Italy are perfection, with their soft creaminess of tone, which harmonizes with all colors.

The unvarying decorations on the big chimney shelf in one girl's room are four tiny little Italian pots, uniform in size and design. From the time the flowering season begins they are always filled with two different kinds of blossoms, two of the jars having the same kind, and so placed as to balance or match on the shelf.

Arranging flowers for the house every morning during the summer is one of the prettiest and most artistic duties a girl can have.

Apple Jelly.

Put water in the pan to boil, and when the apples are peeled and quartered drop them into the boiling water, allowing only enough water to cover the fruit. Boil quickly; when the apples are cooked to a pulp, pour in a quart of water, and let them boil for another half-an-hour, then run through a jelly bag until clear. Put away in jars covered with paper soaked in brandy, and again covered with bladder.

WITHOUT a high-class flour like PURITY you cannot do your duty to your cooking-ability.

A cheaper, weaker, ordinary flour cramps and puts a limit on your efficiency.

On the other hand, PURITY FLOUR broadens your scope; provides you with unlimited opportunities to do ample justice to the cooking-ability of which you are so rightly proud.

PURITY FLOUR responds nobly to the skill of the cook. It yields the daintiest and most delicate cakes. And pies so creamy, so delicious, your husband will vote you a wonder.

And such golden-brown biscuits, such griddle cakes, such buns, and such bread you have never before succeeded in making, no matter how earnestly you've tried.

And the reason is not hard to discover. PURITY FLOUR consists exclusively of the high-grade portions of the best Western hard wheat berries.

Unlike ordinary flour, PURITY FLOUR contains no low-grade portions, nor is it weakened by mixing soft wheat flour with it.

PURITY FLOUR will cost you slightly more, because it costs us more to make. But it's worth the difference.

PURITY FLOUR
"More bread and better bread"

Reminder: Because of the extra strength and extra quality of PURITY FLOUR it requires more shortening when making pastry and more water when making bread.

Add PURITY FLOUR to your grocery list right now.

WHAT CANADIANS ARE DOING

LOUIS D. TAYLOR

Although he first saw the light in Michigan U.S.A. Mr. L. D. Taylor may be included in this page without any attempt at excuse. He has been on the northern side of the line for quite a long time, and indications are that he is a permanenty, a fact which his fellow citizens of Vancouver doubtless felt assured when they elevated him to the position of mayor.

On crossing into Canada in the nineties, Mr. Taylor lost no time in getting down to business, and in 1897 joined the office staff of the Vancouver Daily Province. But this seems to have been only of the nature of a stepping stone of experience intended to lead to a higher sphere, and in 1905 he passed up to be proprietor and editor of the Daily World of the same city. That the journal in question has been in good hands is shewn by its position in the newspaper world of today, a great influence for public usefulness. Mr. Taylor has occupied the civic seat of honor during the past two years, and one of the outstanding works to his credit is the inauguration of the Single Tax system. In politics he is an independent liberal.

LOUIS D. TAYLOR

Journalist and Mayor of Vancouver

HENRI BOURASSA, M.L.A.

The "Nationalist" Leader

Recent events have brought the leader of the "Nationalist" party more prominently to the front than before and the average Canadian citizen will be ready to acknowledge that throughout the past number of years he has contrived to keep fairly well in the limelight.

The entry of Mr. Bourassa into this material world dates from 1868, his entry into the political world come while yet he was a young man.

The son of Napoleon Bourassa, author and poet of some note, in Montreal, and born in 1869, young Henri was educated privately in that city until the age of 18, when residential transfer was made to Montebello, where a few years later he had the mayoralty honor conferred upon him, holding the position for four years. He has also been mayor of Papineauville. Always inclined to politics, and with a fluent tongue that drew to him a large following of the French-Canadian Section of Canada's well mixed family, Mr. Bourassa came out for parliamentary honors in 1896. When the Canadian Government undertook the despatch of troops to join their Colonial brethern in support of the motherland on the South-African battlefields, Mr. Bourassa was amongst the most violent in denunciation of the proceedings, and by way of vindication for his attitude he resigned his seat in October 1899 and appealed to his constituents. That the latter were in accord with the views of their representative on this, and doubtless on all other points, was evident, and it was considered a losing battle to fight his return, and beginning of 1900 he was sent back to parliament unopposed. Conditions were similar in the elections of 1900 and 1904. Mr. Bourassa was returned to the Quebec Legislature at the general election of 1908, and the years have not in the slightest abated his ardor as an opponent to soldiers and navies that might be called to battle alongside contingents from other portions of the British Empire.

He has done very considerable work as writer for and editor of newspapers, and his present holding in that connection is the "Nationalist" 'Le Devoir' founded in Montreal last year.

CAN BE NO MORE "DODO"

Now No Raw Material from Which Nature Can Produce Another Supply of What has been Termed "A Joke in Feathers."

One of Nature's worst mistakes was the dodo; but two others, equally bad, were a huge, nameless bird which once existed on the Island of Reunion and the gigantic, flightless pigeon of the Island of Rodriguez, known as the "solitaire." All three are extinct, as was inevitable, because, in their evolution [illegible]ature had had no forethought of the [illegible]ppearance of man upon the scene—a creature who can cross the sea without wings — with his weakness for killing everything which cannot escape from him.

And the dodo, it must be admitted, invited killing. It was the autocrat of the Island of Mauritius, rather larger than a swan, with remarkably plump and heavy body, wings which were of no more use than feathered epaulettes, a huge hooked beak, short thick legs, and an absurd tuft of curly feathers for a tail. To sailors from Northern lands, accustomed to such birds as sparrows and rooks, this preposterous, waddling monster seemed a practical joke dressed up in feathers.

The fare of sailors in those days was hard and stale and salt. So, though the dodo may not have been particularly good eating, who could help — in those days, two hundred years ago — walking after it and hitting it on the head with a stick?

Away up in the North, nature had produced, side by side, races of hungry, clever men, struggling against difficulties for bare existence, and races of swift and active birds, cunning to dodge a missile or avoid a trap. Away down in the soft and sunny South she had, at the same time, in the absence of man, allowed the birds to fall into easy habits. The dodo, with his huge, hooked beak, would have made short work of a wandering bird of prey. So he grew heavy and slow and fat. He never had occasion to fly, so his wings and tail dwindled to mere ornamental appendages.

There were doubtless many smaller, less conspicuous creatures, equally interesting in their way, which have totally disappeared, and left no trace of their existence behind.

That is the worst or Nature's mistakes; they are irreparable. By degrees, so slow that within the period covered by human history no appreciable change has been recorded in any wild creature, she builds up her species to suit their surroundings, until, after thousands of years, she produces, from the same stock which has provided our sparrows and crows, a huge, heavy-footed bird, that strolls about its island in the Pacific, monarch of all it surveys. Then, in a single day, as it were, another of Nature's creatures, developed on different lines elsewhere, appears upon the scene and wipes the dodo of a million years out of existence.

There is no hope whatever that Nature will ever be able to make another dodo, even if man could afford to leave Mauritius uninhabited for a million years in order to give her a free hand with the experiment. The original pigeon-like bird, bigger than a swan, and smaller than a crow, from which the dodo was evolved, no longer exists; so Nature would not have the raw material to work upon.

SENATOR DAVIS

Senator Thomas Osborne Davis though he has for many years been a prominent figure in the life of the West, is a native of Quebec province, having been born at Sherrington in 1856. He was educated privately and when yet little more than a boy went westward, taking up his residence at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan. Here he soon came to the front as a public man and was elected a town councillor and afterwards, successively, mayor, president of the Board of Trade, and Chairman of the School Board. At the general election of 1896 when Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who had represented Saskatchewan in the House of Commons, resigned that seat to contest Quebec East, Mr. Davis was elected in his stead. The next general election, that of 1900, witnessed his re-election, and the following year saw him appointed Whip for the West. In September 1904 he was appointed to the Senate of Canada.

Summer Evening Wraps.

Evening wraps are unusually novel this season, the great vogue for sheer materials finding a happy expression in these more elaborate garments. Marquisette wraps are the latest novelties, and while exorbitant prices are asked for them in the smart shops, there is no reason why any woman could not fashion one herself, or at least plan one and have it made at very little expence.

Black, white, Alice blue, gray, gold color and king's blue are good colors for these little wraps. Many of them are cut on extremely simple lines, with the kimono sleeve and plain back and front. There seems to be no attempt to fasten these garments. They are cut so that the front just meet, and are apparently designed to hang free.

The New Boarder Again.

"For ten eyars," said the new boarder at a Montreal boarding-house, "my habits were as regular as clockwork. I rose on the stroke of six; half an hour later I sat down to breakfast; at seven I was at work, dined at twelve, ate supper at six, and was in bed at nine-thirty; ate only hearty food, and hadn't a sick day in all that time." "Dear me!" said the deacon in sympathetic tones, "and what were you in for?" An awful silence ensued.

The Good Old Times.

A Canadian youth, who is attracted by a political career, was explaining to his invalid grandfather the latest plans for party organization.

"Yes, my boy, it's all very well, and perhaps you know just how to win elections. But it isn't at all what it used to be. Why, I remember an election in my young days in Simcoe county when there were sixteen fights on the market in one morning. One of the Robinsons was running against a Blake, and there wasn't a meeting without broken heads. Oh, an election was something like an election in those days!"—and the snowy head was shaken wistfully over the degeneracy of modern methods.

Cigs. For Young Wales

It has just leaked out that since his seventeenth birthday the Prince of Wales has been promoted to enjoy an occasional cigarette. Like the King of Spain, he shows a preference for the genuine Spanish cigaritos, which are very small and made of choice Havana tobacco. They are not gummed, but are held together by a dexterous inward fold of the paper.

It would seem that the King and Queen did not wish their eldest son to smoke until his seventeenth birthday, and on that date he received many gifts representing the smoker's small luxuries. If rumor speaks truly the young Prince does not show very great enthusiasm as a smoker and is quite satisfied with the three cigarettes a day which are allotted to him until he reaches his eighteenth birthday.

WHO'S WHO IN CANADA

THOMAS H. PRESTON

A native of Indiana, Mr. Preston, now proprietor of the Brantford Expositor, was transferred across the line at a tender age, and gleaning all his education and life's experience in the Dominion, he may fairly be claimed as a good son of Canada. Clear of the school books, young Preston's mind ran on newspaper work, and with a desire to know everything pertaining to the business, he wisely decided to start at the bottom of the ladder, and went to the office of the Woodstock Sentinel as apprentice printer, subsequently transferring to the Stratford Beacon where he completed his term. In course of a few years Mr. Preston drifted upto editorial work and in 1874 was appointed to the staff of the Ottawa Free Pres, and was for a time member of the Press' Gallery in the House of Commons, transferring to the Globe in 1881 and subsequently was managing Director and chief shareholder of the Winnipeg Sun, but purchased the Expositor in 1890 and moved to Brantford. Elected to the Legislature in 1899, and in 1902 and 1904, his other honors include the presidentship of the Canadian Press Association, and of the Brantford Board of Trade.

WILLIAM DENNIS

Mr. Denis, owner of the Halifax Herald, is a native of Cornwall, Eng., but came to Canada in 1873, and joined the reportorial staff of the Herald when it started a couple of years later. For some years he engaged in journalistic work in Winnipeg, and when he returned to Halifax it was to take possession of the concern on which he had acted as junior. Since then the Herald has gone on prospering and to prosper, and is to-day a journal of weight and influence. Mr. Dennis earned a high degree of praise for the whole souled effort through the columns of his paper in 1906 when no less a sum than $15,000 were raised in the district to help relieve the want resulting from the famine in Japan.

SIR CHARLES FITZPATRICK, K.C.M.G.

Chief Justice of Canada

When Sir Charles Fitzpatrick left the stormy sea of politics in 1906 for the comparitive calm of the bench he left behind him a record that any man would be proud of — a reputation that has been enhanced each year he has dispensed justice as the head of our judiciary and a splendid tribute to his impartiality is the esteem he is held by men who were at one time bitter political opponents. This brillant man was born in 1853 in Quebec when after graduating in Laval, he took up practice in law; three years later becoming crown prosecutor for his native city. In 1890 he entered the Provincial House for the county of Quebec, resigning six years later to became federal member for the same division, when he was also appointed Solicitor General. In 1902 Sir Charles became Minister of Justice, which portfolio he resigned in 1906 to occupy his present high position. Possibly the highest compliment that could be paid to a legal man was paid to the Chief Justice when he was offered and accepted a place in the Hague Tribunal of Arbitration in 1908-10, where he discharged his duties in such a way as to call forth the commendation of the greatest legal luminaries of the world. In 1906 Sir Charles received his K.C.M.G. and in 1908 his P.C.

HON. CHARLES DEVLIN

Minister of Public Works, Quebec. Charley Devlin must have kissed the "blarney stone" thrice if successful public life and a gift of the mother tongue go together; for there is no doubt but what the Hon. Charles Ramsay Devlin — to give him his full title — has turned up trumps in every sphere of political work he has undertaken. First a member of the Federal House at Ottawa, — then a Commissioner in Ireland, — next a member of the Imperial Parliament — back again to Ottawa as member and finally Minister of Public Works in the Quebec Government and a seat in the Provincial House. Not a bad record for a man just out of the forties.

Chas. Ramsey Devlin was born in 1858 in Aylmer, Que., where after graduating at Laval University he engaged in newspaper work. He first became M. P. for Ottawa County in 1881 resigning from parliamentary life temporarily to take up the position of Canadian Commissioner in Ireland. While in the land of his forbears Mr. Devlin was elected by acclamation as M. P. for Galway in the British House of Commons. On his returning to Canada in 1906 he was elected to the Federal House for Nicolet, but resigned nine months later to accept his present position as Minister of Public Works, Que. As a man Mr Devlin is the essence of courtesy and kindness and no immigrant from the Emerald Isle has appealed to this big hearted man in vain.

"FATHER ENDEAVOR" CLARK

Not many Canadians have a more fruitful sixty years of life behind them than the Rev. "Father Endeavor" Clark, who visited Montreal a few days ago and has since celebrated his birthday in his native town of Aylmer. He was one of the first and ablest men to apply the new organizing principles of this continent to spiritual work, and the society which he formed has done a notable work in rallying the young people of the Protestant world into a single force, imbuing them with a powerful inspiration, and combatting the tendency to drift away from religious affiliation. In the 'eighties Dr Clark could hardly have done what he did if he had remained in Canada so that his re[illegible]al to the United States was more mission than an expatriation.

Not Worth Stopping For.

A party of four gentlemen, were driving a motor-car along the road leading from Kilkenny to Clonnel. Seeing a fine stretch of level road in front the car was put at full speed, and they raced along for nearly four miles.

Presently speed was slackened, and the driver turned round to see how his two friends at the back had enjoyed the run. A look of scared astonishment overspread his countenance when he found that only one gentleman was seated there.

"Where's Jack?" he gasped, stopping the car.

Fathers Work Too Long.

It is a mistake for fathers to toil all their lives in order that their children may escape toil all theirs. Suppose the calculation correct, and permanent idleness secured for the next generation, what evidence is there that the boys and girls will be happier and better for it? The boys will be exposed to the devices of "sharks," and the girls to those of fortune hunters. Leave something for them also to do.

Men Like Stagnant Ponds.

The great ocean is in a constant state of evaporation. It gives back what it receives, and sends up its waters in mists to gather into clouds; and so there is rain on the field and storm on the mountains, and greenness and beauty everywhere. But there are many men who do not believe in evaporation. They get all they can and keep all they get, and so are not fertilisers, but only stagnant miasmatic ponds.

96TH ANNIVERSARY AT BRIDGE ST. CHURCH

In recognition of the 96th anniversary of Bridge Street Methodist church the congregation was yesterday morning augmented by the joining of the Tabernacle's membership, filling the spacious auditorium nearly to its capacity, the young ladies and gentlemen of Albert College occupying seats in opposite sides of the gallery nearest the pulpit. Besides the pastor, Rev. G. J. Bishop, D.D., seats upon the pulpit platform were occupied by Rev. Albert Carman, D.D., Senior Superintendent of the Methodist church of Canada and Newfoundland, who was the preacher of the mornig; Rev. W. G. Clarke, B.A., of the Tabernacle and W. P. Dyer, D.D., LL.D., President of Albert College.

Following special music by the large choir, Dr. Carman delivered an eloquent and searching sermon, taking for his text Romans 15:4, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope." He characterized Moses as a scholar of his day, Augustine as a learned student of the Bible, Paul a product of the greatest teacher of his time, placing Martin Luther and John Wesley in their line, as examples of scriptural exponents far above the so-called critical scholars of the present day, who are attempting to skeptically dissect the Word of God to the detriment of mankind. He met in pointed words the criticisms of the present age, claiming the religion of God as the very foundation of the home and the nation, casting aside the claims of evolution as a substitute for the things and personality of God. Even the constancy of nature sometimes fails, but the constancy of God never varies. Jehovah has never given up his personality, never laid aside his government. Christianity could never make headway under a masterdom. The days of miracles in the saving of the soul had not yet passed; the Holy Ghost is still doing his office work in all who truly repent.

He sharply characterized the present condition of our churches as the result of coldness, admonishing the people of God to still wield the sword of the spirit, stepping fearlessly out upon the foundation of the religion of Christ, as a privilege of the most exalted order. The New Testament was concealed in the Old—the Old revealed in the New; and while the critics are disposed to crowd the living God out of His own Book, slashing with the pen-knife as they might, they would never succeed so long as the church stood true. He advised the present day critics to study well God's revelation and fulfilled prophecies before attempting to publish their own views, lest they find their own ideas groundless and of no avail. The old warhorses of God stood upon the interpretation of the word, to the building up of the wide-spread religion of to day.

At the conclusion of the discourse a solo was finely rendered by Mr. Jas. S. Dyer, of the Tabernacle.

At the evening service special music was rendered, Dr. Carman again preaching to a large congregation.

FELL FROM RIG AND BROKE HIS NECK

Josiah Latta the Victim of a Fatal Accident While Driving Home on Saturday

Josiah Latta, who was a well-known resident of Thurlow Township, residing in the 7th concession near Pouchers' Mills, was on Saturday the victim of a fatal accident. It appears that Mr. Latta was in the city on Saturday on business, and early in the evening started for home. Not having a vehicle of his own that day, he secured a ride with a neighbor. Mr. Latta was riding on a rack on a waggon, and near what is known as Honeywell's Corners the board he was sitting upon broke. Mr. Latta was precipitated to the ground with much force and struck upon his head in such a manner as to break his neck. Death was instantaneous. The body was, soon after the deplorable accident, conveyed to his late home and subsequently prepared for burial.

The victim was in his 67th year and had lived all his life in Thurlow Township, where he was well known. While he is the owner of a farm he had of late years been residing at Poucher's Mills, being employed about Mr. Pouchers' saw mill. A widow and a family of two sons and four daughters survive. His tragic death was not only a severe shock to his family, but to his many friends.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

NOTES FROM THE DOCK.

The schooner New Dominion left on Saturday to load lumber for Oswego and will return here laden with coal.

The steamer Brockville yesterday took a large consignment of apples to Brockville.

THEY SETTLED AMICABLY.

Benjamin Springer was this morning before the Magistrate on a charge of taking some portions of harness and other articles from a barn, the said property being claimed by Julia Samuels. The affair was, by consent of the court, allowed to be settled in an amicable manner.

HORSE HAD GLANDERS.

Yesterday a man from the country was in with a horse, which some parties claimed had the glanders. A veterinary surgeon was consulted about the animal and it was found that it was suffering from the disease. The owner was requested to immediately have the animal destroyed.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT.

Mr. Walter Wessels, an employee of the St. Charles Omnibus Co., met with a painful accident on Saturday afternoon. He was operating a shaver, when his right hand came in contact with the knives, with the result that the nail of the second finger was taken off and the finger badly lacerated.

"WHO FROW DAT BRICK?"

Citizens who visited Kingston yesterday brought with them a sample of the asphalt brick, with which some of the streets in that city are being paved. The Kingston people selected after exhaustive enquiry, this style of pavement as being better than any other. The specimen brick can be seen at the office of The Intelligencer.

CHARGE OF VAGRANCY.

On Wednesday evening last a man named Valley E. Snowden was arrested on a charge of vagrancy, and at the suggestion of the Crown was remanded to jail for a week. We are informed that Snowden is wanted at Sault Ste. Marie on a rather serious charge, and that a police officer will be here within a day or two to take him back to that place. Snowden was at one time employed in this city, but had been away from here for some time.

JUMPED FROM A TRAIN.

On Saturday night a man fairly well dressed got on board the fast train which is due here at 1.45 on Sunday morning. He had a ticket to Port Hope, but owing to the fact that he fell asleep he did not get off at his place of destination or at Cobourg, the next stopping place of the train before it reaches this city. The man was, however, awake before the train arrived here and heard the brakeman call out "Belleville." When near the Moira Street crossing, just west of the G.T.R. bridge the man jumped from the train while it was going at a fair rate of speed. The affair was reported when the train stopped at the station, and some parties went back [illegible] the spot, expecting to find a corps[illegible]. However, all they found was a ha[illegible] which was besprinkled with blood. Although a diligent search was made, no trace of the man was found. His identity is unknown.

A LITTLE BLAZE.

The fire brigade was called out shortly before 1 o'clock this afternoon it being reported that there was a fire in a house on George Street. An incipient blaze was extinguished without the firemen's assistance.

ANOTHER DISPUTE.

At an early hour this morning the police were called to the Chinese restaurant, where three men had a meal and refused to pay for the same. They, however, settled when the celestial telephoned for the officer of the law

'TWAS A MISTAKE.

It was reported to the police yesterday that a bicycle had been taken from a hallway of Ald. Flagler's residence. The police recovered the wheel, which was taken by a party for use not intending to steal the same.

SPORTS AT TRENTON.

At Trenton on Saturday afternoon a team representing the High School of this city defeated a team of the Trenton High School by a score of 2 to 0. The rteurn busket ball batch between the Belleville and Trenton High School girls took place at Trenton on Saturday afternoon. The Trenton girls won by a score of 12 to 10.

HAD TO GO BACK.

Two boys named Delbert and Leslie, Popp, aged nine and seven years respectively, who are wards of the Children's Shelter here, yesterday ran away from that institution. The matter was reported to the police and the lads were found upon the street and returned to the Shelter. They were taken from a home at Gananoque.

CALLED BY GRIM REAPER.

The Freeman Tribune of Webster City, Iowa, publishes in its issue of October 19th, a lengthy obituary notice of Mr. Ben M. Johnston, of that place, who died on that day from tuberculosis, of whom it says:

Mr. Johnston, who was 34 years of age, was a young man of the highest intelligence. He was well educated, thoroughly versed in his profession as a pharmacist, and was very popular among his friends. That he should be taken away in the prime of his young manhood makes his death inexpressibly sad, indeed. He was united in marriage with Miss Frances Newbery, of Belleville, Canada, eleven years ago. To this union two children have been born, one son, now five years of age, and a daughter ten years old. These and the wife are left to mourn the irreparable loss of a loving husband and father.

SETTLED FUTURE OF THE EMPIRE

LONDON, Oct. 22.—Speaking before the Glasgow Conservative Club Lord Balfour referred to Canada's decision on the question of reciprocity, which he regarded as of imperial importance. "Are you certain," he asked, "that the event isn't one whereon depends the future of the Empire as well as its influence in the position among the nations of the world?" He ventured to prophesy that 1911 would be enumerated among the great anniversaries of the Empire, and that generations to come would regard the Canadian elections as the event which settled for all time the future course of the Empire. We now must live up to a high ideal, showing ourselves worthy of the trust the children have placed in us.

CURRENT COMMENT

The Globe says that the accumulated load of protection is too great a handicap for Canadian shipyards, and asks "What is Hon. Mr. Borden going to do about it?" Before expecting the answer it should explain why it did not put its question to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.—Toronto World.

In many places the alleged weaknesses in the census returns are ascribed to the commissioners and enumerators having been appointed because of their capacity as political workers, and of men who were not fit for the work. There can be no doubt of the truth of that charge. Many of them were as fit for the work as they would be for Bishops.

Germany, according to the compiler of Nauticus, a naval hand book, will soon have a squadron of eight super-Dreadnoughts ready for sea service. The way in which the British Admiralty is adding ships to its heavy armed and armored fleets is somewhat disheartening to some countries. The German seems only to note what is being done and go on and equal it. He should be a good kind of a man to have as a friend.

Smoking by women in public has evidently become common enough in New York City to make the subject one for public concern. The Board of Aldermen of New York has publicly discussed measures looking to the prohibition of smoking by women and the legal department of the city has been officially asked for an opinion as to whether or not there is a law on the statute books that may not be aplied.

When Hon. A. G. MacKay complains that the Ontario elections this year must interfere with the fall trade and the Christmas shopping, he forgets the story of Sir Francis Drake and the Spanish Armada. Did not Sir Francis Drake find time to finish his game of bowls first, and thrash the Spaniards afterwards? So, also, Ontario can attend to Hon. A. G. MacKay without neglecting either the fall trade or the Christmas shopping.—Toronto Telegram.

Haughton Lennox, M. P. for South Simcoe, writes to the Toronto News and tells the readers of that journal that "there is no justification for the statement that he will retire in favor of Hon. W. T. White. There may be not less than three ridings in sight awaiting the Minister of Finance, but South Simcoe is not one of them. Neither is my retirement from public life in sight, as suggested; and whenever, from any cause, that event occurs, the free people of South Simcoe will, themselves, as in the past, select their representatives."

We hear a good deal from the socialistic element, the political heeler, and the manipulator of jobs about some of the men called to Mr. Borden's Cabinet being wealthy. It is known that some of the men who sat in the Laurier cabinet are wealthy. Is it a cause of offence that a man of means should enter the service of the public? Is it not much more in the interest of the country that men who have a stake in the country should be called to its councils than men who enter poor and in two or three years emerge from the back door, millionaires.?

The contractor for the Victoria Museum building, which is being built in Ottawa, is showing signs of bad construction, protested when he commenced to build that the plans for the tower foundation did not provide for a safe superstructure, but was told to mind his own business. The charge is a serious one, and will doubtless be the subject of an enquiry. The indications are that, as has been the case of late with so many public structures, somebody blundered. It is but a repetition of the Laurier tower which fell down, and had to be re-constructed at a cost to the country of some $15,000.

> If Canada is so loyal that she will not even trade with another country and still not loyal enough to provide even a few little cruisers toward her own defense, let alone contributing to the empire's defense, what is this self-willed colony trying to do, anyway?—Buffalo Express.

The foregoing tirade is the outcome of malice and untruth. It is not true that Canada has refused to trade wtih the United States, because the official statistics show that we trade more heavily with that country than with any other, even our mother country. But it is also true that Canada refused to enter into a trade pact with our neighbors on terms dictated by them, AS EXPLAINED BY PRESIDENT TAFT. That is where the shoe pinches the Express and its confreres. It is also maliciously untrue that Canada will not contribute under Conservative rule toward the naval defence of the Empire. The policy of the Borden Government in that regard has not as yet been declared, but that it will be more satisfactory to the Imperial authorities than that of the Laurier Administration will be learned in due time by the Express.

BUTTER FROM WHEY SOLD AS CREAMERY

Strange that it may seem, few people when they are eating "good butter," realise that they consuming butter manufactured from whey. Nevertheless it is true. The high cost of living started dairymen thinking and in consequence a scheme was evolved whereby cheese and butter could be manufactured from milk at the same time. This is being done and the products are marketed here. Although the idea may appear complicated, when thoroughly investigated it proves to be very simple. After the milk has been brought to the factory, it is weighed and run into large vats. The milk in these vats is then heated up to 85 degrees and the rennet is put in. In the course of an hour the curd forms and the cheese maker, with his long wooden rake, works very laborously until he has the curd separated from the whey. The whey is then run off into a large receptable and the curd is salted and placed into the presses. Here it remains for a couple of days, when it is put into the curing room, where the cheese maker turns it daily until it is loaded onto the waggon for market.

After the whey is taken from the curd it is heated and put through a separator and the skimmed whey "run off" into another large vat where it is kept until the farmer draws it home for his livestock. The cream which is taken from the whey is put into a large steam churn and after churning for about twenty minutes the "butter comes." The butter milk is drawn off and run into the whey vat. The butter is taken out of the churn and put into a butter worker. It is worked here for a few minutes and then put into prints, papered and sent to the market.

It is also surprising to learn that this whey butter is selling at the factory for 25 cents per pound and in some of the Kingston stores at small profit on this. Most people have an idea they can tell the difference, but it has been proved that even the experienced grocer is unable to do so.—Kingston Standard.

SIX COMETS REPORTED BY LICK OVSERVATORY

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 22.—Six comets, two of them bright enough to be seen with the naked eye, are now within the neighborhood of the sun according to reports from Lick Observatory, University of California. Two of the smaller bodies are paying regular visits in the course of their ordinary orbits. The other four are strangers, dropping in now unannounced, and for the first time, so far as the astronomers know.

Of the two brightest, one is visible just after sunset, north of the sunset point. It has a bright head, and a tail about seven degrees long. It will remain visible for several days. The second comet is said to be brighter than Halley's. It was discovered by Dr. Brooks last July. It had last night a tail twenty degrees in length. It should be looked for in the morning just before 5 o'clock northeast of Venus, the morning star.

NEW TYPE OF ENGINE

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 21.—The London & North-Western Railway, in conjunction with the Great Central Railway, is experimenting with elecetric locomotives generating their own power. Designs for three of these engines are being prepared.

Electricity will be generated by a dynamo driven by a uetrol engine.

Experiments have previously been made with an electric locomotive in which the dynamo was driven by a steam turbine, but the type proved unsatisfactory in the matter of economy of working.

By replacing the turbine with a petrol engine a great deal of weight and space will be saved. If the new type of locomotive is successful railway electrification will, it is believed, become a simple matter.

YOUNG MAN ARRESTED ON CHARGE OF FORGERY

A few weeks ago two young Jews, Harry and Louis Stocker, opened in the Farmers' Bank building here, a shoe repairing business. They apparently did a good business and were thought to be doing well. On Thursday last they suddenly left the city and it was then ascertained that they were in difficulty, and it is alleged had defrauded some creditors. On Saturday Chief Newton sent the following telegram to Peterboro:

Belleville, Ont.

Chief Constable, Peterborough, Ont.

I hold a warrant for the arrest of Harry Stocker and Louis Stocker, Jew shoemakers. Left here this morning, charged with defrauding creditors. See Canadian Express Co. May be at S. Fienburg's, 187 Simcoe Street. Hold and wire. Will send for them.

(Signed) JOHN NEWTON.
Chief Constable

The two men were arrested at the place mentioned, 187 Simcoe Street.

It is alleged that in some manner they defrauded the Canadian Express Company. A large box was delivered to them at Peterborough on Saturday before their arrest and it is supposed that it had something to do with the case.

This morning Chief Newton went to Peterboro and returned at 4.30 this afternoon with the accused.

GOOD PROVISION MADE FOR RETIRED MINISTERS

TORONTO, Oct. 21.—With Rev. Dr Carman presiding, the annual meeting of the superannuation fund of the Methodist church was held Thursday. The financial report of Treasurer Griffith showed that the permanent fund amounted to $412,018, and the special reserve fund to $197,776, of which $59,058 had been transferred to the permanent fund, leaving a balance of $48,717, which, with the surplus annual fund of 1910-11, makes $76,582. Investments amounted to $493,600, less $5,000 deposit loan from the church and parsonage aid fund.

Receipts during the period from July 15, 1910, to July 31st, 1911, were $18,578, an increase of $10,000. The chief amount was $90,623, for circuits nad missions.

Expenditures came to $160,713. There were 289 ministers claims, amounting to $94,248, and 201 widows claims, reaching $56,170. The surplus transferred to special reserve fund was $27,864.

CHECKER CHAMPION DEAD IN SCOTLAND

EDINBURGH, Scotland, Oct. 21.—The death is announced of Mr. Richard Jordan, the world's champion draught player, which took place in the Royal Infirmary here, of injuries received by being knocked down in Edinburgh by a tramcar on September 7. Mr. Jordan was 37 years of age. He was born in Edinburgh, and he made a name as a draughts player here at an early age. He won the gold medal of the Edinburgh Club in 1891. He played with James Wylie, the "Herd Laddie," and beat him by two wins against one. At this time Jordan was only 19, and his victory brought him challenges from all parts of the country. In 1896 he secured the championship of Scotland by defeating James Fernie. The two met again in a contest for the championship of the world and a stake of $500. Jordan was once more successful, defeating Fernie by four to three, 33 games being drawn. His last important match was with Harry Freedman whom he defeated.

Cut Flower Hints

It is a mistake to mix flowers when arranging them. Generally speaking, they are infinitely lovelier if each kind is kept by itself. There are, however, some which are more effective in combination, as, for example, mignonnette. The latter is nice with any flowers not having foliage, as it supplies the required green.

When flowers have short stems and one wishes to arrange them in a shallow, wide bowl, the matter is simple if a glass be placed in the middle. In this, filled with water, the first flowers are placed. The others, put in the bowl, will entirely conceal the central receptacle, and the result is more symmetrical than could be had otherwise.

Green pottery, either in shallow dishes or jars, rarely can be improved upon for holding flowers, while some of the terra cotta jars from Italy are perfection, with their soft creaminess of tone, which harmonizes with all colors.

The unvarying decorations on the big chimney shelf in one girl's room are four tiny little Italian pots, uniform in size and design. From the time the flowering season begins they are always filled with two different kinds of blossoms, two of the jars having the same kind, and so placed as to balance or match on the shelf.

Arranging flowers for the house every morning during the summer is one of the prettiest and most artistic duties a girl can have.

Italy's only danger is that some of it's guns will blow up. Chances may be taken even in a war in which the enemy does not fight bck.

Then put into the empty saucepan the flour and butter and rub them together with a wooden spoon till smooth. Then add the milk gradually, stirring one way till it boils and thickens. Next add the soup from the basin, a little at a time, season with pepper and salt, and allow to boil at once.

If cream is used it should be put in just before serving. The soup must on no account boil after the cream is added.

The Haunted Chamber

Soon, soon she will be with him. How will they greet each other. Will he look into Dora's eyes as he used to look into hers not so very long ago. Arthur Dynecourt read her aright when he foresaw that she would be unable to repress the desire to follow Dora, and see for herself the meeting between her and Sir Adrian.

Hastily putting on a large Rubens hat, and twisting a soft piece of black lace round her neck, she runs downstairs, and, taking a different direction from that she knows Dora most likely pursued, she arrives by a side path at the lime-walk almost as soon as her cousin.

Afraid to venture too near, she obtains a view of the walk from a high position framed in by rhododendrons. Yes, now she can see Dora, and she can see, too, the man who comes to meet her. His face is slightly turned away from her, but the tall figure, clad in the loose light overcoat is not to be mistaken. He advances quickly, and meets Dora with both hands outstretched. She appears to draw back a little, and then he seizes her hands, and, stooping, covers them with kisses.

A film seems to creep over Florence's eyes. With a stifled groan she turns and flies homeward. Again in the privacy of her own room, and having turned the key securely in the lock to keep out intruders, she flings herself upon her bed and cries as if her heart would break.

* * * * * * *

Not until her return to her room does Dora remember that she did not get back the false letter from her cousin. In the heat of the conversation she had forgotten it, but now, a fear possessing her lest Florence should show it to any one, she runs upstairs and knocks at Miss Delmaine's door.

"Come in," calls Florence slowly.

It is three hours since she went for her unhappy walk to the lime-grove, and now she is composed again, and is waiting for the gong to sound before descending to the dining-room, where she almost dreads the thought that she will be face to face with Sir Adrian. She is dressed for dinner, has indeed taken most particular pains with her toilet, if only to hide the ravages that these past three hours of bitter weeping have traced upon her beautiful face. She looks sad still, but calm and dignified.

Dora is dressed, too, but is looking flurried and flushed.

"I beg your pardon," she says: "but my letter—the letter I showed you to-day—have you it?"

"No," replies Florence, simply; "I thought I gave it back to you; but if not it must be here on this table"—lifting a book or two from the small gypsy table near which she had been sitting when Dora came to her room early in the day.

Dora looks for it everywhere, in a somewhat nervous, frightened manner, Florence helping her the while; but nothing comes of the search, and they are fain to go down-stairs without it, as the gong sounding loudly tells them they are already late.

"Never mind," says Dora, afraid of having betrayed too much concern. "It is really of no consequence. I only wanted it because—well, because"—with the simper that nearly drives Florence mad—"he wrote it."

"I shall tell my maid to look for it, and if she finds it, you shall have it this evening," responds Florence, with a slight contraction of the brows that passes unnoticed.

To Florence's mortification, Arthur Dynecourt takes her in to dinner. On the way across the hall from the drawing room to the dining room, he presses the hand that rests so reluctantly upon his arm, and says, with an affectation of the sincerest concern:

"You are not well; you are looking pale and troubled, and—pardon me if I am wrong, but I think you have been crying."

"I must beg, sir," she retorts, with excessive hauteur, removing her hand from his arm, as though his pressure hand burned her—"I must beg, you will not trouble yourself to study my countenance. Your doing so is most offensive."

"To see you in trouble, and not long to help or comfort you is impossible to me," goes on Dynecourt, unmoved by her scorn. "Are you still dwelling on the past—on what is irrevocable? Have you had fresh cause to remember it to-day?"

There is a gleam of malice in his eyes, but Florence, whose gaze is turned away from him, fails to see it. She changes color indeed beneath his words, but makes him no reply, and when they reach the dining room, in a very marked manner she takes a seat very far removed from his.

There is a sinister expression in his eyes and round his mouth as he notes this studied avoidance.

CHAPTER VIII.

It is now "golden September," and a few days later. For the last fortnight Florence has been making strenuous efforts to leave the castle, but Dora would not hear of their departure, and Florence, feeling it will be selfish of her to cut short Dora's happy hours with her supposed lover, sighs, and gives in, and sacrifices her own wishes on the altar of friendship.

It is five o'clock, and all the men, gun in hand, have been out since early dawn. Now they are coming straggling home in ones or twos. Amongst the first to return are Sir Adrian, and his cousin, Arthur Dynecourt, who, having met accidently, about a mile from home, have trudged the remainder of the way home together.

On the previous night, at dinner, Miss Delmaine had spoken of a small gold bangle, a favorite of hers, she was greatly in the habit of wearing. She said she had lost it—when or where she could not tell; and she expressed herself as being very grieved for its loss, and had laughingly declared she would give any reward claimed by any one who should restore it to her. Two or three men had, on the instant, pledged themselves to devote their lives to the search; but Sir Adrian had said nothing. Nevertheless, the bangle and the reward remained in his mind all that night and all to-day. Nor can he refrain from speaking about it to the man whom he considers his rival.

"Odd thing about Miss Delmaine's bangle," he remarks, carelessly.

"Very odd. I dare say her maid has put it somewhere and forgotten it."

"Hardly. One would not put a bracelet anywhere but in a jewel case or in a special drawer. She must have dropped it somewhere."

"I dare say; those Indian bangles are very liable to be rubbed off the wrist."

"But where? I have had the place searched high and low, and still no tidings of it can be found."

"There may have been since we left home this morning."

Just at this moment they come within full view of the old tower, and its strange rounded ivy-grown walls, and the little narrow holes in the sides they show at its highest point, that indicate the position of the haunted chamber.

What is there at this moment in a mere glimpse of the old tower to make Arthur Dynecourt grow pale and to start so strangely. His eyes grow brighter, his lips tighten and grow hard.

"Do you remember, he says, turning to his cousin with all the air of one to whom a sudden inspiration has come, "that day on which we visited the haunted chamber? Miss Delmaine accompanied us, did she not?"

"Yes"—looking at him expectantly.

"Could she have dropped it there?" asks Arthur, lightly. "By Jove, it would be odd if she had—eh? Uncanny sort of place to drop one's trinkets."

(To be Continued.)

THE TORONTO GLOBE'S REMARKABLE CONFESSION

Whether wittingly or blunderingly, the Toronto Globe has been making some startling confessions since the debacle of Sept. 21. Here is the latest one:

"For the first time in forty years the Liberals of Ontario must fight their battles without the aid of the Federal or Provincial Government, and with their opponents strongly entrenched at Ottawa and in Queen's Park, we should not be surprised under these conditions to find that the Liberal party in this province has no funds to carry on a campaign."

What frankness! What naivete! No campaign funds because its friends are not in political command, and therefore not in control of the treasury, either at Ottawa or Toronto! For the unitiated in campaign methods this statement may throw an illuminating side-light on the question, "Where does the money come from?" Have there been pipe lines from the federal treasury to the provincial campaign chests of the party which has supported the late Government at Ottawa? The Globe ought to know, and it apperas to be in a mood to tell what it knows.—Hamilton Herald (Ind.)

Corruption was Condoned

The Toronto Globe does not relish the severe strictures of the Toronto News in its comments upon the record of the Laurier Cabinet and its administration of the affairs of the Dominion; hence it belches forth a rejoinder which no doubt it considers a squelcher.

The News charged Sir Wilfrid with

> "captaining perhaps the most corrupt Administration that ever existed in Canada. For a parallel one must go back to Bigot and the French regime. Keeping his own skirts out of the mire, he gave his authority to infinite waste and innumerable prodigalities and rascalities."

To which The Globe replies:—

> "Can The News point to a single case like the Langevin block scandal of the last Conservative Administration? What Liberal member of Parliament was ever expelled from the House and sent to jail for stealing from the country as the Hon. Tom McGreevy was?"

The answer is simple and true. No case of a character similar to that to which The Globe refers is on record, for the reason that when charges were made against members of Parliament and Ministers of the Crown on the floor of the House of Commons and elsewhere, the majority of the party under the leadership of Sir Wilfrid either voted down the demand for investigation, or so mutilated the motion, by amendments, as to prevent the possibility of ascertaining the facts; and even if a case was sent to a committee for investigation, there the blockers rushed to the rescue of the Government and of the offenders, and prevented the truth coming to light. So far was this carried that when a member of the House of Commons was proven to have utilized men in the employment of and under the pay of the Government to work upon his private dwelling, using the paint, oil and other Government property to paint and decorate said dwelling, Sir Wilfrid, with his servile majority at his back, whitewashed the culprit on the plea that he had, after the facts became public, paid for the materials he had used. Though whitewashed by Sir Wilfrid and his majority, the constituency which the member represented resented the peculations of their member and refused to recognize or tolerate his presence in the party.

This is but one of many cases to which attention could be called. So numerous and so flagrant are they that the present Premier, Mr. Borden, when discussing the past acts of both Cabinet Ministers and members of Parliament and other vampires, declared that had men in private life committed similar crimes they would be learning trades in the penitentiary instead of sitting in Parliament. Columns could be filled with the committal of acts which justify the serious charges laid at their door by the present Premier.

Contrast the conduct of the late Government with Sir Wilfrid at its head, with that of the Conservative Government with Sir John Abbott and afterwards Sir John Thompson at its head, and what is the result? As soon as it was discovered that irregularities existed in the department of Public Works, Sir Hector Langevin was compelled to leave the Cabinet, and McGreevy and Connolly, the contractors, were sent to jail, and subsequently a clerk of one of the departments, who had done wrong, shared the same fate. Was any such justice meted out by the Liberal Administration of which Sir Wilfrid Laurier was the head to the many plunderers who were proven to have utilized their positions to enrich themselves at the expense of the country? Refer to the peculations in the Marine and Fisheries Department in Quebec, and in the dockyards in Halifax, and to the exposure of rake-offs by almost everyone who had any dealing with the Government, notably the Printing Bureau, which came to light during Judge Nesbitt's and other investigations, and then ask if in any case the culprits were brought to trial or punished in any manner or form. True, one drowned himself—not, we venture the opinion, from fear of punishment by the Government, but from remorse of conscience.

Yet in the face of the records of the past fifteen years of the Laurier Administration, The Globe, with its characteristic assurance, asks for parallel cases to that of McGreevy's, et al.

Had Sir Wilfrid been as vigilant in keeping his Government's skirts clear of the contaminating and demoralizing influences of those by whom he was surrounded, as were his Conservative predecessors, his present defenders would have less trouble and less suppression of truth in defending him.

Time For a Change

The ward system of electing members of municipal Councils is about the worst possible under any circumstances, but it is particularly bad in Belleville. Not only is it objectionable here because of its having rendered possible the election of undesirable men who could not have secured their return by the vote of the electors of the whole city, because of the grossly unequal subdivision of the city into wards, but also because there are too many wards and consequently too many aldermen—too much talk and too little work.

This comparatively small municipality, be it observed, has twenty-two members, including the Mayor, to administer its affairs—almost as many as has Toronto, a city with a population nearly forty times as great as that of Belleville—and the result is a complete verification of the old proverb as to too many cooks spoiling the broth.

Take, as an example of the blundering—if not worse—of this unwieldy body, the construction of the Front Street sewer, at least that portion of it north of Bridge Street, and the people will have an idea of how their money has been wasted—literally thrown away. It would be too tedious to enter into details concerning the inefficiency of the various departments of the city government under the present systm. The condition of the streets and crossings is alone sufficient to condemn the system.

One of the most unfair effects of the ward system is that the poor man—the small property owner and the tenant who is qualified in only one ward—can vote on the election of but three of the twenty-one aldermen. Under the general system every elector could vote on the election of every man who is to be entrusted with the spending of his money.

This alone is sufficient to condemn the ward system, yet a minority in the Council, composed of the moss-back eelment and the undesirables took advantage of the absence from the Council meeting of some of the progressive members and refused to allow the people to vote on a by-law, which had been sanctioned by the majority, for the restoration of the general system. That they did th[illegible] order to secure their seats at the aldermanic board for another year does not admit of a doubt. Will the people submit to the burking of this most desirable measure by a few men who, by accident, dressed in a little brief authority, have constituted themselves the lords and masters of the ratepayers of this fair city, or will the people insist on the submission to their votes at as early a date as possible of the by-law which was strangled in Council, so that, if adopted, it may go into effect at the forthcoming elections?

In future issues we will deal further with this subject.

AN ARTIST IN COUNTERFEITING OPERATED LARGELY IN CANADA

How Secret Service Men Found Evidence of Master Mind in Hut in Canadian Wilds—Complete Photographic Outfit Discovered for Reproducing the Face of Ten Dollar Notes

VANCOUVER, B. C., Oct. 20.—Combining the skill of the artist and the artisan, Albert Leon, alleged chief of a gang of counterfeiters, arrested in New York on Monday, was well equipped had he desired to manufacture spurious currency.

When Secret Service Operatives Thomas B. Foster and W. A. Glover, assisted by Constable William McLeod, of the British Columbia Provincial Police, visited the workshop and hiding-place of the gang in the wilderness stronghold on Nootka Sound they found much evidence of the chief's skill.

The discovery of the island retreat of the gang resulted from the arrest of Leon in New York. The operatives were at once ordered to find the camp and get any evidence which might be connected with the case.

This island fastness is supposed to have been the manufacturing centre for the spurious bills which Leon's cleverness is said to have made possible. Everything about the place indicated that the directing leader is no bungler in whatever he undertakes.

As an artist Leon is unusually clever. The secret service men found in the log cabin, where he lived with the Nihilists, a number of water color sketches of island pictures that are faithful to nature and show some degree of art. There were, besides, many photographs of the camp. These sketches, together with the photographic outfit for reproducing the face of $10 notes, is taken as circumstantial evidence of the man's guilt.

Leon is charged with the circulation of large amounts of $10 notes over the Pacific coast. Two of his accomplices, Rudolph Swanson and Fred Marneck, were arrested in Chicago, a couple of weeks ago, charged with attempting to pass spurious notes. The alleged chief of the gang was arrested in New York just as he was about to take a steamship for South America.

The method Leon is supposed to have used was to photograph faces of real notes and reproduce them by silver-print process on a specially made paper that resembles the bank note paper. The notes then required some retouching by hand to produce the secret marks and threads, and it is here that Leon's artistic ability was supposed to have been of use. The only flaw found in the notes is the color, which is slightly different from real notes.

Leon had built himself on Nootka Sound a log cabin which is no ordinary structure. In every detail of workmanship the stronghold is pronounced complete. The cabin is situated five miles from Friendly Cove, the spot where the explorer Vancouver met the early Spanish explorers of Puget Sound.

It is a wild spot in an almost untouched Canadian wilderness. At Friendly Cove there is an Indian village and one white trader. Steamships call twice a month, and the residents paddle out to meet them in canoes. The cabin is five miles from this remote settlement, in a small clearing cut from the heart of the forest.

When the secret service men reached this cabin they found there five Russians, who had fled from their mother country and claimed to have taken up homesteads in Canada. A caretaker was in charge of the cabin, and the Russians told the officers that Leon had once lived there. All professed ignorance of Leon's operations.

GREAT FACTORY FOR AEROPLANES

Sir Hiram Maxim, Graham White, and M. Bleriot are Working Together Near London

In the little suburban village of Hendon, less than seven miles, as the crow flies, from the royal palace of Buckingham, Sir Hiram Maxim, because of his great love of peace, is planning to construct the most formidable engine of destruction the world has ever seen, hoping they will make war impossible in a near future. On a smooth stretch of ground, comprising nearly 400 acres, Mr. Maxim, Mr. Graham-White, and M. Bleriot, working together for the first time, will erect the most up-to-date aeroplane factory in the world, in which aeroplanes are to be built, half a dozen of which will be enough to defend the coast of England against any attempted German attack and send the Kaiser's proud ironclads to the bottom of the North Sea with thousands of men before they shall have been able to aim their guns.

But this will not be all. With every constructional facility at their command, and with a large staff of skilled workers to call upon, these three renowned experts will collaborate in the construction of new types of aeroplanes, which will be built in the factory and immediately tested on the neighboring aerodrome by special pilots. Mr. Graham White, M. Bleriot and Sir Hiram Maxim will direct keen attention to the development of the war aeroplane; to the evolution of simple, practical machines to encourage the sporting and pleasure-seeking aspects of airmanship; and also to the building of special passenger-carrying types of aeroplanes.

All three, judging from their expert knowledge of flying, believe that—now the aeroplane has emerged from the experimental into th practical—there will be during the coming flying season a vast forward stride in connection with airmanship, chiefly as regards its military and sporting possibilities, and also in the matter of pleasure cruises and organized tours through the air. To popularize the making of tours throughout England by aeroplanes, also to stimulate week-end aeroplane trips undertaken in the same way as motor-car "week-ends" are no wenjoyed. Mr. Graham White and others are seeking to arrange for special aerodromes, with sheds and facilities, to be erected at pleasure resorts throughout the country. Not only for reconnoitring and dispatch-carrying, but also for destruction work—a field in which Sir Hiram Maxim will experiment exhaustively—will aeroplanes be constructed.

RICH DIAMOND FIELDS

Brussels and London Financiers Have Engineers at Work in Africa

Brussels and London speculators have been investigating a report that rich diamond fields have been discovered by the prospecting parties of the English financier, Mr. Robert Williams, to the South of Lake Moero, in the Katanga province of the Belgian Congo, contiguous to Rhodesia. Engineers are setting out to complete the work of the prospectors, and when they have ascertained the value of the diamond fields, a company is to be floated. It is understood that the Belgian State will claim a substantial share in the profits derived from the diamond fields.

A BIRTHDAY GIFT

Ma:—"Vell, Aaron, it is little Aby's birthday to-morrow. Vat are you going to give him for a present?"

Pa:—"If he's a very good poy I'll have the front vinders cleaned and let him look at the street cars going by."

A Cool Proposition

The Globe's Montreal news despatch says there is a movement on foot by the Eastern Township Liberals to secure the return of Hon. Sydney Fisher to Ottawa to aid in the work of the Opposition forces. The idea is to have Hon. Mr. Fisher as the representative of the English-speaking Protestants of Quebec; and that "H. Boivin has offered to retire in Shefford County to make way for the ex-Minister of Agriculture." All this, however, "depends" upon the action of the Government, namely that if the Conservatives will allow Mr. Fisher to be returned by acclamation, they, the Liberals, will not oppose the re-election of the different Cabinet Ministers. A cool, one-sided proposition, not, we should hope, to be considered for a moment. If the defeated Ministers want a seat, after being rejected by the people while holding office and exercising all the powers which they possessed as Ministers, let them fight for a seat in Parliament. There is no reason why such an unequal proposition should be entertained for a moment.

The idea of a French Roman Catholic resigning his seat in Parliament to provide for the election of a gentleman such as Mr. Fisher to represent the Protestants is something new. We shall believe it when it is done.

ILL-FATED EXPEDITION

Religious Leader Comes From Sea Perils to Jail.

Members of Holy Ghost Sect Arrive in Portland, Me., After Four Months of Terrible Privations in Which Seven Died of Scurvy and Ship Was Half Full of Water—Rev. Frank W. Sandford Arrested.

Portland, Me., Oct. 23.—As the climax to months of hardships, during which he and his little band of followers at times suffered from hunger and thirst as their yacht Coronet was buffeted about by sea and wind, the Rev. Frank W. Sandford, leader of the Holy Ghost and Us Society of Shiloh, was brought to this city last night in the custody of the county authorities.

His arrest was made on a writ in a civil suit brought by Mrs. Florence N. Whittaker, wife of one of the Holy Ghost and Us leaders, who alleged that she was illegally detained aboard the Kingdom, formerly one of the Sandford fleet. She was released on habeas corpus proceedings in June, 1910, and since then the authorities have been awaiting the appearance of Sandford within the jurisdiction of the state, that they might place him under arrest.

When Sandford was brought ashore from the Coronet, which swings at anchor off the quarantine station, a wrecked and disabled craft, he was accompanied by the husband of the woman at whose instigation he was arrested, the Rev. A. A. Whittaker. The latter came ashore that he might assist in arraigning bail for his leader.

Last night two men were brought ashore from the Coronet by the health authorities and placed in a local hospital, both suffering with scurvy. Seven others, six men and one child, died of the same disease and were buried at sea during the past few months, according to statements made by members of the crew. Many others have had touches of scurvy.

Not a sail of her original suit of canvas was left whole and there was a foot of water in the cabin when the Coronet entered the harbor and dropped anchor off the quarantine station yesterday. Her flying jibboom, both her jibs and foresails were carried away in recent storms, and her mainsail was split to ribbons. The pumps were being worked continually.

In the vessel's larder there was not a loaf of bread and no fresh meat had passed the lips of any of the religious seafarers for many days. So exhausted and weakened were the crew and passengers that it is doubtful if they could have kept their craft afloat for many days.

The Coronet has been at sea since June 27, when she sailed from a Haytien port, and was last reported on Sept. 27, when she was sighted by the steamer Lapland, flying signals which indicated that she was short of provisions. The Lapland sent relief and then proceeded. At that time the Coronet was off Cape Sable. For the last week the staunch craft has been beating her way along the coast, her crew despairing her ability to reach port.

On board were fifty-five people, including Rev. Mr. Sandford and his wife and five children. Besides the thirty-one survivors of the wreck of the barkentine Kingdom, there were twenty-four persons who were on the Coronet when she left Maine waters. The party included eleven children, ranging in ages from four to sixteen years, and just nineteen able-bodied men.

Worn by the terrible hardships of months at sea, half-starved and with faces emaciated, it was a ghastly looking company of seafarers which confronted the boarding party at quarantine. For seven days the men and women have been working incessantly at the pumps, in reliefs of three watches and this terrible labor in their weakened condition had reduced even the strongest of the crew to mere skeletons as compared with former selves.

While they worked at the pumps, man and woman prayed incessantly. In the storm every small boat was smashed to kindling wood, and if the yacht had foundered, the Shilohites would all have perished without a chance to save themselves.

The Coronet, which more than twenty years ago defeated the schooner-yacht Dauntless in a race from Sandy Hook to Queenstown, has been battered by many seas since she left Portland in 1910. When asked where she had been, the sailing master, H. F. Witham, replied: "Everywhere." He said later that they had been to the Holy Land, but had spent much time in the tropics, spreading the faith of their sect.

Killed by Fall.

Toronto, Oct. 23.—While removing a shutter from a second storey window of his residence, 381 Markham street, on Saturday, James E. Bizzey lost his footing and fell to the ground, sustained a fractured skull. Medical aid was summoned at once, but he died several hours later.

The body will be removed to Montreal, where it will be interred in the family plot. A widow and four children survive. He was a member of the I. O. O. F.

U. S. Soldiers at Quebec.

Quebec, Oct. 23.—Battery C. Militia Volunteers of Massachusetts, arrived in town yesterday morning by special train from Lawrence, Mass. The battery left Lawrence, Mass., on Friday night and arrived yesterday morning. The battery numbers about 90. The battery paid a visit to St. Anne de Beaupre yesterday, and also had a trip around town.

Pastor Created Scandal.

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 23.—Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, held in Boston on a charge of murdering Miss Avis Linnell, was pastor of the Bethany Baptist Church in this city from 1901 until 1904, when he resigned by request, following the sensational disclosures of three young women, each of whom accused him of being engaged to her.

The social whirl has made many a girl giddy.

Money makes the mare go; the lack of it makes her go hungry.

GURNEY-OXFORD

THREE COOKS AND THREE REASONS

These three cooks differ widely in ability and experience, but all are agreed that the prime essential in good cooking is the stove on which to cook, and all concede that every stove necessity is met in a

GURNEY-OXFORD RANGE

For no matter how much or how little cooking is done; no matter what the experience given or required, there are certain prime requisites for every kitchen range. Whether the cook be a professional chef or the young bride with only "him" to please, the stove must furnish these three essentials—steadiness and control of heat, even baking facilities, and a grate that gives plenty of air to the fire with a saving of fuel and convenience in handling.

For these three problems—on which all cooks are agreed—the GURNEY-OXFORD RANGE has three answers, three good reasons why.

THE OXFORD ECONOMIZER is a small lever for the steady maintenance of heat, licensed for use only on Gurney-Oxfords. It effects a remarkable saving in fuel as well as labor. Nothing can go up the chimney but smoke and odor.

The Divided Flue Strip distributes the heat evenly, front as well as back of oven, thus securing against failure in baking. There is no better test of practical stove work than this oven control.

Are you always dusting? The Gurney-Oxford Reversible Grate saves dirt and labor; one-half turn and the ashes are out, while the interlocking teeth grind the hardest clinker.

There are plenty of other "reasons" for the advantage of the Gurney-Oxford, as a call on us will convince you. Come in and see our varied line, and we will demonstrate all these features to your entire satisfaction.

VALUE OF DOING NOTHING

Why the Average Man does not get Proper Rest-Value out of his Yearly Vacation.

In finding a reason for the fact that the average business man on return from a vacation feels more tired and less inclined to work than before he went away, and why on retiral he is apt to become discontented and miserable, scientists incline to place the blame partly on the demon of unrest and partly on humanity for not mastering the art of doing nothing and giving the body a real rest whenever we have an opportunity.

Ungrammatical as it may sound, we apparently don't know how to "do nothing." We don't know how to rest during vacation, or how to settle down to a life of ease, after striving, toiling, and saving for years with that very state as our goal.

Doing nothing is often the hardest kind of hard work for one who has not learned how to do it. If it could be remembered that the problem of how to grow old gracefully is one that necessarily comes to all who live the allotted span of life, and, if in preparation for this condition, a broad physical and mental development were insisted on for the youth of the nation, grumblings at the frailties of advancing years would be less frequent, or might disappear. For not only would the bodily energies last much longer, but, what is of equal or even more importance, the ability for finding employment in life with even much restricted capacities would fill with peace and satisfaction the quiet years that follow years of tireless activity.

One important reason why men (and women, too) are unwilling to withdraw from their occupations, either gradually or suddenly, is the feeling that without their guidance the particular business or pursuit in question will be utterly demoralised, and soon go to rack and ruin.

It is the eternal desire to be doing something all the time, that is the bane of modern life. People are not content with what they have accomplished, but are discontented because they do not accomplish more.

One reason for this discontented restlessness is that many people have not the gift of optimism, or rather, do not cultivate this gift, which, to a greater or less degree, is surely common to all. If only they would try to make the best, instead of the worst, of everything, to see the good that they have accomplished, and not think so much of their failures, it would be a comparatively easy matter for them to be more satisfied with their daily life.

Quite Unexpected.

When he proposed marriage she asked him for time to think over it. "This is so unexpected," she said. He gave her the necessary time, and she finally decided that he fulfilled all the requirements of the situation.

Then they reached a point where they could discuss matters calmly.

"Of course," he said jokingly, "it wasn't really unexpected at all."

"Oh, yes, it was," she replied.

"Absurd!" he exclaimed. "A girl always says that. She knows what is coming, because she is naturally an expert in such matters."

"I thought I was, but you fooled me," she insisted.

"And, it was a complete surprise?" "It was."

"I don't understand it," he commented.

"Well," she explained ingenuously, "you had overlooked so many splendid chances that I gave you for a proposal that I had begun to think nothing ever would give you nerve enough to speak out; so it really was unexpected."

"Oh!" he said, and that was all. There didn't seem to be anything else to say.

HENRI BOURASSA, M.L.A.

The "Nationalist" Leader

Recent events have brought the leader of the "Nationalist" party more prominently to the front than before and the average Canadian citizen will be ready to acknowledge that throughout the past number of years he has contrived to keep fairly well in the limelight.

The entry of Mr. Bourassa into this material world dates from 1868, his entry into the political world come while yet he was a young man.

The son of Napoleon Bourassa, author and poet of some note, in Montreal, and born in 1869, young Henri was educated privately in that city until the age of 18, when residential transfer was made to Montebello, where a few years later he had the mayoralty honor conferred upon him, holding the position for four years. He has also been mayor of Papineauville. Always inclined to politics, and with a fluent tongue that drew to him a large following of the French-Canadian Section of Canada's well mixed family, Mr. Bourassa came out for parliamentary honors in 1896. When the Canadian Government undertook the despatch of troops to join their Colonial brethern in support of the motherland on the South-African battlefields, Mr. Bourassa was amongst the most violent in denunciation of the proceedings, and by way of vindication for his attitude he resigned his seat in October 1899 and appealed to his constituents. That the latter were in accord with the views of their representative on this, and doubtless on all other points, was evident, and it was considered a losing battle to fight his return, and beginning of 1900 he was sent back to parliament unopposed. Conditions were similar in the elections of 1900 and 1904. Mr. Bourassa was returned to the Quebec Legislature at the general election of 1908, and the years have not in the slightest abated his ardor as an opponent to soldiers and navies that might be called to battle alongside contingents from other portions of the British Empire.

He has done very considerable work as writer for and editor of newspapers, and his present holding in that connection is the "Nationalist" Le Devoir' founded in Montreal last year.

The Age of Fish.

Recent observations show that the rings on the shells of the freshwater mussel are usually annual rings, though sometimes two rings are laid down in one year. The concentric markings on the scales of fishes enable us to determine the age, and we can even tell from the salmon's scales whether it has spawned or not. The age of a fish can also be told from its otoliths — small limy concretions in its ear — and even from some of its bones.

Discontent Among the Foreign Population of South Wales

The rapid growth of foreign colonies in South Wales is causing discontent among the native population. The latest protest is from Newport, where many of the residents of the Pigwenlly district, a working-class area, have sent a petition to the Watch Committee, directing attention to the large and rapidly growing settlement of Chinese and other foreigners in their midst, and suggesting that the committee should take measures to check this growth. One of the means proposed is that property owners should be advised not to let premises to foreigners.

WHAT WOULD HAPPEN?

The Canadian Farmer Would Not Get as Much for His Butter

As far as butter is concerned, the Reciprocity agreement would mean:—

(1) Lower prices for the Canadian farmer.

(2) The loss of what little export trade he now enjoys.

(3) The loss of what small revenue now is realized from imports into Canada.

(4) A general demoralization of the dairy industry in Canada due to the inevitable lowering of prices and mixing of foreign and home grades of butter.

Canada's export trade in butter is not so great at the present time that her farmers can afford to emperil their dairy industry by a tariff scheme that would, in all probability, make the country's imports in this article greater than her exports. In the year ending 1910 Canada shipped only 4,615,380 pounds of butter, worth $1,010,274. Canada's imports of butter on the other hand amounted to 687,454 pounds, worth $104,301.

Wolves in Quebec.

Wolves are reported in large numbers in the neighborhood of Bauchette, Quebec, and Mr. Alf. Thorien, of 31 Mile Lake, succeeded in poisoning three of these pests, obtaining a good price for the pelts as well as the bounties. Mr. S. Day, of Cameron, obtained a very large wolf in the same way and presented the tanned pelt to Rev. B. S. Robinson, of Ottawa.

THE ESTATE OF ROBT. MEIGHEN

TORONTO, Oct. 21.—The late Robert Meighen, who died in Montreal, July 13, last, left a large estate in the Province of Ontario, and for that reason his will has been filed for probate in the surrogate court of the county of York, by the Royal Trust Company.

The total value of the estate is estimated at $2,483,783, of which $1,974,612 is represented by stock in a large number of corporations.

The value of shares in companies having the head offices in Ontario is given as $811,945.

The will bequeaths to a brother, Charles Meighen, of Perth, Ont., an annuity of $1,000. Upon his death his unmarried daughter is to receive an annuity of $600.

To his widow Mr. Meighen bequeathed the income of his entire estate during her lifetime, but specifies that the proceeds from his investment in the Canada North West land company shall be treated as capital of the estate. Should Mrs. Meighen's income be at any time less than $40,000 a year a deficiency shall be made up from the capital.

The testator creates a trust of $800,000 for the benefit of the descendants of his and daughters.

CAUSE FOR ALARM

LOSS OF APPETITE OR DISTRESS AFTER EATING A SYMPTOM THAT SHOULD NOT BE DISREGARDED.

Appetite is just a natural desire for food. Loss of appetite or stomach distress after eating indicate indigestion or dyspepsia. Over-eating is a habit very dangerous to a person's good general health.

It is not what you eat, but what you digest and assimilate that does you good. Some of the strongest, heaviest and healthiest persons are moderate eaters.

There is nothing that will cause more trouble than a disordered stomach, and many people daily contract serious maladies simply through disregard or abuse of the stomach.

We urge all in Belleville who suffer from any stomach derangement, indigestion or dyspepsia, whether acute or chronic, to try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, with the distinct understanding that we will refund their money without question or formality, if after reasonable use of this medicine, they are not perfectly satisfied with the results. We recommend them to our customers every day, and have yet to hear of one who has not been benefited by them. We honestly believe them to be without equal. They give very prompt relief, aiding to neutralize the gastric juices, strengthen the digestive organs, to regulate the bowels, and thus promote perfect nutrition, and eradicate all unhealthy symptoms.

COTTON REPLACING OPIUM

Chinese Farmers Exported the Latter to the Value of 28,141,234 taels

The opium traffic in China is now practically suppressed, and the opium growers have taken to the cultivation of cotton in order to recoup themselves for the losses sustained by the cessation of opium culture. The new agricultural venture has given splendid results, judging from the magnificent crops to be seen in the different provinces. According to official statistics to hand, China last year exported cotton to the value of about 28,141,234 taels to Russia and America. The year before, the export of Chinese cotton only amounted to a third of this sum. This extraordinary increase in quantity exported is more or less attributable to the bad American crops, which afforded the Chinese exporters a splendid chance to dispose of their merchandise at very advantageous prices. The Imperial Government is doing everything possible to encourage the growth of cotton throughout the Empire.

PURE MILK WAS THE THEME AT A PUBLIC MEETING ON SATURDAY

Interesting Addresses by Prominent Citizens and Experts—The Project was Favorably Received—A Considerable Amount of Stock Subscribed in a Company to be Formed

The meeting held in the city on Saturday afternoon to hear addresses in reference to supplying the city with milk, which by a new process can be kept for weeks and even months, was well attended. A few ladies were present in addition to a number of citizens, and our yoemanry friends, who are interested in this matter.

Dr. Yeomans, Medical Health Officer of the city, presided over the gathering and delivered the following address:

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

This meeting, which has been called for this afternoon ,is for the purpose of discussing the necessity of and how we may obtain for the city of Belleville a "pure milk supply."

There are, I believe, some gentlemen present from a distance, who are recognized authorities on "Milk Supply" and who will address you.

The securing of clean milk is largely a question of education. Education of the dairyman and the vendor, also of the consumer.

Of the various foods in use there is not one so generally used by every member of each family as milk.

Containing the essentials of a perfect food, requiring practically no preparation, and easily digested, it becomes a common food for sick or well.

Milk fresh from the udder of a healthy cow is not to be feared, as it is almost sterile if properly taken.

The lack of any care in the taking of milk, dirty hands, filthy stables, unclean containers, lack of proper methods in keeping and delivering must result in a supply that is at once impure and unsafe.

I can assure you that milk plays an important part in the death rate of Canada and that thousands of lives are sacrificed on account of the impurities in our milk supply.

Fathers and mothers should beware of this so that they may take precautions, but the infants are helpless.

We go to great expense to advertise "Our Canada" and to bring in children from other countries, while we show a perfect disregard of the lives of our own native born infants.

In the city of Belleville, from the 1st January to 31st December, 1910, 38 children died from summer diarrhoea and from the 1st January to 1st October, 1911, 35.

Adding to this the large number who were sick from diseases of the digestive organs, you can easily form some idea of the trouble, sorrow and expense that might be saved if we could reduce this death rate by 50 or 75 per cent.

In the New York Hospital for Children, where the children were fed milk from a carefully selected herd the death rate in 1897 was 41.81 per cent.

A pasteurizing plant was installed and more care given to the milk supply and the next year the death rate fell to 19 per cent.

To secure good milk should not be a difficult matter and would require but a slight increase in expense.

To continue to allow milk vendors to sell for human consumption the dirty, infected mixture so often offered as good milk, should be considered, in the present light of knowledge, a shame in any municipality.

As an illustration of what an unproved milk supply means, allow me to read an article from the Montreal Star of 19th Oct., 1911:

"A delegation of ladies from St. Ann's Ward, who were connected with the pure milk station in that district, waited on the Controllers to-day and presented a report showing the excellent work done during the past summer. The infant death rate in this district has been cut down from 15 per cent. to 7 per cent. It was held by the Board that the work should go on during the winter, as it would mean the saving of many lives."

Sir Mackenzie Bowell was cordially received upon being called upon. He spoke briefly referring to the fact that he knew what good milk was and what impure milk was. He congratulated the audience upon having the privilege of hearing speakers who were well versed in the subject under discussion. Nothing could be of more importance to the city than a pure milk supply. Sir Mackenzie congratulated Mr. MacLaren upon the success he had attained by his celebrated cheese, which was known the world over. The milk supply was a matter of benefit to all and especially to the rising generation.

Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., said that the Ontario Legislature had among other admirable legislation, done two things which were of great advantage and done much good, namely established a standard loaf of bread and appointed a Milk Commission. A bill in regard to the latter had been formulated, which would no doubt result beneficially. In referring to Mr. MacLaren and his cheese, the speaker said that in Canada, England and other portions of the world, it was known and recognized as a fine product. He was especially pleased that it was a Canadian product and that it had gained such a prominence in the markets of the world.

Mr. MacLaren was called upon and after referring to his cheese industry, spoke of the Laurentia Milk Company and the new process of keeping a milk supply which was in every respect an article to be desired. He read a report of the prospectus of the company, of which the following is a synopsis;—

The object of the company is to carry on, amongst other things, the business of wholesale or retail dealers in milk, cream and other dairy products and for the purpose of this business it has acquired the exclusive license for the Province of Ontario of a newly patented process for treating milk and cream, and it is the purpose of the company to manufacture products prepared under the said patented process within the limits of the Province of Ontario for sale in the Province and in foreign countries. The company has also acquired the exclusive sales agency for the Province of Ontario for the patented machinery used in the process, and the company proposes to sell this patented machinery to milk dealers and creameries and ice cream manufacturers throughout the Province. The new process above referred to is known as the "Homogenizing Process" and this process insures the delivery to the public at reasonable prices of an absolutely pure and aseptic milk and cream in its natural liquid state, not condensed or powdered, which will keep in perfect condition for months without any special care in all temperatures and in all climates. Delievry of milk and cream to the consumer may take place weekly or monthly as may be desired, instead of daily as in the case of the ordinary milk business. The process is purely mechanical and this result is obtained without the use of any chemicals of any kind whatsoever or the adding of any foreign substance of any name or description. Nothing is added to the milk and nothing is taken from it but impurities and the germs of all contagious diseases, whether they come from the cow, or from any other possible source. The appearance or sweetness of the milk is not altered in any degree by the process and all its edible qualities are preserved. This product is called throughout the whole Dominion "Laurentia Homogenized Milk" or "Cream" as the case may be. This new process has brought to light the real, true and only one known solution of the milk question as well for infants as for grown-up people of all conditions and in all states of health. These results, besides being very gratifying from a business point of view, are highly commendable from a humanitarian standpoint. The British Royal Commission finds that milk and consumption are closely allied in the cause of so much infant and adult mortality in their report after ten years' research they state: "As already indicated by us, to this question there can be but one answer—namely, the evidence which we have accumulated goes to demonstrate that a considerable amount of the tuberculosis of childhood is to be ascribed to infection with bacilli of the bovine type transmitted to children in meals consisting largely of the milk of the cow." The City of Montreal records out of a total of 1,175 deaths in the month of July, 1911, 837 were of children under five years old. This sad record is contrasted in the same city of Montreal, in the Parish of Canon Le Pailleur, where the work was undertaken in July, 1910, of lessening materially infantile mortality through using Laurentia Milk entirely. Dr Eugene Gagnon, Secretary of the dispensary in this parish, reports exhaustively on the results, in which he shows that infant mortality has been reduced 54 per cent. during the last six months of 1910 over the same periods during the previous six years. The saving of life, as shown in this parish, can be repeated in every other parish and section throughout the Dominion. The possibilities are unlimited. Besides an extensive and exclusive trade in machinery, milk, cream and by-products throughout all the popular centres of the Province there is the foreign trade, especially with tropical countries where no milk is produced, since these products are not altered by climatic conditions, and can be either bottled or canned with equal advantage.

Mr. P. P. Farmer, who is a director of the new industry, spoke at some length, detailing minutely the virtue of the milk supplied by the company and its intrinsic value. The product was entirely new to anything that had been heretofore tried. The milk was the best food medium for human growth. The bacteria growth was destroyed, but not one iota of the milk's virtue was destroyed by this new process. The milk was entirely free from bacteria, and it could be kept for months. This milk so treated is absolutely uniform and could be kept for an indefinite period. Samples which he had had been treated by this process some 10 weeks ago and it was still sweet. This new process mixes the fat with the caseine, and all cell sacks were broken up. Sterilization was permitted by this process without in any way hurting its digestive properties. This milk was a better product for children than any other milk supplied. It was an absolutely pure product. By the establishment of a branch of the company in this city he claimed that it would in no wise injure the cheese product here to any extent; in fact he claimed it would stimulate the dairy interest in the community. It would prove to be an industry that would do much good. It would serve the business of the city because it would make the city a better market for milk.

Dr. Yeomans said he had taken much interest in this matter of milk supply to the city. While bottled milk was not so much exposed to dirt, etc., still there was a chance for improvement. To get a pure milk supply for the city was his object.

Mr. R. J. Garbutt asked what the patrons would have to do if they supplied milk to the proposed company.

Mr. Farmer—The Milk Bill states the stipulation, namely clean stables, clean barnyard, and every precaution taken to cool the milk properly and deliver it in the best possible condition.

This concluded the meeting and the subscribing of stock was proceeded with. The amount subscribed we were not informed of, but a few present took shares in the concern.

"DEI GRATIA" WILL BE RESTORED TO THE COINS

Its Omission from Canadian Currency Due to Mistake at British Mint

OTTAWA, Oct. 20.—A good deal of comment has been created by the disappearance of "Dei Gratia" from the Canadian coins of this year. The peculiarity is shared by all the copper and silver coins struck off in the mint this year.

No gold coins have been struck off so far this year, though the apparatus for doing so is in a forward state. The dies for these coins have the "Dei Gratia." It further is the case that next year's coins will have the stately and reverent old motto restored.

The cause of the emission is an inadvertence on the part of the authorities of the British mint. The dies were prepared in England, and it was there that the mistake was made. They arrived early in the year. The situation in which the department of finance found itself with regard to the matter was that, for one thing, Canada was under a substantial obligation to the British authorities in the matter, and for another, that there was acute need for currency. Accordingly the designs were accepted and approved.

None the less the 1912 coins will revert to the ancient usage, so that the 1911 coinage will be distinguished from that of other years after as well as before.

SWIMMERS MADE SPEECHES

An Ingenious Method of Outwitting the Russian Police

One of the most remarkable political meetings on record is reported to have taken place at Riga, Russia. The Letts Socialists desired to hold a meeting, and the Riga police expressing an opposite view, the contest began, brains being pitted against determination. Wherever the Socialists made up their minds to pitch their camp the police checkmated them. At last one of the Socialists conceived a brilliant idea. He sent circulars to the members of his organization inviting them to take part in a swimming match. Of course the competitors were orators. They went into the water and the assemblage stood around. Then swimmer after swimmer delivered a speech and invited questions from those on land. The ingenious Socialists claim that the meeting was a great success.

Christian Chinese Warrent.

Ottawa, Oct. 23.—The police yesterday raided a Chinese resort at 59 O'Connor street, and gathered in 58 Chinamen. The place was found to be a gambling den and opium joint; fan tan was largely in progress in the basement, with other games of chance and a Chinese lottery table in the corner The officers gathered the money and apparatus Upstairs an opium joint was in full session and much material around.

Many of those arrested had just left Sunday School and had tracts and religious books with them. All are held in the cells till the police court sits.

Invitations May Be Curtailed.

Ottawa, Oct. 23.—Considerable speculation, not to say apprehension, prevails in social circles in Ottawa as to the conditions governing at Rideau Hall under the regime of the Duke of Connaught. There is a somewhat widespread feeling that the invitation list for state and social functions there may be submitted to a process of elimination. Nothing official or semi-official on the subject is obtainable, but something along the line indicated seems highly probable.

Insurance Agent Fined.

Toronto, Oct. 21.—For issuing fire insurance policies on behalf of companies not registered in Ontario, Wm. McD. Douglas, an insurance agent in Cochrane, was fined $20 and costs in each of six cases. Mr. Douglas admitted the charges against him, but pleaded he was unaware that he was violating the law. The companies in question are the Cosmopolitan Insurance Co. and the Metropolitan Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania.

Attorney-General Foy stated yesterday that he would be glad if any person would communicate with his Department at once.

Got the Wrong Ashes.

Kingston, Oct. 21.—An uncanny disclosure was made at Cataraqui cemetery, when the supposed cremated remains of David W. Trotter of Long Beach, Calif., were about to be interred. Friends of Mr. Trotter had received a small case by express and had taken it to the cemetery, where a burial service was to have been said, when it was discovered that the wrong case had been sent. The label intimated that the steel box contained the ashes of Mrs. Ophelia Farrinton, aged 82.

Will Sue the City.

Brantford, Oct. 21.—Local merchants are talking of bringing action against the city for the tearing up of Front street corner here by the railway company, where a $16,000 crossing is being laid. Traffic has been shut off and merchants claim they have been occasioned loss owing to the inactivity of the city council in having the work expedited.

IMPERIALISTS CUT OFF

Pass to Honan and Hupeh Held by Chinese Rebels.

Loyalists In Consternation Are Said to Be Fleeing Northward From Hankow — Twenty Thousand Soldiers Have Been Mobilized In Honan, But General Does Not Seem Anxious to Attack Revolutionists.

Pekin, Oct. 23.—Gen. Yin Tchang, the War Minister, who is in the neighborhood of Sinyongchau, in Honan Province, has completed the mobilization of 20,000 men, but the opinion is held here that he has no intention for the present to begin an advance against the revolutionaries holding the towns of Wuchang, Hanyang and Hankow.

The Provinces of Honan and Tupeh are divided by a high ranges of hills, through which the only pass for many miles is traversed by the railway. It is reported that this pass is held by the rebels, who have posted many guns. They are supposed to have cut off 3,000 imperial troops, who are fleeing northwards from Hankow.

The Government first mentioned Kwangshui, which is on the south slope of the hills, as the place of Yin Tchang's mobilization, but evidently the War Minister has been content to assemble his forces on the north side of the hills. The pass is believed to be impassable by the troops under Yin Tchang. Whether he will reinforce them is questionable because of the growing feeling that it will be necessary to retain all available forces as near to Pekin as possible.

It is stated significantly that Yin Tchang intends to perfect his organization before advancing against the rebels holding Hwangchow, which is some miles below Hankow at the narrowest point of the Yangtsekiang.

A reliable report has reached here that on the morning of Oct. 18, the third brigade of Government troops arriving at the Liuchiamiao stations, were fired upon by the rebels with thirty-six field guns, whereupon the whole brigade stampeded to the north. The provincial troops hastened to their aid, but without avail. The imperial troops were in a state of consternation, and the rout could not be checked.

The same advices add that the brigade had no option but to return to Sinyangchau and await reinforcements. Liuchiamiao is about 65 miles to the northeast of Kwangshui, and it is therefore evident—if the report of the rout is true—that the Government does not hold Kwangshui.

Dead Man Identified.

Hamilton, Oct. 23.—The body at the unknown man, who was killed on the T., H. & B. Railway tracks Friday evening, was identified Saturday afternoon as that of Abraham Lee, an Englishman, who for the last six years and at the time of his death boarded with Mrs. Cahill, 199 East Ferrie street.

Lee had worked at the Sawyer-Massey plant as a painter for about five years, but more recently and until a few days ago had been employed at the Otis Fensom Elevator Works.

Friday morning the unfortunate man left Mrs. Cahill's house about 8.30 to look for work, and was not seen alive again by any of his acquaintances. His subsequent movements are unknown, and his friends know of no reason why he should have been in the locality where his death is supposed to have occurred.

Official Arrested.

Paris, Oct. 23.—Gen. Toutee, commander of the Algerian force in Morocco, has sent a telegram to the Minister of War, saying he has caused the arrest of M. Destailleur, the French commissioner, who has had in charge the regulation and control of the Algerian-Moroccan frontier. Because of his refusal to permit an investigation of his accounts, Mr. Destailleur and several other men, including the Caid of Oudja, are charged with illegal collusion. Other despatches received here from Algiers declare that the arrest of M. Destailleur is due to a contraband trade in arms and [illegible] smuggling over the frontier.

Baby Wasn't Hurt.

Smith's Falls Oct. 23.—Some children playing in the home of Mr. Milton Hay of Hallville procured a box of dynamite caps, not knowing what they were, and gave them to the baby to amuse him. He let the dangerous toy fall to the floor, and immediately there was a terrific explosion. The room in which is occurred was badly torn up, and two little girls were seriously burned, though the baby escaped injury. There were several children in the room, but none of them were fatally injured.

JURY BY JAN. 1ST.

This Is Darrow's Prediction In the McNamara Trial.

Los Angeles, Oct. 23.—A jury in the McNamara murder trial by Jan. 1, 1912, was the prediction made on Saturday by Attorney Clarence Darrow, chief of counsel for the defence.

With no court session Saturday, opposing counsel took opportunity to finish up the work of the first complete court week in the trial of James B. McNamara for the murder of Charles J. Haggerty in The Los Angeles Times explosion.

Attorney Darrow's statement was based, he said, partly on progress made thus far, which shows three talesmen in the box, subject to peremptory challenge, but more upon the opposition manifested by talesmen to infliction of the death penalty on circumstantial evidence or in some instances, under any conditions.

"It is getting harder all the time to get a jury in a murder case, according to my experience," said Mr. Darrow. "The defence expects that this sentiment will form a considerable obstacle."

The state has already made public some of its direct evidence in the case, including the statement made by Ortie E. McManigal, implicating the defendant, and is known not to be dependent on circumstantial evidence altogether, but District Attorney Fredericks has taken the position that the people are entitled to a jury which will convict entirely upon circumstantial evidence if a case beyond reasonable doubt is made out, and Judge Bordwell has sustained that position.

ITALIANS SURPRISED

Turks Make Night Attack on the Invading Force.

Warships Are Unable to Render Any Assistance and Italian Casualties Are Believed to Be Higher Than Are Admitted—Uniforms Found In Field—Benghazi Garrison Are Still Fighting—Gioletti Criticized.

Berlin, Oct. 23.—A special despatch to The Lokal Anzeiger from Tripoli, by way of Malta, reports a sanguinary fight on Thursday night near the city of Tripoli. The Turks surprised the Italians, who were caught between two fires. The warships were unable to give any assistance. Fifteen Italian soldiers were found dead in the trenches. A large pile of uniforms belonging to Italian soldiers later was discovered in a field, which leads to the belief that the Italian casualties were much more serious than admitted. Many dead and wounded were transported to the warships. The authorities, however assert that only one man is missing.

The same correspondent says that the Turkish garrison at Benghazi is offering vigorous resistance to the Italian troops, and is being aided by the Senussi tribesmen. The landing of further troops has been hindered by a storm.

Criticizing the Premier.

Rome (via the frontier), Oct. 23.—Both at home and abroad the employment of seemingly excessive forces by Italy in its Tripolitan campaign has come in for criticism, and it is pointed out that this policy does not seem to be compatible with the expressed intention of Italy to avoid bloodshed.

Premier Gioletti, it is explained by Government officials, is following the same course in this war as he followed in his home policy. At the first threat of disorders it has been his policy to mass sufficient police and troops to make resistance impracticable. The Premier has not forgotten Italy's defeat in Abyssinia, and he holds that any excessive caution is justified.

His wish has been to make the occupation of Tripoli certain, without risk and with the avoidance of the horrors of war. The show of force, he believes, will impress the Turks sufficiently to retard them from offering serious resistance.

Where Is the Phial?

Boston, Mass., Oct. 23.—In their efforts to clear up the circumstances of the death of Avis Linell, the Hyannis Sunday School teacher and music student, with whose murder Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson is charged, the police have been unable thus far, it is said to locate the poison receptacle.

When the girl took the dose of cyanide of potassium which caused her death, she was in the bathroom of the Young Women's Christian Association Home on Warrenton street, and though the house was searched immediately after her death by order of the medical examiner and later by the police, the receptable which had contained the poison, before she had poured it into a cup to drink, cannot be found.

Will Probe Teacher's Death.

Toronto Oct. 23.—Startling revelations may yet be made regarding the death of Violet Smith, who came to her death by drowning in the River Shebashekong. In the eyes of the relatives the whole affair is still enshrouded with mystery—mystery of such a nature that a thorough investigation is to be conducted without delay.

The remains were brought to Toronto on Saturday evening, and yesterday morning Chief Coroner A. J. Johnson performed a postmortem at the request of the relatives, and it is believed, discovered signs of ill-usage. Dr. Johnson did not wish to disclose any information as yet, but intimated that further developments would be made in a day or so.

Shot Hit Prince's Ship.

New York, Oct. 23.—A London cable Saturday morning said: News has leaked out of a sensational incident which occurred off Portsmouth on Tuesday, when the battleship Hindustan, on which the Prince of Wales is serving, was struck by a shot from her sister ship, Colossus, while engaged in target practice.

The Hindustan was stationed near the target to note the effect of the firing, when during a slight mist a six-pounder shell from the Colossus plunged aboard on the after deck. Being plugged the shell was harmless after falling, but narrowly missed a seaman, who was the only person on that part of the deck. The prince was below at the time

Quebec, Oct. 23.—La Vigie, which has been published as a French Liberal morning paper since the latter end of 1909, announced in its issue of Saturday morning that it would henceforth appear only as a weekly. The paper states that when it became a daily its promoters looked largely to the future and upon a rapid increase in the population of Quebec. Unfortunately things have not grown as fast as it expected, and, in addition, recent developments have not been of a nature to create encouragement.

Sloterdyk had broken her crankshaft and required immediate assistance. Several vessels are proceeding to the rescue.

The Sloterdyk left Rotterdam Oct. 18 for Boston and Philadelphia. Apparently when spoken by the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, she was about 300 miles off the coast of Ireland.

CHILD WOULD NOT EAT

CONSTANT COUGH WEAKENED HIM.

A healthy child ought to be "hungry as a bear" at meal time. Poor appetite means failing health.

The best thing you can do for a child that won't eat is to give teaspoonful doses of Vinol. This is wonderfully good in bringing back lost appetite and it is so pleasant that children take it eagerly.

Mrs. E. Stanger of Bronx Borough, N. Y., says, "My little son, 3 years old, had bronchitis for a year. The cough disturbed his rest and he lost his appetite.

"I gave him Vinol for a while and it stopped his coughing and brought back his appetite. His health is improved wonderfully. He likes Vinol."

It is the tonic iron and strengthening cod liver elements in Vinol (it contains no oil), that make it so strengthening, and blood-enriching. It makes weak, pale children strong and rosy, and we guarantee it to do exactly what we tell you—if it does not you get your money back.—J. S. McKeown, Red Cross Drug Store, Belleville.

New Railway Planned.

Vancouver, Oct. 23.—Announcement that J. D. McArthur, millionaire railway contractor of Winnipeg, and associates, had acquired a charter for a railway extending from Edmonton to Fort George, B.C., was made yesterday by J. L. Cote, member for Athabasca in the Albert Legislature.

The proposed line will traverse the richest part of the Peace River district, entering British Columbia via Pine River Pass, north of Yellowhead Pass, and opening up vast regions in the northern portion of this province. It will be over 1,000 miles long and will take the shape of two sides of a triangle, its apex at Pine River Pass, which has a low altitude. An exploratory survey party is now going over the route to secure data preliminary to undertaking the location work. It is expected that the line will be completed and in operation within four years, as it is understood arrangements for financing the proposition have already been completed.

This road, when completed, will connect with the Grand Trunk Pacific at Fort George, providing a line in the through route from Vancouver to the Peace River district.

SIR GILBERT PARKER ON THE BORDEN CABINET

The London correspondent of the Toronto Star writes under date October 11th: "The publication of the names of the members of the new Canadian Ministry has evoked generally favorable comment. The Pall Mall Gazette, Mr. Astor's Conservative evening journal, gives a whole column of brief biographical notes upon each of the new Ministers. Sir Gilbert Parker, after reading the list, expressed the opinion that "Canada has illuminated the landscape of the Empire," and added that "Mr. Borden will work with England more alive to the issue which he fought, and the duties and opportunities of the future, than has ever been the case before." While expressing surprise and regret at the omission of Mr. W. B. Northrup from the list, which he ascribes to the more pressing claims of others, Sir Gilbert declares, "I congratulate Canada on as sound and as powerful a combination as could well have been made by the new Prime Minister." Sir Gilbert Parker is a Belleville old boy, which may explain his interest in the Hastings M. P."

AMUSEMENTS

"THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S."

Coming to Griffin's Friday, October 27th. Of all the mixed situations, "The Girl From Rector's" beats the most mixed up of reels of moving pictures ever thrown on the canvas. Starting in the bachelor apartment of a young spendthrift, who was kept up to the round of carousals by an old friend who was living off the young fellow, several characters who are apparent strangers to him are introduced and the audience has no real idea what is going to happen next. Behold, the young fellow is to be married to a belle of Battle Creek. The wedding is to take place in that city. Those connected with what follow begin to arrive, and it develops that the people formerly presented as strangers are closely connected by matrimonial ties. This situation presents one of the keenest comedy situations of the day. The night of the wedding arrives and The Girl From Rector's, who is deeply in love with the young fellow, and who resolves to start something if he leaves her, keeping the fact of her marriage from him, arrives upon the scene. Her husband, a cousin of the bride, arrives also. The Girl is introduced to the groom and she immediately faints. She starts to get even, and, with the connivance of a man who has shown to the groom the gay life in the city, she lays her plans. She assumes to be intoxicated, and the groom, who now really is so, engage in some fancy stunts when the wedding party arrive on the scene. They are shocked by the situation. Although it is extremely funny to the audience, it is very humiliating to them, and they decide to punish the groom by a plan that ends in his getting his bride, and severing the ties that bound him to the girl of the Bohemian days. "The Girl From Rector's" is one of the most hilariously funny comedies now on the road.

PURER MILK WOULD MEAN LESS CRIME

The subject of a pure milk supply for large cities is receiving the attention of more sanitariums and scientific men than any other subject of interest to mankind. The investigations of the past ten years are beginnig to culminate. Scientists have discovered that the human element enters so largely into the problem that it cannot be solved in the laboratory.

At the International Milk Dealers' Association at Milwaukee, Dr. John A. Amyot, of Toronto, Canada, Provincial Analyst and Bacteriolist, went so far as to credit the progressive large dealers with being leaders when methods and results were considered. Both Dr. Amyot and Dr. Charles E. North, of New York, sanitary experts, were very positive in their conclusions that public safety demanded the proper pasteurization of every drop of milk on the market. Wilbur C. Phillips, of Milwaukee, Social Reformer, spoke on "Some Social Aspects of the Milk Question." The kernel of his remarks was "if infant mortality is to be reduced, we must recognize that a clean supply of cows' milk is of negligible importance in comparison with an ample supply of mothers' milk. We should not blame our milk dealers for killing the babies; we should blame the mothers themselves, or perhaps what is more truthful, we should place the blame at the feet of society, which makes it impossible through poverty industrial conditions, fatigue, long hours of labor, bad housing, etc., for mothers to fulfil their rightful duties toward their babies."

Mr. Phillips, however, does not relieve the dealer from his responsibility to supply a pure wholesome product, because he says that if the children from the age of one to the school age were supplied with plenty of safe milk, that it would through proper nutrition greatly reduce the number of criminals and deficients that the municipalities have to deal with.

According to one of them, a married man's day is divided as follows: Eight hours for sleep; eight hours for work and eight hours for explanations.

SUCCEEDS PARENT.

R. E. Leonard of St. Catharines Goes to N. T. R. Commission.

Ottawa, Oct. 23.—Announcement of four appointments was made by Premier Borden following Saturday's meeting of the Cabinet.

Reuben E. Leonard, St. Catharines, to be chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission.

Hon. Senator Landry, to be Speaker of the Senate.

Alphonse Lariviere, to be Senator from Manitoba.

Adam Carr Bell, to be Senator from Nova Scotia.

The Leonard appointment is of course the most important. It has been made after much consideration and consultation and makes the first instance in years when a big federal office has had to seek the man.

R. E. Leonard has accepted the post as a matter of public duty, the ten thousand dollar salary being small consideration to a man whose annual income exceeds the half million.

Mr. Leonard is a graduate of the Royal Military College and stands high among Canadian engineers. He has a wide experience in railway construction and operation, having had much to do with the building of the C.P.R. short line, the New York Central and other lines. Latterly he has been best known in connection with the Coniagas mine and the smelting industry at Thorold.

The negotiations leading up to Mr. Leonard's appointment were conducted by Hon. Frank Cochrane.

A. C. Bell takes the Senatorship held by the late Senator Comeau of Digby, N.S. He is an old Parliamentarian and was Conservative candidate in Pictou in the last election.

J. A. C. Lariviere enters the Senate in place of the late Senator Chevrier. He also is one of the Conservative old guard who of late years have failed to come back by way of the ballot box.

Senator Landry gets the Senate Speakership, because he is the only French Conservative Senator eligible, and the Senate Speaker must be French now that Dr. Sproule is to preside in the Commons.

WANTS PLEBISCITE.

Henri Bourassa Demands a Vote on Navy Question.

Montreal, Oct. 23.—Although Hon. F. D. Monk did not put in an appearance at the Raivelle demonstration in Chambly yesterday, Mr. Henri Bourassa was present and made a very interesting statement in view of recent happenings at Ottawa.

He was a little scandalized to see the Liberal papers blaming Mr. Borden for taking Col. Sam Hughes into his Government and making good old Dr. Sproule Speaker when these same Laurier men were only too glad to get Sam Hughes' support when they wanted to violate the rights of the minority in the West.

He claimed that the platform of the Nationalist group was that laid down by Sir John Macdonald when at Quebec in 1864 the then Conservative leader had said there must be no victor and vanquished, no inferior or superior race in Canada. Then he felt Mr. Borden was too honorable a man to want to repudiate his policy supporting Monk's plebiscite resolution, supported by Col. Hughes and all his friends.

"Let Canadians be asked if they want to maintain their strict autonomy as loyal Canadian and loyal to the flag and sovereign. Do they want secondly to contribute directly to the imperial navy or do they want to build a navy here which will be Canadian in times of peace and British in times of war," he said. Whichever decision the majority reaches it will be loyally accepted by the Nationalists.

Six Workmen Injured.

Montreal, Oct. 23.—Six workmen were buried under bricks, mortar and other debris when a portion of a building on St. Dominique street, which they were engaged in demolishing, collapsed at 2.30 p.m. Saturday.

Three of the men were taken to the General Hospital, where they must remain several days to recover from the cuts and bruises resulting from their fall.

The following are the injured, who had to receive hospital attention: Antonio Rossa, 1885 St. Andrew street; Louis Romano, 2285 St. Andre street; Sam Soblosky, 680 St. Dominique street.

What Did He Mean?

Hamilton, Oct. 23.—An early visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to Hamilton is intimated in a letter received by Mayor Lees Saturday morning from the new Governor-General's secretary. The date of the visit is given as Nov. 31, but as that month has only thirty days, some uncertainty exists as to the date meant. It is thought, however, that the royal couple will be here on Nov. 30. The reception committee of the City Council will start immediately to prepare an elaborate program of entertainment for Their Royal Highnesses.

Banker Gets Five Years.

Pittsburg, Oct. 23.—Jacob W. Hill, a prominent banker of East Brady, Pa., was sentenced on Saturday to five years in the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kas., for violation of the banking laws. He was charged with making false returns to the controller of the currency. Hill declared he was not responsible for the wrecking of the First National Bank of East Brady, of which he was cashier, and had he been given time he could have saved the institution. The bank failed in 1907.

Snow In Texas.

Dallas, Texas, Oct. 23.—Snow, the earliest in the history of that section, has fallen over the panhandle of Texas and northwestern New Mexico for the past 24 hours. At Amarillo, where flowers were blooming and trees yet covered in summer verdure, the sight was novel and unprecedented. The remainder of the state is blanketed by a heavy rain with the temperature registering 50 degrees. The forecast for to-day is frost all over the state, except in the extreme south portion.

STEAMER ALETHA ASHORE

KINGSTON, Oct. 21.—There was a heavy fog on the land and water last night and this morning. The steamer Dundurn, which was bound from Montreal to Hamilton was held up in the river below Cedar Island and was blowing her whistle at intervals till about eight this morning when she made her way to Swift's wharf.

Last evening the steamer Aletha was on her way up to Picton and ran on the rock bound shoal at Carruthers Point. She must have gone on with considerable force as she was a foot out of the water. The tug Frontenac pulled the Aletha off this morning, and she continued her journey to Picton. She was not injured.

FELDSPAR AS POTASH

The annual report of the Ontario bureau of mines received, says: "A bountiful supply of potash is contained in the feldspar deposits at Verona and elsewhere on the line of the Kingston & Pembroke Railway, this material containing as much as thirteen and fourteen per cent. of potash. The difficulty is that no feasible method has yet been discovered for converting the contained potash into soluble form. It has been stated that finely pulverized feldspar, when applied directly to the ground will part potash, though slowly, and thus act as a fertilizer. With the view of ascertaining the value of ground feldspar, a quantity from the deposits of the Kingston Feldspar and Mining Company has been forwarded to the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph where experiments will be conducted by the authorities of that institution."

DEATH'S CALL

MRS. MARTIN RYAN.

Mrs. Martin Ryan, aged 36 years, died yesterday morning in this city after being ill for some time. Deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Francis Estella Tisdale, was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Tisdale, of this city, where she was born. Mr. Ryan preceded her to the tomb some months ago. The deceased had many friends here, who will regret her demise. She was a member of St. Michael's Church and a member of the League of the Sacred Heart. In addition to the parents, four brothers and four sisters survive.

HELPLESS MOTHER SAW CHILD TAKE POISON

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 21.—Sitting helpless in a chair at No. 1,326 South Spangler street, paralyzed hand and foot, Mrs. Charles Griffith saw her fifteen-months-old child, Hazel, take a box containing strychnine pills from the table and laughingly put them in her mouth.

The mother screamed, but the baby, apparently liking the taste of the first pill, took a second. A third followde and the frantic mother, nearly crazed by her helplessness to save the life of her infant, knew that the little girl had taken enough poison to kill her. Death did follow an hour later, while a physician was fighting a hopeless fight to save the little life. It is feared her death may also cost the life of her stricken mother.

Mrs. Griffith has been ill from paralysis for some months. Only a few days ago she was sufficiently recovered to be brought back to her home from the hospital. She sat all day in the sitting room of her home propped up in a chair. Her physician had prescribed pills containing a large amount of strychnine to strengthen Mrs. Griffith's heart action. After one of the children gave the invalid a pill, the box in which were the pills was placed on the table.

When the baby, crawling about the floor reached upward and pulled herself erect, her hand clasped the pill box. The top came off and the mother realized the danger. She vainly called to the child not to touch the pills. Mrs. Griffith screamed wildly for help but it came too late.

It is pointed out that modern football players do not wear huge mops of long hair. Thus one of the terrors of the pastime has disappeared.

A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

PRISON REFORM IN OPERATION

By Winston Churchill's Schemes About 100 Convicts Will Be Released, But Under Surveillance

The new scheme for the treatment of convicts inaugurated by Mr. Winston Churchill has come into operation. About a hundred convicts will be released. Some of them may not want assistance on leaving prison, but they will all be handed over to the care of the newly-formed Central Association, whose surveillance will take the place of the old system of ticket of leave. Under the old method of working a convict could earn from ten to thirty dollars during his term of imprisonment. On his release half of this was generally used for his benefit through the agency of a prisoner's aid society or similar body. But now the new central body will appropriate the whole of the money earned by the prisoner. If the associations efforts do benefit him, he will certainly get his money's worth. But if these efforts fail his money will have been swallowed up.

The assistant secretary to the Prison Commissioners, in the absence of Mr. Basil Thompson, the secretary, has seen fit to discuss the new scheme.

"The convict," he said, "has never had a legal claim to this money, which has hitherto been paid on the condition that half was administered through the aid society for the particular prison from which the man was discharged.

"But it was understood that he had a sort of moral right to it. Now the moral right will disappear, and the gratuities will go to the central body, which will use these sums, of course, for the man's benefit.

"These gratuities, with the grant of 35,000 which the Government is making, will probably payy all the expenses involved in the setting up of the new body, so that no fresh burden will be cast on the existing societies, whose work should be assisted by the centralization and co-ordination of their efforts.

"Of course, there will still remain the obstacle of the natural reluctance of employers to engage ex-convicts. It has been difficult hitherto to find other than laboring work for these men, as people hesitate to give them positions of trust."

The assistant secretary of the Central Committee of Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies said that there were about one hundred societies engaged in the work of befriending ex-prisoners. Many of them, however, dealt with both ex-convicts and men released after short sentenles.

He also stated that the Home Office had under consideration a scheme to set up a new authority—similar to the one which begins work with ex-convicts to-day—to deal with the short-sentence men. This body will probably be drawn largely from the central council, strengthened by Home Office representatives.

"But as to a new career of hope for convicts," he said, "to my mind that could only be achieved by planting them on a Pacific island—giving them capital, if need be, for a start—setting a gunboat to look after them and see they did not escape, and leaving them to work out their own salvation. It would be cheaper in the end."

Passing of Pelorus Jack

Pelorus Jack, the huge dolphin which for twenty years past has piloted all the steamers bound for Wellington, New Zealand, through the Pelorus Sound, is no more. Known by some as the Lone Fish of the French Pass, he was protected by a special Act of Parliament, and was one of the curiosities of New Zealand waters.

LOAN EXHIBIT FROM THE KING

Interesting Collections For the Scottish National Exhibition at Glasgow this Year

Interest in the Scottish National Exhibition in Glasgow from May to October has been greatly stimulated by the promise of the King to send a loan exhibition. His Majesty has promised to lend a small portrait of Lord Darnley with brother, portrait of sixth Earl of Angus, and portrait of King James V., a flintlock pistol of silver, two carved dirks, targets with pierced bosses, and three swords with basket hilts of silver. The portraits are of special interest. The portrait of James V. is one of the few existing representations of His Majesty's ancestors, the Stuart Kings of Scotland, while that of Lord Darnley is closely connected with the tragic story of Mary Queen of Scots. The decision, reluctantly given by the Queen Dowager of Spain, that she finds herself unable to lend the crucifix in her possession said to have been worn by her lineal ancestor, Mary Queen of Scots, on the day of her execution, has been a disappointment. Her Lord Chamberlain, however, is endeavoring to procure a copy of the book giving the history of the crucifix and containing an engraving of it. An interesting display in connection with the opening ceremony will be given on the River Kelvin of the successive types of ships used in Scottish waters from the earliest times to the present day. Some twenty-three vessels, represented by models worked by operators inside or underneath the floating model, will sail in procession down the Kelvin on the opening day of the exhibition, the types varying from the "dug out" canoe of the early Britons to the liners and battleships of to-day.

The exhibition will be held at Kelvingrove Park, Glasgow, and will be opened by the Duke of Connaught, who will be accompanied by the Duchess of Connaught and Princess Victoria Patricia.

GABY DELYS

The "king hunter," who, with one throne to her credit, makes open boast that she will soon acquire another. Miss Delys, who is now in Paris acting in a variety theatre, says that the scene of her next man-hunt will be London during the Coronation festivities, and further states that the object of her search need not wear a crown so long as he fall in the kingly class from a monetary standpoint.

TO PREVENT THEFTS

An Apparatus to Guard Against a Repetition of the "Mona Lisa" Affair

The curator of Prince Leichtenstein's gallery at Vienna, the largest private gallery in the world, has given a demonstration of an apparatus he has invented to prevent such thefts as that of the "Mona Lisa." It consists of special electric contacts hidden in the wall behind the frame, and so arranged that the least touch on the frame or the picture makes a bell ring in a central office. Here there is a board with numbers like those in hotels, so that the guardian can see at once which picture has been disturbed and proceed there direct without loss of time.

TEACHING DOGS TO BE SINGERS

A Chat With a Well-Known Animal Trainer on His Interesting Work

A good many pet-owners may be startled to learn that animals can distinguish between musical notes, and that those of any degree of intelligence may be trained as musical performers. Animals that play musical instruments are by no means uncommon, and a number of seals have before now been equipped with drums, cymbals, horns and bells, and have made music when instructed by their trainer to do so. If the melody has not been perfect, it has been sufficient to prove that the seals have at least some music in their composition.

Circus Horses and Tunes

The majority of wild animals are influenced by music, and everyone knows that bears can be taught to dance on their hind legs while holding a pole to sounds of music, even if that music is ground out of a common street organ by means of a handle.

Once a circus horse has been taught to do a trick to a certain tune he will do it whenever he hears that tune, and, in consequence, he is the cause of some funny incidents now and again. Once I took a horse into the street for exercise, and as we turned a corner a barrel-organ commenced to grind out its music. The tune was the very one the animal was accustomed to in the circus-ring, and he concluded that I was expecting him to go through his usual performance. He broke away from me and gave a free performance in the middle of the road, and I could only call him to order by appealing to the "musician" to stop the organ.

When the ordinary dog howls at music it does not always do so because the notes get on its "nerves," but often because it is striving to imitate them as well as its untrained vocal powers will permit.

I heard a wonderful story of a singing dog the other day. A handsome collie, named Sammy, the property of Mr. Carlson, is a tenor-soloist. Every morning, when a bell on a church near his master's home rings, Sammy takes up a position close by and begins an accompaniment, which blends remarkably well with the deep notes of the bell. A musician has declared that the dog is exactly in tune with the metallic sounds that come from the church belfry. Later in the day—at noon—Sammy goes off to a lumber plant operated by his master. Here the animal accompanies the whistle, achieving perfect harmony, it is said.

The Talking Dog!

It might be remembered that some years ago a singing dog created a furore amongst scientific men in Paris. This animal, which belonged to a Dr. Bennati, could sing the scale perfectly without any assistance from the human voice or a musical instrument. Moreover, it could imitate a new tune with extraordinary accuracy after hearing it played two or three times.

The philosopher Leibnitz declared that he knew a dog which was not only a remarkably fine singer, but could actually talk. All the letters of the alphabet, with the exception of "m," "n," and "h," it could articulate quite clearly, and could give its master, when spoken to, a suitable answer.

Lions, elephants, and monkeys are fond of music. I have seen an elephant play a whole band of music at once, using its trunk and fore feet to play the various instruments. Lions will often forsake their meals to listen to a tune, and this applies also to tigers and others of the fierce cat tribe.

GIRLS' HAIR CUT OFF

A Despicable Act in a Cinematograph Theatre in England

Several young girls at Brighton, England, have just been the victims of a most despicable form of practical joking, and are now sorrowing over the loss of luxuriant hair upon the beauty and possession of which they had naturally prided themselves. With their hair in plaits they have visited one or other of the cinematograph theatres that abound, and upon unfastening their locks afterwards they have been astounded to find quantities fall to the ground, a big proportion of the plait having been cut by scissors or some other sharp instrument. The act has undoubtedly been committed in the darkness of the theatre. All attempts to detect the miscreant have failed.

TO HONOR SHAKESPEARE

The New Theatre in London Will Cost a Fabulous Sum

The executive committee of the Shakespeare National Theatre Fund now feel almost certain that an immense theatre facing Trafalgar Square will not only be an accomplished fact, but that it will be actually opened on April 23rd, 1916, the tercentenary of Shakespeare's death. The site alone will cost about $2,500,000, and the theatre itself an even larger amount. The fund now possesses only $500,000, but this money has been raised without appealing to the public. Such an appeal will now be made, and the committee expects to raise the necessary $5,000,000 in two years.

"As to the repertoire," says the secretary of the committee, "it will include, on an average, at least one Shakesperian and one other English classical play per week, and will also embrace new or recent plays, English and foreign, of the first order of merit.

"The architectural features of the theatre are matters for the future. The design will be the subject of competition, of course. We hope to secure the endowment before we put up the building."

Holding Up the Mirror

Mrs. Ramsay (Manchester) made a singular confession at the annual council meeting of the Women's Federation, at Manchester. "Our meetings are generally composed of people who have the appearance of age and general frumpiness," she said "I am one of them, and so I know."

WORLD'S LARGEST WOMAN WEIGHS 825 POUNDS

Miss Gertrude Burk, of Chicago, reported to be the largest woman in the world, is visiting at the home of Mrs. H. W. Hayes, at Alton, Ill. Miss Burk is twenty-two years of age, weighs, 825 pounds, stands five feet seven inches, and some of her measurements are: Arm, twenty-eight inches; waist, fifty-four; bust seventy-five. She wears No. 4 1-2 shoes and No. 7 gloves.

When born, Miss Burk weighed fifteen pounds, and at eight years of age 250. At the Hayes home she sits on two chairs placed facing each other. Miss Burk goes through doors by turning sideways, and it is a pretty hard squeeze at that.

Efforts have been made by showmen to get Miss Burk to exhibit herself, but she has never been tempted. Here parents left her an estate, and she does not need the money.

CIVIC ELECTIONS.

A copy of the petition to the City Council for the submission to the electors of a by-law for the election of aldermen by the general system, can be signed at The Intelligencer office.

DRUNKS WERE FINED.

Two drunks were brought before Magistrate Masson this morning. Harry Higgs was fined $5 and $2.50 costs, it being his second offence within a month. Arthur Fisher was fined $2 for the same offence.

RUNAWAY BOYS.

The police this morning received a telegram from the superintendent of the Mimico Industrial School, stating that two boys had escaped and to be on the lookout for them. Their names are John Finless and John Jackson, aged 16 years.

ALLEGED WIFE-BAITING.

At 4.30 yesterday afternoon the police were called to a residence on Coleman street, it being reported that a man was abusing his wife. All was quiet when the officer arrived, and the woman was instructed to lay an information against her husband if she desired.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT.

Harry and Louis Stocker, the two young men who were arrested at Peterboro' on behalf of the police here on a charge of defrauding some creditors, were yesterday afternoon brought to the city by Chief Newton. Later in the day they were liberated on bail and this morning appeared before the Magistrate to answer the charge upon which they were arrested. The parties conducted a shoe repairing business here and also dealt, but not extensively, in shoes. It appears that they obtained credit from some parties here and also secured some money. Not being able to meet their obligations they suddenly left the city.

This morning, when the matter was brought up a settlement was proposed and the result was that an amicable arrangement was effected and the young men were allowed to go. All costs in the case were paid by them.

COMET IS VISIBLE.

ROCK SALT FOR THE RIOTERS

It has been suggested that something less deadly than leaden bullets should be used by our troops against rioters. It has been suggested that bullets might be made of sawdust and grease, but this is altogether impracticable, as such bullets would simply be atomized by the force of the explosion and atmospheric resistance. The suggestion is, howevor, a good one, inasmuch as it sets one thinking on a subject that we shall have to face very shortly.

The ordinary military rifle is a very powerful weapon. It has been designed for killing at very long range, and it is quite possible that under favorable circumstances at short range the same bullet might pass through twenty men.

When we have to meet a foreign enemy in the field we know what we have to deal with, and we provide ourselves with the very best instruments that science can produce to kill and wound as many as possible, but a totally different state of things obtains when we have a lot of rioters, largely our own countrymen, armed with stones, bricks and bottles. They are quite unable to do any harm to our soldiers except at very short range, therefore it is not necessary for us to have long-range arms to combat them.

Disorderly, murderous mobs are constantly increasing in numbers, and each riot is fiercer and more determined than those that have preceded it. There is bound to be a great number of them in the future, which we shall have to deal with, whether we like it or not, therefore I hold that we should make a study of the subject and provide and use the best possible arms for the purpose.

In firing on the foreign enemy we seek to kill as many as possible; in firing on a mob our aim is to restore order with the smallest possible loss of life. But it must not be supposed for a single moment that large and turbulent mobs such as were lately found in Liverpool, and who fight like demons, can be subdued without the loss of some life. Some loss is inevitable, but let it be as small as possible, and let us, at least, attempt to avoid doing injury to any except those who are actually making war upon the soldiers or police.

[illegible]ose the officer in command had 40[illegible]diers opposed, we will say, to 20[illegible] hooligans and strikers. It would be best to arm about 200 of them with very large bore, single-barrel shotguns, having rather short barrels, and these should be provided with cartridges of the ordinary type; but, instead of lead shot, they should be loaded with very coarse grains of hard rock sale, the grains being about the size of large peas. The salt has the advantage of being light, so that it does not penetrate very far, and, as it soon dissolves and runs out of itself and as it is also an antiseptic, no surgical operation would be necessary.

Rock salt was used very successfully in the early Colonial days of New England.

Another hundred of the soldiers should be armed with the same kind of gun, but the cartridges should be loaded with a small charge of black powder and a very large charge of buckshot. These shot would not kill at a range of a few hundred feet, but at very close range of a few feet, where all the shot are in a lump, they would be fatal.

With these 300 guns the crowd could in all probability be kept at bay. Of course the buckshot would not be used until the salt had failed. Then, again, if the attack was very violent the whole 300 guns could be worked with buckshot.—Sir Hiram Maxim in The London Express.

OUTBREAK OF DIPHTHERIA

Montreal, Oct. 24.—The Protestant School Commissioners, declared the medical health officer of the city yesterday, had ordered that the Madison avenue school in Montreal West should be closed for the present owing to five cases of diphtheria, which had broken out in the place.

Health officials are at the school making a thorough examination.

Last week 29 cases of the disease were reported in the city. It was not thought by the health authorities that there was any grave danger of the disease becoming epidemic.

Opposition For Ferguson.

Brockville, Oct. 24.—G. Howard Ferguson, the sitting Conservative member for Grenville, and mentioned as likely Cabinet material in the Whitney Government, is to have opposition in his fight for re-nomination. Mayor F. S. Evinson of Prescott has announced that he will give Mr. Ferguson a run in the convention, which has been called for Nov. 1 at Spencerville. Evanson says Ferguson should retire and give some one else a chance. The Brockville Conservatives will pick a candidate on November 7

Murderous Negro.

Birmingham Ala., Oct. 24.—Frank Harrison, a negro, who Sunday killed former Deputy Sheriff Thomas Cooper, at Northport, Ala., yesterday killed Deputy Sheriff Brown Horton and a negro, wounded Deputy Sheriff Homby and another negro near Sanders Ferry, Ala. A posse is on his trail.

Madero Feared Assassination.

San Antonio, Texas, Oct. 24.—A statement was made here yesterday by a friend of Francisco I. Madero that the President-elect of Mexico has abandoned his trip to Piedras Negras because of reports that reached him from San Antonio that his assassination was planned.

CURRENT COMMENT

Congratulations to Dr. Sproule, who will look well in the royal black regalia of his Speakership.—Toronto Telegram.

A revival of the legitimate drama is reported in Japan. If the Japanese want food for thought they can find it in honorable Shakespeare.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Atlanta women who are trying to have whipping abolished in the public schools are well supported by the youth of that reform city.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Crime in Britain is decreasing. The number of convicted doing time has declined to 12,000 from last year, and 30,000 from the figures of 1904-06. The old land is improving.

A clairvoyant pleads as an extenuating circumstance that she only took money from the rich. Of course. They are the only ones who have it. It needs more than the gift of second sight to take money from the poor.—Chicago News.

A fine and costs amounting to $38 was none too much to impose upon the Port Hope man who was convicted of branding inferior apples No. 1 grade. Such offences tend to degrade Canada's status in foreign markets.—Toronto Star.

The primary object of the merchant who advertises in to-day's paper, says the Philadelphia Record, is to sell the goods that is now on his shelves and on his counters. The secondary object is to sell the goods that will come into his store next week, next month, next year.

Is Belleville to be hampered by the ward system for another year? Will the majority of the aldermen tamely accept the snap verdict which the minority gained at a council meeting many weeks ago? Or will they assert themselves and submit to the votes of the people, a by-law which will enable them to decide in advance of the next election, under which system—the ward or the general—they will elect their representatives in the municipal Council? These are questions of very great importance, which ought to receive an immediate answer.

California is the sixth State of the American Union to give the full franchise to women. Wyoming did it in 1869, Colorado in 1893, Utah and Idaho in 1896, and Washington in 1910. In many states women have municipal suffrage or the right to vote on questions submitted to taxpayers if they are taxpayers, and in most States they have school suffrage. Woman suffrage appears to be making steady progress in the Anglo-Saxon world. It is already in force in Australia and New Zealand; and its adoption by Great Britain appears to be a matter of but a short time.

The Secretary of the Clydesdale Association writes to the Canadian Farm: "Horse business seems to be slated still to continue along the same old east-and-west trade lines. Farmers in Ontario and Quebec must still look to the wheat fields of the west as the market for the large bulk of their surplus output, and westerners still come down to buy a good share of the motive power for their farms and other work. In the past this trade has been so satisfactory to all parties concerned, that there should be a big chunk of satisfaction left for them still in the reflection that this relationship is to be maintained. Great is the debt which horse-breeding owes to it, and greater still it seems as if it would become. Canada has at home the biggest and best horse market in the world, and it has stimulated, not only big, but high-class production to meet it. Improvement in horse-breeding during the past decade has been unsurpassed, and probably not equalled elsewhere. A decade ago it was a common cry that Clydesdales could not be bred in Canada with as high a standard of desirable qualities as they were in Scotland. Even high authorities often seemed to endorse this sentiment giving climatic and other specious and occult reasons for the argument. Since that time Clydesdale history has recorded enough of the Canadian breds as winners in the open classes at Canadian exhibitions to satisfactorily disprove all such pessimistic croaking.

"THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S"

The New York Evening Journal has this to say of "The Girl From Rector's": "There is a laugh a minute by actual count during the playing time of "The Girl From Rector's' at Joe Weber's Theatre. 'The Girl has caught the fancy of Broadway and the walls of Weber's bulge almost nightly with the crowds.

"'The Girl From Rector's' is a marvellously vivid personality. The company, as a whole, is one of the best seen on Broadway in many years."

"You may not be able to go to Paris, but you can go to see 'The Girl from Rector's'," said the New York Evening Telegram during the run of that piece at Weber's Music Hall. "The Girl" with any other name would make you laugh. And you can't help laughing. You may not know what you are laughing at but you laugh. If you want a tip for an evening's entertainment that will make you forget all of the rest of your troubles, go and see "The Girl."

"The Girl From Rector's" comes to Griffin's Opera House for a limited engagement of one night only, Friday, Oct. 27th. Plan at Doyle's Wednesday.

OLD FOLKS SHOULD BE CAREFUL IN THEIR SELECTION OF REGULATIVE MEDICINE.

We have a safe, dependable, and altogether ideal remedy that is particularly adapted to the requirements of aged people and persons of weak constitutions who suffer from constipation or other bowel disorders. We are so certain that it will relieve these complaints and give absolute satisfaction in every particular that we offer it with our personal guarantee that it shall cost the user nothing if it fails to substantiate our claims. This remedy is called Rexall Orderlies.

Rexall Orderlies are eaten just like candy, are particularly prompt and agreeable in action, may be taken at any time, day or night; do not cause diarrhoea, nausea, griping, or other undesirable effects. They have a very mild, but positive action upon the organs with which they come in contact, apparently acting as a regulative tonic upon the relaxed muscular coat of the bowel, thus overcoming weakness, and aiding to restore the bowels to more vigorous and healthy activity. Three sizes, 10c., 25c., and 50. Sold only at our store—The Rexall Store—J. S. McKeown, Belleville.

SPORTING NOTES

BOXING

MEYERS vs. EDMUNDS.

There was a fair attendance at the old Coleman's Hall last night to witness the boxing bout between Kid Meyers, of Belleville, and Artie Edmunds, of Toronto, the expectation being that a lively and skilful bout would be witnessed, as the boys had met before with little advantage to either, and something decisive was looked for on this occasion. For some time efforts had been made to secure a second meeting between the boys, but without success until last night, consequently the admirers of the boxing game were eager to witness a second meeting between them.

Although it cannot be said that the result of last night's meeting between the pair indicated any decided superiority on the part of either, it was apparent that Meyers had improved materially since his former meeting with Edmunds, whilst the latter was in much better trim than he was when he met Meyers before. The result was a fairly even break, although the Toronto man was the aggressor in most of the rounds. No decision was given, the audience being left to form their own judgment.

Bert Shaw, of Toronto, failed to show up for his bout with Jimmy Barry, and a couple of local boys put the gloves on for three rounds.

At the close Young Maddocks, of Boston, challenged Meyers at 135 pounds within two weeks.

BASE BALL

MAY END IN FIZZLE.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 23.—The team that flies the world's championship "baseball" pennant may have to win it in a water polo contest, or an ice hockey exhibition. If it rains a few more days Shibe Park will develop into one of the best natatoriums in the world. A cold snap may freeze up the pond and force the next game to be played on skates.

To-day's game was officially declared off early because of wet grounds. Rain fell all night, stopping early this morning. But the skies remained overcast. Borrowing a submarine boat from the navy yard, four hardy sea-faring men, who are known on dry land as umpires, essayed a trip through Shibe Park at 7 o'clock. The periscope of the submarine was barely visible as the little vessel rested on the spot where home plate once was located. After a deep-sea diving expedition through the outfield the mariners reported that to-day's game might be played only in ocean liners or airships, unless the swimmers were unusually hardy.

So the National Commission, marooned on the second storey of a downtown hotel, wirelessed to the waiting world that there was "nothin' doin'."

There is a bare possibility that even to-morrow's game will have to be called off. Unless hydraulic pumps are called into play it seems impossible to drain the playing field for play to-morrow. Nature herself can hardly do the job.

The greatest worlds series, in point of attendance, may end in a fizzle. It started with a whoop—but six days of inactivity put a blight upon the prospects. Fans could stand a day or two of rest whilst playing the games all over again around the stove, but at the expiration of the third day they were even through panning Snodgrass for spiking Baker, and today there isn't a thing in the world they can fan about.

Most of the outsiders have gone home. Both managers, too, plainly show the fear they feel over the delay. Players keyed up to a high tension for so impotant a series are liable to go all to pieces after so long a lay-off. The advantage, if there be one, rests with the Giants. Mathewson and Marquard have had a season of unrequited rest, and both should be able to do slab duty. Mathewson is believed to be McGraw's choice for the next game. Chief Bender, it is believed, will oppose him.

A FUNNY COLUMN

The Brockville Recorder has started a funny column, and the jokes are causing the people to laugh heartily. Here are a few of them:

The provincial Liberals never had a better chance of winning.

The Whitney Government is out with a capital O.

The Liberal party was never more powerful than under the leadership of Hon. A. G. MacKay.

The Borden Cabinet fails to measure up to the Cabinet of Sir Wilfrid.

Mr. Whitney has dissolved the Legislature with a majority of 70 at his back because he is a political trickster—one afraid to meet the electorate on common ground.—Smith's Falls News.

IT'S PLATINUM

Whether fashion has changed the taste or taste the fashion, there is nowadays noticeable a gradual displacement, by Platinum, of gold for fine jewelry. At first the public didn't appreciate it's quiet color, it's cold appearance, but it no longer now finds the reddish yellow gold beautiful and inspiring.

Then put into the empty saucepan the flour and butter and rub them together with a wooden spoon till smooth. Then add the milk gradually, stirring one way till it boils and thickens. Next add the soup from the basin, a little at a time, season with pepper and salt, and allow to boil at once.

If cream is used it should be put in just before serving. The soup must on no account boil after the cream is added.

STILL A MYSTERY.

No Arrests Yet In Murder of J. Walter Dick.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—Despite the efforts of some of the jury another adjournment was made in the inquest into the death of J. Walter Dick last evening, no arrests having yet been made.

Detective Tipton was placed in the witness box and swore to having followed up many suggested clues, but without the least success.

Since the time Dick was struck three weeks ago last Saturday evening the detectives have been working hard on the case and though several times they felt almost assured that an arrest would be made in a day or two, they have, as yet, not been warranted in taking any suspects into custody.

Hope of securing the man who struck Dick has not yet been given up, but on the contrary the detectives are still following several clues and feel confident that they will soon have gleaned sufficient information to run down a man whom they have suspected almost from the start.

Where Dick spent the intervening time after leaving the athletic grounds and nine o'clock is still a mystery, yet the mystery is not nearly so deep as a fortnight ago.

Coroner Graham repeated his belief that it would be unwise to close the investigation without an arrest, but went so far as to say that should the matter not be straightened out by the end of another two weeks, he would allow the jury to retire and bring in a verdict.

The new crown attorney, R. H. Greer, last evening conducted his first inquest.

Banker Walsh Dead.

Chicago, Oct. 24.—John R. Walsh, former banker, publisher and railroad owner, released a week ago from the Leavenworth Federal Penitentiary, died yesterday of heart disease.

Walsh was 74 years old. He gained pre-eminence in financial circles through astute business methods. It was on Dec. 16, 1905, however, that the financier overstepped the national banking laws in his conduct of the Chicago National Bank, of which he was president. That institution failed. On Jan. 3, 1907, Walsh was indicted on 182 counts, charged with "wrecking" the bank. Through three years of litigation, the financier fought desperately to stave off a prison sentence, but the Supreme Court of the United States on Jan. 17, 1910, refused an appeal, and on the 19th the former bank president began his five-year term at Leavenworth Penitentiary.

I[illegible]month Walsh appeared before the [illegible]ral parole board of Leavenwor[illegible]d applied for a parole, being eligible under the laws. His parole was granted Oct. 14, and the banker released after having served a year and a half of his five-year sentence.

The Haunted Chamber

"It is strange I didn't think of it before," responds Adrian, evidently struck by the suggestion. "Why, it must have been just about that time when she lost it. The more I think of it, the more I feel that it must be there."

"Nonsense, my dear fellow, don't jump at conclusions so hastily! It is highly improbable. I should say that she dropped it anywhere else in the world."

"Well, I'll go and see, at all events" declares Adrian, unconvinced.

Is it some lingering remnant of grace, some vague human shrinking from the crime that has begun to form itself within his busy brain that now induces Dynecourt to dissuade Sir Adrian from his declared intention to search the haunted chamber for the lost bangle? With all his eloquence he seeks to convince him that there the bangle could not have been left, but to no effect. His suggestion has taken firm root in Sir Adrian's mind, and at last, as he frankly says, though it may be useless to hunt for it in that uncanny chamber, it is worth a try. It may be there. This dim possibility drives him on to his fate.

"Well, if you go alone, and unprotected, your blood be upon your own head," says Dynecourt, lightly, at last surrendering his position. "Remember, whatever happens, I advised you not to go!"

As Arthur finishes this speech a sinister smile overspreads his pale features, and a quick light, as evil as it is piercing, comes into his eyes. He is looking at his home, as it stands grand and majestic in the light of the dying sun. He is looking, too, at the old tower, and at the upper portion of it, where the haunted chamber stands, and where he can see the long narrow holes that serve for windows. How little could a man imprisoned there see of the world without!

"Yes, I'll remember," he says jestingly. "When the ghosts of my ancestors claim me as their victim, and incarcerate me in some fiendish dungeon, I shall remember your words and your advice."

"You don't mean to go there, of course?" asks Arthur, carelessly while watching the other with eager scrutiny. "It is quite a journey to that dismal hole, and it will be useless."

"Well, if it distresses you, consider that I haven't gone," says Sir Adrian lightly.

"That is right," rejoins Arthur, still with his keen eyes fixed upon his cousin. "I knew you would abandon that foolish intention. I certainly shall consider you haven't gone."

They are at the hall door as these words pass Arthur's lips, and as they separate, Sir Adrian leaving him with a smile, and going away up the large hall, whistling gaily.

When he has turned one corner, Arthur goes quickly after him, not with the intention of overtaking him, but of keeping him in view. Stealthily he follows, as though fearful of being seen.

There is no servant within sight. No friend comes across Sir Adrian's path. All is silent. The old house seems wrapped in slumber. Above the pretty guests in their tea-gowns are sipping Bohea, and prattling scandal, below, the domestics are occupied in their household affairs.

Arthur, watching carefully, sees Sir Adrian go quickly up the broad front staircase, after which he turns aside, and, as though filled with guilty fear, rushes through one passage and another, until he arrives in the corridor that belongs to the servants' quarters.

Coming to a certain door, he opens it, not without some difficulty, and, moving into the dark landing that lies beyond it, looks around. To any casual observer it might seem strange that some of the cob-webs in this apparently forgotten place have been lately brushed away, as by a figure ascending or descending the gloomy staircase. To Arthur these signs bring no surprise, which proves, perhaps, that he has the best right to know whose figure brushed them aside.

Hurrying up the stairs, after closing the door carefully and noiselessly behind him, he reaches, after considerable mountings of what seem interminable steps, the upper door he had opened on the day they had visited the haunted chamber, where Ringwood and he had had a passage-at-arms about his curiosity.

Now he stands breathing heavily outside this door, wrapped in the dismal darkness of the staircase, listening intently, as it were, for the coming of a footstep.

In the meantime, Sir Adrian, not dissuaded from his determination to search the tower for the missing bangle, runs gayly up the grand staircase, traverses the corridors and galleries, and finally comes to the first of the iron-bound doors. Opening it he stands upon the landing that leads to the other door by means of the small stone staircase. Here he pauses.

Is it some vague shadowy sense of danger that makes him stand now as though hesitating? A quick shiver runs through his veins.

"How cold it is," he says to himself, "even on this hot day up in this melancholy place!" Yet, he is quite unconscious of the ears that are listening for his lightest movement; of the wicked eyes that are watching him from a chink in the opposite doorway.

Now he steps forward again, and, mounting the last flight of steps, opens the fatal door and looks into the room. Even now it occurs how unpleasant it might be should the door close and the secret lock fasten him in against his will. He pushes the door well open and holds it so, and then tries whether it will fall to again of its own accord, and so make a prisoner of him.

No; it stands quite open, immovable apparently, and so, convinced that he is safe enough, he commences his search. Then, as swift as lightning, a form darts from its concealed position, rushes up the stone staircase, and stealthily creeping still nearer, glances into the room.

Sir Adrian's back is turned; he is stooping and looking into every corner for the missing prize. He sees nothing; hears nothing, though a treacherous form crouching on the threshold is making ready to seal his doom.

Arthur Dynecourt, putting forth his hand, which neither trembles nor falters on its deadly mission, silently lays hold of the door, and, drawing it toward him, the secret lock clicks sharply, and separates his victim from the world!

Stealthily, even now—his evil deed accomplished—Arthur Dynecourt retreats down the stairs and never indeed relaxes his speed until at length he stands panting, but relentless, in the servants' corridor again.

Remorse he knows not. But a certain sense of fear holds him resolute, making his limbs tremble, and bringing out cold dews upon his brow. His rival is safely secured, out of all harm's way as far as he is concerned. No human being saw him go to the ill-fated tower; no human voice heard him declare his intention of searching for the missing trinket. He—Arthur—has been careful, before parting, from him to express his settled belief that Sir Adrian would not go to the haunted chamber, and therefore he feels prepared to defend his case successfully, even should the baronet be lucky enough to find a deliverer.

Yet he is not quite easy in his mind. Fear of discovery, fear of Adrian's displeasure, fear of the world, fear of the rope that already seems to dangle in red lines before his eyes render him the veriest coward that walks the earth. Shall he return and release his prisoner, and treat the whole thing as a joke, and so leave Adrian free to dispense his bounty at the castle, to entertain in his lavish fashion, to secure the woman upon whom he—Arthur—has set his heart for his bride?

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Oct. 23.—The foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat continues fairly good, and, as bids for No. 2 and No. 3 northern for prompt shipment were 3d higher than Saturday, sales of several loads were made, and some business was done in sample and feed wheat.

The local demand for oats is fair at firm prices. Malting barley is in demand at $1.02½ per bushel, ex-store, but the offerings are small. Exporters are bidding 64c to 65c for buckwheat.

The European demand for spring wheat flour is fairly good, and sales of third grades were made to Liverpool at 27s 3d, with 27s bid for more and refused. Winter wheat, 90 per cents., were sold to Leith at 24s 9d and Glasgow bid 24s 6d. Local trade is fairly active and firm. Sales of bran for export account were made at $22.80 per ton, Montreal freights.

Cheese is quieter, the exports for the week being only 56,071 boxes, against 62,244 a year ago. Butter is firm. Exports for week, 401 packages, against 226 last year. Eggs firm under a god demand. Dressed hogs are 25c lower.

Hogs.

W. J. Johnston, Gunns (Limited) reported $6.10, fed and watered at the market, and $5.75 to drovers for hogs f.o.b. cars.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Oct. 23.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market the receipts of live stock for the week ending Oct. 21 were 2500 cattle, 2675 sheep and lambs, 3000 hogs and 500 calves. The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 1550 cattle, 2250 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 250 calves.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for cattle since last Wednesday, prices being about steady at the decline. The supply was large, which consisted principally of rough stock from the northwest; consequently, good to choice steers were not plentiful, for which the demand was fairly good from local and Quebec buyers. The trade in common stock was rather slow, as the offerings of such were in excess of the requirements.

A few picked extra choice steers, which would have brought $6.50 per 100 lbs. two weeks ago, sold at $5.90 to $6, and odd loads of northwest ranch steers and heifers, weighing on an average 1050 lbs. each, brought $5.50, and rough, small cattle, $4 to $4.25.

In small lots, choice steers sold at $5.65 to $5.75; good at $5.50 to $5.60; fairly good at $5 to $5.25; fair at $4.55 to $4.75, and common at $4 to $4.25 per 100 lbs. There were a number of cows on the market, which brought from $3 to $4. The demand for canning stock was fair, of which the supply was fairly large, and sales of bulls were made at $2.90 to $3.25, and cows at $1.50 to $2 per 100 lbs. A few good bulls, suitable for the butcher trade, sold at $4.25 to $4.50.

Owing to the more liberal supplies of hogs, a weaker feeling developed in the market, and prices scored a further decline of 20c to 25c per 100 pounds since last Wednesday. At this reduction the demand from packers was good, and a fairly active trade was done, with sales of selected lots at $6 to $6.20 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

Supplies of sheep were larger and in excess of the requirements of the trade, consequently the tone of the market was weaker, and prices declined 25c per 100 pounds, with sales at $3.25 to $3.50. There was no change in lambs, for which the demand was good at $5 to $5.50 per 100 pounds.

A few grass-fed calves sold at 3c to 3½c per pound, and the others at from $1 to $10 each, as to size and quality.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, Oct. 23.—Cattle—Receipts, 6000 head; market choice cattle active and steady, other grades, 10c to 15c lower; prime steers, $7.25 to $7.60; butcher grades, $5.75 to $6.75; cows, $3.25 to $4.75.

Calves—Receipts, 10,000 head; market active; cull to choice, $5.50 to $9.25.

Gambling

The Chinese are noted gamblers. No less than, says a Toronto paper, 67 of these celestials were arrested on the 18th inst. "in a gaming house at the rear of 190 York Street, and for a while the Court Street and Agnes Street police stations looked like a coast port after the arrival of a steamer from the Far East. Of the number taken in, seven were charged with keeping a common gaming house, two with running a lottery, and the others with being frequenters of a gaming house. The raid was pulled off shortly after 9 o'clock by detectives and seven men in uniform. A Chinaman on the outside tried to give the signal, but Assistant Staff-Inspector McKinney was too quick for him and grabbed the door before he had succeeded in closing and bolting it. The officer had his foot crushed between the door and the casing, but the injury was not serious. A number of fan-tan sets and other devices were seized."

Are there any such gambling dens in Belleville? Certainly not to that extent, for the reason that we have not that number of Chinese in Belleville, but are there not other resorts where men who delight in games congregate? Do the police know of any?

Destructive Criticism

The Windsor Record (Liberal) reproves Hon. A. G. MacKay for denouncing the hydro-electric power scheme of the Whitney Government.

The Record in part says:

"As has been explained before, the credit of the province is not impaired by the hydro-electric plan of operation. The financial responsibility falls on the municipalities that enter the scheme. Any municipal corporation that does not participate in the benefits of Niagara power has no liabilities to assume. Likewise the Province incurs no risk—it simply provides the machinery and permits the municipalities to run it. The Province does not take any profits, which all go to the cities, towns and villages that desire to help others by helping themselves."

On which the Galt Reformer, another Liberal newspaper, comments as follows: "There is a good deal in what the Record says. It is rather unfortunate that a non-political proposition should be fought simply because it originated with a Government that is not Liberal. There is quite sufficient in the Whitney administration to attack successfully without molesting a scheme which is still in the formative stage."

Canada's Loss on Pulpwood

From an official bulletin it is learned that the exportation of pulpwood in a raw form from Canada into the United States is increasing yearly, and by just so much as this is so does Canada lose the benefits to be derived from manufacture and the increased value of raw products. The Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior has compiled statistics showing that over a million and a half cords of pulpwood were cut in Canada during 1910, worth nearly nine million, eight hundred thousand dollars. Over sixty per cent. of this amount was sent out of Canada without further labor being expended on it. The United States manufactured it into pulp and paper. From United States Forest Products Bulletins, it is seen that approximately two-fifths of the pulpwood imported by that country is manufactured into mechanical pulp, and three-fifths into sulphite pulp, and that a cord of wood produces one ton of mechanical pulp or one half ton of chemical pulp. This means that of the nine hundred and forty-three thousand cords of Canadian pulpwood sent into the United States in 1910, three hundred and seventy-seven thousand tons of mechanical pulp and two hundred and eighty-three thousand tons of chemical pulp were made. The value of this pulp, for which Canada received six million, two hundred and ten thousand dollars as pulpwood, was over thirteen and a half million dollars at the average prices paid in 1910 by United States importers of pulpwood. Thus Canada did not get one-half the amount she would have received if all pulpwood were converted into pulp on Canadian soil. As the United States does not export two per cent. of what it imports, a certain and steady market would be found for all the wood pulp of Canadian production.

Pastor Russell's Sermon

"A thousand years in Thy sight are as but yesterday."—"A day with the Lord is as a thousand years."—Psalm xc:4; IIPeter iii:8.

LONDON TABERNACLE, Lancaster Gate W., Oct. 22.—Pastor Russell spoke here twice to-day to large audiences. We report one of the discourses which treated on the difference between human and divine standards of measurement. He said part:

From the divine viewpoint, earth's history, from Adam's day until now, is merely the workday portion of a great week, whose seventh day or Sabbath of a thousand years is the 'day of Christ,' the last day, "the day of judgment" or the trial for the new world, the day in which "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God," the day in which "the righteous shall flourish and the evil-doers shall be cut-off" in the second death, the day during which God will pour out his spirit upon all flesh, as He now grants it to His servants and His handmaidens.

In the divinely arranged custom of the Jews the new day began at sunset. Thus we are in the evening or the beginning of the great seventh day of the divine week—the day which means so much of blessing, uplifting, privilege, opportunity of divine favor to our race through Messiah's glorious kingdom, which, throughout this seventh day shall reign from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth, putting down everything contrary to the divine standards and uplifting the world of mankind (bought with the precious blood at Calvary), from sin, meanness, degradation, and the tomb, up, up, up, step by step to human perfection in a world-wide Eden.

"Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt not do any work." Whoever reads carefully, intelligently, the pages of history, must be struck by the working energy that has been manifested. The pyramids and the ruins of ancient cities, and civilization, all tell us of the ceaseless struggle of humanity against the adverse conditions prevailing in the earth, including the strife against suckness and death, and by a few a noble fight against sin and further degradation.

The forbidden fruit of Eden was from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Doubtless the Creator eventually have given a full knowledge of both good and evil to our first parents. They were merely forbidden an immediate plunge into knowledge to their own disadvantage. Craving knowledge before its due time, Mother Eve disobeyed her Maker and enticed her husband into disobedience. The result has been that instead of learning the philosophy of the good at first and of evil later, they and their race have been precipitated into lessons respecting evil first, with the knowledge of good to come later.

The holy angels who have never transgressed divine law, have continually the lesson of good—an appreciation of the divine character, the principles of righteousness, etc.. The lessons in respect to evil they are gaining by observation instead of by experience—the way recommended to our first parents by the Creator, but in their ignorance rejected.

But God foreknew the course his human children would take under the influence of temptation; He foreknew that they would fall into sin and therefore, would experience its penalty, sorrow, pain, and death. While His eye has pitied his poor ertheless He has allowed His great ortheless he has allowed His grat original plan of the ages to move along slowly to a grand climax.

That climax in human affairs, we believe is near at hand. It marks a great change in dispensation. The six thousand years, the reign of sin and death, are to be completed by a terrible time of trouble which might not be improperly termed the natural result of human selfishness (sin) operating under the great principles of the new dispensation now ushering in. Selfishness as represented in the accumulated financial power and energy called trusts and combines, is about to come into conflict with selfishness (sin) represented in the combining forces of humanity, labor unions, etc. The head-on collision which thinking people foresee, and which the scriptures graphically portray, will give to society an earthquake shock; the graphic picture is a world conflagration which will involve the heavens, or ecclesiastical powers, as well as the earth, or social system, and the mountains, or kingdoms of the world.

From the divine viewpoint God is not slack concerning His promises. Only six days of the week have yet passed. The glorious seventh day in which the great Mediator between God and men will assume His kingdom powers is just at hand. Instead of thinking that God is forgetting or neglecting to fill the Messianic promises, we should with the eyes of faith realize that He is working all things according to the counsel of His own will. We should consider the matter from the standpoint that God has exercised great patience with humanity in not blotting out the race; He has been long suffering. And this assures us that the Unchangeable One would prefer that none of his creatures should perish in death, but rather that all, if they would, might turn to Him and live.—II Peter iii:9; Ezekiel xxxiii:11

The great opportunity for the masses of our race to turn to the Lord and to attain everlasting life will be after the darkness shall have passed, and when the Sun of Righteousness shall be shining forth, after the highway of holiness shall have taken the place of the broad road to destruction, after Messiah, the great King shall have dethroned Satan, the prince of darkness, from the world's control, after the Prince of Peace shall have established peace upon a proper basis. Who cannot sing heartily with the poet:

"A thousand years, earth's coming glory,
'Tis the glad day so long foretold,
'Tis the glad morn of Zion's glory,
Prophets foresaw in times of old!"

IT WAS STONE IN THE BLADDER

GIN PILLS PASSED IT

"Five years ago, I was taken down with what the doctors called Inflammation of the Bladder—intense pains in the back and loins, and difficulty in urinating, and the attacks, which became more frequent, amounted to unbearable agony. I became so weak that I could not walk across the floor.

My wife read in the papers about GIN PILLS and sent for a box. From the very first, I felt that GIN PILLS were doing me good. The pain was relieved at once, and the attacks were less frequent.

In six weeks, the Stone in the Bladder came away. When I recall how I suffered and how now I am healthy and able to work, I cannot express myself strongly enough when I speak of what GIN PILLS have done for me". JOHN HERMAN, Hamilton, Ont.

MUCH DEPENDS ON THE PONIES

Captain Scott is Making Extensive Preparations for the British Antarctic Expedition

Captain Scott, as leader of the British Antarctic expedition, is making important preparations for a second attempt to reach the South Pole should he fail to achieve his object next season. With the assistance of the members of the expedition he is hopeful, of course, of accomplishing a large amount of useful scientific and exploration work outside of the Polar dash altogether. Success depends almost wholly upon the transport arrangements, and it is this question apparently which is causing Captain Scott some misgivings. His ponies when landed from the Terra Nova at Cape Evans, were in good condition considering what they had gone through. But Captain Scott is entirely dependent upon these ponies, and should any of them fail in the coming winter, he would be heavily handicapped, and might possibly miss his goal. Should this occur, his plan is to make another attempt in the following season, provided that fresh transport can be brought down by December next.

Ctptain Scott, before giving directions for the despatch of a further supply of ponies, went thoroughly into the matter with Captain Oates, of the Inniskilling Dragoons, who is in charge of the western party's transport animals. Captain Oates suggested that mules would be better than ponies for the work required of them, and that trained Indian transport mules would be ideal.

Both Captain Oates and Mr. Meares, his helper, have seen wonderful work done by mules in Northern India, especially during the expedition to Tibet, and there seems little doubt that these animals would do as well on the voyage and in the Antarctic cold as ponies, while they would draw greater loads at a more uniform pace. The Indian transport mules used by the Tibetan expedition accomplished remarkable work at great altitudes in very low temperatures when ponies, yaks, etc., broke down.

Captain Scott accordingly decided to fall in with Captain Oates suggestion, and before the Terra Nova left Cape Evans, he wrote to Major-General Sir Douglas Haig, Chief of the Staff in India. The agent of the expedition at Christchurch has now received word from the Secretary of the Army Department at Simla to the effect that seven mules have been selected to go south, and are now being trained to sledge work at high altitudes.

Satisfactory shipping arrangements have been made with the Union Steamship Company, whose steamer Aparima, will bring the mules from Calcutta early in August. The agent at Christchurch is also negotiating with a firm at Vladivostok for a further supply of trained Siberian dogs.

QUAINT STORY RECALLED

A Colony of Cossacks Taste the Experience of Their Forefathers

One of those curious instances of quaint historical survival, of which many occur in Asia Minor, has lately come before official Russian attention in Constantinople. It is the case of a colony of about 3,000 Russian Cossacks, settled in Anatolia, Asia Minor. The forefathers of these Cossacks left Russia for voluntary exile 350 years ago. Their departure was occasioned by an attempt to enroll their names for census purposes in writing. According to the creed of these peasants the writing down of their names jeopardizes their chances of salvation, for it involves the curse of Anti-Christ, enabling him to set his seal upon them. During the whole of this time the Cossacks have kept their identity absolutely intact. They speak a Russian dialect bearing the same relation to the language of the present day as does our modern English to that of Chaucer. They wear the Russian dress of three centuries ago, and even grow herbs, uncultivated elsewhere in Anatolia, to make the dishes that were the food of mediaeval Russia. A few months ago this little band of Russian exiles found themselves suddenly faced by the same danger that threatened their ancestors in the sixteenth century. The Turkish Government having decided to call upon its Christian subjects for military service, demanded the enrollment of these men of the community who were of age, and again they were in danger of the seal of Anti-Christ. This time a split occurred. The young men urged that since they could not avoid enrollment it were best to serve in Russia among their kindred, but the older members were in favor of remaining. The arbitration of the Russian Consul in Constantinople was invoked, and through his agency, funds were obtained from the Russian Government to enable those who wished to do so to return to Russia, leaving the rest to live on a tiny ethnological island among the races of Anatolia

MINATURE NAVY YARD

How the Little Son of the Czar Amuses Himself

Peter the Great's taste for practical shipbuilding seems to have come down to his descendant, the present Czarvitsch, who is six years old. The little heir to all the Russias has had a complete miniature navy yard constructed on the banks of a small lake in the park at Tsarskoe Selo, his father's country palace. There, under the tuition of a naval engineer, he amuses himself with building model warships and other craft. In this pastime he is following the example of the Czar, Peter the Great, who, 200 years ago, disguised as a shipwright, worked for wages in a Dutch shipyard, and afterwards at Deptford on the Thames.

WOMEN GROWING TALLER

Average Height of Parisiennes is 1¼ Inches More Than Formerly

Like Englishwomen, French women are growing taller, at least in Paris. The results of the "careful and minute measurement of 255 Parisiennes, aged from 21 to 55 years," have been communicated to the Academy of Sciences. Apparently the women chosen were considered to be peculiarly representative, for the averages obtained, even from so small a number of observations, were held to have some general value. It was found that the average height of the Parisian woman had increased by almost 1¼ inches than the women of the rest of France, the present average being about 5 feet 1¼ inches.

CONFESSED TO MURDER

Vienna Lady Was Robbed, Strangled and Thrown Over a Precipice

A well-known Vienna lady, Frau Maria Weber, was discovered with a fractured skull at the foot of a steep rock in the Semmering district. The lady was well known for her charitable works and as a very successful speculator in house property, by which she had made a large fortune. She was also a bold Alpinist, and was making an excursion when she met her death. As she suffered from a weak heart the doctors supposed that a sudden attack had deprived her of consciousness and that she had fallen from a height. Her will was opened a few days ago, and it was found that she had left her whole fortune to charitable institutions, one of them existing for the purpose of supplying poor students with stipends. A laborer named Heinrich Schreckle has informed the police that he met the lady near the place of her death, robbed and strangled her, and threw her over the precipice. Frau Weber's rings and purse were found upon him, and some money which he had buried has been recovered.

MERCHANT COMBINES

Wonderful Discoveries and Explorations Made by Fearless Mercantile Adventurers of Old

Combinations of merchants are no new thing; in fact, it may be said that to a considerable extent the commercial prosperity of England has been founded upon such combines. The old trading companies exercised a marked influence in laying the foundations of Britain's commercial position.

In addition to the wonderful discoveries made by the fearless adventurers, these great English companies were concerned with some of the most romantic expeditions ever undertaken by man, though the actual objects were prosaic enough—mainly that of finding new customers for English merchandise. The big companies in addition to employing the Cabots employed such men as Martin Frobisher, Cavendish, Hudson, and Chancellor Davis, and penetrated from Europe to Cathay.

Eventually the New World was colonized as a result of the operations of the companies. Those days were indeed the most romantic in the history of commerce. In travelling to unknown parts of the world it was necessary that both merchants and sailors should be intrepid and that their vessels should be of the stoutest.

It was as a result of the workings of the companies that England obtained the sovereignty of the seas and that English-built ships were the finest in existence. Each ship was a powerful man-of-war of its time, as it was necessary at any moment that fighting should be undertaken, not merely against wild natives, but also against the hordes of pirates who infested the seas. Strength alone ruled the far seas, so the ships had to be of the stoutest and provided with guns and ammunition, so as to be ready to fight at any moment.

It was owing to our great merchant vessels that the Spanish Armada was repelled; indeed, out of our fleet there were but thirty-seven vessels of the Royal Navy, while there were a hundred of our merchant ships engaged. All the great companies provided ships, including such as the Levant Company, the Muscovy Company, the Eastland Company, the Virginia Company, etc.

The great companies of merchant adventurers not merely opened out new trade passages, but founded great colonies, and, owing to the splendid quality of their ships, gradually displaced Spain and Holland from pride of place on the seas.

Even now some of the companies exist, though in a modified form. Other new companies sprang up to take the place of the old, the most recent of which, of course, include such concerns as the British South Africa Company.

To this day one of the old companies of merchant-adventurers still lives as a powerful corporation, carrying on much of its work as in the old days. This is the Hudson's Bay Company, formed by Prince Rupert and seventeen noblemen for the purpose of importing into England furs and skins obtained by barter from the Indians of North America. This company, wealthier than ever, still buys skins from the Indians of North America as it did in the old days of the merchant-adventurers, whose glamor remains undimmed.

BOY'S FOOT BADLY SCALDED

MOTHER SAYS ZAM-BUK ACTED LIKE MAGIC.

Mrs. E. Capell, 31 Sydney Street, Hamilton, tells how beneficial Zam-Buk proved in her family. She writes: "My little boy, aged one and a half years, put his foot into a pot of boiling water. The foot was so badly scalded that the skin came off with his stocking, and he had a shocking scald, from instep to toes.

"I at once sent for a supply of Zam-Buk, and as soon as this was applied, it seemed to act like magic and give him ease. It was good to feel that Zam-Buk stopped the pain, because up to applying it I had to nurse the child all the time, but soon after I applied Zam-Buk he was anxious to get on the floor and go on with his play!

"I only used four boxes of Zam-Buk and the scald was then entirely healed; so that I consider this the best investment I ever made. I believe Zam-Buk would have cured the scald even more quickly had the child been lying down all the time, but after beginning with Zam-Buk, it made the sore so easy that he was soon on his feet and playing about again.

"I might also tell you that my next boy to him, aged five years, had some bad broken chilblains. We used Zam-Buk on these also, and it cured them. For sores of any kind, I shall in future use only Zam-Buk."

Housekeepers everywhere speak similarly of Zam-Buk. It is a sure cure for eczema, rashes, ringworm, chapped hands, scurvy, heat rashes, cuts, burns, ulcers, discharging cores, abscesses, piles, inflammation, festering and all skin injuries and diseases. 50c box, all druggists and stores, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. For skin diseases use also Zam-Buk Soap, 25c. tablet.

Cut Flower Hints

It is a mistake to mix flowers when arranging them. Generally speaking, they are infinitely lovelier if each kind is kept by itself. There are, however, some which are more effective in combination, as, for example, mignonnette. The latter is nice with any flowers not having foliage, as it supplies the required green.

When flowers have short stems and one wishes to arrange them in a shallow, wide bowl, the matter is simple if a glass be placed in the middle. In this, filled with water, the first flowers are placed. The others, put in the bowl, will entirely conceal the central receptacle, and the result is more symmetrical than could be had otherwise.

Green pottery, either in shallow dishes or jars, rarely can be improved upon for holding flowers, while some of the terra cotta jars from Italy are perfection, with their soft creaminess of tone, which harmonizes with all colors.

The unvarying decorations on the big chimney shelf in one girl's room are four tiny little Italian pots, uniform in size and design. From the time the flowering season begins they are always filled with two different kinds of blossoms, two of the jars having the same kind, and so placed as to balance or match on the shelf.

Arranging flowers for the house every morning during the summer is one of the prettiest and most artistic duties a girl can have.

The Age of Fish.

Recent observations show that the rings on the shells of the freshwater mussel are usually annual rings, though sometimes two rings are laid down in one year. The concentric markings on the scales of fishes enable us to determine the age, and we can even tell from the salmon's scales whether it has spawned or not. The age of a fish can also be told from its otoliths — small limy concretions in its ear — and even from some of its bones.

Banker Gets Five Years.

Pittsburg, Oct. 23.—Jacob W. Hill, a prominent banker of East Brady, Pa., was sentenced on Saturday to five years in the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kas., for violation of the banking laws. He was charged with making false returns to the controller of the currency. The bank failed in 1907.

OTTUMWA WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Ottumwa, Iowa.—"For years I was almost a constant sufferer from female trouble in all its dreadful forms; shooting pains all over my body, sick headache, spinal weakness, dizziness, depression, and everything that was horrid. I tried many doctors in different parts of the United States, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than all the doctors. I feel it my duty to tell you these facts. My heart is full of gratitude to you for my cure."—Mrs. HARRIET E. WAMPLER, 524 S. Ransom Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Consider This Advice.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous medicine, made only from roots and herbs, has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, confidential, and always helpful.

BOARD OF TRADE CONSIDERED MATTERS OF MUCH IMPORTANCE

Board Favors Return to General System of Electing Aldermen—A Large U. S. Manufacturing Concern May Locate Here—Provincial Assay Office—Free Mail Delivery and Other Important Matters Dealt With by the Board—Advertising the City—A Committee Appointed for That Purpose

At a meeting of the Board of Trade held last evening a number of matters of importance appertaining to the city's welfare were brought up and discussed. These included a petition to reduce the number of Aldermen to 10 and have same elected by the votes of the whole city. An effort will be made by the Board to induce a large American manufacturing concern to locate in the city, and other concerns who desire to locate in Canada will be communicated with.

Amongst others present at the meeting were: Messrs. W. B. Deacon, President; W. N. Ponton, Secretary; C. J. Bowell, W. Donohue, H. Sneyd, T. E. Wilson, T. Carlaw, J. F. Wills, J. O. Herity, J. G. Lindsay, J. Elliott, P. J. Wims, S. Burrows, A. E. Bailey, T. Blackburn, E. P. Frederick, W. B. Riggs, Dr. McCullough, Dr. Mather and A. Ray.

The Secretary read the minutes of the last meeting, which were confirmed.

The Secretary read a large number of communications, many of which had been answered and matters therein contained had been deat with by the Council of the Board.

The Mueller Manufacturing Company established at Decatur, Ill., desire to locate in Canada and the Board decided to at once get in communication with the concern, which manufactures brass supplies for water works, engineers' supplies, etc.

Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., wrote that he had endeavored to have the assay office retained here.

The matter of free mail delivery had been taken up by the Council of the Board and the proper authorities written to in regard to same.

A large number of beautiful photographs of the city taken by the photographer who accompanied the British Press delegation to the city on their visit here, were shown and much admired.

ADVERTISING CITY.

Mr. Elliott said the matter of advertising Belleville was one that he was much interested in. He suggested that the Board of Trade, the City Council unite in this matter. It would not be a great a expense to advertise Belleville and especially in the mother land. The photographs shown could be placed in frames and not be expensive.

Mr. McLaughlin endorsed the remarks of Mr. Elliott and thought it would be a good idea to have the photographs we have of various industries of the city enlarged.

Mr. S. Burrows considered it would be a good idea to have a large advertisement in the papers, and following it up personally, rather than spending too much money in having pictures on the wall.

Mr. Elliott said it was not intended to place the photographs in many places, but to spend a goodly sum in advertising.

Mr. Riggs desired to know what benefit would be derived from having photographs sent to London, Eng.

Mr. Elliott, said while in London he visited the Colonial Office and there were photographs of cities of Canada, but not of Belleville, displayed there. Views of this city should be on exhibition there.

It was decided to have this matter of advertising the city attended to by a committee composed of Messrs. Elliott, McLaughlin and Ponton.

PROPOSED NEW INDUSTRY.

Mr. Bowell said he thought it would be a good idea to have two good men appointed as a deputation to visit Decatur, Illinois, and endeavor to have a branch of the Mueller Manufacturing Company established in this city.

Mr. Wills considered the suggestion a good one, and thought we should get in touch with the concern at once and endeavor to have it established here.

Mr. J. G. Lindsay, City Engineer, said that it was a good concern, and that about $500 worth of their goods are purchased here yearly for the water works department.

On motion of Mr. Wills, seconded by Mr. Blackburn, the matter was referred to the Council of the Board to take immediate action in the matter.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

A communication from the Toronto Board of Trade in reference to having the Provincial highways placed in good condition by the Government, caused considerable discussion and remarks not of a complimentary nature in reference to the condition of the streets of Belleville.

Mr. Lindsay spoke on request regarding the possibilities of permanent pavement on residential streets. Front Street, he stated, would no doubt have a permanent pavement next spring—asphalt block. The residential streets, however, particularly in East Belleville, were now, owing to the installation of sewerage, ready for treatment, and it was satisfactory to note that an excellent pavement could be had, with material of our own, which could be treated with a solution of either asphalt, tar or tar-oid, and at a very moderate cost, of $1.25 per square yard, or 13 cents per foot frontage. A fifty foot lot, say, would mean a tax of $6.00 per year, extending over 20 years. A pavement of this nature could be guaranteed for 10 years, practically as smooth as asphalt, and at about half the cost. The matter of permanent pavement as before mentioned, was up to the people themselves. The Public Works Department was in no way responsible for the condition of our streets, inasmuch as there was practically no appropriation for the purpose, and it is only at the present moment, after sewerage is installed, that work of a permanent nature can be undertaken, so that really no time has been lost. It is satisfactory, however, to observe that the people are alive to the necessities of these local improvements and also shows indirectly that the general financial condition of the citizens and the city itself is in a very healthy and satisfactory condition. There is no reason why, in five years from now, practically every street on the east side should not be paved, and on the west side, when sewerage is adopted, it is likely to be next spring, the same should apply. Many questions were here asked and duly answered.

Dr. Mather said the streets of Belleville were in a deplorable condition.

Mr. Wills spoke of the holes on Pinnacle street, which part of the city's thoroughfares was in a disgraceful condition. If the chairman of Public Works would only fill up some of the holes it would be of some benefit.

Dr. Mather—When a sewer is made on a street, the excavation is not properly filled up.

Mr. W. B. Deacon said that Front Street was one of the worst streets to be found in the country.

Mr. McLaughlin—Automobiles have suffered much by breaking of springs on account of the condition of the street.

Dr. McCullough suggested that the matter of having certain residential streets permanently improved be referred to a committee who might lay the matter before the Council.

Mr. Bowell referred to the bad condition of various streets in the city.

A motion was unanimously adopted that the matter of having good roads in the city be referred to the Council of the Board and the latter bring the matter to the attention of the Council.

NEW MEMBERS.

Messrs. W. H. Lattimer, F. W. Millard, and A. E. Bailey were proposed and accepted as members of the Board.

Mr. Bailey, in refeerring to industries, said he liked to see a concern grow up with the city and be assisted by the citizens. Belleville, he had no doubt, was going to grow and we can help to make the city what it is designed to be—a live place.

ALDERMANIC ELECTION.

President Deacon said that the Board had previously considered the matter of changing the mode of electing the Aldermen by wards, and have them elected by the general vote, reducing the number from 21 to 10. A number of the Aldermen were in favor of the change and it could be done next year if the following petition would be signed and forwarded to the Council at its next meeting:

To His Worship, the Mayor and Aldermen of the City Council:

We, the undersigned electors of the City of Belleville humbly petition your Honorable body to submit a By-law to the City of Belleville to have ten Aldermen elected by the general vote of the ratepayers instead of by the ward system.

That said by-law be submitted at as early a date as possible so as to enable the by-law to come into effect in time for the Municipal elections to be held in January 1912.

Your petitioners believe that the interests of a city the size of Belleville does not require twenty-one men of ordinary business calibre to carry on its affairs successfully, and that with a smaller number the responsibilities would be less divided and better results follow.

Your petitioners need only mention that large institutions such as big railways, and banks of our country, having business scattered all over the country are carried on by a directorate of much smaller numbers.

Your petitioners believe that for a city divided as Belleville is, into wards of such vastly unequal size, unequal assessed value and unequal number of electors that the Ward system does not give a fair and just representation.

Your petitioners believe that while no system will be sufficiently perfect to eliminate all mistakes, that the results of the general vote system when in force in Belleville will show that that period of ten years produced better results than any similar period in Belleville's history.

Mr. Wills said that while there was some defects in the system proposed, he would be more favorable to the scheme than the number of aldermen at present in the council. He was in favor of the ward system, but that the number of wards should be reduced.

It was decided to have the petition signed and presented to the Council.

C. N. O. R.

The President spoke of the C.N.O.R. in the city and the advisability of doing something when the first train arrives here as they did in Trenton.

Mr. Wills considered the city had not in this connection got what was anticipated. It was expected that this city would have been the divisional point, in view of closing up certain streets and other concessions made.

Mr. Deacon referred to the C.P.R. coming through the city and the benefit to be derived when it came to the city. No action was taken in the matter at present.

LIGHTING CITY.

Mr. McLaughlin, who is connected with the Trenton Electric Company, spoke of the offer the company has made to the city, namely, to give 150 sixty watt lamps free for a period of 3 years, the city to erect standards for the lights. He suggested that these lights be placed on the main thoroughfares leading to the station and other parts of the city. We are doing this to help advertise the city, said Mr. McLaughlin.

Mr. Burrows—After 3 years what would the company expect the city to do?

Mr. McLaughlin—The city could contiue to use the lights and pay for same or give them up.

A motion made by Mr. Sneyd and seconded by Mr. Donohue, prevailed that the City Council be requested to look into this matter carefully and accept same if thought advisable.

PROPOSED BANQUET.

Mr. Sneyd said the banquet committee were considering the matter of holding a banquet and procuring some suitable guest, probably Mr. C. M. Hays, and would report later.

Board adjourned.

Snow In Texas.

Dallas, Texas, Oct. 23.—Snow, the earliest in the history of that section, has fallen over the panhandle of Texas and northwestern New Mexico for the past 24 hours. At Amarillo, where flowers were blooming and trees yet covered in summer verdure, the sight was novel and unprecedented. The remainder of the state is blanketed by a heavy rain with the temperature registering 50 degrees. The forecast for to-day is frost all over the state, except in the extreme south portion.

WALKING DEPOT OF COCAINE ARRESTED

MONTREAL, Oct. 23.—What is considered an important capture by the detectives was made yesterday when William Weeks was taken into custody by Detectives Fafard and Connors for selling cocaine on the street corners.

It is believed by the police that this man's capture will lessen the number of 'Walking depots' for the distribution of the drug that is fast getting a grip on young Canada.

Weeks, who has just finished a term in jail for forcibly compelling a woman to take the drug at a house in this city, where she was detained, and where she was found at that time by Chief Carpenter and Detective Fafard, Connors, Gorman and Lepage, who raided the place, served his term of nine months and has been able to keep out of sight of the police since his liberation a month ago. When taken to detective headquarters there was found on him the biggest supply of cocaine ever taken from one man. In all he had thirty-four packages, which the authorities say would have netted him a profit of over $100 if disposed of.

When arraigned this morning before Mr. Recorder Dupuois, his face was as bleached looking as it was possible to be. He pleaded guilty to having cocaine in his possession, and also to selling it, and was sentenced to two months in jail, $100 fine or two other months on both charges.

A sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis is now assured for Waterloo County and it will be located near Berlin.

An unoccupied balloon, apparently of French ownership, descended near Brighton, Eng., yesterday, and it is feared that the pilots were drowned.

Italy is reported to be hastening the completion of three dreadnoughts, by December, 1912, and has ordered 4,000 tons of armor plate from an American concern.

It is understood that the Hon. Sydney Fisher will re-enter the political arena and that Mr. G. M. Boivin, member-elect in Shefford will resign his seat to make way for his return.

Howard P. Christie, aged 14, was accidentally shot in the head by Thomas Wade, aged 9, at Penniac, N.B., yesterday. The boys were out gunning. The boy died twenty minutes later.

Mayor Guerin yesterday laid the corner-stone of the new Montreal Herald building. Interest was added to the event by the fact that it was the 100th anniversary of the foundation of The Herald.

"After 25 years' service as a commercial traveller with its vicissitudes, I found myself about a year ago very much the worse for wear.

"At that time I was suffering from nervous dyspepsia, my appetite was poor and I could not sleep, finally reaching a state bordering on complete breakdown.

"As medicine had failed utterly to help me I was forced to look into the diet end of it and what I learned induced me to try a course of Grape-Nuts food.

Several Changes Are Made in British Cabinet.

Winston Churchill Becomes First Lord of the Admiralty In Succession to Reginald McKenna, Who Becomes Home Secretary—Earl Carrington Is Lord Privy Seal and Walter Runciman Succeeds Him.

London, Oct. 24.—The British Cabinet has undergone an important reconstruction, rumors of which have been in circulation for some weeks past.

Winston Spencer Churchill, the Home Secretary, becomes First Lord of the Admiralty, while Reginald McKenna lays down the Admiralty portfolio to assume the Home Secretaryship. Earl Carrington, President of the Board of Agriculture, becomes Lord of the Privy Seal. C. E. Hobhouse, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, is appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. Walter Runciman retires from the Presidency of the Board of Education to become President of the Board of Agriculture, while the Presidency of the Board of Education has been assumed by J. A. Pease, the former Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

HON. WINSTON CHURCHILL.

Sir Edward Stratchey, Parliamentary Secretary of the Board of Agriculture, and the Rt. Hon. Alfred Emmott, M.P. for Oldham, and Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, have been promoted to the peerage.

With the exception of the exchange of offices by Mr. Churchill and Mr. McKenna, the Cabinet shuffle causes little comment. The Unionists express the fear that the change made will enable the Government to reduce the naval estimates, Mr. Churchill being considered one of the economists of the Cabinet.

Brokers on Trial.

New York, Oct. 24.—Simon Jacob Herzig, better known as George Graham Rice; Bernard H. Scheftels, Geo. Sullivan, otherwise known as "Red Letter" Sullivan, Charles B. Stone, Charles E. Belser, John Delaney and Ralph E. Waterman, composing the brokerage firm of B. H. Scheftels & Co., were yesterday afternoon placed on trial in the U. S. Circuit Court, charged with using the mails in a scheme to defraud investors and with obtaining money by false pretences. Their operations covered the whole of the United States and portions of Canada.

These men and others were captured in a raid in the Scheftels office here in September, 1910, when similar descents were made upon offices of the firm in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Milwaukee Detroit and Providence.

The trial continues to-day, and is expected to last several weeks.

A. C. Boyce For Cabinet.

Ottawa, Oct. 24.—A. C. Boyce of West Algoma may be the new Solicitor-General. A few days ago it was a toss-up whether this semi-Ministerial office would come to Ontario or go down to Nova Scotia. The odds are now lining up in favor of Ontario, with A. C. Boyce as the likely man. Quebec had the SolicitorGeneralship for many years, but Quebec has fared well in recent preferments.

There is a general idea that there is still something coming to Ontario instead of what this province did last month. Mr. Boyce is a good lawyer and good fighter and his friends here say the post is as good as his.

Child Not Drowned.

Bath, Me., Oct. 24.—That three-year-old Martin Howard Keefe, jr., whose body was found in a mill pond Saturday morning by his mother, Mildred Keefe, was not drowned, was the report made by Medical Examiner R. H. Donnell, following an autopsy yesterday. The cause of death cannot be determined until the stomach and other organs have been thoroughly examined. They have been sent to the Bowdoin College medical school.

The mother was arraigned before Judge A. J. Dunton in the Municipal Court yesterday, charged with murder and entered a plea of not guilty.

Petitions have been circulated throughout Digby County, N.S., praying for a commutation of Harry Wilson's death sentence to life imprisonment. He was convicted of the murder of his brother.

Bravery Medal For Jennings.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—For his bravery in rescuing a drowning man at Niagara-on-the-Lake on Aug. 23, A. H. Jennings will receive a medal from the Royal Humane Society of Canada.

Mr. Jennings jumped from the deck of the Corona, while the boat was at the wharf, and rescued a man in the water below, who had fallen overboard in the dark. The act involved considerable danger, and the investigation committee of the society unanimously decided that he should be awarded a medal.

Women For Jury.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 24.—That women may be drafted to complete the jury which is to pass upon the guilt or innocence of James B. McNamara is one of the interesting possibilities incident to the recent victory of women suffrage in the State of California.

Clarence S. Darrow, senior counsel for the defence, says: "The matter is by no means a joke. There is no legal or constitutional reason so far as I can see which would bar that contingency."

Will Oppose Merger.

Montreal, Oct. 24.—The Board of Control yesterday reported against the proposed street railway amalgamation, and a caucus of aldermen unanimously and practically without discussion, pledged the City Council to accept the further recommendation to oppose the ratification of the merger when the question comes before the Public Utilities Commission to-day.

Trolley's 1,200 Mile Run.

Atlantic City, N.J., Oct. 24.—A trolley car that had been driven by its motor on its own wheels all the [illegible] from St. Louis reached here to become the exhibit of chief interest at the opening of the convention of the American Electric Railway Association. Delegates from all parts of the United States are attending the meeting.

The trouble with strenuous people is that they nearly always make good.

The line separating right from wrong seems to be invisible to some people.

DARING BANK ROBBERY

Former Accountant Arrested in Fort William.

A. R. Running Is Charged With Having Entered the Branch of Royal Bank and Pointing a Revolver to the Teller's Head Compelled Him to Hand Over Nearly $5,000—Captured After Smart Chase.

Fort William, Oct. 24.—One of the most daring robberies that ever took place in this section occurred yesterday when A. R. Running, until two months ago accountant in the local branch of the Royal Bank, at one o'clock held up the teller at the point of a gun and took between $5,000 and $6,000.

Running entered the bank, and the teller, H. J. Dickson, offered to assist him to remove his trunk. He pulled out a revolver and compelled the teller to hand over a part of the money inside his cage. He backed out of the bank and started down Victoria avenue, followed by several persons to whom the teller had shouted the alarm.

The police captured Running in the coal dock section in half an hour. He offered no resistance. Running came here about six months ago. His former home was Brockville, Ont. He formerly worked in Winnipeg, at the British North American Bank. The money stolen was found in Running's room in a valise, amounting to $4,835, and bank officials say that was the amount taken.

The young man was to have been married next Thursday to a local girl. He wanted to take a honeymoon tour and was without sufficient means. Friends think his mind is unbalanced. He has not confessed.

Faces Murder Charge.

Cornwall, Oct. 24.—Of four criminal and one civil cases at the Cornwall fall assizes, which opened to-day, the case of outstanding interest is that of the King v. McRae, in which F. D. McRae, ex-reeve of Lancaster Township, is charged with the murder of William Shaw, druggist, of Carp, Ont.

The tragedy took place on July 1, near the residence of D. C. McRae, Bridge End, Lancaster Township, Glengarry, where Shaw had been one of a party which is said to have made a futile attempt to recover possession of the infant child of Dr. and Mrs. Magee of Carp. The pair had quarrelled along religious lines, Dr. Magee being a Methodist and his wife by birth and education a Roman Catholic.

After the birth of their first child last spring, troubles began and multiplied. Finally Mrs. Magee left home with the child and went to the residence of her father in Glengarry.

It was on the occasion of Dr. Magee's second attempt to get possession of his child that the fatal shooting occurred Dr. Magee was accompanied by his brother, his druggist, Shaw, who was fatally shot, and a constable named Uren from Bainsville

Earl of Onslow Dead.

London, Oct. 24.—The Earl of Onslow died yesterday.

William Hillier Onslow, fourth Earl of Onslow, had been chairman of committees and Deputy Speaker in the House of Lords since 1905. He was a Conservative. An ancestor, Sir Richard Onslow, was a Parliamentarian; he urged Cromwell to assume the kingship, but afterwards assisted the Restoration.

The fourth Earl of Onslow was born in 1853. He was Under-Secretary for the Colonies in 1887-88; Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, 1888; Governor and commander-in-chief of New Zealand 1888-92; President of the Board of Agriculture 1903-05; in Lord Salisbury's and Mr. Balfour's Ministries.

Cannot Fix Rates.

Ottawa, Oct. 24.—The board of conciliation in the dispute between the Grand Trunk Railway Co. and its machinists have come to the conclusion that owing to the G. T. R.'s system of payment it is not possible for them to lay down any schedule of minimum rate.

"The majority of the board strongly recommend that the master mechanics take up with their foreman the cases where lower rates of wages obtain, and make advances in pay according to the merit and qualification of the individual."

May Abolish Labor Gazette.

Ottawa, Oct. 24.—The departmental reorganization which is coming may cause among other things the disappearance of The Labor Gazette. This, a monthly publication of department of labor, is looked upon as useless in its present form, either as an statistical compilation or as an unbiased record of labor information. It costs $50,000 a year under the new regime, and it will cease publication or will be transferred into usefulness.

Pure Food Crusade In New York.

New York, Oct. 24.—The crusade against impure food continues with zeal in New York. Two men were sent to jail, one for thirty days and one for twenty days, and a large number of other persons were given fines ranging from $40 to $100, in the trial yesterday of cases charging violations of the pure food law. Butchers, fish dealers, milk purveyors, candy stand keepers and restaurant proprietors formed a majority of the defendants.

Steamer Strikes Shoal.

Halifax, N.S., Oct. 24.—The Norwegian steamship Halovdan, Capt. Jeruldsen, struck on a shoal three miles west of Fourchu Head, C.B., at 2.30 o'clock yesterday morning. The ship was from southern ports for Montreal with a cargo of nitrate, her cargo consisting of about 6,000 tons of this material. The steamer is broken in two, only part of the funnel above water, and she will be a total loss. The crew landed safely.

INSURRECTION SPREADS

Revolution Has Now Broken Out in Northern China.

Part of Celestial Empire Which Was Expected to Remain Loyal Is Showing Disaffection — Manchus Might Start Attacks Against Foreigners, Says English Paper—More Rebel Victories Are Reported.

Pekin, Oct. 24.—The revolutionary spirit is now manifesting itself in the north as well as in the south. Those who heretofore have believed that the northern provinces might rally around the Government are now of the opinion that secessions will follow in rapid succession.

The precautionary measures taken in Manchuria, where the Government does not permit mention of the revolution, show the anti-Government spirit in the far north. There are persistent reports that risings have been planned for the next few days in the immediate vicinity of the capital. It may be that these will not be fulfilled, but they indicate a widespread sympathy with the revolt.

The diplomatic corps have discussed the necessity of maintaining communication between Tientsin and Pekin. The military commanders report only sufficient troops to protect the legation quarter in Pekin and the foreign settlement in Tientsin, which number approximately 1,000 and 3,500 respectively. Consequently, in a serious emergency, only Japanese would be immediately available from the garrisons at Port Arthur and Dalny.

The legations have not yet considered seriously the suggestion of an English paper in Shanghai, that the Manchus, when desperate, might endeavor secretly to encourage the ignorant multitude to attack the foreigners, and thereby attain foreign intervention, which would militate in their favor, they being the only established dynasty.

It is argued that such machinations will prove more dangerous to the Manchus than to anyone else, because it is known that the rebel organization elsewhere is able the restrain its adherents. The Manchus, however, are apparently following a weak and vacillating policy, which conceivably might be followed by desperate measures.

A prominent Chinese official of western education, in discussing this possibility, gave it to be understood that precautions against such a manoeuvre should not be overlooked. The increase in the activity of the press shows either defiance or relaxation of the censorship, whether from venality of sympathy on the part of the police is unknown. The newspapers are publishing reports of rebel victories which have not yet been attained, and of Government calamities more serious than have yet been suffered, and in so doing they are displaying a greater degree of temerity than usual.

Gen. Yin Tchang, the War Minister, seems to have pushed his troops through the passes on the Honan-Hupeh border without resistance. Some, therefore, are of the opinion that he intends to attack promptly. He has, however, less troops under his command than heretofore supposed. It is not generally believed that he has above 15,000, of which only two battalions are Manchus. They are guarding the railway in the rear. Other troops intended for the Hankow campaign have not been sent owing to the fear of their desertion. There was also necessity for the retention of a strong force near Pekin.

Gen. Yin Tchang sent back several military attaches who attempted to follow the army, although they all possessed passports from the Chinese Foreign Board. The British and American attaches left here for Shanghai yesterday, intending to proceed to Hankow up the Yangtsekiang. It is believed that Yin Tchang, Manchu-like, desires to give battle, although the half-hearted spirit of his troops may deter him. On the other hand, Yuan Shikai, Chinese-like, is temporazing with the rebels. Yuan Shikai has refused to leave Changte in the special cars which have been sent for him, but there is evidence that he has despatched trusted adherents of former days as emissaries to the rebel leaders. It is believed that he is endeavoring to reach a compromise between the rebels and the throne on the basis of immediate constitutional government.

The foreign customs commissioner at Changsha has telegraphed the inspector-general of customs here that the city revolted. The officials were killed and the viceroy fled. The foreign customs men took refuge in the river boats.

It is officially stated that the diplomatic body has informed the Chinese Government that it is unable to rely on the subject of indemnities, which is so complicated and important that China had better approach the individual Governments direct.

Gunboats Have Disappeared.

Hankow, Oct. 24.—(Delay in transmission)—The Imperial gunboats have proceeded down the river and their whereabouts are unknown. The movements of the Imperial forces are a mystery. The revolutionaries believe that the Imperialists have scattered northwards.

The revolutionists have been advancing cautiously and are meeting with only guerilla opposition. Many of the rebels have cut off their queues, indicating that they will win or die.

The city of Ichang, in Hupeh Province, was taken Thursday without a fight. Recruits are flocking to Wuchang.

Flooded the Magazines.

Toulon, Oct. 24.—A repetition of the Liberte disaster was probably averted yesterday by the presence of mind of the commander of the battleship Suffren. As the vessel was preparing to leave here escaping steam overheated the partitions between the coal bunkers and the magazines, causing an outbreak of fire.

The commander without delay flooded the magazines and extinguished the flames.

CANNOT RAISE RATES.

Publishers Win Fight Against the Express Company.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—The express companies were foiled yesterday in their attempt to secure the permission of the Dominion Railway Commissioners to cancel section D. of their rate tariff the section fixing the charges on books, calendars, posters, and similar printed matter.

The application was opposed by the Toronto, Winnipeg and Montreal Boards of Trade, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and the Canadian Bill Posters' Association, as well as by individual manufacturers. J. E. Walsh represented them.

The protest was made that the rates of section D had permitted the booksellers to build up a big business in books, and that the cancellation of this section would work a great injury.

For the commissioners, Justice Mabee turned down the express carriers' application. "The express companies argue that section D is discriminatory, and urge that the shippers in classes covered by section D are favored in the matter of rates," he said. "The answer to that is that the post-office department puts in force special rates on certain classes of commodities, and it is optional for the express companies to meet those rates. They are not forced to reduce their rates, they are responsible for the result. The discrimination is not undue; it is caused by the rates of the postal department."

WANT STRICT LAW.

Associated Charities In Toronto Would Punish Wife-Deserters.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—The Associated Charities decided at their meeting, held in the City Hall yesterday afternoon, to take steps to have a law passed making it a criminal offence for a man to desert his wife and leave her in want. The suggested enactment is substantially as follows: Any husband who shall without just cause desert or refuse to provide for the support of his wife or children shall be guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine not exceeding $1,000 or a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years with hard labor, the earnings from such labor to go to the support of his wife. The Associated Charities will ask the mayor and the Board of Control to support the measure, and the local members of the Dominion House to introduce the measure at Ottawa.

At present it is not an indictable offence for a man to desert his wife. About the only protection a woman is afforded is an order of protection, which can be granted if it is shown that she is in danger of maltreatment.

The association thought also that charitable organizations should be empowered to lay information against a husband in case the wife refused.

Jeered Cook at Copenhagen.

Copenhagen, Oct. 24.—Dr. Fred. A. Cook, who was so enthusiastically welcomed here after his alleged discovery of the north pole two years ago, arrived here last night. He was accompanied by his wife. Owing to the threatening attitude of the crowd, Dr. Cook was escorted to his carriage by a detachment of police. The mob followed, jeering and hooting.

The explorer said he had given up his projected European lecture tour and will lecture only in this city. The newspapers denounce him, some of them recommending demonstrations of disapproval at his lecture.

3000 WANTED TO MARRY HIM

NEW YORK Oct. 23.—"My advice to all lonely bachelors in search of a wife to resort to the newspapers," said Hans Anderson, assistant keeper of the lighthouse on Fire Island, Long Island, as he hustled about his home on Fire Island Beach, preparing it for the coming of the bride whom he had selected after receiving 3,000 replies to a notice inserted in a newspaper, telling the public that he was matrimonially inclined.

It took Mr. Anderson just seven months to find the woman that he considered just right, and now he has wed her. She was a widow, Mrs Blanche Mitchuels, whose home was 101 West Seventy-Fifth Street. She had one child, a boy of 6 years.

Seven months ago the lighthouse keeper set forth his wants in the matrimonial line and received several bushels of replies, which he read while tending the big lamps at the Fire Island Lighthouse. One of the last he received turned out to be the right one, he says. He corresponded with Mrs. Mitchuels and on Tuesday last they were quietly wed in the City Hall.

LEAPED FROM HOUSE AND SAVED BABY

TORONTO, Oct. 23.—Just in the nick of time the nine-months-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Campbell was rescued from a little sea of mud and water at 195 Ashdale Avenue late on Saturday afternoon.

To save the child Frank Barber, of 195 Ashdale Avenue, took a leap from the second storey of his house where he was working at the time, and plunged into the mire, twenty feet below.

The child was strapped into its carriage, and its movements had started the buggy down the incline towards the pond where lay twenty inches of water. When the carriage reached the water it upset and the babe went under the water.

Barber saw it and jumped, his feet sinking nearly a foot into the soft clay. When he came to the Campbell house with the baby, now black in the face, in his arms, Mrs. Campbell met him and fell prostrate in a swoon.

Dr. A. J. Fraleigh was called and after some work over the child, brought it around again.

When Mr. Campbell arrived home he wanted to reward his neighbor, but Barber refused to take anything, even to cover the cost of a ruined suit of clothes.

RED CROSS LADIES' FINE ENTERTAINMENT

The "Assault at Arms" given in the Armories last night under the auspices of the Daughters of the Empire proved to be a most successful affair. This entertainment was given for the purpose of providing funds wherewith to endow a cot at the hospital, and to judge by the large gathering, the outcome of the concert will justify the committee's highest expectations. The programme consisted of tableaux, selections by the band, Scotch dances by Mr. Thos. Bowie and bagpipe selections by Mr. James Clarke.

While it would be hard, indeed, to individualize, we might specially mention the tableau, "Red Cross Nurses," which depicted a scene in a Red Cross field hospital, showing how the wounded are cared for by the nurses and army surgeons. This tableau was very complete in regard to detail, was well given, and was instructive, as well as very interesting.

During this presentation Mrs. A. P. Allen sang "Annie Laurie" in splendid voice.

Other vocalists who took part were Messrs. J. V. Doyle, D. A. Cameron, S. Burrows and H. Wrightmyer. The following is the programme:—

Selection	Regimental Band
Tableau	"Tenting To-night"
Bagpipe selection	Mr. James Clarke
Drill	Octavia School Cadets
Sword dance—Mr. Thos. Bowie (music by Mr. James Clarke.)
Tableau	"Officers' Mess"
Selection	Regimental Band
Tableau	"Red Cross Nurses"
Scotch dance	Mr. Thos. Bowie
Selection	Regimental Band
Tableau	"Defence of the Colors"

"God Save the King."

After the concert an impromptu dance was held in the lecture room, music being furnished by the regimental orchestra.

CARS WILL RUN DAY AND NIGHT

Traffic Will Be Continuous in London on Coronation and Following Days

For two days this summer—that of the Coronation and the day after—London will be a wide-awake modern city, for instead of all traffic and life disappearing from the streets after midnight, tubes, busses and street cars will run day and night.

At the close of the evening traffic on June 21st the underground lines will shut down for an hour. At 3 a.m. on June 22nd the trains will start again, and the service will continue without intermission until 3 o'clock the next morning, the trains being lengthened and accelerated. On June 23rd the service will be continued until 2 o'clock in the morning, and again on the following Thursday, when the State Procession takes place.

In connection with the elaborate arrangements made for the protection of Westminster Abbey from fire during the Coronation period, a party of firemen have just made a tour of inspection. The 31 hydrants in the building—all connected with a huge tank in one of the towers—were tested and found in perfect order. Special telephones, connected with the nearest fire stations, have been installed.

While the Coronation ceremony is proceeding special firemen will be placed at fixed points in all parts of the building, each being within reach of an electrical fire alarm signal attached to the regular fire alarm pedestal on the ground floor.

CORONATION CUPS BY THE THOUSAND

The King Has Ordered 100,000 of Them for His Little Guests on June 30th

The great Coronation order for the King is rapidly nearing completion at the Royal Doulton Potteries, Burslem. The order was for 100,000 cups, which are to be presented to his Majesty's child guests at the great Coronation fete at the Crystal Palace on June 30th, and for some weeks past, several hundred pottery operatives at the Burslem pottery have been helping to make the royal gifts.

About half a pound of clay, from which all impurities have first been removed, is required to make each beaker, over twenty-two tons of clay being needed for the 100,000 pieces.

The cups are being decorated, not with ordinary cheap "lithos," but by transfers from copper-plate engravings. They are of fine ivory porcelain, and on each appears a special portrait of the King (in Admiral's uniform) and the Queen, with their Majesties' autograph beneath. The portraits were specially taken and the autographs specially written for the purpose of these beakers. In addition the gifts bear their Majesties' monograms, with the inscriptions: "Coronation of their Majesties King George V. and Queen Mary, June 22, 1911" and "Presented by their Majesties, Crystal Palace, June 30, 1911."

The cups are English throughout—made by English operatives, and decorated with English transfers in English colors. The decoration is an attractive chocolate color.

No duplicate can possibly be obtained, consequently their value will speedily appreciate. The cups which Messrs. Doulton made for the Coronation of King Edward nine years ago, under similar circumstances, have already brought as much as 7s. 6d. each in the sale room.

QUEEN'S TROUSSEAU

One of the Prettiest Details of It Will Be a Fan

One of the prettiest items of Queen Mary's Coronation trousseau will undoubtedly be her fan.

Mr. Wollescroft Rhead's design, which was recently accepted, was so intricate that the Worshipful Company of Fanmakers had some difficulty in securing its acceptance by the lace-workers.

The fan measures about twenty-two inches, and will be entirely British. In the centre of the leaf there is a cartouche with the Queen's cipher surmounted with the royal crown. On the field of the fan there are the arms of England, Scotland, Ireland, and the new arms of Wales.

The most picturesque features is the imperial touch supplied by the symbols of the four great overseas dominions—India, Canada, Australia and South Africa. To complete the design and to unite the imperial emblems to the Mother Country the designer has included the rose, shamrock and thistle.

The sticks are of yellow tortoiseshell from India. They are decorated with the royal crown and the Queen's cypher, and are of exceptionally artistic design.

A gold pin with a diamond at each end holds the fan sticks together. A small white silk tassel completes what is really a masterpiece.

THE CZAR AND AVIATION

OTTO OF BAVARIA

The Unhappy and Despondent Ruler Is Kept In His Castle

Though physically as robust as ever, the mental condition of the unhappy King Otto of Bavaria is declared to be growing worse. Excluded from the outside world in his castle, the King's only visitors are the Court doctors, who visit him at stated intervals, in order to report to the Regent and government. No one else enters the Monarch's presence, even his own mother is prevented from seeing him, as any communication from the outside maddens him. He spends hours daily in dreadful melancholy, his eyes fixed on the floor, and very seldom uttering a word. On one recent and rare occasion he displayed intelligence and appeared to be searching for something. When a keeper inquired the cause, the King replied slowly and impressively, "I am looking for the past." Then he relapsed into his customary despondency. Formerly some show of court etiquette was observed, but the King's indifference to all his surroundings rendered this a ghastly farce, and it was abandoned.

REFUSING TO DIE WAS KILLED

Tragic Murder of an Artist Whose Last Picture was "Life is Sweet"

Mademoiselle Amelie Lhermitte, an artist who has exhibited regularly at the Paris Salon for the last ten years, gaining medals and other honors, has been brutally murdered by her brother at Angers, in singularly tragic circumstances. Mdlle. Lhermitte, who resided in Paris, went to Angers in response to a letter received from her brother. On the following morning she was seen at her bed-room window shrieking for help, while her brother rained blows on her head with an axe.

When the neighbors broke in the door they found her dead, the murder having been completed with a hammer.

The victim was only 32 years old. One of her latest pictures was entitled "Life is Sweet." The murderer, when arrested, stated that, being destitute, he invited his sister to die with him, and she refused, whereupon he killed her.

FREE FIGHTS IN PARLIAMENT

Some of the Memorable Combats that Have Taken Place in the British House of Commons

Vigorous hand-to-hand struggles are not common at St. Stephen's, but they are not by any means unknown. As a matter of fact, fights have taken place at the House of Commons ever since the time of Cromwell, when his soldiers had to clear the House at the point of the bayonet to prevent bloodshed and wholesale destruction.

"Judas"

Perhaps the most remarkable scene of this description within modern times happened on July 27th, 1893. Mr. Chamberlain was speaking against the late Mr. Gladstone, and at ten o'clock, when the closure fell, someone snouted out "Judas," and this very unparliamentary epithet was reported to the Chairman, who, however, declared that the offensive expression had not been heard by him. He ordered the division to be proceeded with, whereupon several members of the Tory party refused to leave their seats. A few seconds later war was declared by a Conservative seizing an Irish member by the coat-collar, and within a short time there was a regular free fight in the House, in which Colonel Saunderson was rendered hors de combat after he had scientifically "floored" one or two of the "enemy." John Burns, it is said, helped to pull the combatants asunder until the arrival of the Speaker put an end to the unseemly proceedings.

Colonel Saunderson took part in many disputes at Westminster. He fell out with Mr. William Redmond one day, and it looked as if the pair would settle their differences with blows. The Colonel, it appears, had commented very strongly on Irish violence, and Mr. Redmond took each and several of the comments as a personal insult, suggesting that the redoubtable Colonel should meet him in the Lobby after the sitting. The Speaker, becoming aware of this sent a note to the chief of police at St. Stephen's, asking him to take up a position in the Lobby and prevent a fight between the hon. members. The expected, however, did not happen, for when Mr. Redmond and the Colonel met in the Lobby they calmly talked matters over, and finally wished each other a cheery "Good day."

"It is a Lie"

Some years back, when the House happened to be in Committee, the Irish members refused to go into the lobbies for division. The Chairman sent for the Speaker, and that gentleman promptly "named" the offenders, and their suspension was moved and carried. The Irishmen refused to budge an inch until a body of police walked into the House. Even then it was as much as the constables could do to "move them on." As a matter of fact the police and the Irish members had a regular fight before the former conquered and carried the latter bodily out of the House.

During the debate on emancipation in the Commons Mr. Brougham, afterwards Lord Brougham, turned towards Mr. George Canning and bitterly exclaimed, "You have exhibited the most incredible specimen of monstrous truckling for the purpose of obtaining office that the whole history of political tergiversation could furnish." Canning replied, very quietly, "It is a lie!" A deathly quiet reigned in the House for some minutes, and one could have heard a pin drop. Presently, however, a lively debate took place between the members present, some of whom advised Mr. Brougham to withdraw his remark and apologize, while others requested Mr. Canning to do the same. Finally it was suggested that the couple should be committed to the Serjeant-at-Arms. The necessity for this gentleman's intervention happily did not arise, for the two disputants settled the matter between themselves and peace was once more restored.

A terrible scene occurred in the Austrian Parliament some years ago. A member made a twelve hours' speech with the object of obstructing a Bill that it was proposed to pass into law. A member who had had enough of the "talk" made a grab for the President's bell, and was promptly seized by other members. A fierce struggle ensued, members being guilty of the most outrageous violence. One man had half of his hair torn out by the roots, while another was nearly throttled. Chairs were flung all over the place, and one member drew an evil-looking knife and, brandishing it aloft, shouted, "I will stab all who approach me!" The knife was wrenched from his hand before he could use it.

Off With His Head

In earlier times it was the custom to commit a British political prisoner to the Tower of London, where he was often shortened by a head by means of the ill-famed axe and block. More recently he was transported to the memorable Botany Bay, or one of the other British penal colonies, but now that transportation is a thing of the past he is either shut up in the House of Commons itself or in the ordinary jails of the Kingdom. There is room for two prisoners only at St. Stephen's, and any beyond that number would probably be boarded out at Holloway or Pentonville.

The Parliamentary "cells" are situated 30 feet up in the Clock Tower of the Commons, and they are replete with every modern convenience and command an admirable view of the Thames, the Embankment, and New Palace Yard. Each "cell" consists of a comfortably - furnished sitting - room, measuring about 19 feet by 14 feet, and a couple of bedrooms, one for the prisoner and the other for his jailer. All food is supplied by the refreshment department of the Commons, but the prisoners are obliged to pay for their meals.

LADY DOCTOR WAS MURDERED

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 24.— Dr. Helen Knabe was found dead, her body cut and bruised, in a bedroom of her apartment, to-day. The police are satisfied that she was murdered, but they have been unable to discover a clue to the murderer.

Dr. Knabe's body was found, when her assistant, Miss Catherine McPherson, entered the apartment.

The body and the bed upon which it lay were covered with blood, but no weapon was found in any of the rooms, nor was it apparent that a robbery had been committed. All the windows were closed, though the physician, who was devoted to physical culture, habitually slept with the windows open.

Augusta Knabe, the physician's cousin, and the latter's stepfather, Franco Kropp, told the police that Dr. Knabe had no enemy so far as they knew. She was thirty-five years old and a graduate of the Indiana College of Medicine.

Dr. Knabe recently resigned as head of the State bacteriological department, because, it is said, she wished to devote her spare time to the study of hygiene and physical culture.

MURDERER WAS FOUND NEAR HIS VICTIM

SUDBURY, Oct. 24.—Peter Herachuck, a Pole, eighteen years of age, is dead at Victoria Mines with the left side of his head blown in and Nick Smyth is in jail charged with the murder. There appears to have been bad blood between these men for some time. On Saturday morning, a couple of men walking in the bush, heard a shot near Mond Village. A few minutes later they came across the victim bleeding to death. They ran for help to the village and on return found that the body had been dragged away some distance and partially covered with dirt and leaves. Nick Smyth was discovered shortly afterwards hiding under some logs. When questioned he admitted firing the fatal shot, but would say no more. The Coroner and Crown Attorney are now working on the case.

MERE SKELETONS THEY PRAYED CONTINUALLY AND WORKED PUMPS

Holy Ghost and Us Society Had a Terrible Time on Atlantic—Sanford Gets Bail—Their Yacht Coronet is Disabled—Seven on Board Died From Scurvy

PORTLAND, Me., Oct. 24.—The Rev. Frank W. Sandford, leader of the Holy Ghost and Us Society of Shiloh, was brought to this city last night in the custody of the county authoritis after the arrival of the yacht Coronet.

His arrest was made on a writ in a civil suit brought by Mrs. Florence N. Whittaker, wife of one of the Holy Ghost and Us leaders, who alleges that she was illegally detained aboard the Kingdom, formerly one of the Sandford fleet. She was released on habeas corpus proceedings in June, 1910, and since then the authorities have been awaiting the appearance of Sandford within the jurisdiction of State that they might place him under arrest.

Last night two men were brought ashore from the Coronet by the health authorities and placed in a local hospital both suffering with scurvy. Seven others, six men and one child, died of the same disease and were buried at sea during the past few months, according to statements made by members of the crew. Many others have had touches of scurvy. The men taken to the hospital were John Cummings, a sailor, whose home is in Canada, and John Holster, a Maine man, for seven years past a missionary to Africa. Both are in a serious condition.

Although the Coronet made port early in the day, it was not until nearly dusk that any other than the health officers were allowed to board her. Immediately the quarantine flag was lowered, Deputy Sheriff Arthur M. Fickett, of Cumberland county, who had been waiting for hours, clambered aboard and took Elijah Sandford into custody. He was later released on bail.

In the vessel's larder there was not a loaf of bread, and no meat had passed the lips of any of the religious seafarers for many days. So exhausted and weakened were the crew and passengers that it is doubtful if they could have kept their craft afloat for many days. For four days the Coronet had struggled against the elements, but never once did her commander ask aid, his only requests from passing vessels being for food for the crew and passengers.

The Coronet had been at sea since June 27, when she sailed from a Haitien port, and was last reported on September 27, when she was sighted by the steamer Lapland, flying signals which indicated that she was short of provisions. The Lapland sent relief and then proceeded. At that time the Coronet was off Cape Sable. For the last week the staunch craft had been beating her way along the coast, her crew despairing of her ability to reach port.

On board were 55 people, including Rev. Sandford and his wife and five children. Besides the 31 survivors of the wreck of the barkentine Kingdom there were 24 persons who were on the Coronet when she left Maine waters. The party included eleven children, ranging in age from four to sixteen years, and just nineteen able-bodied men.

Worn by the terrible hardships of months at sea, half starved, and with faces emaciated, it was a ghastly looking company of seafarers which confronted the boarding party at quaran[illegible]. For seven days the men and w[illegible] have been working incessantly a[illegible] pumps, in reliefs of three watches, and this terrible labor in their weakened condition had reduced even the strongest men of the crew to mere skeletons as compared with their former selves.

While they worked at the pumps men and women prayed incessantly. In the storm every small boat was smashed to kindling wood, and if the yacht had foundered the Shilohites would have all perished without a chance to save themselves.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

HALED TO COURT

The proprietor of a billiard room in this city was before the Magistrate this morning for allowing play in his billiard room after prohibited hours. Judgment in the case will be given at a later date.

A SECOND ESCAPE

Delbert and Leslie Poppa, two lads 9 and 7 years of age, who are wards of the Children's Shelter, for the second time this week left that institution this morning in an unceremonious manner. The police were notified of the lads' escape.

ANOTHER SUDDEN DEATH

On Monday afternoon death came suddenly to Mr. James Sloan, who resided in the township of Sidney, near the town of Trenton. It appears that Mr. Sloan was assisting in the killing of a beef at the Harry Bros.' farm in Sidney, when he fell to the barn floor, expiring immediately. Heart disease was the cause of death. Deceased, who was about 55 years of age, was unmarried. He had lived all his life in the township and was much respected by a large circle of friends.

WEDDING AT ROSLIN

A wedding took place this morning at the Anglican church at Roslin, at which the Rector, Rev. Mr. Lyons, officiated. The groom was Mr. Wm. E. Wilson, of Marlbank, and the bride Miss Stella Burley, daughter of Mr. J. W. Burley, of Marlbank. The couple were unattended.

After the ceremony the wedding party came to the city and partook of a sumptuous wedding dinner prepared for them by Mr. Wm. Smith, of the Kyle House. Later Mr. and Mrs. Wilson left for a trip to Buffalo, Rochester and other places. Returning they will take up their home at Marlbank.

DIED IN THE NIGHT

Mr. R. E. Young, Chief Dominion Geographer and Superintendent of Railway Lands in the Department of the Interior, was found dead in his bed at his home in Ottawa on Tuesday morning. Mr. Young, who was a son of Mr. James Young, who was manager of the Consolidated Bank here for some years. The deceased who attended the High School and Albert College here, was known to a number of people here. The late Mr. Young was born in Georgetown, Ont., in 1861, and was therefore in his fiftieth year. He was of Scotch and English parentage. He was married in 1887 to Miss Winnifred Frances Lowe. Mrs. Young died two years ago. He is survived by four daughters, Misses Winnifred, Edith, Patricia and Elizabeth, all at home, and by two brothers, C. W., of the Cornwall Freeholder, and W. C., of Belleville. The Ottawa Journal gives the following particulars of Mr. Young's death: "The news of his death came as a great surprise, as he had worked up till the last, only leaving his office at 6 o'clock last evening, and was at that time in apparent good health and spirits. He retired as usual last night, without giving the least intimation that he was feeling unwell. Being a great student and lover of books he was in the habit of reading late into the night, and had apparently passed away while indulging in his old habit, as Morley's "Life of Gladstone" was clasped in his right hand. His death is attributed to heart disease."

DOG STOLEN

Mr. Raymond Zufelt reported to the police that a hound belonging to him had been taken from a shed in rear of premises situated on Front Street.

A LEAKY HYDRANT

The hydrant at the corner of Ann and Bridge streets is leaking badly. We have been told that the authorities have been informed of the fact, but nothing has been done in the matter.

TRAVELLER FOUND DEAD

George Cameron, a traveller for Armour & Co., who frequently visited Belleville, was found dead in bed in the Oswegatchie House at Ogdensburg, Saturday morning. Heart disease is given as the cause.

HE HAD DISAPPEARED

The police yesterday afternoon were called to Franck street, it being reported that a man was acting in a strange manner. The party in question was gone when the officer arrived upon the scene. From appearances the man was a tramp.

FARMERS' BANK DEPOSITORS.

A meeting of the residents of this district who were depositors in the defunct Farmers' Bank, was held here yesterday afternoon and was largely attended. Ald. Parks, who was manager of the local branch, presided, and after Mr. Mainstorm, of Lindsay, had addressed the gathering it was decided to petition Parliament for relief for the depositors. A committee, composed of Messrs. J. S. McGurn, of Belleville, and W. A. Owens, of Sidney, was appointed to interview depositors and secure their signatures to the petition.

FORGED PROMISSORY NOTE

A man named George Pringle, who resides in Thurlow Township was this morning before the Magistrate, charged with uttering a forged prommissory note to the amount of $30 and payable to John Reid. It is alleged that the accused procured the signature of R. Pringle to the note as a joint maker, when the said R. Pringle was not a party to the transaction. The note in question was dated January 6th 1911, and was payable in three months. The accused pleaded not guilty to the charge. As the Crown was not prepared to proceed in the case, an enlargement was made until Thursday next, November 2nd. In the meantime Pringle will have to remain in jail.

CHARGE OF FORGERY

Wililam Whiteman, who resides in the city, was before the Magistrate this morning on a charge of raising a cheque, or in other words, charged with forgery. It appears that Whiteman secured from Mr. T. Manley, with whom he was employed, a cheque for $5. Whiteman raised the cheque to $25, and from a party whom he owed, had the cheque cashed, paying his indebtedness and receiving in cash about $16. The raising of the cheque was subsequently detected and Whiteman was arrested. Mr. Flint appeared for the accused and pleaded guilty to the charge. By the consent of all parties concerned in the matter, judgment was reserved for one month, and in the meantime Whiteman is out on bail, himself in $200 and one surety of $100.

WAS INSANE WHEN HE ROBBED BANK

FORT WILLIAM, Oct 24.—One of the most daring robberies that ever took place in this section occurred yesterday, when A. R. Running, until two months ago accountant in the local branch of the Royal Bank, at one o'clock held up the teller at the point of a gun and took between $4,000 and $5,000.

Running entered the bank, and the teller, H. L. Dickson, offered to assist him to remove his trunk. He pulled out a revolver and compelled the teller to hand over a part of the money inside his cage. He backed out of the bank and started down Victoria Avenue, followed by several persons to whom the teller had shouted an alarm. The police captured Running in the coal dock section in half an hour. He offered no resistance.

Running came here about six months ago. His former home was in Brockville. He had worked in Winnipeg at the Bank of British North America, and but recently joined the Royal Bank.

The money stolen was found in Running's room in a valise, amounting to $4,385, and bank officials say that was the amount taken. The young man was to have been married next Thursday to a local girl. He wanted to take a honeymoon tour and was without sufficient means.

Friends think his mind is unbalanced.

BIG STRIKE PROBABLE

Cut Flower Hints

It is a mistake to mix flowers when arranging them. Generally speaking, they are infinitely lovelier if each kind is kept by itself. There are, however, some which are more effective in combination, as, for example, mignonnette. The latter is nice with any flowers not having foliage, as it supplies the required green.

When flowers have short stems and one wishes to arrange them in a shallow, wide bowl, the matter is simple if a glass be placed in the middle. In this, filled with water, the first flowers are placed. The others, put in the bowl, will entirely conceal the central receptacle, and the result is more symmetrical than could be had otherwise.

Green pottery, either in shallow dishes or jars, rarely can be improved upon for holding flowers, while some of the terra cotta jars from Italy are perfection, with their soft creaminess of tone, which harmonizes with all colors.

The unvarying decorations on the big chimney shelf in one girl's room are four tiny little Italian pots, uniform in size and design. From the time the flowering season begins they are always filled with two different kinds of blossoms, two of the jars having the same kind, and so placed as to balance or match on the shelf.

Arranging flowers for the house every morning during the summer is one of the prettiest and most artistic duties a girl can have.

DEATH'S CALL

Deceased, who was 22 years of age, had been ill for three years, being a victim of lung trouble. CURRENT COMMENT

If you desire to see the ward system abolished, call at The Intelligencer office and sign the petition.

It is the duty of every alderman who is opposed to the big and inefficient Council to attend the meeting on Monday night next.

Business is booming in the construction department of the C.N.O.R. The train men are working early and late.

Canada is credited with consuming 12 litres of beer per capita per annum. The United States consumes 46 litres, Belgium 221 litres, and Bavaria 240 litres. A litre is 0.22 of a gallon.

Conservatives, and all who support the Whitney Government should attend the ward meetings next week. Foster, Samson and Ketcheson on Monday night; Baldwin and Bleecker on Tuesday night and Coleman and Murney on Wednesday.

The London Times is indignant, and repudiates what a number of journals have laid at its door. It appears that one of the New York Times' editorials on the rejection of reciprocity by Canada has been attributed to the London Times. Is it any wonder that the latter journal repudiates it?

The commission which has been, and still is, studying the labor situation in Great Britain, find that in that country, as on this continent, union leaders are willing to take all that is offered to them, but decline to make themselves or their constituents responsible for the fulfilment of any obligation in the matter.

An inquiry into the work and organization of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa is promised by Mr. Burrell, the new Minister. The result should be instructive, at least in a negative way. It may show how Mr. Fisher was able to spend so much money and get so little in the way of results. All these departments require probing to the core.

Here is an item for those "mitey" men who were touring the country a few weeks ago advocating reciprocity in cheese: "There was the smallest attendance on the Watertown Board, Saturday that there has been this season. The buyers were not very eager for cheese, thus the market was very dull. There were 4,512 boxes sold, 262 boxes less than a year ago, and for less money than has been paid for the past three years of corresponding days, the price beng 13 3-4 and 13 7-8 cents."

There has been a steady decline since 1906 in the Ontario production of petroleum from 588,959 bbls. to 314,411 bbls., in spite of the fact that 1 1-4 cents a gallon bounty was paid by the country. Last year 194 wells in the Petrolia district were abandoned, 148 in Tilbury, 8 in Raleigh and 5 in Romney, and the pumps were removed from 649 Petrolia wells, although some of them are still being operated.

The Methodist Church property, situated on Great St. James Street, Montreal for which that body is now offered $2,000,000 was purchased from the late Andrew Allan for $70,000, there being about 77,000 feet in the square, and the church proper is said to have cost in the neighborhood of $240,000. The land at that time, twenty-three years ago, cost about one dollar per square foot, while at $2,000,000 the price for the lot and church equals about $26 per foot. Not a bad speculation.

The curse of strikes is now being realized in the North West, and no one can foresee what may be the result. The probabilities are that household fuel may be uncomfortably scarce in many parts of Saskatchewan this winter because of the strike of the western coal miners, which has been going on for months now, and does not seem to be near an end yet. Years will not make up the amount of wages the men have lost; and profits from the mines will not be expected for long after operations are resumed. It is hoped that the new Minister of Labor, who is considering the matter, may solve the difficulty, and the men return to work.

VALUE OF AN INDUSTRY

Its Great Monetary Worth to the Community Where It Is Located

An interesting and accurate calculation has been made of what an industry employing 1,000 hands means to a community:

It increases the population by 5,000 consumers.

It adds $90,000 to the value of public utilities.

The assessment is increased by $600,000.

It pays out annually in salaries and wages $559,800.

It represents, through its buildings and the houses of its employes an investment of $2,000,000.

The annual expenditure in food would be $63,000 in meat, $9,600 in potatoes, $5,000 in sugar, $18,250 in milk, $65,700 in butter, and $27,600 in eggs.

Summed up, this means that an industry employing 1,000 hands is worth $221,600 a year to the farmers of the district.

The expenditure in clothing would be $168,750.

With the annual payment of taxes added to the total expenditure on buildings, food and clothing, you have in all $2,428,350 turned into the town in one year through the coming of one great industry. In conclusion, one may again note the prodigious results which are affected by the presence in Canada of some 435,000 artisans. In round figures these men would mean at least $1,056,322,250 to the Dominion.

An industry employing 1,000 hands may be regarded as a large one, but the same percentage of results would follow in larger or smaller plants, so that one can easily begin to reckon for himself what any particular industry would mean to a town or city.

SENSIBLE HORSES

The Almost Human Intelligence Which Is Developed In Them by Van Work

A curious illustration of the sense displayed by horses was given in London during the hearing of a claim by Henry Thorpe, an ex-soldier, and a porter, employed by the Post Office, against James Allen, to recover $250 damages for personal injuries. It appeared that the defendant's van was backed against a platform at Mount Pleasant, and the plaintiff proceeded to unload it. Before he had finished the doors of the van next to him were slammed, causing the defendant's horse to start off, and the plaintiff was flung to the ground, injuring his shoulder. A witness said the horses engaged in this kind of work had so much sense—almost human, in fact—that no warning was necessary to say the van was unloaded, and it could start off. Directly the doors were shut and the bolt put up the horses would start away just as if they had been told to do so, and it was a rare thing for them to make a mistake. It was contended that the defendant was not liable for damage done by a startled horse that bolted. The jury awarded plaintiff $75 damages and costs.

TWO TOWNS CAPTURED

Rebel Success Disheartening to Chinese Government.

Revolutionaries Are Elated and Are Gaining In Numbers as a Result of the Victorious Uprising In Kiukiang and Sian, Two Important Centres—People Burned the Governor's Yamen.

Pekin, Oct. 25.—Two important towns, Kiukiang, in the Province of Kangsi, and Sian, capital of Shensi Province, have fallen into the hands of the revolutionists, very materially extending the area of the uprising, disheartening the Government and giving new confidence to the leaders in the movement to establish a republic. Sian was regarded as a Government stronghold.

Consular reports from Kiukiang say that the people of that town rose on the evening of Oct. 24. They burned the Taotai's yamen and declared in favor of the rebels. The Imperial troops made no serious resistance. Gen. Yin Tchang, who commands the Government forces, still remains in Sinyangchow. He demands reinforcements before taking the offensive, as he has learned, according to his own report to the administration here, that the rebels are abundantly supplied with artillery and have many adherents.

A steamer from Ichang, crowded with Chinese soldiers, reached Wuchang yesterday under a white flag Tenhetre Point, which is being fortified by the rebels, is considered of great strategical importance, as it commands the railway and river approaches to Hankow.

A messenger from Hankow says that the revolutionaries have advanced to a point eight miles north of that city, near to where the Imperialists in unknown numbers are entrenched in a position protected by swamps on both sides of the railway.

One of the latest messages from Sian says that the rebels are making overtures to the Mohammedans in the province of Kansu, which lies to the north of Sze-Chuen. The Mohammedans have been in open rebellion since August, and the sender of the message believes that the two revolutionary parties will join forces.

Kai-Feng, in the Province of Honan, is in a serious position because the local officials have practically abandoned the whole place to the soldiers. There have been several clashes between soldiers and police and there is much danger of rioting.

Pessimistic reports are at hand from Soo Chow, Tsi-Nan-Fu and other centres. Numerous soldiers have deserted the Chinese gunboats and joined the rebels.

It is officially reported that no news has been received from the tenth division, which left Ching Tang Tao by steamer on Oct. 17 for Hankow.

Fears are entertained for the loyalty of the garrison at Kiang-Yin, a strong fort on the lower Yang-Tse.

There is no information as to the whereabouts of Admiral Sahs' gunboats.

Imperial Successes.

Shanghai, Oct. 25.—A Chinese official despatch from Ying Tchang, the War Minister, reports Imperialist successes over the rebels on October 20 and 21 at Sinyanchow. The despatch states that the rebels had more than 600 killed while the losses of the Imperialists amounted to a few score.

A long letter from Gen. Liyuanheng to Admiral Sahs, whom the rebel leader addresses as "My Dear Master," is published. Gen. Li justifies his action in joining the rebels on the ground that when the revolt broke out his own troops were absent. He attempted to escape, but was captured and forced to take command. Since then, he says, he has found all the men, from the highest to the lowest, of one mind and thinks it better to belong to a united than a disunited party.

Communication, even by wireless, with Honan is cut off. The troops in that province were recently disaffected, but the trouble was settled by the payment of their wages.

Continuous Skirmishes.

London, Oct. 25.—A special from Pekin, dated yesterday evening, says that throughout Monday there was continuous firing and skirmishing between the rebels and the Imperialists near Hankow. The insurgents displayed bold tactics and engaged the Imperialists at many points.

In the meantime, says the correspondent, the northern army is pushing its way to the south, advancing with caution and clearing the ground in front scientifically with artillery. The remainder of the Government forces are fighting without any regard to order or method.

Many Delinquents.

Montreal, Oct. 25.—The sale of city properties by the sheriff for non-payment of taxes this year is the largest on record. The average number of lots placed under the hammer at such sales has been up-to-date seven or eight, but this year twenty-seven lots were disposed of.

The original list included 359 lots, but as usual, the taxes due were paid on most of them before the hour of the sale, and 27 were finally put up.

Will Resume Practice.

Montreal, Oct. 25.—On the eve of his retirement from public life, His Honor L. J. Tweedie, Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, who is at a prominent local hotel, announced that he will resume the practice of his legal profession. At the same time he admitted the possibility of being found in the political arena at some future date.

Painting For the "Victory."

London, Oct. 25.—Lord Strathcona yesterday presented to the museum on board Nelson's battleship, the Victory, a handsome painting representing the fleet leaving Gibraltar. The King telegraphed Lord Strathcona His Majesty's warm appreciation of the generous gift.

JEWS ARE REFUSED

Settlement In Western Australia, as They Want Species of Autonomy

Although the British public hears but little of the work done by the Ito, that is the Jewish Territorial Organization, founded by Mr. Israel Zangwill, of London, it is nevertheless trying harder than ever to find a country in which Jews may settle down and call their own. Mesopotamia was high in favor as the site of a Jewish settlement on a considerable scale—the principal object of the organization. It seems, however, that this region has now fallen into the background, principally on account of the opposition of the Turkish Government. And Western Australia has come into favor. Western Australia is by no means a new region so far as the Ito is concerned. Some years ago Mr. Zangwill was both directly and indirectly in negotiation with its government on the subject of a Jewish autonomous settlement within its boundaries, and it was understood then that the negotiations had broken down, not because the West Australian Government had any objection to a Jewish immigration, even on a large scale, but because they could not consent to any species of autonomy.

CANNOT RAISE RATES.

Publishers Win Fight Against the Express Company.

Toronto, Oct. 24.—The express companies were foiled yesterday in their attempt to secure the permission of the Dominion Railway Commissioners to cancel section D. of their rate tariff. the section fixing the charges on books, calendars, posters, and similar printed matter.

The application was opposed by the Toronto, Winnipeg and Montreal Boards of Trade, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and the Canadian Bill Posters' Association, as well as by individual manufacturers. J. E. Walsh represented them.

The protest was made that the rates of section D had permitted the booksellers to build up a big business in books, and that the cancellation of this section would work a great injury.

For the commissioners, Justice Mabee turned down the express carriers' application. "The express companies argue that section D is discriminatory, and urge that the shippers in classes covered by section D are favored in the matter of rates," he said. "The answer to that is that the post-office department puts in force special rates on certain classes of commodities, and it is optional for the express companies to meet those rates. They are not forced to reduce their rates, they are responsible for the result. The discrimination is not undue; it is caused by the rates of the postal department."

The Haunted Chamber

Twilight comes and Sir Adrian's absence is beginning to be noticed.

"It does seem odd he hasn't come in before this," says Arthur. Then, true to his determination to so arrange matters that, if discovery ensues upon his scheme, he may still find for himself a path out of his difficulties, he says quietly, "I met him about a mile from home, and walked here with him. We parted at the hall-door; I dare say he is in the library or the stables."

"Good gracious! why didn't you say so before?" exclaims old Lady FitzAlmont, in a querulous tone. "I quite began to think the poor boy had blown out his brains through disappointed love, or something equally objectionable."

Both Dora and Florence color warmly at this. The old lady herself is free to speak as she thinks of Sir Adrian, having no designs upon him for Lady Gertrude, that young lady being engaged to a very distinguished and titled botanist, now hunting for ferns in the West Indies.

"Markham," says Mrs. Talbot to a footman who enters at this moment, "go to the library and tell Sir Adrian his tea is waiting for him."

"Yes, ma'am."

But presently Markham returns and says Sir Adrian is not in the library.

"Then try the stables, try everywhere," says Dora, somewhat impatiently.

Markham, having tried everywhere brings back the same answer. Sir Adrian, apparently, is not to be found!

"Most extraordinary," remarks Lady FitzAlmont, fanning herself. "As a rule I have noticed that Sir Adrian is most punctual. I do hope my first impression was not the right one, and that we sha'n't find him presently with his throat cut and wallowing in his blood on account of some silly young woman!"

"Dear mamma," interposes Lady Gertrude, laughing, "what a terribly old-fashioned surmise? No man nowadays kills himself for a false love; he only goes and gets another."

But when the dinner-hour arrives and no host presents himself to lead Lady FitzAlmont in to dinner, a great fear falls upon all the guests save one and confusion and dismay, and anxious conjecture reign supreme.

CHAPTER IX.

The night passes; the next day dawns, deepens, grows into noon, and still nothing happens to relieve the terrible anxiety that is felt by all within the castle as to the fate of its missing master. They weary themselves out wondering, idly, but incessantly, what can have become of him.

The second day comes and goes, so does the third and the fourth, the fifth, and the sixth, and the seventh dawns.

Florence Delmaine, who has been half-distracted with conflicting fears and emotions, and who has been sitting in her room apart from the others, with her head bent down and resting on her hands, suddenly raising her eyes, sees Dora standing before her.

The widow is looking haggard and hollow-eyed. All her dainty freshness has gone, and she now looks in years what she really is, close on thirty-five. Her lips are pale and drooping, her cheeks colorless; her whole air is suggestive of deep depression, the result of the sleepless nights and days filled with grief and suspense of the most poignant nature.

"Alas, how well she loves him, too!" thinks Florence, contemplating her silence. Dora, advancing, lays her hand upon the table near Florence, and says, in a hurried impassioned tone:

"Oh, Florence, what has become of him? What has been done to him? I have tried to hide my anxiety for the past two miserable days, but now I feel as if I must speak to some one or go mad!"

She smites her hands together, and, sinking into a chair, looks as if she is going to faint. Florence, greatly alarmed, rises from her chair, and, running to her, places her arm round her as though to support her. But Dora repulses her almost roughly and motions her away.

"Do not touch me!" she cries hoarsely; you, of all people, should be the last to come to my assistance! Besides, I am not here to talk about myself, but of him. Florence, have you any suspicion?"

Dora leans forward and looks scrutinizingly at her cousin, as though fearing, yet hoping to get an answer in the affirmative. But Florence shakes her head.

"I have no suspicion—none," she answers sadly. "If I had should I not act upon it, whatever it might cost me?"

"Would you," asks Dora eagerly, as though impressed by her companion's words—"whatever it might cost you?"

Her manner is so strange that Florence pauses before replying.

"Yes," she says at last. "No earthly consideration should keep me from using any knowledge I might by accident or otherwise become possessed of to lay bare this mystery. Dora," she cries suddenly, "if you know anything, I implore you, I entreat you say so."

"What should I know?" responds the widow, recoiling.

"You loved him too," says Florence, piteously, now more than ever convinced that Dora is keeping something hidden from her. "For the sake of that love, disclose anything you know about this awful matter."

"I dare not speak openly," replies the widow, growing even a shade paler, "because my suspicion is of the barest character, and may be altogether wrong. Yet there are moments when some hidden instinct within my breast whispers to me that I am on the right track."

"If so," murmurs Florence, falling on her knees before her, "do not hesitate; follow up this instinctive feeling, and who knows but something may come of it! Dora, do not delay. Soon, soon—if not already, it may be too late. Alas!" she cries, bursting into bitter tears, "what do I say? Is is not too late even now? What hope can there be after six long days, and not tidings?"

"I will do what I can. I am resolved," declares Dora, rising abruptly to her feet. "If too late to do any good, it may not be too late to wring the truth from him, and bring the murderer to justice."

"From him? From whom—what murderer?" exclaims Florence, in a voice of horror. "Dora, what are you saying?"

"Never mind. Let me go now; and to-night—this evening let me come to you here again, and tell you the result of what I am about to do."

She quits the room as silently as she entered it, and Florence, sinking back in her chair, gives herself up to the excitement and amazement that are overpowering her. There is something else, too, in her thoughts that is puzzling and perplexing her; in all Dora's manner there is nothing that would lead her to think she loved Sir Adrian; there was a fear, and a desire for revenge in it, but none of the despair of the woman who had lost the man to whom she had given her heart.

Florence is still pondering these things while Dora, going swiftly down stairs, turns into the side hall, glancing into the library and rooms as she goes along, plainly in search of something, or some one.

At last her search is successful; in a small room she finds Arthur Dynecourt apparently reading, as he sits in a large arm-chair, with his eyes fixed intently upon the book in his hand. Seeing her, he closes the volume, and, throwing it from him, says carelessly:

"Pshaw! what contemptible trash the ywrite nowadays!"

Against Church Union.

Montreal, Oct. 25.—When the subject of church union was discussed in the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec last evening, the entire expression of opinion was against considering any amalgamation with sister churches, the general trend of argument being that union would mean complete surrender of the tenets and principles for which the church has stood in the four centuries of its existence

The East Quebec Election

There appears to have been some serious cross swearing in connection with the attempt to purchase Leduc in East Quebec, who was contesting the election in opposition to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

It will be remembered that Leduc swore that he had been drinking and that while in a state of intoxication he had been induced to sign a document resigning his candidature for Parliamentary honors in East Quebec, and that he had received in consideration of such resignation $5,000 in cash and a promise of an office. Mrs. Leduc also made affidavit that when her husband came home, he told her what he had done, and handed her the $5,000. This resignation being handed to the Returning Officer, he declared Sir Wilfrid elected by acclamation.

This case has been referred to the courts, and it is now announced in a telegram from Quebec of Oct. 20th that "the private enquete at the Police Court into the alleged buying off of Mr. Leduc's candidature in Quebec East, so as to secure the return by acclamation of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, is expected to close this afternoon. Mr. Letourneau, M.L.A., and Mr. Depeyre, accused of the offence in question, have both sworn in direct opposition to the depositions of Mr. and Mrs. Leduc, and insist that they gave no money to either of them and promised them nothing, but that on the contrary Leduc urged them to procure for him a position in the Provincial service, offering to resign his candidature in return for it."

It will be interesting to learn where the $5,000 came from. Leduc is represented to be a poor newspaper man who never had so much money of his own at any one time; and which of the two parties have sworn to lies? Both certainly have not told the truth.

The wife got the money; the husband swears where it came from, and the other gents swear they gave him nothing. Query: Where did it come from? People can draw their own conclusions.

"Ward" or "General"

The movement for securing the submission to the votes of the ratepayers, before the holding of the municipal elections in January, of a by-law which will enable the electors to determine under which system—the "ward" or the "general"—their affairs shall be conducted, has been fairly started by The Intelligencer's article on the subject published in Monday evening's issue and by the action of the Board of Trade at the meeting on Monday night. What is now to be desired is that citizens who disapprove of the unwieldy and inefficient system of selecting our municipal legislators and wish to avoid a repetition of the unhappy experience of the existing system shall append their signatures to the petition in that behalf, the text of which was published in The Intelligencer.

We now, as promised in Monday's issue, return to the consideration of the subject, and will proceed to demonstrate, by the latest municipal statistics, the gross unfairness of the existing basis of the municipal representation in Belleville's City Council. Following is a statement of the assessed value of each of the wards and the number of persons resident in each:

Ward—	Assessment.	Population.
Foster	$ 305,993	1,026
Samson	768,580	1,280
Ketcheson	1,443,320	1,275
Baldwin	833,970	1,695
Bleecker	473,885	1,497
Coleman	391,690	1,356
Murney	743,745	2,247

Under the ward system Foster Ward has as great a representation in the Council as has Murney Ward with over twice as many inhabitants and considerably more than twice its assessed value, or as Ketcheson Ward with many more people and an assessed value nearly five times as large. This arrangement is so transparently unfair that it is matter for wonder that a majority of the taxpayers gave it their sanction when the question of discarding the general system and returning to the antiquated system which is now in vogue was decided in the affirmative by their votes.

The reasons for this unexpected verdict, as The Intelligencer said some months ago when discussing this subject, were chiefly a feeling of unrest, which at that time was general, and representations which had no foundation in fact. For instance, in Foster Ward it was made a grievance that no resident of that ward was elected to the Council, while four had been chosen from Murney Ward, and many votes were influenced by that cry. Just how ridiculous was that allegation was demonstrated at the first election after the change had been made, when three gentlemen, one of whom resided in Samson Ward and two who live in Murney Ward—the bete noir of the southern section east of the river—were elected for disgruntled Foster Ward. And, be it related, Murney Ward was the place of residence of six aldermen who were chosen under the system which was to redress the alleged wrongs of the general system.

The Board of Trade has condemned the ward system; the Property Owners' and Taxpayers' Association has joined in that condemnation, and the City Council will be asked to submit, at as early a date as is possible, a by-law for its repeal and the return to the general system. In such case it will be the duty of every good citizen to vote for the abolition of the present unfair system of election by wards and the restoration of a more equitable method of choosing the men who are to spend our money and transact our business.

CHILE IS PREPARING FOR WAR ON PERU

VALPARAISO, Chile, Oct. 24.—Replying to what is described here as the bellicose attitude of Peru, Chile has repurchased the British battleships Triumph and Swiftsure and the papers suggest that another vessel of the Dreadnought type be built.

The warships mentioned were originally intended for the Chilean navy, but were acquired by the British Government in December, 1903, while they were still in the yards of their English builders.

Large contingents of troops are embarking for the northern frontier.

The situation has resulted from the long-standing boundary dispute.

A girl can be awfully surprised to learn that a young man loves her when she knew it all the time.

Bogus Insurance

Agents of bogus fire insurance companies have been operating extensively in Northern Ontario, and that business men there have been paying thousands of dollars in premiums on worthless policies, is the conclusion of the provincial police after an investigation into a number of cases arising out of the recent fire in Cochrane.

Six merchants appeared before Superintendent of Police Rogers at Cochrane on Tuesday, to press charges against William McD. Douglas, a local agent of the Cosmopolitan and the Metropolitan Fire Insurance Companies, of Pennsylvania. The evidence showed that after the fire when the merchants tried to collect upon their policies they found both companies were bankrupt. The insurance department at Toronto was asked to investigate, and W. J. Vale, deputy inspector of insurance, discovered that neither company was registered in Ontario. Douglas pleaded guilty to doing business for unregistered companies and was fined $20 and costs on each count.

A fine is not adequate punishment for such frauds. The jail is the proper place for such offenders.

Sound Advice

Bishop Farthing, of Montreal, in the course of an address of welcome to the Protestant teachers at a session of their convention, gave them some good sound advice. He told them:—

"It is regrettable that Canadian children should lack culture and be unable to speak pleasing English, a condition which leads many employers to prefer English boys to Canadian boys in their offices. This might largely be overcome if Canadians acquired a softer and more musical intonation in their vowels." He urged on the teachers the necessity of inculcating high ideals of culture in the children under their charge, and said, "teach them to speak English, to breathe through their noses, and speak through their mouths, as God intended them to do, instead of reversing the order, for he did not consider it desirable, even in the Eastern Townships, for speaking through the nose to be encouraged."

Upon which the Montreal Star facetiously remarks: "Since Canada has declared against annexation of any kind, His Lordship Bishop Farthing thinks our youth may as well be taught to speak through the mouth instead of through the nose."

BRITISH M. P. A SUICIDE.

Was One of Dr. Jameson's Associates In South Africa.

London, Oct. 25.—Alfred Peter Hillier, Unionist member of Parliament for the North Division of Hertfordshire committed suicide by cutting his throat yesterday.

He was associated with John Hays Hammond and Dr. Jameson in the organization of the raid on the Transvaal, was president of the South Africa Medical Congress in 1893, and a member of the International Committee for the Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Alfred Peter Hillier, B.A., M.D., C.B., physician, retired, was elected to Parliament in 1910. He was consulting physician of the London open air sanitarium, and a councillor of the Royal Colonial Institute. Born in 1858, he was educated at Edinburgh University. In the Kaffir war of 1878-9, he served as a trooper. He was a member of the Reform Committee, Johannesburg, and was a political prisoner in Pretoria, 1895-6. He was nominated by the Prince of Wales as a delegate to the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis in Berlin in 1899, and was the author of several books on medical subjects and relating to South Africa. Deceased was married, with a son and two daughters.

Utilizing Waste as Fuel.

The greatest work which has been carried on by the British in Egypt, since their occupation of that country has been the construction of dams along the Nile for the purpose of providing water for irrigating the Nile Valley. As a result of this work vast areas, previously waste, have been brought under cultivation and the output of the country vastly increased.

Another enterprise, of little less importance, is now under way. This is for the purpose of utilizing sudd, a thick tangle of water plants in the Nile bed. This growth has for generations seriously interfered with the navigation of the Nile. It has recently been discovered that it can be utilized as a fuel. The new fuel is known as suddite.

PASTOR CARRIED A DRUNK TO JAIL

TORONTO, Oct. 24.—Again Rev. J. D. Morrow has come to the front in rescue work with a style all his own. It occurred last night when John Dale, after an absence of nine weeks, went to his house in Stanley avenue, and made things so unpleasant for the family that a small daughter ran for the minister. Mr. Morrow responded, and states that when he arrived at the Dale home he found the wife walking the floor in a state of distraction, with three or four small children running about, and the husband lying on the floor intoxicated.

"Just go into the other room and leave him to me," the pastor is reported to have spoken to the man's wife, and his instructions were respected. The athletic pastor then picked the man up bodily and carried him to the police station where Dale spent the night in a cell, and the sequel was heard in this morning's police court before Magistrate Cohen.

"He bears the name of my church but I think a week in jail would do him good," said Mr. Morrow. "We can do more good with him in jail than on the street."

The magistrate seemed agreeable.

"One of the pillars?" he enquired.

"Not yet, but he will be," the pastor replied, as his man was sent down for the week he had asked for.

MEN'S MISSIONARY MEETING AT OTTAWA

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 13th, 14th and 15th, a great missionary conference will be held in Ottawa in connection with the Laymen's Missionary Movement. These meetings form a link in a chain of similar conventions extending from the Pacific to the Atlantic Coast and participated in by men of wealth, men of commerce, men of rank.

A notable list of speakers will be heard in Ottawa, orators who have moved large audiences to enthusiasm by their forceful and impressive addresses. Among these speakers will be Sir Andrew Fraser, ex-Governor of Bengal, and Dr. Robert Speer, of New York, secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

This convention is inter-denominational, thus comprising workers from every church for the advancement of the missionary cause throughout the world. The secretary of the Executive Committee is Mr. Frederick Hyater, Canadian Biulding, Slater St., Ottawa, from whom all information may be obtained.

SPORTING NOTES

BOXING

WELLS AND M'FARLAND.

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Negotiations are under way for a ten-round bout between Packy McFarland, the Chicago boxer, and Matt. Wells, the lightweight champion of England, to be held at the Fairmont A.C. early next month. It appears that Ad Wolgast, the world's title holder, because of unreasonable demands, is in danger of losing his match with Wells, scheduled for November 3rd, at the Madison A.C. Wolgast's manager, Tom Jones, insists that the Madison A.C. must put up the entire amount of the purse, $19,000, before the bout or there will be nothing doing.

Meanwhile Wells' manager began to talk business with William Gibson, president of the Fairmont A. C., who is McFarland's business representative. McFarland, who was in Baltimore last week, wired Gibson on Saturday to make a proposition to Wells to box ten rounds at 135 pounds at 3 p.m. Gibson promptly hunted up the Englishman and informed him that if he would meet McFarland at the Fairmont A.C., the gross receipts would amount to at least $20,000. He stipulated that McFarland's share should be $8,000 and Wells could have the balance, less legitimate expenses and the State tax. It is probable that Wells will accept.

MORAN AND DRISCOLL.

Owen Moran and Jem Driscoll, the English featherweights, have signed articles for a twenty-round bout in Birmingham, England, on December 2nd. The purse is $13,000 and a gold belt goes with it, while each man will bet $2,000. The weight is 126 pounds at 2 o'clock.

WELLS AND WOLGAST.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—There will be no fight between Ad Wolgast, lightweight champion and Matt Wells, English titleholder. Wolgast, tired of the way the club to manage the fight was bickering, has called the match off. It is declared the Sea Beach Palace A. C., which had contracted with the moving picture firm for the picture rights on the battle, but was refused a license by the Boxing Commission, refused to release the com-

Discontent Among the Foreign Population of South Wales

The rapid growth of foreign colonies in South Wales is causing discontent among the native population. The latest protest is from Newport, where many of the residents of the Pigwenlly district, a working-class area, have sent a petition to the Watch Committee, directing attention to the large and rapidly growing settlement of Chinese and other foreigners in their midst, and suggesting that the committee should take measures to check this growth. One of the means proposed is that property owners should be advised not to let premises to foreigners.

THEY LIKE PROTECTION

American Farmers Know Its Benefits, Hence Fight Reciprocity

The farmers of the United States have been given an opportunity through the present reciprocity agitation to show their real feeling on the subject of protection. An element in this country has been wont to set the farmers up against the manufacturers, to say that the tariff protection enjoyed by manufacturers was afforded at the expense of agriculture, and that the farmers were just waiting an opportunity to burst the chains with which they were bound. But what are the facts? In no country in the world has the principle of protection to industry been carried to such great lengths as in the United States. On many articles the tariff runs up to one hundred per cent. or higher. This has been the condition almost continuously for a generation, so that there has been ample time for the people to learn the merits or demerits of the system. Yet the reduction in the tariff proposed in the Reciprocity Agreement has met with practically unanimous opposition among the farmers of the United States. They want well enough left alone. They know the prosperity which they have enjoyed in common with other classes of the population under the present system, a prosperity which is based on full employment for all with an expanding home market. Such prosperity is not to be jeopardized lightly. The farmers of the United States know from experience that there is one outstanding test of the success of any system of economics. Give us a system, they say, which will afford the opportunity of work to every citizen, the opportunity of work presupposing a scale of remuneration which will be adequate to the service and to the cost of living. Providing all citizens are profitably employed, what is lacking for prosperity? Judging the protective system as in force in the United States by this standard the farmers are in no doubt as to its success. Therefore, they have protested with all their force against a deviation from that system. We in this country should [illegible]fit by the experience of the United [illegible]es.

SHE LOVED DOGS AND RISKED LIFE FOR THEM

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—Love for her dogs, her sole companions in a tiny cottage three miles south of River side, caused Miss Margaret Schloetzer, 70 years old, daughter of a pioneer Chicago family, to have a narrow escape from death when fire destroyed her home early in the morning.

Miss Schloetzer was severely burned about her face and hands, but she succeeded in saving the lives of all but one of her thirty thoroughbred St. Bernard dogs.

The aged woman is in destitute circumstances. Although the daughter of Dr. George Schloetzer, Chicago's assistant commissioner of health in 1871, and acquainted with many of Chicago's early settlers, she has nothing and cares for nothing in the world except her dogs.

May Be Rev. Dr. Burke.

Toronto, Oct. 25.—A rumor was in circulation yesterday in Roman Catholic circles that the Rev. Dr. Burke, president of the Catholic Church Extension and editor of the Catholic Register, would be the next Archbishop of Toronto. The leaders of the church in the city stated that they had not been advised that such was the case.

"Rev. Dr. Burke's recent visit to Rome might mean something," was the way one of the fathers of the church viewed it.

Passing of the Toll Road.

Brockville, Oct. 25.—The Townships of Elizabethtown and Augusta, through the County Council, is seeking to expropriate from the Lowell Plank road the toll road running from Brockville to Prescott, a distance of twelve miles, on which there are four gates. A board of arbitration commenced the hearing of evidence here yesterday to determine a fair valuation. The road was built in 1851, macadam being used for the first five miles and plank for the remaining seven. After two years the planks became broken, rendering the road so dangerous that the entire distance was made of stone.

It is one of the few remaining highways in these united counties upon which toll is collected.

Register All Chinamen.

Washington, Oct. 25.—Commissioner-General of Immigration Keefe, in his annual report, lays special stress on Chinese immigration. Most of the Celestials are coming over the Canadian border. Owing to the length of the border, it is impossible for agents to keep these activities within bounds.

Last year more than 8,000 Chinamen landed in Canada and a great percentage of these have entered the United States. The ease with which Chinamen can get into the United States from Canada has caused an increase of more than 100 per cent. in number of immigrants, who have entered the Dominion within the past five years. Canadian statistics give 22,000 Chinamen residents, although it's known that two or three times that number have entered the country in the past decade.

Keefe will advise Secretary Nagel that the only way to handle the Chinese situation is to register all Celestials now in this country, irrespective of the manner of their entry, and to allow them all to stay here. He will suggest that Congress then pass a law that every Chinaman found without registration papers be deported.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R.V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N.Y.

BURGLAR BATTLED WITH AN AUTOMATON

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 24.—An unknown burglar, who jimmied his way into the bachelor apartment of Police Judge Treadwell late last night, had a desperate hand-to-hand battle with an automaton operated by an electric burglar alarm, which the judge had devised. The dummy man was no match for the burglar, and he now lies a wreck, with head crushed, but from the appearance of the room the electric man put up a hard fight. Chairs were overturned and one was broken. The weapon with which the burglar won the battle was a heavy window weight.

The Judge lives in a cosy flat. In an alcove just at the head of the stairs stands, or rather stood, a well-designed figure of a man, made of plaster of paris and metal. It was a full life size and represented an elderly man reading a paper. It was really a work of art and most lifelike. In the hollow head of the machine-made man was an electric light, which was connected with a house electric current, so that when anyone stepped on the top step of the stairs the current was turned on and the man moved. When the burglar stepped on that step he thought the time had come, as the man seemed ready for him. When he stepped from the step the light went out, but like a brave thief he went at his enemy in the dark, using his window weight as a club. The wreck of the electric man tells the rest of the story.

A woman has to have a lot of talk to believe that her husband never thinks of any woman but her.

LOYAL TO THE EMPIRE

Earl Grey Speaks For Canada in Old Country.

The Dominion Has Not an Annexationist From Sea to Sea, Says Former Governor-General — Quebec's Opposition to the Navy Is a Temporary Misunderstanding, He Declares—Eulogy for Sir Wilfrid.

London, Oct. 25.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Royal Canadian Institute banquetted Earl Grey yesterday evening, Rt. Hon. Louis Harcourt, Colonial Secretary, presiding, and Lord Minto, Sir J. Bevan Edwards, the Duke of Marlboro, Earl Carrington, Hon. A. Lyttleton, Earl Dundonald and Earl Brassey being among those at the head table. The general body of guests included practically all the leading men in London Canadian circles, the crush being so great that many guests were forced to dine in the ante-room. The total company numbered nearly 300.

Harcourt, in proposing Earl Grey's health, said his departure from Canada coincided with Laurier's resignation. He was quite sure there was no assembly of Englishmen who wouldn't wish at this moment to pay a tribute to that distinguished Prime Minister and express a grateful sense of the great services rendered so many years to the progress and prosperity of the Dominion to which he had devoted his intellect and energy. No divergencies upon the latest policy could detract from the warmth of gratitude felt for achievement of his past career. (Cheers.)

Turning to Earl Grey's return, Harcourt said it was no reflection upon his able and distinguished successor to say that Canada would gladly have seen Grey's governorship indefinitely prolonged.

Harcourt quoted many administrative acts for strengthening, solidifying and even extending the Dominion during Earl Grey's term of office. During the last five years the Canadian Government had been in close touch with the Washington ambassador, and through him had negotiated a series of treaties and arrangements of the highest possible value to the amicable relations of Canada and the United States.

"I am not referring at this moment," added Harcourt, amidst laughter, "to the recent reciprocity proposals. I don't think in my official position any advantage would be gained by discussing these circumstances. I had in mind other agreements, which in public estimation have been overshadowed by those proposals. Practically every outstanding question between Canada and the United States has either been settled or placed in a way of settlement."

He proceeded to say that Earl Grey had witnessed and assisted in the advance of the naval and military protective forces of Canada. During the life of his governorship, he had witnessed perhaps the greatest and most rapid extension of commercial and agricultural prosperity ever recorded in Canada's history.

Mr. Harcourt finally referred to the charm and ability displayed by Lady Grey and said: "We welcome Earl Grey back as a great governor, a good fellow and a true friend."

Earl Grey had a rousing reception on rising to respond. Alluding to his welcome, he said:

"It is a great reward for seven years' constant effort to serve Canada and the crown and I hardly think such a reward is deserved, when the conditions of my governorship considered. I have said more than once that I believe I have been privileged to occupy the most pleasant billet in the whole Empire. It is no ordinary privilege to be in an atmosphere of undiluted optimism and continued new development.

"I feel that, with the shadow of the governorship still upon me, it would be out of place to give expression to any individual views upon subjects of controversy.

"I can say, however, with the greatest confidence that, with the exception of an occasional crank here or there, it is impossible to find an annexationist throughout the whole of Canada. (Cheers.) I say with equal confidence that, notwithstanding some desire to the contrary, there is no expectation in Canada that the recent Canadian elections should be used for inducing any change into the tariffs of the United Kingdom. It cannot be too clearly understood that Canadians are as adverse to the idea of interfering in your local affairs as they are to any interference on your part in theirs.

"In justice to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, my affection and admiration for that distinguished statesman require me to say he and his Government were actuated by no annexationist sentiment in the policy they adopted at the polls. Sir Wilfrid was fully persuaded that his policy, if adopted, would strengthen both Canada and the crown. To secure free entry for the products of the farm and fisheries into a protected market of nearly one hundred millions by the purchase of reciprocal admission to products from the U. S. A., and by trifling duties on agricultural implements, which had been energetically demanded by the agricultural interests, appeared to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to be an economic advantage which he was bound to accept for his country when an unexpected opportunity placed it within his reach. It was certainly in no sense a policy of dislike to closer connection with the Mother Country.

"The people of Canada, however, sniffed a great danger in these proposals—(cheers)—rightly or wrongly, it is not for me to say. Thousands of Liberals feared their adoption might lead them into the U. S. A.; recollections of past hard treatment suffered from the U. S. A., and the present great abounding prosperity of the Dominion, all combined to strengthen the national resolve to vote down a policy which, however advantageous to their material interests, was one in which they scented possible danger to their fiscal independence and national autonomy.

"Canadians have shown that love of their country is superior to every other consideration, thereby justifying their belief in the Empire and their coming greatness. To those who do not know the Canadian people as I know them the revelation afforded by the recent elections of the strength, vigor and national sentiment of Canada to convince those already acquainted with the history and character of her people that her attachment to her national institutions and the connection with the Empire is far too deeply rooted ever to be overthrown.

"It may possibly be objected by some people — Quebec, and perhaps other provinces are opposed to participation in the naval defence of the Empire. For the moment that is true, but I honestly believe it is for the moment only. It is my conviction that the reluctance of the French-descended citizens of Quebec is due, not to any lack of appreciation of what the British Empire means to them, but solely to the lack of appreciation of what are the requirements of the Empire, to their exaggerated idea of its omnipotence.

"From the point of self interest there are [illegible] of Quebec who stand to gain more from our naval supremacy. There is no part of the world where the Roman church enjoys equally great privilege as guaranteed to Quebec by the British North American Act. All of these great, free, exceptional privileges were secured to the Roman Catholics of Quebec by the British navy."

Goderich Crew's Escape.

Goderich, Oct. 25.—The schooner Azov, of Goderich, was wrecked off Saginaw Bay on Sunday, and Captain McDonald, of Goderich, and his crew of four men, most of them Goderich boys, were forced to take to the yawl and spend Sunday night and all day Monday in the face of a fierce gale with high seas, trying to reach this shore.

They landed about ten miles from Goderich Monday night in a very exhausted condition, and were taken care of by farmers. The captain and part of his crew reached home late Monday evening.

Captain McDonald owned the schooner. His young daughter and two sons were also in the yawl.

Made Noted Capture.

Montreal, Oct. 25.—An important arrest was effected when Detectives Gorman and Lepage captured "Billy" Watts, who, the detectives say, is a noted cocaine fiend and dispenser. Watts' capture was accomplished after a four months' search by the authorities. Last spring he was arrested in Toronto on a charge of vagrancy, but the case was not proved.

Yesterday morning he was arraigned on four counts: selling cocaine, having it in his possession, vagrancy, and carrying a loaded revolver. To the first three he pleaded not guilty, and was remanded for trial. For carrying a loaded revolver he was fined $10 and costs.

Settlers For Canada.

Toronto, Oct. 25.—Sir James Whitney is entirely in accord with the Duke of Sutherland's plan to bring out a large number of agricultural laborers from England and Scotland to the farms of Canada.

Yesterday the duke held a conference with Sir James and the other Cabinet Ministers, and he explained the proposal and outlined it in a general way. His grace is following this procedure in his tour all through Canada, making it a point to explain his scheme to each of the Provincial Governments, as well as to individuals to see if they are in sympathy with the purpose in view.

After the conference was over, Sir James told the newspapermen that he and his confreres were unanimous in endorsing the scheme proposed.

"It is very praiseworthy," said he, "and we told the Duke of Sutherland that when the project is got into concrete form the Government of Ontario would help him in every possible way."

BOUNCING BABY'S ECZEMA CURED

By Morriscy's No. 4. Prescription 47 Years Old.

Pictou, N. S., July 8, 1910.

"When my baby was only two weeks old I noticed a slight rash on his body, and the little fellow would cry and fret night and day. I was greatly worried about him, and tried everything to relieve him, but without any success. The rash kept getting worse and worse until his little face and body was a mass of scabs. When he was about six months old I was advised to try Father Morriscy's No. 4 Eczema medicine, which I did. In about two months time the scabs had disappeared, and the child is now healthy and strong. I most thankfully recommend it to anyone suffering from Eczema."

Mrs. F. Gratton.

The above prescription is not a "Cure-All" or so-called patent medicine. Dr. Morriscy prescribed it for 44 years, and it cured thousands after other doctors failed.

MR. FIELDING MAY LEAD

He Is Mentioned as Chief of the Opposition.

Father of Reciprocity Pact Comes Into Prominence Again After the Failure of the Graham Boom—Two Sessions Before and After Christmas Are Posible Now — Sproule to Rearrange Rooms.

Ottawa, Oct. 25.—The mantle of Opposition leader may after all adorn the shoulders of Hon. W. S. Fielding. The Graham boom has flattened out during the last few days, the Liberal effort to obtain an acclamation for the ex-Minister of Railways in return for acclamations for the Ontario Ministers, having been so far unsuccessful.

Mr. Fielding, on the other hand, might not be opposed in Yarmouth, and could come back in time for the second session. B. B. Low, who won the Yarmouth seat, cannot resign till there is a Speaker, and even then the writ might not be issued at once.

There is no certainty yet as to the duration of the session. The probabilities are for a short session before Christmas, and another beginning in the spring, but many Ministers prefer a session extending into the new year, after which a comprehensive legislative program could be arranged.

R. B. Bennett of Calgary will move the address in reply to the speech from the throne, seconded by Arthur Sevingy of Dorchester.

Dr. Sproule, the new Speaker, comes to Ottawa to-day and will superintend the general re-arrangement of rooms, etc. An army of charwomen has been turned loose in the House of Commons.

A Cabinet Council was held yesterday, presided over by Hon. George E. Foster. No appointments were made.

Seat For White.

Brockville, Oct. 25.—The Recorder (Liberal) last night published a special from Delta, the centre of Leeds County, represented by George Taylor, M.P., stating that Mr. Taylor was there Monday and endeavoring to get a requisition signed by the members of the executive of his riding giving him permission to resign his seat in favor of Hon. W. L. White. The document was signed by the executive for Bastard and Burgess Townships.

It is said that Mr. Taylor will be called to the Senate, hence the reason for his resignation. The despatch concludes: "The Conservatives in this district say that the cabal to slate Taylor and make his seat easy for White will have a decided bearing on the chances of Mr. Dargavel for the Provincial House, aside even from the difficulties he has now in making the convention sure."

Sixty-Three Deaths.

Montreal, Oct. 25.—"The drowning accidents in the Lachine Canal are something dreadful to think of, and I have decided to bring up the matter before the Board of Control at once," said Mayor Guerin yesterday. "It is true that the controllers cannot order action to be taken, but what we can do is to go to Ottawa and interview the Government in regard to the matter.

"The stand the controllers will take is that it is criminal negligence that booms do not run along the canal edge so as to give a man a chance to save himself when he falls in the water.

"Only yesterday two bodies were taken from the canal and the usual verdict of accidental death was returned. The verdicts should have been criminal negligence.

"Sixty-three persons have been drowned there during the summer months. This is a most disgraceful condition of affairs. I am positive that with only ordinary precautions many of these lives would have been saved. I feel sure that when the situation is placed before the Ottawa authorities that this condition of affairs will be remedied."

Toronto University Standing.

Toronto, Oct. 25.—Toronto University continues to occupy front rank in point of attendance among the higher seats of learning on this continent. The official registration figures handed out by James Brebner, the registrar, yesterday afternoon, show that in spite of the higher matriculation standard required in practically every faculty, the total number of students in attendance at the university is equal to that of last year's record.

The total regular registration this session at the university is 3,513, which is about the same as the regular registration of last year.

At the end of last year the grand total in attendance at the university, both regular and occasional students, and from affiliated colleges was 4,144.

The registrar says this year's figures will amount to about the same as last.

Yukon Is Conservative.

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 25.—A Dawson despatch states that Dr. Thompson, Conservative, is elected in the Yukon by about 400 majority more than Congdon (Lib.).

This will make the Borden majority 50.

Fred. Congdon (Lib.) was elected to the Commons in 1909, his majority being 266.

Dr. Alfred Thompson represented the Yukon from 1907-8, when he retired to resume his practice. He has lived in Dawson since 1899. Both he and Congdon were born in Nova Scotia.

Osborne Is Discharged.

London, Oct. 25.—The case of Chas. Ackroyd Osborne of Montreal, came before Justices Darling, Bankes and Lush yesterday in the Divisional Court. The Solicitor-General appeared for the crown, Huntley Jenkins, instructed by Mr. Davis, for the prisoner, submitted that there was not sufficient evidence of the commission of an offence under the Canadian criminal code, and further that all the facts were not disclosed. On these and other grounds application was made for the prisoner's immediate discharge.

After the Solicitor-General had opened the case the court held that the prisoner should be immediately discharged. Justice Darling said there was not the necessary evidence of the offence having been committed in Canada. It was not suggested that the prisoner had removed goods, though there was evidence that he disposed of them, but that was insufficient. Osborne was accordingly discharged forthwith.

Y. M. C. A. LAUNCH A THREE DAYS' CAMPAIGN

A number of Y.M.C.A. enthusiasts gathered at Wallace's restaurant last evening and had a friendly supper together, after which they had a two hours' conference in the Association parlor, discussing membership.

Mr. H. C. Hunt was present, and kindly gave a short address on the modern Y.M.C.A. building and its operation. Mr. Hunt has inspected some two hundred modern buildings in the course of his business travelling during the last couple of years, and was able to give some valuable information. In his opinion, Belleville's new Y.M.C.A. building, now nearing completion, is fully up-to-date, according to the best modern ideas and practice. He did not consider the cost excessive, as American cities of the same size as Belleville had buildings costing all the way from $50,000 to $100,000. The membership committee here have found it necessary to increase the membership fee in the new building from three to six dollars per year, but even this, Mr. Hunt says, is lower than the rate charged in any other place he knows of with like equipment, or, in other words, the Belleville Y.M.C.A. is giving its members more for their money than any other of the very many Associations Mr Hunt has visited. He had also investigated wage and labor conditions in his travels, and is convinced that the average earnings of the people of this city are just as large as in any of the American cities, despite the prevalent belief that wages are higher on the other side of the line. And Mr. Hunt, as a former large employer of labor here, is able to speak with authority on this point.

Mr. D. V. Sinclair, the President of the Association, also gave a strong practical address, telling what had been done in previous membership campaigns, and what might and ought to be done now, when so much more is being given to members than has ever before been possible.

A three days' membership campaign was then launched, three teams being chosen, who, for the next three days will stirve to see which team can bring the most members into the Association. An effort will be made to see every young man in the city and give him an opportunity to join now under the reduced rates which are now in force until the building is opened. The three teams are as follows:

REDS—M. H. Mowry, Captain; T. R. Dando, O. M. Hutchinson, W. Cornelius, Mr. Colling, Bert McCoy, R. Rowland, W. A. A. Chown, Don Bleecker, H. Holton.

WHITES—Allan Schryver, Captain, H. Saunders, H. Elvins, W. Finkle, A. Blackburn, Mr. Peterkin, A. Henthorn, Mr. Hagerman, H. Moorman, F. Rathman.

BLUES—E. Thompson, Captain; G. Dulmage, H. Varley, C. Spicer, F H. Henry, Jas. Alexander, Mr. Sturges, Geo. Thompson, Jesse Barlow, Mr. Shand.

The Boy Scouts will also scout for junior and intermediate members for the same three days, and under the same three colors. They have organized themselves into three bands of "Indian" scouts, as follows:

"Senecas," (Reds), Al. Hitchon, captain.

"Tecumsehs," (Whites), Hugh Rogers, captain.

"Blackfeet," (Blues), Harold Reid, captain.

Let every young man and boy in the city be prepared for a call from one or more of these workers, and greet them with a friendly smile, a cheery word, and an application for membership.

PERHAPS THE OLDEST VOTER

Mr. Thos. Wray, of Whitby, on the 21st of September last, at the general election, polled his vote for Mr. Wm Smith, the successful Conservative candidate for South Ontario, at the age of 101 years nine months. He has been a continuous supporter of Liberal-Conservative principles since he was 21 years of age. This, we think, beats the record. The voter is a brother of the celebrated divine, Jackson Wray.

FROM TEXAS

Some Tea and Coffee Facts From the Lone Star State.

From a beautiful farm down in Texas where gushing springs unite to form babbling brooks that wind their sparkling way through flowery meads, comes a note of gratitude for delivery from the coffee habit.

"When my baby boy came to me five years ago, I began to drink Postum, having a feeling that it would be better for him and me than the old kind of drug-laden coffee. I was not disappointed in it, for it enabled me, a small delicate woman, to nurse a bouncing, healthy baby 14 months.

"I have since continued the use of Postum for I have grown fond of it, and have discovered to my joy that it has entirely relieved me from a bilious habit which used to prostrate me two or three times a year, causing much discomfort to my family and suffering to myself.

"My brother-in-law was cured of chronic constipation by leaving off coffee and using Postum. He has become even more fond of it than he was of the old coffee.

"In fact the entire family, from the latest arrival, (a 2-year-old, who always calls for his 'petie' first thing in the morning), up to the head of the house think there is no drink so good or so wholesome as Postum." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S

Back of the enormous success of the leading lady in the title role of "The Girl From Rectors" which ran three hundred nights in Weber's Music Hall in New York, there is an interesting story. Paul M. Potter, the author of the play, had worried for weeks about the selection of a woman to fit the role. In the company of the producer, the stage manager and knowing friends, he visited every theatre in New York in the hope of being able to hit upon an actress who could handle the lines. Some were pretty, but they appeared to lack grace; some had both beauty and grace, but lacked fire; others had fire, but it seemed as if there was always something lacking.

In despair Mr. Potter went to Chicago and visited every play house there; then he stopped in at Philadelphia and finally returned to New York, losing heart every day. One afternoon he stepped into Rector's famous restaurant on Broadway with some business associates. At a table near by he saw a pretty young woman sipping a glass of water.

"That girl," said the author, turning to the party, "is the style of woman I have all along had in mind for 'The Girl from Rector's. She is the typical Rector girl and if she were an actress I would engage her on the spot."

A few moments later a well known manager stepped in and engaged the fair patron in conversation. When he had finished he passed the table at which Mr. Potter was seated and the latter asked as to the identity of the young woman. He learned her name and the further fact that she was a well-known actress. Two hours later she was under contract and a week later opened at Weber's Music Hall, scoring the success of her career in the biggest success of the New York season.

"The Girl From Rector's will be seen at Griffin's Opera House, Friday, Oct. 27th. Plan now open at Doyle's.

GRAND CONCERT AT THE ACADEMY

Under the auspices of the Total Abstinence Society of St. Michael's church, a grand concert was held last evening in the spacious assembly room of the Academy. This society have on previous occasions had excellent entertainments, but none was more successful or enjoyable than that of last night. The assembly rooms was filled to the doors with an audience which was not slow to show its appreciation of the programme presented. The first part of the programme, which was varied in its character, was given by the pupils of the Academy, who did exceedingly well, demonstrating that they had been apt scholars in learning their parts. The programme opened with a chorus entitled "Welcome Kind Friends" by a large number of girls whose voices were sweet and in unison. A song and drill, "British Soldiers," was well executed by 16 boys, who were captained by Color Sergt. H. Sharpe. The did the various manoeuvres in good style, reflecting credit upon themselves and their instructor. A very pretty and pleasing item was an action song, entitled, "Dolly, Dolly," given by twenty-four little girls who certainly sang and acted well the parts assigned to them. The senior girls gave in an artistic manner a Japanese Parasol Drill, which was most entertaining. The young ladies who were attired in Japanese costumes executed the drill in a manner to merit for them loud applause. A pantomime entitled "Little Grandmothers" by 8 tiny tots, was a feature of the programme which gave much pleasure The little ones did their best to please, and their efforts were much appreciated. The first part of the programme was closed by a chorus in which some 90 boys took part. It was entitled "Work for the Cause of Temperance." The boys sang splendidly. A beautiful banner, worked by the Sisters of the Convent, and for the T. A. S., was shown in this chorus, and was much admired.

The second part of the programme was taken in charge by the T. A. S dramatic club. They presented in two acts a laughable and entertaining farce: "A Box of Monkeys." Those taking part, and the characters they represented, were as follows:

Edward Ralston, a promising young American, half owner of the Sierra Gold Mine—Campbell St. Charles.

Chauncey Oglethorpe, his partner, second son of Lord Doncaster—John E. Lally.

Mrs. Ondego-Jhones, an admirer of rank—Mrs. Jas. Grant.

Sierra Bengaline, a prairie rose—Mrs. D. M. Waters.

Lady Guinevere DLlandpore an Englisha Primrose, daughter of the Earl of Paynaught—Miss Grace Stewart.

All who took part in the farce did their parts exceedingly well, depicting in an admirable way the characters they represented. The farce had many pleasing features, which the audience were not slow in pprecating. The I.O.O.F. orchestra was present and furnished appropriate music.

MAKE EVERYONE BEAUTIFUL

Surgeons Who Are Skilful In What Is Called "Human Sculptery"

Dr. Hans Kersten, who is one of the great skin grafting specialists of Germany, in a recent lecture, asserts that shortly anyone can be made beautiful at small cost with the aid of the surgeon's knife. He describes this as 'Human Sculptery." Skilful surgeons, says the doctor, are able to graft skin or missing organs so perfectly that no scar is to be seen. In such a way it should be easy to remedy other defects in the facial organs or contour, and as beauty relies on symmetry, it would seem that the most mis-shapen face can be transformed into a likeness of Apollo Belvedere.

The specialist describes as easy operations reducing the excessively large ears, narrowing unduly distended nostrils, straightening crooked noses, grafting skin, and removing black patches from the necks, faces and arms of women whose skin is otherwise fair. It would seem that women of the future will be the radiant daughter of these miraculous forces of nature.

Fourpence a Day.

JUST READY TO DROP

When you are "just ready to drop," when you feel so weak that you can hardly drag yourself about—and because you have not slept well you get up as tired-out next morning as when you went to bed, then you need help right away.

Miss Lea Dumas writes from Malone, N. Y., saying: "I was in a badly run-down condition for several weeks but two bottles of Vinol put me on my feet again and made me strong and well. Vinol has done me more good than all the other medicine I ever took."

If the care-worn, haggard men and women, the pale, sickly children and feeble old folks around here would follow Miss Dumas' example, they, too, would soon be able to say that Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron remedy, had built them up and made them strong.

It is a wonderfully strengthening and invigorating body-builder, and we sell it under an iron-clad guarantee of satisfaction. You get your money back if Vinol does not help you.—Red Cross Drug Store, J. S. McKeown, Belleville.

ARRESTED OVER 500

Actors and Spectators Were Escorted to the Police Station

The Viennese papers report that during the performance of a Polish drama in a theatre at Bendzin, Russian Poland, the Chief of Police entered at the head of a strong force of his men and declared that everyone present, including spectators, actors, and scene shifters, were under arrest. Five hundred and eighty persons were escorted to the police station, where they were questioned for hours. They were only released next morning after their identity had been established. All were informed, however, that they would be prosecuted for machinations dangerous to the state. The drama, it appears, was being performed despite its prohibition by the Censor.

DEADLIEST SNAPSHOT

The Man Who Will Photograph the Coronation Ceremonies

Sir Benjamin Stone, who has been appointed official photographer for the Coronation ceremony in Westminster Abbey, has a collection of over 30,000 photographs taken with the object of forming a pictorial record of modern history. Fully half of these are his own work. There are very few members of Parliament of the last twenty years who have not been photographed by him, while he possesses a complete pictorial record of every nook and cranny of the Houses of Parliament. He has taken whole series of pictures of Westminster Abbey, the Tower of London, Windsor Castle, St. James's Palace, and hundreds of other places of historical interest both at home and abroad; for Sir Benjamin is a great traveller. It was when he was in China that he narrowly escaped with his life, a fanatic whom he attempted to photograph hurling a huge block of wood at his head. Another Chinaman, on being photographed, accused Sir Benjamin of taking something spiritual from him.

GODS OF THE MOUNTAINS

A Grotesque Form of Fancy Presented at the Haymarket Theatre

Of all forms of fancy, the grotesque is perhaps the most difficult effectively to carry across the footlights of a theatre. Yet, despite all the essential difficulties of presentation, Lord Dunsany's fantasy "The Gods of the Mountains," at the Haymarket, succeeded splendidly, and, acted, it remains as it is written, a thing of pleasant and suggestive charm. The beggars lament that the gods no longer turn the hearts of men to charity. Then, on the suggestion of the super-beggar, Agmar, they claim that they themselves are the Seven Gods come down from the mountain, and by craft and histrionic skill they delude the people of the city into faith. Danger comes when two men journey on their dromedaries to see whether the great green figures of the gods still rest among the hills. But they come back and report that the gods are no longer there. And all is well. A feast is prepared, gifts are made ready, and the most beautiful dancing girls are summoned. But the wise Agmar is troubled. Suddenly the sky is darkened, and the monstrous real gods come in wrath and strike the beggars into stone. But by this act the gods deify the beggars, for when they see the stone men, the people of the city make deep abeisance and acclaim that they are gods indeed.

With its Eastern setting and accompanied by Mr. Norman O'Neill's appropriate music, "The Gods of the Mountains" is a fresh and welcome experience. It is admirably acted, Mr. C. V. France—as Agmar being splendidly impressive.

THE GAEKWAR OF BARODA

Indian Sikh chief, whose appearance at the Coronation of King George and Queen Mary created much comment by reason of his lavish display of jewellery. The Gaekwar is a native Prince of India and owns jeweller, estimated to be worth $1,200,000 While it was impossible for him to adorn himself with all his gems, he astonished Great Britain and outshone British nobles by wearing the Star of the South, the Akbah Shah and the Eugenie, three diamonds weighing respectively 125 karats, 74 karats, and 51 karats, besides many other jewels of lesser importance.

"Ben Johnson is one of the 'three highest mountains in Scotland.'"

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got The New Method Treatment. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

PRIDE OF THE POOR

Starved to Death in Their Fight Against Charity

"Deaths from starvation should be impossible in England; it is terrible to think that they can still occur."

This was the opinion given recently by Sir John Kirk, chairman of the Ragged School Union, whilst discussing the Local Government Board's return of deaths from starvation in 1909, just issued, which shows that 119 died of starvation, three being old-age pensioners. Of the 119 deaths returned, seventy-nine were men twenty-seven women and thirteen children. One of the men, aged thirty-four, had money in the bank while a King's Lynn woman, aged seventy-seven, had money and wealthy friends and refused the old-age pension. A solicitor's clerk, a domestic servant, a window-cleaner and a gas meter maker were found starving on the Embankment. A man of sixty-six starved rather than take relief and so spoil his chances for the old-age pension.

"There is only one explanation of this terrible record," said Sir John. "The Poor Law is quite well enough administered to make such tragedies impossible, but amongst the lowest outcasts of society there exists an insuperable antipathy to the Poor Law. They would rather starve than accept relief. It is regrettable, but it is, nevertheless, to a certain point commendable. The pride of the very poor is amazing, and I rejoice in the spirit which makes them fight against charity. But to starve to death when relief is obtainable for the asking is really a form of suicide. When the mother instinct fails and a woman allows her baby to starve to death, she commits the gravest crime. The Poor Law authorities can rarely do anything about the child until its death has occurred."

A NOVEL ARREST

How a Woman Detained a Cabman Who Struck His Horse

The strange allegation that a lady had locked him in her drawing-room was made by a cabman at a London police court. He asked for a summons against a lady for committing a technical assault upon him, and said that while out with his horse he tapped it slightly on the nose with a cardboard box to get it across the car lines. A few minutes later a lady called him across the road and asked him into her drawing-room. Directly he was inside, he said, she slammed the door and locked it. She demanded to know why he had struck the horse, and he told her to mind her own business and to let him out. She refused to do so until he had given her his name and address. Even after that he had to threaten to smash the furniture before she would let him out. He had since received a summons for cruelty to his horse.

MRS. REID

Wife of the United States Ambassador to England, who rivalled the wealth and fashion of Great Britain with the magnificence of a gown she wore at the recent Derby night party given by the Duchess of Devonshire. The gown was made of mother of pearl and crystal beads so closely worked together as to actually form the material of the dress. The skirt was severely plain, but the sleeves and bodice were hung with deep, heavy fringes of crystals more than a foot long, and over this, on the corsage, was a network of pearls, besides her other jewels. The dress was so heavy that Mrs. Reid was completely fatigued at the close of the function

POLICE HOLD COUSIN OF THE LADY DOCTOR

Murder Mystery in Indianapolis Given a New Turn by Detectives

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 25.—Detectives to-day took to police headquarters for examination Augusta Knabe, cousin, and Katherine McPherson, assistant, to Dr. Helen Knabe, former State bacteriologist, who was found dead with her throat slashed in her apartment early yesterday.

Investigation of the private life of Helen Knabe, to-day occupied the detectives assigned to this mysterious case. They purposed to question the dead woman's friends in the medical profession first, for it is said that her acquaintances were almost entirely confined to persons interested in scientific subjects, in physical culture, or in social hygiene.

That it should be discovered that any scandal attached to the death of Dr. Knabe would be inconsistent with her life, it was pointed out to-day. She lived alone in comfortably furnished apartments in which she was killed, because she devoted all her spare time to study and experimentation. She was a member of the Young Women's Christian Association and frequently lectured to its membership and to the students of the High Schools on social hygiene, attempting to impress upon them, the necessity of purity on all social relations.

A SIDNEY WEDDING.

At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Priory, Sidney Township, a quiet wedding took place last evening, when their daughter, Miss Mae Louise, was united in marriage to Mr. Harry A. Thompson, of this city. A number of relatives were present to witness the interesting ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. A. M. Hubly, rector of the Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church of this city. The young couple were unattended. At the conclusion of the ceremony the guests were handsomely entertained by the bride's parents. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and valuable gifts, which were an evidence of her popularity. Mr and Mrs. Thompson left this morning for Toronto and other cities in the west, and upon returning will take up their residence in the city. Their many friends will unite with The Intelligencer in wishing for them a happy and prosperous journey through life.

The bride, who was given away by her father, looked very pretty in a dress of pale voie silk over silk. Her travelling suit was of navy blue cloth and she wore a large picture hat. The groom's present to the bride was a diamond ring. Among the bride's gifts was a cheque from her parents and a cabinet of silver from the groom's parents.

FUNERAL AT POUCHER'S MILLS

The funeral of the late Mr. Josiah Latta, the victim of a fatal accident, took place yesterday and was largely attended. Services at the family residence, Poucher's Mills, were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Ward, and interment took place at the Plainfield cemetery. A number of floral tributes were placed on the casket by relatives and friends. The bearers were Messrs. Poucher, Clapp, Outwater, Hamilton, Lloyd, and Sullivan.

POLICE IN NEW QUARTERS.

The police are now in their new quarters in the building at the rear of the market square on Pinnacle St., which was at one time the town hall and butcher market, and which has undergone a great change. The change is in every way appreciated by the members of the force and officials who have to do with police business. The chief's office, constable's room, cells, wash and bath rooms, also a commodious room for tramps, are situated on the ground floor. The police court room, Police Magistrate's private office, witness' rooms, etc., are situated upstairs and are very handy. The interior of the building has been so remodelled that it would not be recognized by those who formerly occupied it. Everything possible has been done to make it up-to-date and handy. The prisoners will be taken up to the court room by a back stairs situated near the cells, and they will not in any manner mingle with the general public. In the court room a suitable place has been provided for the press, which will be much appreciated. The work was done by Mr. George A. Bennett, contractor.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT FRANKFORD

Word has been received from Frankford of the death through accident of Rolland Griffin, who was mate on the Water Lily, of the Peterboro' & Lake Simcoe Navigation Co., through the past season. His home was in Lakefield and his age about forty-five years. He left Peterboro' at the close of the season to accept a position with R. B. Rogers, contractor, at Frankford. His death will be regretted by a large number of friends. "He was one of the best navigators who ever took a boat through Stoney Lake," was the tribute paid the late Mr. Griffin by Mr. Robt. Pinchin, manager of the Peterboro' and Lake Simcoe Navigation Co., to-day. He was courteous to the travelling public and one of the kindest of men.

HEROIC FEATS OF IDA LEWIS RESCUED EIGHTEEN LIVES

Most Notable Achievement Was Saving of Three Soldiers on a Bleak, March Day—The Original Grace Darling

Ida Lewis (Mrs. W. H. Wilson), whose death is announced to-day, was born in Newport, R.I., in 1841. Her father was the keeper of the Lime Rock lighthouse, Newport Harbor. She became an expert rower and swimmer, and was famous for her deeds of heroism, saving no less than eighteen lives often at great peril. She received medals from the U. S. Government, the Humane Society of Massachusettes, and the Life Saving Benevolent Society of New York. Her boat the "Rescue," was exhibited at the Chicago Exposition.

Her brother, Rudolph, who has lived with her twenty-five years, said today that she had always wished the Newport Historical Society to have her medals and trophies and also the famous lifeboat Rescue, which was given her by citizens of Newport in 1869 after she had rescued Sergeant Anderson and two soldiers who had been capsized in the harbor.

This was her greatest rescue, her brother said. It was just after sundown on a cold day in March and a gale was blowing. Ida Lewis saw three men and a boy hanging to a capsized catboat. She launched her lifeboat and was soon with them. She hauled the three men into her boat, but the boy sank.

Ida Lewis was married in 1869 and lived with her husband only two years. He was William Wilson, and was the captain of a yacht. He has not been heard from in twenty-five years.

Ida Lewis was sometimes called the American Grace Darling. The original Grace [illegible]ing was the daughter of William [illegible]ling, lighthouse keeper on Long[illegible], one of the Farne Islands, and was born at Bamborough, November 2[illegible]th, 1815.

Before dawn, on the morning of Sept. 7th, 1838, the Forfarshire, bound from Hull to Dundee with 63 persons on board, struck among the Farne Islands, and in fifteen minutes 43 persons were drowned.

Darling and his daughter, at great risk, brought their boat to where the few survivors crouched and succeeded in rescuing them. The brave deed provoked much enthusiasm, father and daughter received medals and large gifts, and Grace became a heroine. She did not long survive her exploit, dying of consumption October 20th, 1842.

Y. M. C. A, CAMPAIGN HAS GOT GOOD START

The Y.M.C.A. membership campaign is off to a good start. All yesterday morning the three captains were busy as 'nailers' getting the various members of their teams started on a definite plan of action. They all realize that this is mose essential, as good generalship will likely win out in this campaign.

Some of the young men are going into the game like old campaigners, and are meeting with splendid success. The new building, with its many up to date features, is appealing to the youth of the city, and fellows are joining who would not have listened to the campaigners' arguments a year ago.

One young man read the printed matter issued by the membership committee, and then went and examined the new building from bottom to top, and was so enthused with it that he hunted up one of the campaigners and asked to be taken as a member.

The new rate of six dollars a year happens to be about twelve cents a week, and one young man wanted to be accepted as a member, paying on the instalment plan at this rate. This offer, of course, had to be refused, as one month's membership is the shortest term ticket that can be issued.

Mr. R. B. Chadwick, who was secretary of the association here some years ago, dropped into the rooms yesterday to see how the work is progressing. He was shown all through the new building, and was delighted with it, and with the fact that Belleville is at least getting a nassociation building adaquate in every way to its needs, and commensurate to the modern spirit of progressiveness that is beginning to animate its citizens. Mr. Chadwick is still working among the young people, but is not in the Y. M.C.A. work, having left that to become Provincial Superintendent of Dependent and Delinquent children for the Province of Alberta.

Another unexpected incident of yesterday was the reception of a telegram by Mr. Hess from one of the largest Associations in Alberta, offering him a position as secretary at a salary about double what he is getting here. Although Mr. Hess has no objection to a larger salary, he immediately wired a reply, refusing the tempting offer, as he knew he would be needed here in Belleville until the new building is properly under way, and the many financial problems connected therewith brought to a successful conclusion. Were he to leave the city at the present stage of the building construction, the result would be almost disastrous to the welfare of the Association.

The campaign for new members will continue to-day and to-morrow and close to-morrow evening at ten o'clock, when the three weary captains will report their numbers and learn which of them is the successful winner.

VOTE FOR BORDEN BIGGEST ON RECORD

OTTAWA, Oct. 26.—Official returns have been received from all but 25 electoral divisions in the recent general election. While the clerk of the Crown in Chancery has not yet tabulated the statistics or made any analysis this will be done in the course of a week. Meanwhile the figures indicate a decided diminution in the number of close constituencies. Substantial majorities are the rule, and where they are not substantial, it was largely Liberals who were elected. A much smaller proportion of Conservatives got in by narrow margins.

When the figures are tabulated it will in all probability be shown that the popular vote in favor of the Borden Government is larger than that accorded to any of its predecessors. The relative percentages promise a marked increase in favor of the Conservatives.

TO EXCOMMUNICATE PORTUGUESE PRIFSTS

ROME, Oct. 25.—The Patriarch of Lisbon has sent to the Vatican a list of 2,150 priests who are accepting a pension from the government, and the names of 5,800 who have refused this aid. Of the latter 2,400 are destitute.

The Vatican has decided to give the penniless a small monthly allowance pending the possible conclusion of a better arrangement with the state. Those who accepted the pension, contrary to the commands of their bishop, will be excommunicated.

Cold weather condensed the air in the Athens, Ga., warehouse, and two fire department crews hurried to the place.

CURRENT COMMENT

The shrill whistle of the engine which handles the C.N.O.R. construction train makes cheerful music these days.

The Halifax Chronicle, the Hon. Mr. Fielding's organ, says: "Hundreds of thousands of dollars were used to defeat the members of the Liberal Cabinet." Of course this is a draft upon the imagination, but, if true, what a host of Grits must have sold themselves. But it is not true.

British journalists are tracing Mr. Borden's pedigree back to the fourteenth century. Napoleon, when his heralds did similarly, said: "My pedigree begins with Marengo." Similarly, Mr. Borden can afford to state: "My pedigree dates from Sept. 21st, 1911."—Ottawa Journal.

The Toronto News says The Globe was sending out 41,000 campaign copies daily without putting on a cent of extra postage. Does not that account for Ontario's electing only thirteen reciprocityites? Had a few more copies of the Globe been sent into the thirteen counties which elected Liberals, would a man of them been returned?

All the money paid on N. T. R. construction last year—some twenty-three millions—was paid out of current revenue. And a lot more capital expenditure was also provided out of revenue. A country which can do that sort of thing is all right, even though it has not increased in population as rapidly as was hoped.—Hamilton Herald.

The tentative budget of the city of New York for 1912 has been prepared. It calls for an outlay of $190,000,000 and it is expected that before the final revision this will be considerably increased. For the present year the budget amounts to $174,000,000. There is nothing about a big growing city that grows like the expenditure.—Montreal Gazette.

The Grit journals are booming the Hon. Mr. Graham at a tremendous rate, and he, himself, is aiding in the booming, and wants the Conservative party, in case he can get a Liberal member to resign in his favor, to agree to allow him election by acclamation. The question has often been asked: "What is the height of impudence?" The problem is now solved.

Postmaster General Pelletier, in an interview yesterday, stated that he had offered to Hon. L. O. Taillon the vacant position of postmaster at Montreal, and that the latter had intimated his willingness to accept. Mr Taillon was formerly Premier of Quebec. He resigned and entered the Tupper Government in 1896, as Post Master General, and went down to defeat in the election that followed.

Fancy the cheek of the New York Herald. Enraged at the rejection of the reciprocity pact by Canada, it now declares that "the American people have not the slightest desire to annex Canada. But if the United States had any designs on Canada, neither the Canadians nor their overlord, England could prevent it from carrying out such designs." The Herald evidently forgets the war of 1812, and the result of their boasting then.

There is every prospect of Prince Edward Island falling politically into line as soon as the electors of that Province have an opportunity of casting their votes. The House of Assembly at present stands with a tie of 14 to 14, and Mr. McInnes, editor of the Summerside Journal, who is now in Ontario, says he is of the opinion that the two bye-elections are likely to go against the Government, which would defeat it, and that if not, there would undoubtedly be a change at the next general election.

The question of garbage disposal, which is a live one in most Canadian cities and towns, is discussed in the Medical Journal, for the current month. The relative advantages of incinerator and reduction plants are compared, and both are declared effective. The reduction system has been found a source of profit to many municipalities. The Medical Journal quotes Columbus, Ohio, as an instance, where a new plant, established in July, 1910, netted $2,00 per month for the first six months.—St. Thomas Times.

The various Civic Committees will meet to night. The Water Works Committee, amongst other matters, will have before them an application from Mr. Lindsay, the manager, for an addition of $200 to his salary. We observe from his report that he receives practically no salary from this department, merely an allowance of $300. Mr. Lindsay has been with the Committee, instrumental in placing this department on a paying basis, the installation of the new electric pumps alone adding $3,000 per year to the revenue of this department, thus paying for the entire installation out of the first year's operations. Mr. Lindsay should be encouraged in his work, and we feel that the department would be acting in the city's interest in granting him the small allowance asked for.

The number of immigrants reported coming into Canada between 1901 and March 31st, 1911, was 1,714,326. By June 1st of the present year, it was stated that the total immigration would be nearly 2,000,000. Yet the whole population of Canada has only increased 1,710,000. The annual increase from the birthrate during the last ten years should have added nearly another million. On the other hand the United States statistics show that barely 250,000 immigrants entered that country from Canada during the past ten years. If the total increase from birthrate and immigration amounted to approximately 2,714,000, even if a quarter of a million found their way across the line to the United States, there are stil 754,000 absolutely unaccounted for. Either more than ten per cent. of Canada's population was missed by the census takers, or else the Government of this country paid out millions of dollars to the North Atlantic Company, and other questionable immigration concerns on false returns. The matter is well worth going into.—Ottawa Citizen.

At 11.30 last night the police answered a call to the Chinese restaurant and ejected a man who was rather noisy.

THROAT BECOMES DISEASED FROM NEGLECTING COLDS

THEN CATARRH SETS IN, MUCOUS DROPS INTO THE STOMACH; COUGHING, HEADACHES AND DEBILITY FOLLOW.

That the best method of curing catarrhal disease consists in using Catarrhozone is now freely admitted. Catarrhozone is infinitely superior to cough medicines, tablets, sprays and emulsions, which for the most part are of no practical value except to ease the cough for the time being. Often liquid cough remedies contain opium, morphine and cocaine. With Catarrhozone you take no drugs—you employ Nature's way—just inhale Catarrhozone's soothing, healing vapor and relief and cure promptly follow.

WEAK THROAT, RACKING COUGH CURED.

"For five years I suffered from a severe bronchitis. A harsh dry, racking cough kept my throat in a raw condition from one year's end to another. Before going to sleep at night I always had a bad attack, and in the morning before breakfast I suffered greatly. My voice was harsh and raspy, and sometimes I found it difficult to make myself understood. Catarrhozone seemed to soothe and heal from the first day. It cured me, and now I wouldn't think of being without a Catarrhozone Inhaler—it means life to me."

The above experience is related by Mr. Alexander P. Savary, of Hamilton, Pa., and proves the effectiveness of Catarrhozone, which will cure every cough, cold, bronchial or catarrhal attack. The dollar size of Catarrhozone contains two months' treatment and is guaranteed. Smaller size, 50c., sample size 25c. All dealers, or The Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N. Y., or Kingston, Ontario.

ANIMAL LOVE

Mother love is universal, and there is no love like the mother love. Most of the high and lofty loving in this world is done by mothers. Apart from this the work of wooing falls to the male members of the family, whether t be the human family or some one of the animal tribes. We read how, ages ago, a Bulbul, or Oriental Nightingale, wooed a white rose until it blushed red, and that was the beginning of the red rose. The Spanish cavalier stands out in the rain and serenades his "Dulce Mia" until there is a crick in his neck, while she sits sheltered in a window above.

The cackle of the loon may be a love song for all we know. Maybe that's what made him loony in the first place.

The wild moose bellows his passion across the lake, and as likely as not the answering call is from a bark horn in the hands of a hunter, luring him to death.

It seems a sizzling shame, but if you will take a Grand Trunk train and travel into the "Highlands of Ontario" you will find men doing that very thing; arguing, doubtless, that all is fair in love and war. 1td&w

"Superb Tonic and Body Builder"

"This wonderful medicine has no equal for keeping the system healthy and strong so as to ward off disease and old age," says Mrs. W. Frederickson, one of our patients.

"I can say with truth that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the best medicine that was ever put on the market, for old and young alike. It positively rejuvenates the aged and keeps the young strong and vigorous. It is the most superb system and tonic builder for the human family that was ever produced, because of its purity and sublime quality; its equal has not been made. It has made me strong and quite well, which I was not when I commenced to use it. I earnestly and heartily recommend it to all, as it prolongs life. I hope this will influence many to use Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey and become strong and well."—Mrs. W. Frederickson, 2119 Indiana Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

one of the greatest tonic stimulants known to medical science, has been an unfailing remedy for more than fifty years, building up the body and restoring the tissues to their naturally healthy condition. For overworked men, delicate women and sickly children it is a guarantee of health and happiness.

All liquor dealers, or direct, $1.25 a large bottle. Medical booklet and doctor's advice sent free on request.

PRINCE BULOW WHEN AT SCHOOL

He Never, He Says, Attached Much Importance to Home Tasks.

It is interesting to read about the school time of a man like Prince Bulow, who played so conspicuous a part in his country's history, and all the more when what is read is written by Prince Bulow himself.

"I never attached much importance to home tasks," says the Prince; "in my opinion the chief thing is to do one's learning in school, to listen to a lecture attentively, to seize the main point of a subject, to answer quickly and precisely, to think clearly, and express oneself with clearness and intelligence."

History was the ex-Chancellor's favorite study, and, as usually happens in such cases, he had a hearty dislike of mathematics. One of the happiest moments of his life, he says, was after his final examination when he stuffed his book of logarithms into the fire. He did not work during the vacations, but roved freely about the country.

The Prince found it hard to learn a foreign language at school. "It is difficult," he writes, "really to master a foreign speech unless one has spoken it from childhood, when tongue and ear become accustomed to it, or else one had learned it in the foreign country."

The Prince himself is a good illustration of this, for he speaks French admirably, having been for some years German Ambassador at Paris, and English very poorly, since he spent very little time in that country.

BACK TO THE LAND

Boy Scouts May Qualify as Agricultural Experts

A new "back to the land" movement for Boy Scouts has come into being quite suddenly, with a full measure of financial support, at Wadhurst, a village tucked away picturesquely in the East Sussex uplands. It is a colony, conceived on republican lines, for Boy Scout farmers.

Sir Robert Baden-Powell, the Chief Scout, fresh from his travels in the Netherlands, has been emphasizing the growing scarcity of British farm hands, and the difficulties of food production at home; and as England possesses the finest conditions of soil and climate, he is anxious to get the boys back to the land and to train them to fill good positions as agricultural experts at home and in the colonies.

An old city merchant has placed at the disposal of Sir Baden-Powell a mansion with farm buildings and a hundred acres of first-class farming land. Here a farm school will open in a week or two with about forty or fifty pupils of fifteen years of age.

It is intended that the Boy Scouts, while being taught the duties of citizenship on the Baden-Powell principles and receiving the benefits of a modern curriculum, shall be taught a variety of agricultural and kindred subjects. A boy will be taught how to milk a cow, to shoe and ride a horse, to bake bread, to grow fruit, to keep bees, and such handicrafts as carpentry, building, leather work, and the rudiments of engineering. It is the promoters' idea to establish a colony which will be split up into about twenty-four "patrols," or groups, of eight boys; each group being in charge of a leader.

The main object, of course, is to keep the boys on the land. Five acres and a farm are to be allotted to each patrol, and with the best of advice given by an expert staff the various farms will be run for their own profit.

The chief novelty of the Boy Scout colony is the proposal to run it on the same republican principles as obtain in similar educational colonies in the United States. The civic duties of the young community are to be entrusted to the boys themselves, who will choose their own "mayor and corporation" from their ranks. "Municipal elections" will take place periodically, and meetings and other functions are to be arranged.

YEAR'S RECEIPTS $117,780,409

OTTAWA, Oct. 25.—The Finance Department issued to-day a statement of the public accounts for the fiscal year 1910-11. The receipts were $117,780,409.78, and the consolidated fund expenditures $87,774,198.32, showing a bookkeeping surplus of $30,006,211.46.

The capital expenditure was $30,832, 913.38; of this $23,487,986.19 was spent on the Transcontinental and $1,597,663.48 on bounties.

The Customs Department expects the customs revenue for 1911-12 to reach $80,000,000 as against $72,000,000 in 1910-11.

George Wilson, the boy who tramped 600 miles in seven weeks—walking from Liverpool to London, twice to Carnarvon, one of the visits being for the Investiture, back to "lackpool, and thence to Cardiff—has gone to sea, having been given work on a Cardiff steamer. When he comes back—paid off with his $10 a month—he will stop, he says, at a restaurant kept by a Cardiff Socialist. Asked why, he replied, "Because the first time I was in Cardiff they told me whenever I was hungry to go in there, and they gave me my breakfast."

Sanatorium Love Story

The Cardiff Guardians have had a letter from the matron of The Mount, a Worcestershire sanatorium, protesting against the publicity given to the case of a girl who had fallen in love with a male inmate. When the young man was discharged in the ordinary course he took lodgings near the sanitorium, and continued his courtship, with the result that the guardians acquiesced in the removal of the girl (who had to be confined to the premises) to another institution. The letter made it clear that there was no intention to detain the girl.

The Haunted Chamber

"How can you sit here calmly reading," exclaims Dora, vehemently, "when we are all so distressed in mind! But I forgot"—with a meaning glance—"you gain by his death; we do not."

"No, you lose," he retorts, coolly. "Though, after all, even had things been different, I can't say I think you had much chance at any time."

He smiles insolently at her as he says this. But she pays no heed to either his words or smile. Her whole soul seems wrapped up in one thought, and at last she gives expression to it.

"What have you done with him?" she breaks forth, advancing toward him, as though to compel him to give her an answer to the question that had been torturing her for days past.

"With whom?" he asks, coldly. Yet there is a forbidding gleam in his eyes that should have warned her to forbear.

"With Sir Adrian, your rival, with the man you hate," she cries, her breath coming in little irrepressible gasps. "Dynecourt, I adjure you to speak the truth, and say what has become of him."

"You rave," he says calmly, lifting his eyebrows just a shade, as though in pity for her foolish excitement. "I confess the man was no favorite of mine, and that I cannot help being glad of this chance that has presented itself in his extraordinary disappearance of my inheriting his place and title; but really, my dear creature, I know as little of what has become of him, as—I presume—you do yourself."

"You lie!" exclaims Dora, losing all control over herself. "You have murdered him to get him out of your path. His death lies at your door!"

She points her finger at him as though in condemnation as she utters these words, but still he does not flinch.

"They will take you for a bedlamite," he says, with a sneering laugh, "if you conduct yourself like this. Where are your proofs that I am the cold-blooded ruffian you think me?"

"I have none"—in a despairing tone. "But I shall make it the business of my life to find them."

"You had better devote your time to some other purpose," he says savagely, laying his hand upon her wrist with an amount of force that leaves a red mark upon it. "Do you hear me? You must be mad to go on like this. a good deal of your designing conduct, and your wild jealousy of Florence Delmaine. All the world saw how devoted he was to her, and—mark what I say—there has been instances of a jealous woman killing the man she loved, rather than see him in the arms of another."

"Demon!" shrieks Dora. "You would fix the crime on me?"

"Why not? I think the whole case tells terribly against you. Hitherto, I have spared you, I have refrained from hinting at the fact that your jealousy had been aroused of late; but your conduct of to-day, and the wily manner in which you have sought to accuse me of being implicated in this unfortunate mystery connected with my unhappy cousin, have made me regret my forbearance. Be warned in time, cease to persecute me about this matter, or—wretched woman that you are—I shall certainly make it my business to investigate the entire matter, and bring you to justice!"

He speaks with such an air of truth, of thorough belief in her guilt, that Dora is dazed, bewildered, and falling back from him, covers her face with her hands. The fear of publicity, of having her late intrigue brought into the glare of day, fills her wtih consternation. And then, what will she gain by it? Nothing; she has no evidence on which to convince this man; all is mere supposition. She bitterly feels the weakness of her position, and her inability to follow up her accusation.

"Ah, how like a guilty creature you stand there!" exclaims Dynecourt regarding her bowed and trembling figure. "I see plainly that this must be looked into. Miserable woman! If you know aught of my cousin you had better declare it now."

"Traitor!" cries Dora, raising her pale face, and looking at him with horror and defiance. "You triumph now because I have no evidence to support my belief; but——" She hesitates.

"Ah, brazen it out to the last!" says Dynecourt, insolently. "Defy me while you can. To-day I shall set the bloodhounds of the law upon your track, so beware—beware!"

"You refuse to tell me anything?" exclaims Dora, ignoring his words, as though they are unheard. "So much the worse for you."

She turns from him and leaves the room as she finishes speaking, but, though her words have been defiant, there is no kindred feeling in her heart to bear her up.

When the door closes between them the flush dies out of her face, and she looks even more wan and hopeless than she did before seeking his presence. She cannot deny to her self that her mission has been a failure. He openly scoffs at her threats, and she is aware that she has not a shred of actual evidence wherewith to support her suspicion; the bravado with which he has sought to turn the tables upon herself both frightens and disheartens her and now she confesses to herself that she knows not where to turn for counsel.

CHAPTER X.

In the meantime the daylight dwindles, and twilight descends. Even that, too, departs, and now darkness falls upon the distressed household, and still there is no news of Sir Adrian.

Arthur Dynecourt, who is already beginning to be treated with due respect as the next heir to the baronetcy, has quietly hinted to old Lady FitzAlmont that perhaps it will be quite as well, in the extraordinary circumstances, if they all take their departure. This the old lady, though strongly disinclined to quit the castle, is debating in her own mind, and, being swayed by Lady Gertrude, who is secretly rather bored by the dullness that has ensued on the strange absence of their host, decides to leave on the morrow, to the great distress of both Florence and Dora, who shrink from deserting the castle while its master's fate is undecided. But they are also sensible that, to remain the only female guests, would be to outrage the conventionalities.

Henry Villiers, Ethel's father, is also of the opinion that they should all quit the castle without delay. He is a hunting man, an M. F. H. in his ew ncountry, and is naturally anxious to get back to his own quarters some time before the hunting season commences. Some others have already gone, and altogether it seems to Florence that there is no other course open to her, but to pack up and desert him, whom she loves, in the hour of his direst need. For there are moments, even now, when she tells herself that he is still living, and only waiting for a saving hand to drag him into smooth waters once again!

A silence has fallen upon the house more melancholy than the loudest expression of grief. The servants are conversing over their supper in frightened whispers, and conjecturing moodily over the fate of their beloved master. To them Sir Adrian is indeed dead, if not buried.

In the servants' quarters a strange, dull light is being flashed upon the polished boards by a hanging lamp that is burning dimly, as though oppressed by the dire evil that has falle nupon the old castle. No sound is to be heard here in this spot, remote from the rest of the house, where the servants seldom except to go to bed, and never, indeed, without an inward shudder as they pass the door that leads to the haunted chamber.

Just now, being at their supper, there is no fear that any of them will be about, and so the dimly lighted corridor is wrapped in silence. Not quite unbroken, however. What is this that strikes upon the ear? What sound comes to break the unearthly stillness? A creeping footstep, a cautious tread, a slinking, halting, uncertain motion, belonging to some one who sees an enemy, a spy in every flitting shadow. Nearer and nearer it comes, now into the fuller glare of the lamplight, and stops short at the door so dreaded by the castle servants.

PALACE FOR ALFONSO

The People of Santander Have Gone to Enormous Expense

A new palace on the Isle of Magdalena, at Santander, built at an enormous cost, subscriptions having been made by rich and poor alike, will shortly be occupied by King Alfonso and Queen Victoria, to whom the people of Santander have given the palace as a gift. The furnishings, the cost of which has been defrayed by the city, are of a sumptuous character. The new royal residence is approached by a bridge from the mainland, and has only one entrance. The King and Queen are greatly charmed with the palace and have thanked the people of Santander for their generosity. Henceforth the royal family will spend the summer months at the new palace and at the Miramar Palace at San Sebastian. Upon leaving Madrid the Court will first go to Santander.

The New Parliament—How Constituted

Now that the Yukon election has terminated in the return of Dr. Alfred Thompson, Conservative, by a majority of about 400 over the late Liberal member, Fred T. Congdon, the membership of the House of Commons will stand:

	Con.	Lib.
Prince Edward Island	2	2
Nova Scotia	9	9
New Brunswick	5	8
Quebec	27	38
Ontario	73	13
Manitoba	9	1
Saskatchewan	1	9
Alberta	1	6
British Columbia	7	0
Yukon	1	0
	135	86

Comparing the present House of Commons with the last, and it will be found that when Parliament was dissolved last July its membership stood 132 Liberals to 89 Conservatives, classing the independents with the parties with which they usually voted. The result of the appeal to the country, therefore, so far as the late Government was concerned, was worse than a reversal of the situation. Nor does a study of the results by geographical sections leave the defeated ministers ground for comfort. Only in the Maritime Provinces, where control of the Intercolonial Railway gives the party in power an improper advantage, when it chooses to use it, did the Liberal party gain a majority. There it elected 19 out of 35 members; but there in the late Parliament it had 26 out of 35. In Ontario and Quebec, with 151 members, it had when the session of last year opened 88 supporters; when the session of this year opens it will have only 51. Also from the country west of Lake Superior, where it had 18 supporters to its opponents' 17, it now has 16 to its opponents' 19. The condemnation of the late ministers was as general as it was emphatic.

The most important factor in the result was the rejection by the electors of no less than eight of the late Cabinet Ministers, Messrs. Templeman, Paterson, King, Fisher, Borden, Fielding, Graham and Lemieux. The last named Minister ran for two constituencies and met with defeat in Gaspe, his old constituency, but succeeded in Beauce. Such a slaughter of Ministers in any one appeal to the country has no parallel in constitutional history.

The Transcontinental Railway Chairmanship

The Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, has shown his fitness for the important post he has been called upon to fill by one of his first acts of practical administration in appointing Mr. Reuben W. Leonard, of St. Catharines, to the position of chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission to succeed the Hon. S. N. Parent, who, as soon as the Laurier Government was deefated, anticipating what was in store for him, resigned.

Fortunately for the country, Mr. Cochrane has selected a gentleman to fill the important position of chairman of a commission that has the control of, and the spending of millions of money, who is eminent in his profession and whose reputation in all works with which he has been connected is above reproach.

The Globe's Ottawa correspondent declares the appointment to be that of an "eminent railway expert," and then, remembering he was a Globe correspondent and that his duty was to find fault, declared Mr. Leonard to be better known as a mining capitalist than as a railway engineer, although he has had some experience in railway construction in connection with the building of some of the C. P. R. lines and of the St. Lawrence & Adirondacks Railway, but he can hardly be classed as a railway engineer of outstanding national repute," and then adds: "His annual income is said to be over half a million."

If an "eminent railway expert," as he is declared to be by The Globe's correspondent, the correspondent should have kept his wits about him and not contradicted himself in the same paragraph.

The correspondent adds "no further changes" he understands are to be made in the composition of the Board. It is to be hoped this supposition is not correct. Whether or not, a thorough and full investigation should be had into that apparently shady transaction of the purchase of the terminal lands in and about Winnipeg, where hundreds of dollars were turned into thousands in a few days. Let the truth come out, and let's know who got the rake-offs, if there were any.

That $25,000 Postage Debt

The press of Canada is not likely to allow to pass without condemnation the flagrant act of favoritism, on the part of the late Government to The Globe and other Liberal papers in the use of the post office for the purpose of flooding the country during an election with poisonous Grit literature at the expense of the country. The manner in which contracts were manipulated, the dredging at St John, the sawdust wharf purchase, and other like transactions were bad enough, but to allow one journal to utilize the post office service at a loss of $25,000 to the revenue, is more than even the Hamilton Times dare justify, and that is saying a good deal. The Times says that if The Globe owes the money, it should be collected. This, retorts the Guelph Herald, is simply begging the question. If the leading organ of the Liberal party received favors prior to the election which were denied others, the fact would show that the Canadian postal service was being degraded for partisan purposes, and every newspaper in this country, Liberal and Conservative alike, must deprecate such a base prostitution of the public service."

Commenting further upon this question, the News says:

"Only an unscrupulous Administration would have undertaken to utilize the post office regulations to block the circulation of the News and other Conservative papers while it extended every facility to its chief organ. This is the petty device which was resorted to during the campaign concluded on September 21st.

"Throughout the campaign The News had to pay heavy excess postal charges on newspapers sent to nonsubscribers, while The Globe was sending out 41,000 campaign copies daily without putting up a cent of extra postage. On polling day The Globe owed the post office (that is to say the people of Canada) within a few dollars of $25,000. The Globe is still indebted to the country in that sum. Readers may wonder why we press this accusation, seeing that despite the daily blanketing of Ontario with Globes, the Province went almost solidly Conservative. The answer is just this. The News wants genuine Liberals to know some of the things that have been done in the name of Liberalism. Also it is important that the new Administration shall make no reprisals in future elections. The post office is a public service and must be operated as such regardless of politics and political considerations."

OZONE FOR ALL

Important Inovation for Keeping "Tube" Air in Good Condition

The jaded city man pining for a breath of really fresh air no longer need rush off to the seaside for his ozone. Within a fortnight every station of the Central London Railway will have its own apparatus for mixing electrically produced ozone with the atmosphere at the platform level and in the adjoining "tube," so that its patrons can enjoy the health-giving elements while travelling to and from their offices. Some months ago the Ozonair Company, Ltd., equipped the Bank Station with its patent ozone mixing system of ventilation. The increased freshness and purity of the atmosphere obtained have been so striking that the work of installing similar apparatus throughout the whole system is being rapidly carried out. At the Bank Station 6,000 to 7,000 cubic feet of ozonized air are pumped into the station and its adjoining "tube" every minute from seven in the morning until one o'clock at night. As a result the acrid, dampish odor so noticeable in some of the earlier-built "tube" systems has utterly disappeared.

The wheel of fortune has turned many a man's head.

FORCES FOR PORTUGAL

An Effort was Made in London to Assist the Royalists

Circumstances have just come to light which point to efforts having been recently made in London to assist through enlisting Englishmen, the Portuguese Royalists in their attempt to regain the throne of Portugal for ex-King Manuel.

The advice of a member of the Government was sought in the instance alluded to, and it was very pronounced against Englishmen running risks of capture, inasmuch as no official interference on the part of Ministers could be expected. The person approached was Lieutenant-Colonel D. P. Driscoll, D.S.O., chief executive officer and secretary of the Legion of Frontiersmen, who was head of Driscoll's Scouts in the Boer War.

"Some time ago a gentleman called upon me," said the Colonel, "and inquired whether I was willing to to take up the matter of recruiting forces for Portugal. He invited me to see a high Portuguese official in London, but I told him that before going further in the matter I would consult a relative who is conversant with Portuguese affairs, having lived in the country, and was formerly a member of the House of Commons. The advice of this friend was not to commit myself in any way until he had ascertained the wishes of the British Government. He saw a member of the Government, who told him that they could not countenance such a movement at any cost. When my mysterious visitor called a second time, about a week or ten days afterwards, I told him I would have nothing to do with the matter."

STORY OF A FORTUNE

Music Hall Doorkeeper Suddenly Becomes Wealthy

A romantic story of a fortune is reported from Cardiff, where the doorkeeper at the Empire Music Hall Sergt.-Major Thomas Smith, has just been informed that he is part heir to the estate of his brother Richard, who died at Strathroy, Canada. The value of the estate is estimated by the executors at $10,000,000, and the residue is left in equal shares to the brothers and sisters. The solicitors' letter informing the Sergt.-Major of his fortune was posted to his old regimental address in Monmouth, and, of course was returned. He has a sister in Plymouth. The family belongs to Devonshire, and the brother Richard emigrated to Canada sixty years ago. He saved money and invested it in land. In sinking for water he struck one of the richest oil wells in Canada.

A BISHOP'S CRITICISM

Wishes a More Vital Application of Christianity to Problems

In his address at Carlisle Diocesan Conference at Windermere, the Bishop of Carlisle, Dr. Diggle, claimed a more effective and vital application of Christianity to modern problems. "Our age," he said, "is an age of enormous material prosperity. Money is growing into a god and worshiped with an idolatrous and materialistic worship. On the other hand we are losing the sense of the dignity of labor. The heightening of the habits of living has everywhere increased its cost. These, with other causes, are producing an unrest amounting almost to perilious despair among the lower laboring classes, who often work eighty hours a week for twenty shillings. These things ought not to be. They turn the brotherhood of man into a sham."

Anyway, a cook book is full of good ideas.

HISTORIC PRISON CELLS

The Criminal Relics of London Will Be Stored Therein

The authorities of the new London Museum, at Kensington Palace, have secured possession of some historical prison cells, wherein will be housed the criminal relics of London.

The cells were discovered in a common lodging house in Wellclose Square, St. George's-in-the-East, and are believed to date back to the times of Charles II., and to have been subsequently used in connection with the Whitechapel Police Court. In the walls, which are built of oak, thickly studded with strong iron bolts, were the original fetters used for the confined prisoners, together with a plank bed, upon which, no doubt, many a criminal spent his last night.

The complete cells have been dismantled by experts, acting under instructions from Mr. Guy Laking, custodian of the new museum, and will be re-erected in their entirety in the annex at the museum at Kensington, where visitors will be able to pass in and out of them and inspect the many quaint inscriptions on the walls. An old oak staircase still stands in the house in Wellclose Square, but this will not be removed.

TWO ENGINES IN BIPLANE

Satisfactory Test Made of the New Apparatus

A successful trial has been made at the Royal Aero Club's ground Eastchurch (Isle of Sheppey), by Messrs. Short brothers of their twin engined biplane. Mr. F. K. McLean for whom the machine has been built, piloted with Lieut. C. R. Samson, R.N. as passenger. The chassis carries a weight of one ton. At starting it required ten men to hold the machine down, the twin engines, of 120 horse power exerting such great pull. Mr McLean took his machine up and down the ground several times, and although he kept throttling down she rose quickly, and when the engines were completely shut off her excellent gliding qualities were displayed, the machine coming gently to rest in spite of her great weight. So far the tests have proved eminently satisfactory. Her speed and other tests are to be conducted at the earliest opportunity.

NAVAL AVIATION

France and Germany are Paying Much Attention to It

Both France and Germany are paying special attention to naval aviation at present. France is establishing an aerodrome for the training of naval officers near Toulon, and Germany has already fixed on aerodromes at the naval bases at Cuxhaven and Wilhelmshaven. It is said that a big aeronaval station is also to be formed on the island of Heligoland. Heligoland, once a British possession, is so isolated that important experiments can be carried on there without fear of espionage. A number of German officers are now in training at the great aviation school at Johannisthal, near Berlin, and when trained they are to act as instructors at the new aerodromes. France and Germany are each experimenting actively with the aeroplanes which can alight on the water.

THE PENDULUM WALTZ

It Resembles the Vigorous Working of a Pump Handle

The newest form of waltz in Germany is called the "Pendulum." It is hard to describe on paper, but an idea may be had of it in performance by imagining a pump handle in vigorous motion. The pumping keeps time with the music, the bodies of the dancers swaying rythmically in accord. There is, of course, nothing new in the movement so far, except that it is exaggerated far beyond what is considered allowable in England or America; but in Germany the feet appear to keep no particular time at all, but "creep about," to use the German idiom, independently of the rythm. It is attributable to the limitations imposed on the waltz step by the hobble-skirt, which reduces the action of the feet to a minimum, and it is probable that with the disuse of the hobble-skirt the "Pendulum" too, will pass away.

HEREDITARY PENSION

Granted in 1675 by Charles II. and Still Being Paid

Living in Peterborough, in humble circumstances, is a groom named Smith, who, upon the death of his father, came into the possession of a hereditary pension, granted in 1675, by King Charles II., to a man who assisted his escape from England after the Battle of Worcester. The pension, which was voted by what is now known as the "Pensions Parliament," because of its readiness to recompense the King's friends on the expression of his Majesty's desire, amounts to $7.50 a week, and having been paid for 236 years, has already cost $92,040

As the pension was granted in perpetuity, only the dying out of his progeny can prevent the sum from eventually running into millions of pounds. Mr. Smith's father sold his life interest in the pension many years before he died, but his son had no difficulty in proving his title upon his father's death, the documents being in the keeping of a firm of London lawyers.

Mr. Smith, who was previously a groom in London, has a little son to whom he hopes to hand down the fruits of his ancestor's loyalty.

GETTING MEN TO CHURCH

At a conference of the Church of England Men's Society, held in Bath, under the presidency of Dr. Kennion, Bishop of Bath and Wells, the Rev. Hylton Stewart, rector of Bathwick, declared that if they were to attract men to church they must in the first instance get the women to reduce the size of their hats. The statement was received with laughter, and Mr. Hylton Stewart added that "a friend had declared that he would not go to church again until this was done, for he declared that he could neither see nor hear anything. Very often, he said, the women were more particular about the arrangement of their hats and their hair than they were about their prayers."

THE CZAR AND AVIATION

The Czar paid a long visit to the Aviation Exhibition at St. Petersburg and displayed particular interest in the British machines, conversing in English with the secretary of the Bristol Company and with Mr. Kennedy, an English engineer living in St. Petersburg, who is the inventor of an aeroplane propeller.

Pauper's Hallucination

At Cambuslang, a mining town in Lanarkshire, a curious case of a pauper's hallucination was reported to the parish council. The pauper, who has been in receipt of parochial relief for many years, has refused to accept the aliment voted to him. He has become possessed with the belief that a Lanarkshire magnate died and left him a fortune amounting to several thousand pounds, and that if he accepts parochial relief he will forfeit every penny of his "inheritance." All efforts to make the man change his mind have proved useless. The eccentric, who is of a good age, is well known locally, and the case is exciting great interest.

COLD IN THE CHEST?

RUB WELL WITH ZAM-BUK!

For bad colds on the chest, rub the chest and between the shoulders well with Zam-Buk at night.

If you suffer from catarrh or cold in the head, just insert a little Zam-Buk at the base of the nostril, and as the balm becomes warm, inhale the healing essences which evaporise.

Sores in the nostril which are sometimes set up by catarrh, will yield to Zam-Buk treatment.

Mrs. N. S. Babcock, of Matawatchan, Ont., says: "For a long time I had a very disagreeable sore on the inside of the nostrils, which gave me great pain and caused me much annoyance. I feared it would turn to a cancer, and all I tried proved unavailing. I was ordered to try Zam-Buk, and I am glad to say that the sore that defied all other remedies was overcome by one box of Zam-Buk, and is now quite healed."

Zam-Buk will also be found a sure cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, ulcers, eczema, blood-poison, piles, cuts, and skin injures generally. All druggists and stores 50c. box, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. Try Zam-Buk Soap, 25c. tablet!

IRISH TONGUE BEING REVIVED

France and Germany Are Paying Much Attention to It.

The rancor of religious and political animosities in Ireland has been greatly mitigated in recent years. There is a growing recognition among men of all creeds and all parties that they have interests in common as Irishmen, and that Ireland needs the service of all her sons. It is true that political opinions still mainly follow the lines of religious belief, a Protestant, that is, is usually a Unionist, and a Roman Catholic is usually a Home Ruler. But these old walls of sectarian partition are breaking down.

There is a genuine revival of interest in the old native language. It is part of that natural renaissance, the workings of whose mighty spirit can be seen in many directions. Every street name plate in Dublin now bears the name in Irish as well as in English letters, and Irish has been made a compulsory subject at the new Roman Catholic University. Yet there are singularly few signs of popular interest in the attempt to galvanize the old language into new life. Among some scholarly patriots, who regard the native tongue as expressing the Ethos of the nation, there is an intense zeal for Irish, and that splendid Irishman, Dr. Douglas Hyde, has communicated his enthusiasm for the vernacular tongue to an ardent body of disciples. This revival of enthusiasm for the Irish language is a very significant phase of the national awakening.

TIGERS FOR THE KING

Maharajah of Nepal is Arranging Rare Sport for George V.

If King George does not bring back from India a magnificent collection of hunting trophies it will not be the fault of the Maharajah of Nepal, who is making stupendous preparations for a unique tiger hunt in which the newly crowned Emperor of India will take part. Some idea of the grandeur of this hunt may be had when one hears that it will take 500 elephants to carry the hunters. These beasts are now being trained to stand the noise of guns and the sudden onslaught of maddened tigers.

The hunt will take place in the jungles of Nepal, which are the private property of the Maharajah and which, situated on the southern foothills and marshy tarai of the Himalayas, are the densest and most unexplored of any in India. They are literally swarming with wild beasts, which are very rarely disturbed, because foreign sportsmen are excluded, except when invited by the Maharajah. The shooting done by the Maharajah himself is not enough to make an impression on the game, which includes wild elephants and rhinoceroses, with all kinds of tigers, bears, leopards, wild bears, and deer.

ERUPTION OF ETNA

It Commenced with a Series of Terrific Explosions

The toll of death and destruction caused by the eruption of Etna is daily reaching higher figures. It is thought the final counting will compare favorably with those of any past disaster due to the volcano's activity. The devastation extends over an area of 460 square miles which the mountain covers. The eruption began with a series of terrific explosions, during which giant tongues of white flame leaped to the sky. Since then as many as 16 new craters have burst forth within a radius of seven miles from the central crater at a height of 8,000 feet, all of them belching dense smoke, showers of stones and ashes, and rivers of white-hot lava, which advanced at the rate of one mile per hour towards Linguagiossa and Castighone. They destroyed the superb pine forests and all the fields and vineyards in their track. The main lava stream, consisting of a solid advancing wall of fire fully three-quarters of a mile wide, has already buried the village of Sollichiata. A heavy rain of ashes continued incessantly over Catania and the whole region accompanied by frequent alarming shocks of earthquake, stronger than any felt in Italy since the great upheaval at Messina.

F. D. M'RAE ON TRIAL

Dr. Magee on Stand in Murder Case at Cornwall.

Father of Child For Whom Party Went In Search Admits Ill-Treating His Wife and Using Opprobrious Names—He Tells of Visit to McRae Home and Gives His Version of Death of Shaw.

Cornwall, Oct. 26.—The McRae murder case occupied the assises before Judge Sutherland all day yesterday and will last until some time on Saturday. About an hour of the morning session was taken up with the selection of the jurors.

The first witness called was Dr. Magee of Carp, who made two expeditions to Glengarry, to recover possession of, or, as the defence claims, kidnap Dr. Magee's child with which she had fled to her father's home at Bridge End, Glengarry, after several disagreements with her husband. He told of the two attempts to recover his child, his quarrels with his wife and finally, under cross-examination, admitted having used her in a manner unbecoming a gentleman. He had seized her by the hair on one occasion, on another he had shoved her and she fell down. Letters were produced to show that he had written to her using an insulting name.

D. C. McRae, called by the crown, told briefly of the visit of Dr. Magee and his friends on July 1, and their search of the house.

When it came down to cross-examination there was another squabble between Messrs. Pringle and Blackstock as to the admission of certain evidence in contradiction of Dr. Magee. Part of this was ruled out, but McRae was permitted to contradict Dr. Magee most emphatically on the point of interfering between the doctor and his wife. He had never said that unless she had liberty of conscience he would have to take her home. Mrs. Magee could no longer stand the treatment meted out to her by her lord and master and took advantage of her husband's absence to leave home with her child for the last time.

Because he was nearing the hiding place of Mrs. Magee and her child, D. C. McRae secured an old gun and threatened to shoot Dr. Magee. The doctor turned and made a detour to the roadway, joining the others, who had been compelled to move up 100 yards or so to save their tires.

After a brief confab and seeing another woman with a child at McRae's door, the party started back afoot, when they were confronted by the hired man, an Englishman named Rosser, who had picked up the shotgun and, dropping on one knee, threatened to "blow their bloody heads off."

Under re-examination by Mr. Blackstock, McRae said that he was not willing that Dr. Magee should get possession of the child unless the doctor produced authority. He wished Dr. Magee to believe that the old useless gun was a good one, and would be used unless the doctor left the premises. He had his hand on the axe which was on the road and had told Farquhar to cut the tires of the motor unless the party moved away.

He did not know who got the rifle for Farquhar, nor where Rosser got his gun. He heard the report of a rifle shot but could not swear that it was fired by Farquhar. He did not suspect that anyone was injured by the shot. Next morning he heard for the first time, while at church, that a man had been shot and killed. He knew that Farquhar was a good shot, but could not say he was a crack shot.

In reply to his lordship, McRae said that he was between where the shot was fired and the motor.

John Uren, the Bainsville constable, denied having a revolver and said that what had been mistaken for a revolver was a pair of hand-cuffs. Up to the time the party left the house to search the orchard, witness had not seen anything of F. D. McRae.

When the party got into the motor Dr. Magee, James Magee, Shaw and the witness were looking backwards. F. D. McRae came down the road to the rest of the McRae party, where, after speaking to them, he cried out, "You damned Protestant hound." He then dropped on his knees and seemed to be aiming at Dr. Magee.

When arrested by the witness next morning McRae had said that if anyone had been shot they had shot themselves.

Under cross-examination Uren admitted being a boy from a home in England. He had held people up before. As a preventive officer he admitted having carried handcuffs, which he sometimes carried to church. He drew the handcuffs with the intention of handcuffing D. C. McRae if he interferred with Dr. Magee in his search of the McRae premises, expecting to find D. C. McRae, the only man on the premises.

He did not know if he had any right to be on the premises. He had no papers. He had arranged by letter with Dr. Magee to join in the attack, and to stand between Dr. Magee and anyone who interfered with him.

Witness admitted getting D. C. McRae in a corner, holding him up with the handcuffs. Along with Dr. Magee he had prowled around the McRae homestead in June and knew all about the attempts to kidnap the child. He knew that he had no legal authority to enter D. C. McRae's house. F. D. McRae was on his knee three or four seconds before the auto started.

He said that Magee was mistaken in saying that the auto had moved one hundred yards or so before the firing.

Failed to Select Candidate.

Brantford, Oct. 26.—The Brantford Trades and Labor Council failed to select a candidate for the provincial contest here last night. Neither J. C. Coles nor Edward Lavery, both well-known trades unionists, were willing to accept the nomination. A section of the council was strongly favorable to placing a man in the field, but lack of proper organization was considered a serious drawback.

Conservatives, and all who support the Whitney Government should attend the ward meetings next week. Foster, Samson and Ketcheson on Monday night, Baldwin and Bleecker on Tuesday night and Coleman and Murney on Wednesday.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Ontario Association Holding Its Annual Meeting at Brockville

BROCKVILLE, Ont. Oct. 24.—Exactly one hundred years ago this month, the first Sabbath school on the continent was organized at Elizabethtown by Rev. William Smart, a Scots Church minister, sent out by the London Missionary Society. Adiel Sherwood, the first teacher, superintended the school upwards of fifty years. The name of the town was changed by Gen. Brock in 1812 to Brockville. Here, therefore, fittingly, the Ontario Sunday School Association is holding its annual convention this year, the forty-sixth of its existence. Five hundred and thirty credentials have been issued, and at the first session this afternoon, 322 had registered, more than ever before at the outset of a convention. Mr. T. E. Harrison, of Kingston, is president. The convention church is the First Presbyterian Major Albert Paterson, mayor, and Rev. Dr. Wm. Sparling, pastor of the Wall Street Methodist Church and president of the Ministerial Association, welcomed the delegates, Mr. Wm. Hamilton, chairman of the General Executive, replying.

Mr. John M. Gill, Brockville outlined the early days of the Sabbath school work by Mr. Smart.

The General Executive Committee attended in unusually large numbers for the opening day, and decided after full consideration of the proposal to alter the convention date to November, not to make the change. The Secretary's report showed a marked advance along all lines.

Regarding a summer training school a committee was appointed with power to co-operate with the denominational boards. Ottawa and Owen Sound are eager for the 1913 convention, next year goes to Hamilton, as fixed last year. Mr Theron Gibson, Toronto, showed a gold cup sent him by Count D. Taiku, president of the Imperial Bureau of Decoration, Japan in gratitude for $2,510 contributed by Sunday Schools all over the Dominion to save the famine stricken Japanese children. The evening meeting closed uniquely, the audience standing while the organist played "Hallelujah Chorus."

The usefulness of the "Pocket Testament League" was sketched by Mr. W. S. Dinnick, Toronto, honorary secretary of the league.

That the Sunday school is not for children only, or for small segments of the church membership, but is the bible school of the church as a whole, was emphasized by Rev. W. F. Price, pastor of North Bay Baptist church. A pleasant incident was the reception of a message of greeting from the Dominion W.C.T.U., and a suitable reply was sent.

The aged woman is in destitute circumstances. Although the daughter of Dr. George Schloetzer, Chicago's assistant commissioner of health in 1871, and acquainted with many of Chicago's early settlers, she has nothing and cares for nothing in the world except her dogs.

AMUSEMENTS

"THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S"

It is doubtful if a play has been seen in this city in many years that has attracted such wide attention as that accorded "The Girl From Rector's." The piece had its initial offering and was brought to Weber's Music Hall simply for a metropolitan try-out, but its success was so great it continued an uninterrupted run of three hundred nights and played to the biggest business in the history of the house. Critics declare it is one of the few productions of its sort ever made that carries with a high class plot and still contains a laugh in every line of the dialogue. Paul M. Potter, the author of the work, who was also responsible for "Trilby," and many other stage successes, received more royalties from "The Girl" last season than was paid any other writer for a single work in such a short space of time.

The story of "The Girl" is that of a young society woman of Battle Creek, Mich., who is interested in every charity there. For recreation, however, she comes to New York and through occasional visits to Rector's earns the title. When she returns suddenly to her home she finds many of her metropolitan friends there, and entanglements ensue which are not explained until just before the fall of the curtain on the last act. "The Girl" will be seen at Griffin's Opera House on Friday, Oct. 27th. Plan now open at Doyle's.

A BIG HIT IN MONTREAL.

The Montreal Star, of recent date says: With its delightful English humor and laughable English eccentricities, "The Private Secretary" has returned to Montreal, at His Majesty's, as an old favorite, with Mr. C. James Bancroft in the character of the timid curate, made famous in America by Mr. William Gillette's production of the play.

Mr. C. James Bancroft, in title role is himself responsible for a laugh almost every time he opens his mouth.

Second only to the character of the curate in the piece is that of Mr. Cattermole, the cranky, overbearing uncle, who reduces everybody to submission. In this role, Mr. Joseph Clancey's representation is sometimes even more humorous than that of the curate.

The characters themselves are the whole play, the vestige of a plot being built around the old uncle's mistaken impression that the bashful curate is his nephew, and hence arose all the humorous tangles of the play.

Two other characters well represented in the play are those of Mr. Sydney Gibson, the Bond Street tailor, represented by Mr. Shirley Braithwaite, and Miss Ashford, the spiritualist, played by Miss Nell Cave. The other roles are less humorous, but are as well played as their importance demands.

SHRINKABLE HEADGEAR

Ribbons When Tightened Reduce the Size of the Bonnet

"Shrinkable" headgear has arrived in Paris. The new style is especially suitable for motor bonnets and soft toques which are intended to fit closely round the head. A very charming example of the "shrinkable" bonnet is of black velvet edged with fur. It is made in the shape of a butterfly net, nearly two feet long. At either side interlaced in tabs of the same velvet are two ribbons, to be fastened in a bow under the chin. As the ribbons are drawn tighter the size of the bonnet is reduced, hence the "shrinkable" bonnet.

DOCTORS FAILED TO HELP HER

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Pound, Wis.—"I am glad to announce that I have been cured of dyspepsia and female troubles by your medicine. I had been troubled with both for fourteen years and consulted different doctors, but failed to get any relief. After using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier I can say I am a well woman. I can't find words to express my thanks for the good your medicine has done me. You may publish this if you wish."—Mrs. Herman Sieth, Pound, Wis.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. Proof is abundant that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

Belated Enthusiasm.

Ottawa, Oct. 26.—Now that a seat has been found for Hon. W. T. White in Leeds there is something of a rush by men who have hitherto shown a marked disinclination to part with their seats.

Halton County is a case in point. The new Finance Minister might have represented his native county, whose electors as victims of the Farmers' Bank smash, are seeking relief from the Government, but there was difficulty in opening the constituency. The difficulty was overcome Tuesday when a meeting of Halton Conservatives decided to offer the seat to Mr. White. A delegation was despatched to Ottawa yesterday in time to see the Finance Minister accept the Leeds offer.

One Wife's Woes.

Montreal, Oct. 26.—While listening to the torrent of charges against him, made by his wife, Patrick Ferrier swooned and fell in the prisoner's dock and his trial had to be postponed.

His wife claims that in four years of married life all he has ever given her was $1.50. He had beaten her, and in one of the beatings he had kicked her when a child was about to be born, and the baby died before birth. Another child had died of privation. He had become a cocaine fiend and when she remonstrated he beat her. She wanted him sent to jail for a long time, so that he would not bother her.

German Elections.

Berlin, Oct. 26.—It was officially announced yesterday that the elections for members of the Reichstag would be held on Jan. 12. The present session will probably close at the end of November or early in December. Meantime the Reichstag hopes to dispose of the labor exchange measure, the new workmen's insurance bill and reform the criminal code. Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg will probably reply to the interpellation concerning the Moroccan negotiations with France.

George Will Case.

Kingston, Oct. 26.—Two months ago, when the famous George will was found, it was discovered that some person had tampered with it. The figure "four" had been changed to "fourty," the spelling being incorrect, showing it had been changed. When it came before Chief Justice Mulock, in the assize court, he ordered that the word "four" be accepted as the intent of the testator. New settlement papers between the widow and other interested parties are being made out.

S. F. McKinnon Left Million.

Toronto, Oct. 26.—The will of the late S. F. McKinnon, who left an estate amounting to nearly a million dollars, came up yesterday for an interpretation before Justice Teetzel. The court was informed that the provision allowing the executors $200 for their work by the deceased, was a mistake, and that the heirs were willing that this amount should be increased. The court was asked to take action on the matter.

TURKS WERE REPULSED

Italians Maintained Their Position in Monday's Fight.

Arab Tribesmen Rose Against Invaders and Conflict Was Desperate For a Time—Italian Soldiers Held Their Ground and Reckless Daring Was Shown on Both Sides—Arms Hidden Everywhere.

Tripoli, Oct. 26.—Fight Monday was of a desperate nature. The Arabs rose against the Italians at the time of the Turkish attack on the outposts and the Italian losses were heavy.

It is nevertheless clear that the Italians can count on the greater number of Arabs in the country. Those who attacked the Bersaglieri numbered two or three hundred, including many Turks dressed as Arabs. In the town the number of rebels is smaller still.

The Italian soldiers remained perfectly calm under fire. When the Arabs found the Italians seriously engaged at Sciaralghad repelling the Turkish attack they opened fire among the gardens, the thick vegetation of which makes them almost impenetrable.

The fourth company of the Eleventh Bersaglieri accepted the situation without flinching, the men in the trenches firing in turn. One man who was seriously wounded bandaged a gaping wound with his handkerchief and continued fighting. When ordered to go to an ambulance he refused, and it required four men to remove him to the Red Cross station by force.

A sergeant of carabinieri, stationed with his men at the mosque near Sciaralghad, where a large number of Arabs were in ambush, insisted on going out on a scouting expedition, saying the bullet that would kill him was not yet manufactured. He had hardly turned the corner of the mosque when a volley fired at about ten paces killed both him and his horse.

A detachment of Italian soldiers on the flank, who had seen four Arabs rise from cover to shoot, fired immediately, killing the Arabs.

Naval Lieutenant Roselli, who happened to be with the outposts when the firing commenced, placed himself at the head of a detachment of the Eighty-Second Regiment, and began a forward movement, with the object of reconnoitring the ground.

The mounted carabinieri, who replaced on the left flank the cavalry engaged on the front at Boumeliana and Gargaresh, covered themselves with glory.

The Turks and Arabs showed equal disregard for danger. They appeared to be quite indifferent to death.

Every Arab house was found to be a hiding-place for arms. The ammunition and rifles landed from the Turkish transport Derna had been lowered at the ends of ropes into wells. Sacks of cartridges were hidden in the houses.

Death of Eye Specialist.

Cornwall, Oct. 26.—Dr. Alex. F. Pringle, a specialist in the treatment of diseases of the eye, who was spending a few days with relatives in town before proceeding to his home in Northfield, Minn., after a trip to Europe, died suddenly at the residence of his sister at noon yesterday. He had been in ill-health since an automobile accident in London, Eng.

The late Dr. Pringle was a son of the late Judge Pringle, and was born here 58 years ago. He has resided in the west for a good many years. He leaves a wife in Northfield, but he has no children.

Elopements to Blame.

Washington, Oct. 26—Statistics compiled from the records of the District Supreme Court show that 40 per cent. of all divorces here are the result of runaway matches and 30 per cent. result from marriages where one of the contracting parties was under 21 years of age.

Eighty per cent. of the divorce suits have been filed by women and less than 10 per cent. of the couples who seek the courts are parents. There is one divorce suit in the District Court to every four marriage licenses.

Want Colonial Consuls.

Montreal, Oct. 26.—At yesterday's meeting of the Chamber of Commerce a report was submitted and approved to the effect that the Canadian Government should make representation to the Imperial Government so as to gain consent to the recognition of the right of Colonial Governments to appoint consuls abroad, or so to enlarge their own consular system as to admit colonial representatives, who should be empowered to watch exclusively over colonial interests.

Offered $2,000,000 For Church.

Montreal, Oct. 26.—Major John T. McBride yesterday made a written offer of $2,000,000 for the St. James' Methodist Church, and it seems to be the general belief that the church will be sold. It is stated that this is the only offer in view. Major McBride is acting for Mr. J. T. McGreevy of Winnipeg, but it is thought that the Canadian Northern are behind the sale.

Chinese Legislators Present Ultimatum to Manchus.

National Assembly Insists on Punishment of the Man Who Sold Railway to Foreigners—If Impeachment Is Not Acted Upon Parliament Threatens to Dissolve—Object of Attack Is a Strong Minister.

Pekin, Oct. 26.—Further defections to the rebels, including Nanchang, capital of the Province of Kiangsi, and Klielin, capital of Kwangsi, have served to increase the tension here over the revolution. To add to the seriousness of the situation, the Tzachengyuan, China's first national assembly, yesterday gave to the Manchus what the legations consider an ultimatum. The assembly impeached Sheng-Hsuan-Huai, president of the Ministry of Post and Communications, and demanded his dismissal with severe punishment.

A reply is required from the Government to-day, failing which the assembly will dissolve and the members return to their respective provinces. From the temper shown, it is believed that the assembly will carry out the threat. The only course open to the Government is either to sacrifice a man who is considered by the foreigners the strongest member of the Cabinet, or, retaining him, declare war on the assembly, as well as on the best majority of Chinese.

The charges against Sheng-Hsuan-Huai are those formulated by the people of Szechuen, Hupeh and Hunan. Sheng negotiated the loans for the nationalization of the railways, and has been a leading advocate of the anti-provincial policy, which is regarded as largely responsible for the revolution. The inhabitants of these provinces have shown strong opposition to the proposed railway construction. At the meeting of the assembly yesterday the members urged that they were not against foreign loans, but against the methods employed and the results, which were tantamount to robbing the pockets of the Chinese, who had already begun the railways, and selling them out to foreigners.

When the assembly rose to vote, even the front row Manchu princes, evidently intimidated by the Radicals, stood up, demanding the noted mandarin's degradation.

Gen. Yin-Tchang's silence has given rise to innumerable speculations. The War Minister in the field seems to consider it unnecessary to communicate anything but his needs to the presidents of the other Government boards. Only the palace seems to know his intentions.

The Imperialist commander has not been followed by any foreigners, even the foreign controllers of the railway having withdrawn, either voluntarily or by request. Therefore it is impossible to ascertain whether or not the reports regarding the Imperial army, upon which the dynasty's hope depends, is seriously disorganized. The troops have been pushed forward without having been safeguarded in any manner, which would already have meant disaster had the enemy been more capable.

The trains go down to the south laden with soldiers and equipment, but they do not return. The troops set forth without sufficient ammunition; then quantities of ammunition follow, but no commissariat supplies. There are rumors of mutinies, retreats, and desertions.

It is now said that the engine drivers who previously were reported as having been shot for refusing to take the trains forward, were really shot because they proceeded, the soldiers not desiring to meet the enemy. The foreign engineer, Bouillard, with his staff, will go south to-day and endeavor to reorganize the railway traffic for Yin-Tchang.

Nevertheless, in spite of disorganization, inability and disaffection, the army evidently has moved steadily forward. A wireless report from Hankow last night indicated that the Imperialist and revolutionary forces are already closely in touch.

The Government authorities have succeeded in arresting a large number of students who attempted a manifestation favoring rebellion in Tientsin.

Fear Mohammedan Troubles.

Toronto, Oct. 26.—A cable from Honon, China, to the Presbyterian Foreign Mission office in Toronto, yesterday, states that the situation is quiet there. The movement among the Mohammedans is a source of some anxiety among the mission officials here, the church having some forty-nine missionaries in Honan Province. Should an anti-Christian feeling be stirred up by them, there is a possibility of the entire Christian population being wiped out.

Welland Conservatives.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 26.—Welland County Conservatives will hold a convention in Welland this afternoon to nominate a candidate for the Legislature. Bertie, Stamford, Thorold Townships have instructed their delegates to vote for the re-nomination of Evan Fraser. Dr. F. W. Wilson of this city is seeking the nomination and claims to have the support of a majority of the delegates from this city.

Graham Stays Out.

Ottawa, Oct. 26.—Hon. George P. Graham stated last night that matters had not progressed any further in the direction of his securing a seat than they had a day after the elections. There is every indication of the ex-Minister of Railways being out of Parliament for the coming session at least.

Accepts Postmastership.

Montreal, Oct. 26.—Hon. L. O. Taillon, ex-Prime Minister and ex-Postmaster-General, has indicated his acceptance of the Montreal postmastership and will be appointed next week. Rufus Pope will be appointed Senator for the district of Bedford.

THE MARKETS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Lower—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Oct. 25.—Assertions that the Argentine harvest, now almost at hand, will prove so abundant that scarcity elsewhere can work no harm, sent the wheat market to-day to a lower level. The close was 1-2c to 5-8c under last night. Other leading staples, too, showed a net decline all around, corn 5-8c to 1 3-8c to 1 1-2c; oats 3-8c to 1-2c to 1c, and hog products 5c to 10c.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ⅛d to ½d lower than yesterday on wheat, and unchanged on corn. Paris wheat closed ⅛d to ¾d lower, Antwerp ¾c lower, Berlin ¼c higher, and Budapest ½c higher.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Oct. 25.—There was a fairly good enquiry from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat, but the volume of business done was small, as the prices bid did not show any advance. The local trade in oats was quiet, but the undertone to the market is firm, as stocks on spot are light, and it will be some days before any arrivals from the west of importance come to hand. Corn is strong, but the demand is rather limited. A good trade is doing in flour for local and country account, but the bids from the other side were all out of line for spring wheat grades. Cheese is quiet, but firm. Demand for butter for shipment to western points is fair, and the undertone to the market is strong. Eggs are fairly active. Provisions quiet and unchanged.

COURT-MARTIAL ORDERED.

British Officers Will Sit In Judgment on Niobe's Crew.

Ottawa, Oct. 26.—The Department of the naval service having reviewed the circumstances attending the stranding of H. M. C. S. Niobe on the southwest ledge off Cape Sable in July last, have come to the conclusion that a court-martial should be held, and Hon. Mr. Hazen, Minister of the naval service, has ordered that steps should be taken to hold this court-martial.

As there are not at present in the Canadian naval service a sufficient number of officers of the proper rank to constitute this court-martial, arrangements have been made with the Admiralty to loan a sufficient number of officers to hold it and orders have been given for the fourth cruiser squadron to sail immediately for Halifax. The squadron is composed of the following four first-class cruisers: H. M. S. Berwick, Donegal, Essex, Leviathan (flagship).

The squadron is commanded by Rear-Admiral F. E. Bradford, who will be authorized by the Minister of the naval service to convene a court-martial for the purpose of investigating the conduct of the officers of the Niobe and the circumstances which led to the stranding of the vessel.

Police Seek Hull Doctor.

Ottawa, Oct. 26.—The Ottawa detectives left yesterday afternoon for Cayament Lake, in the Gatineau district, north of here, to bring back Dr. J. A. He is the Hull physician who some months ago was tried and acquitted on a charge of killing Mrs. Frank Spain of Ottawa by performing an illegal operation.

The proprietress of the alleged resort in Ottawa is under arrest and two women said to be patients of Ouimet have been removed to a hospital. The police have been working up the case for some weeks, but only yesterday secured sufficient evidence to act upon.

SEEKING ADVENTURE THEY MAY HAVE MET DEATH

NEW YORK, Oct. 25.—It is feared that the yawl Pandora, in which two South Australian sea captains left New York July 29 last for London on the third leg of an adventurous trip around the world, has been lost. The Customs House received an anxious inquiry to-day from J. Forbes Blythe of Coventry, England, who is a brother of George B. Blythe, one of the two captains of the yawl. Customs House officials were forced to reply "Unreported."

Capt. Blythe and his mate, Peter Arapakis, who had grown tired of shipping aboard lumbering freighters decided to seek real adventure in a 36-foot yawl, which they built in Perth, South Australia, under their own supervision, staunch enough for a globe-girdling cruise. They sailed from Perth two and a half years ago and weathered many severe storms in crossing the Pacific and rounding the Horn. The Pandora reached New York early in July, considerably battered but still seaworthy. The trip across the Atlantic in midsummer was looked upon as the easiest leg of the long cruise, but three months have passed and the vessel has not been reported so far as known.

SPORTING NOTES

BASE BALL

In fine weather and on their home grounds, the New York "Giants" won the fifth game of the world's championship series yesterday by 4 runs to 3 after a strenuous struggle of ten innings. Marquard, who went in to pitch for New York, was batted out of the box in the third, when Lapp made a single, Coombs got his base on an error of Doyle's, and Oldring made a home run, driving the others in ahead of him, and three runs were scored. Marquard was then taken out and Ames succeeded him. Crandall went into the box in the eighth. The Giants got one run in the seventh and two in the ninth, tieing the score. The Giants won by scoring again in the tenth, Plank being then in the box for the Athletics. To-day's game will be played in Philadelphia.

No Opposition to Ministers.

Montreal, Oct. 26.—Friday will be nomination day for the bye-elections necessitated by the Cabinet appointments. Yesterday it was stated by Liberal leaders in Montreal that there will be no opposition offered to any of the newly-appointed Ministers in this province. There has been some agitation along these lines of late, especially with regard to Hon. Mr. Monk in Jacques Cartier, and Hon. Bruno Nantel in Terrebonne, but a caucus of the party leaders was held yesterday afternoon, at which it was decided that nothing was to be gained by further opposition just now.

There has, however, been discussion going on regarding protests by both sides. As matters now stand it was stated yesterday that only three protests were being considered, in Montcalm, Bagot and Three Rivers. Whether these protests will be forced is not yet decided, but it is thought not unlikely that the close election of Hon. Jacques Bureau in Three Rivers will be contested.

Youthful Horse Thief.

Montreal, Oct. 26.—That the juvenile court cannot come too soon was the concensus of opinion amongst spectators in the arraignment court yesterday morning, when Frank Martin, aged 9, was arraigned before Judge Lanctot, to answer to a charge of "horse stealing."

The little fellow had to stand on a chair in order that his head might be visible over the railing of the dock.

The boy had jumped into a buggy belonging to Mr. Joseph Filiatreault, which was standing in front of a store on Notre Dame street west on Tuesday. After an extended tour of the western part of the city, the boy was stopped by Constable Beauvais, while driving east on St. James street.

Judge Lanctot decided to give the little lad another chance, and sent him back with his father and a warning.

Welland Canal Problems.

Welland, Oct. 26.—Delegates from the Boards of Trade along the Welland Canal held a meeting here yesterday and decided to invite Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, to come to Welland and learn at first hand the local situation relative to the enlargement of the Welland Canal. A resolution was also passed, approving of the intention of the Toronto Board of Trade to send a delegation to Ottawa to have the canal question re-submitted to the Government.

W. M. German, M.P., paid a splendid tribute to the Minister of Railways and Canals, as a man likely to find a capable solution of the canal problem. He thought the late Minister, Mr. Graham, had unnecessarily delayed the beginning of the work.

Young Farmer Killed

Lindsay, Oct. 26.—George Switzer, a young farmer, 37 years of age, of Cameron, Ont., was instantly killed yesterday morning in a somewhat peculiar manner. He was backing a load of lumber out of the barn, and, as it was being skidded down the gangway, the wheels slewed, the load toppling over the steel gangway, pinning Switzer underneath the wheels. He was found dead by his father, his watch showing that death occurred at 8.10 a.m.

Switzer leaves a wife and six children, besides his parents.

HAMBOURG RECITAL A GREAT SUCCESS

The City Hall was thronged last night with a splendid audience composed of the music-loving people of Belleville, who had assembled for the purpose of listening to a recital by Mark Hambourg, the great Russian pianist. Speaking in general terms of the performance, it can truthfully be said that it was one of the greatest musical treats which our citizens ever enjoyed. It is but giving credit where credit is due to say that it is entirely owing to the enthusiastic love of the divine art by Mr. Ivor Thomas, head of the piano, organ and theoretical departments of Albert College and organist and choir master of Bridge Street Church that Mr. Hambourg was induced to give a performance here, Mr. Thomas having worked untiringly in that behalf.

Hambourg is not, as some critics would have, a musician of a one sided and shallow temperament; but rather a mastermind of high ideals, of brutal passions; of riotous life and of murmuring sctreams and hallowed places—all in a breath. His understanding of the inner beauties of his numbers combined with brilliant technical execution and a strong personality enabled him to convey, as he directed, the emotions of the masters without exaggeration and without effort.

Particularly fine were his strong, sane interpretations of Chopin in Impromptu A flat, Scherzo C sharp minor and Barcorolle, while the simple delicacy of his rendition of Arabesques (Schumann), the Spinning Song (Mendelssohn) and the Nocturne A flat (Chopin) were unique in those haunting qualities which only musicians of a rare type can master.

His "Danse Negre" from Scott, and "Rhapsodie No. 2." (Liszt) were superb, although from a critical standpoint he at times sacrificed the refinement which characterized his other numbers, for strength of a passionate, brutal type.

HAPPY SUFFRAGETTES

Delighted with the Success of Their Big Procession

The English suffragettes are jubilant over the success of their monster procession through the streets of London a few weeks ago, which created a very strong impression, and emphasized the fact that public feeling towards the movement has undergone a vast change during the last year. Miss Christabel Pankhurst, one of the leaders of the movement, replying as to whether the suffragists ever intended to resume their former militant tactics, which, according to many, have done great harm to the cause, said: "It all depends on circumstances. We are not particularly fond ourselves of making 'rough house,' but we surely don't wish anyone to think for a moment that there is any weakening of our militant spirit. We are strong believers in its usefulness under certain conditions, and we are still prepared to resort to militant tactics when and where it is necessary. The events of the last few weeks have impressed upon the minds of the people of England that representatives of every political shade of opinion are in favor of our movement, which is undoubtedly the most popular political movement of the day. The task immediately to engage our attention now is to increase the strength of our organization and to pay particular attention to our constitutional work. We feel we are going to win, and that the conciliation bill will soon go through."

COSTLIEST HAT IN THE WORLD

It is Covered with a Wealth of White Ospreys

The most expensive hat in the world is on view at the annual exhibition of Ascot and Grand Prix hats held by the Maison Lewis at their salons in Regent Street, London. It has been especially designed by M. Lewis for Princess Miahesco of Bukharest. It is a large black tagal hat lined with silver lace and covered with a wealth of white ospreys, which tower high into the air. A cluster of silver roses in front completes the trimming. The unusually high price of the model is due to the ospreys. This particular millinery, which has caused so many indignant protests against cruelty to birds, has become so scarce that the small quantity which is still on the market has risen enormously in price, and in accordance with fashion's usual foibles, this fact suffices to make ospreys the rage of the season.

ROYALTY AND LITERATURE

Writings in Manuscript and Print by the Bavarian Royal Family

The Bavarian Royal Family is the most literary in Europe, and an exhibition of their writings in manuscript and print has been opened at Munich. The exhibition embraces no fewer than 573 works of different classes. Some are books on politics and religion; others translations of moral writings; and others highly frivolous. Among the latter is a work entitled "A Receipt Against Mothers-in-Law," by King Ludwig I., the ruler whose love affair with the artiste Lola Montes led to his enforced abdication. Another Bavarian King wrote poetry in German, English, French, Italian, Latin and Greek, and translated from Spanish. Four Bavarian Kings have left behind them poetry in different languages. The verses of Ludwig I. are set to music by himself. Among the exhibits are compositions of King Ludwig II., the friend and patron of Wagner, who murdered his physician and drowned himself in Starnberg Lake in 1885.

LITTLE PRNICESS JULIANA

Although Princess Juliana's father, Duke Henry of Mecklenburg, is a typical German, she is thoroughly Dutch in her seriousness. Frequently she is to be seen driving a span of tiny ponies about the Royal Palace grounds at the Hague. She sits in a miniature phaeton, while a nurse walks alongside and a groom holds the guide rein. Her second birthday she celebrated by "reviewing" the Apeldoorn Boy Scouts, who paraded in her honor. Among her birthday presents was a large doll dressed in Dutch costume, which was brought to her by a peasant woman from Zeeland. The woman was permitted to hand the doll personally to the little Princess, who received it with great delight.

THEATRE DONT'S

Advice that a Veteran Actor Contributes Without Charge

Don't arrive at the theatre late. You would not begin your dinner with the entree.

Don't keep your theatre bonnet on until the very last minute before the curtain goes up, and thus give the man behind you a fit wondering whether you are going to take it off or not.

Don't secure side seats and then glare at the people who have inside ones and pass you on their way out to see some man between the acts. Maybe you've done the same thing yourself.

Don't chatter during the play. The actors are paid to speak their lines for your entertainment.

BIGAMY AND FRAUD

That he had been corresponding with thirty different women at the same time, was alleged against George Lucind, charged with obtaining money by false promises of marriage and with bigamy at the Westminster Police Court. Detective-Inspector Tappenden stated that 2,700 letters, written by seventy-seven different women were found at prisoner's lodgings. In the majority of cases they referred to the man having asked them for money, and in fifteen cases the letters showed that money had been sent him varying from $300 to $125 and smaller sums.

One may respect gray hairs without feeling obliged to throw bricks at bald heads.

PECULIAR TRAGEDY

Shot His Wife, Set Fire to the House, Then Committed Suicide

The papers are full of an extraordinary tragedy which occurred in a villa just outside St. Petersburg on the Baltic line. About two years ago a German subject, named Kurtz, married a wealthy widow, over 50 years of age. He himself was only 30 years old, and the marriage from the outset was unhappy, there being interminable quarrels arising from jealousy and financial recriminations. After a violent dispute at lunch, Kurtz left the house, but returned about an hour later and threatened his wife with a revolver. She tried to escape, but he fired three shots after her, hitting her each time in the back, but without inflicting serious injuries. She staggered out into the street and was taken to a hospital in an unconscious condition. Kurtz then poured quantities of petroleum over the furniture and set fire to it. Then he appeared on the balcony of the drawing-room and addressed the crowd assembled below. His last words were: "All will soon be burning, and there will be nothing left." Thereupon he shot himself in public twice through the heart with a revolver. Almost immediately flames burst forth from every part of the house. When the firemen got the fire under control, the charred remains of Kurtz were found on the balcony.

MEN'S FASHIONS

A Paper in Rome Receives Some Radical Suggestions

That men as a whole take nearly as much interest in fashion as women has just been proved by a recent symposium in a Rome paper, which draws some interesting declarations from well-known painters and writers as to what should constitute the regulation attire for the male sex in future. Out of a thousand answers received, no fewer than 840 decided for a radical change in men's fashions. Leonardo Bezzaro, the artist, would like to see the number of buttons reduced, the high, stiff collar done away with, and the soft hat adopted. He admits that if these reforms become accomplished facts life, for men at least, would again be worth living. Alfredo Malani is an enemy to the prevailing fashion because it is colorless and without folds. Color, he says, gives men animation and energy. Ugo Flares the writer, is in favor of trousers being dispensed with on the ground that this garment is an enemy to sculpture. Alfredo Panzini, another writer, complains that the men who spend their lives in schools, offices, and factories, not only sacrifice their beauty but their thoughts for beauty in their fidelity to black and grey clothes geometrically cut. Angelo Dall 'Oca Bronca, who writes as well as he paints, considers that the garments worn by men to-day, though hypocritical, are comfortable and necessary in order to conceal their misshapen legs, their stomachs, and their souls.

CELEBRATED BACHELORS

Excuses Some Famous Men Had for Not Getting Married

Among authors we have Pope, Goldsmith, Lamb, and Macaulay. The feeble health of "the wasp of Twickenham" stood, no doubt, in the way of his marrying. Goldsmith had not the same excuse, but in his case it was quite as well that he passed through life as a bachelor. A single man who habitually spends twice as much as he has is never likely to make a wise and prudent husband, even though he has the rare fortune to fall in with a model of feminine sagacity. Lamb, "that frail, good man," as Wordsworth calls him, was a bachelor, not from choice but from affection. The singular loyalty with which he devoted himself to his sister in circumstances of melancholy interest prevented his marrying a girl whom, it appears, he truly loved. Lord Macaulay, though he had warm domestic affections, was never married. He rested content with the loving sympathy of his sister Hannah, the wife of Sir Charles Trevelyan, whose children were to him as his own.

Handel, Reynolds, Turner, Sir Isaac Newton, and Cavendish, were among the men illustrious in art or science who remained bachelors.

From February 15th to August 3rd, 94,089 meals were served, made up as follows: 18,162 luncheons, 27,592 dinners, 316 suppers, 45,705 teas, and 2,277 meals at the bar. The receipts amounted to $60,000. There was spent on provisions $36,000; cigars, $3,200; wines, etc., $21,000.

NEW RANGE FINDER

Will Counteract the Rolling and Pitching of a Battleship

H.M.S. Orion is putting to test a new form of range-finder to be used in the firing of her 13.5 in. guns. This consists of a gyroscopic mounting upon which a range-finder is carried. The object is to counteract the rolling and pitching of the battleship in a rough sea, and enable the range to be found more correctly.

The new range-finder is placed in fire-control stations at the top of tripod masts, from which guns are trained and fired by electrical connections with the barbettes; and it has been highly successful when tested on shore. During the gun trials conditions will be extremely severe, on account of the intense vibration to which the apex of the tripod masts will be subjected.

WATCHING EX-KING MANUEL

The Young Royalist Does Not Appear to be Conceived with State

The doings of young ex-King Manuel are watched very closely, and his slightest movements are attributed to the gravest cause. When Manuel unexpectedly returned to London after travelling all night from Scotland every London paper reported that he was on the point of returning to his native country to place himself at the head of his loyal followers in a bold attempt to win back his crown. As a matter of fact, Manuel's night journey had no connection whatever with the monarchist rising, he simply wanted to keep an appointment with a certain exceedingly beautiful young lady whose company he finds absolutely necessary to his happiness for the time being, and he spent all next day in a motor car with his beloved, while the papers had him presiding over an important council of war at his house in Richmond, the gates of which were carefully guarded against reporters.

FOUND HIDDEN MONEY

John Eastup, of Runcorn, Cheshire, has discovered in various parts of his cottage nearly $5,000, which had been hidden by his wife, who died a week or two ago. Eastup knew that his wife was of very thrifty habits, and after the funeral commenced a search of the house. Secreted in a cupboard he found a basin containing several hundred threepenny-pieces, in another cupboard was a hoard of half-crowns, and beneath a brick in the cellar floor a jampot filled with 552 sovereigns was discovered.

NORTH HASTINGS CONSERVATIVES MEET

Great Gathering at Madoc—Mr. Robert Cook Nominated for the Legislature

The Conservatives of North Hastings met in convention on the 26th inst. in the Village of Madoc for the purpose of electing officers for the coming year, and the selection of a candidate to contest the Riding at the approaching general election for a seat in the Provincial Parliament of Ontario.

Seldom has there been so numerous and influential a gathering of Conservatives in the North. Flushed with the late victory, having just elected their two Dominion candidates by majorities of 1,771 in one case and 1,066 in the other, they evinced a determination to repeat former victories whenever opportunity offers.

The hall was crowded to overflowing with delegates and others from the extreme north of the Riding to its southern limits. Of delegates there were not less than 118 present, every municipality being represented.

The chair was occupied by Mr. E. W. Hawkins, of Rawdon, Dr. Eagleson acting as Secretary.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was then proceeded with, and resulted as follows:—

President—E. W. Hawkins, Rawdon
1st Vice-President—Thos. Walker, Bancroft.
2nd Vice-President—Jud Gunter
Secretary—Harry Kingston, Madoc Township.
Treasurer—R. P. Coulter, Stirling.

Nominations for candidates were called and Mr. J. W. Pearce, M.P.P., present representative of the Riding stepped forward, and in a speech of about half an hour gave a clear account of his stewardship during the ten years he had represented the Riding, and in convincing language pointed out the advantages which had accrued to Ontario by having an honest, progressive Government in power, which Sir James Whitney's had proved to be, closing by stating that for private reasons he was compelled to retire from public life, but had no doubt that the Riding would continue to be represented by a gentleman who would give a cordial and hearty support to the Ontario Conservative Government, under the Premiership of Sir James Whitney, which sentiment was loudly cheered.

The President then called for nominations for candidates, which resulted in the following names being presented for consideration by the convention.

Mr. James English, ex-Reeve of Madoc.

Mr. John A. McCoy, of the Village of Madoc.

Mr. Robert Cook, Reeve of the Township of Rawdon.

Mr. English, in a few words, stated that he had been urged by numerous friends to allow his name to go before the Convention, but at present, whatever he might do in the future, he declined to be a candidate, leaving the battle to be fought by Messrs. Cook and McCoy.

Short speeches were then made by Messrs. Cook and McCoy, both pledging themselves and friends to support the nominee of the convention, which was loudly applauded.

During the casting of the votes short speeches were made by E. Guss Porter, M.P. for West Hastings, Sir Mackenzie Bowell and W. B. Northrup, M.P. for East Hastings, at the close of which the result of the voting was announced, giving Mr. Cook a majority of 18 over Mr. McCoy, the voting being 68 for Cook and 50 for McCoy.

The meeting then closed with cheers for the King, Premier Whitney, Sir Mackenzie Bowell and the candidate.

Whoever Mr. Cook's opponent may be, he is not yet known. Whoever he may be, he will have the honor of being beaten.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

STRANGER PAID FINE.

Thomas Bowes, a stranger, was this morning before Magistrate Masson found guilty of being drunk and was fined $3, or, in default, 10 days in jail. The fine was paid.

THE USUAL TROUBLE.

The police last night were again called to the Chinese restaurant, where a party obtained a meal and refused to pay for the same. A settlement was effected when the officer arrived at the place.

KILLING THEM OFF.

If there are any partridge left alive after the 15th of November it will not be the fault of the innumerable hunters who have possession of the woods these days. One gentleman who was here hunting for a week is said to have shipped seventy-five birds to Toronto.—Bancroft Times.

OFFENDERS WERE FINED.

Capt. Hunter, Provincial Game and Fishery Inspector, this morning received from a civil servant at Ottawa a cheque for $50 in payment of a fine imposed on him for shooting and shipping partridge out of season; also a cheque for $20 from a party in Peterborough County who had been convicted of illegal fishing. Four other cases of a similar character are to come before Capt. Hunter on Wednesday next.

MEETING OF LADIES.

A meeting of the ladies of St. Thomas' Church was held last evening in the Parish Hall, which was well attended. It was decided to hold a festival of nations at a later date, and the Dramatic Club will take a prominent part in providing a programme. The ladies elected the following officers:—

President—Mrs. F. Quick.
Vice-President—Mrs. G. Wallbridge
Treasurer—Mrs. G. R. Beamish.
Secretary—Mrs. T. Blackburn.

PLEASANT SOCIAL EVENING.

Officers and teachers of Holloway Street Methodist Sunday School to the number of thirty-five met last evening at the home of the superintendent for a social evening and for informal discussions of Sunday school problems peculiar to that school. Early in the evening a flashlight picture was taken and later good-bye was said to one of the most efficient and beloved members of the staff, Miss Pearl Ketcheson, who shortly will make her home in the land of wheat under a new relationship in life. A complimentary address was read, embodying the sincere regard with which Miss Ketcheson is held by all, but more especially by the primary scholars and junior Leaguers, among whom Miss Ketcheson has done splendid work. The address was accompanied by a suitable presentation of glass and silver. Light refreshments, music and some earnest words of advice by the pastor occupied the balance of the evening, bringing to a close the most enjoyable of the annual reunions of the staff of this west side Sabbath School.

FINE SPREAD AT EMMANUEL.

Under the auspices of Emmanuel Reformed Church a fowl supper was held last evening in a hall on Front Street, which was a success in every respect. A fine spread was provided by the ladies, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all. During the evening the I.O.O.F. orchestra rendered an acceptable programme.

YOUNG LADY BURIED.

The remains of Miss Mary Callaghan were interred this morning at St. James Cemetery. Services at St. Michael's Church were conducted by Rev. Father Spratt, and at the grave by Rev. Father Meehan. Six young ladies of the Sodality, of which deceased was a member, acted as bearers, namely, Misses Agnes Brown, Aileen McNab, Mary Doran, Florence Adamson, Priscilla Doran, Mary Collins.

BRIDGE STREET LEAGUE.

The regular meeting of Bridge St. Methodist Epworth League was held on Monday evening. The meeting was in charge of the 4th Vice-President, Mrs. Henry, and was indeed a "social evening." Mr. Thompson contributed much to the enjoyment of the evening by giving several well rendered selections on his gramophone. Later the Leaguers were given an agreeable surprise in the way of dainty refreshments. The evening was much enjoyed by all present.

PRESENTATION AT CHURCH.

The members of Christ Church choir and Choral Club spent a pleasant evening together last night in the Parish Hall, the occasion being a farewell to Miss Minnie Kane, who is leaving the city to reside in Toronto. The evening was spent in music, games and contests. On behalf of the choir and club, Rev. Mr. Blagrave presented Miss Kane with a handsome ebony manicure and companion set combined, as a mark of esteem and of appreciation for her faithful work, not only in the choir, but in other branches of church work.

BARN BURNED IN SEYMOUR.

A serious fire again occurred on the premises of Mr. Alex. Haig, Seymour East, on Wednesday night of last week, and his barn buildings were utterly destroyed. The blaze was first seen towards midnight, but nothing could be done to save the barn. In the barn there was the grain of two seasons' growth, and this together with a lot of farm machinery was destroyed. Only last February Mr Haig's house was burned and he has the sympathy of all in his losses. The cause of the fire is unknown.

LOST ARM IN ENSILAGE CUTTER.

A very serious accident occurred on the 14th inst., on the farm of Mr. Jas Sharpe, Burnbrae, when Mr. J. A Stewart, jr., lost his left arm. The victim of the accident was feeding corn into an ensilage cutter and in some way his arm was drawn into the knives and the arm was severed below the elbow. At once medical aid was called and the patient made as comfortable as possible. He is doing as well as can be expected.

BELFAST "NO RENT" FIGHT

BELFAST, Oct. 26.—A no-rent campaign has been inaugurated in West Belfast, and unless a settlement is reached in the meantime, four hundred ejectment orders will be sought by the landlords next week.

Some time ago the rents were advanced by 3d per week, the houses being held weekly, and the rents varying from 3s. to 5s. 6d. The tenants, who are of the artisan class, strongly objected and a branch of the Town Tenants' League was formed in the district. Since the advance was made no rents have been paid, but it was thought that an amicable arrangement would be reached. This, however, has not been the case, and the landlords to-day intimated to the tenants that unless they paid their rents at once they would be evicted forthwith. About a score of the tenants capitulated under this threat, but the remainder to the number above stated, refused point blank.

The big majority of the tenants have occupied their houses for years, paying their rent with the utmost punctuality. The landlords gave no reason for the advance and their action is warmly repudiated by the tenants, who find the struggle for existence sufficiently acute without having this additional burden placed upon them.

50 MEN ROBBED IN A POOL ROOM

Six Bandits Lined Them Up and After Rifling Their Pockets Escaped

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—While a policeman stood only twenty-five feet away, four desperadoes early yesterday entered the pool and billiard room kept by Antonio La Barbari, at No. 59 Second Avenue, and after lining up 50 men against the walls under threats of instant death from six magazine revolvers, they robbed the crowd of $900 in cash, took jewellery worth $700 from their victims, stepped into a taxicab in which they had visited the place and had fifteen minutes' lead before the police were informed of the crime.

The methods of the robbers were exactly like those of the band that visited Albert's craps game establishment, in West Seventy-Sixth street, early Saturday morning, except that in the Albert rad the four taxicab bandits had the aid of six other men.

The four daring robbers spent nearly half an hour in plundering their victims, doing the work leisurely and while the double front doors of the place stood wide open and the policeman was on his "stationary" post at Third Street. There was not a dollar in the crowd when the robbers got through.

The first the policeman knew of the affair was when he saw a squad of twenty reserves rush past him and into the pool room, having been summoned by telephone from that place after the robbers had long since disappeared.

It was about two o'clock in the morning when the four men, who had alighted from a taxicab at Second avenue and Fourth street, entered the place. They were flashily dressed fellows of the Bowery type. They separated on entering, one going to the extreme rear, another standing at a cigar counter in front, while two others moved about the place inspecting their intended victims.

Suddenly one of the men leaped on a pool table and shouted "Hands up, everybody!" In a moment all the men in the place had lined up against the walls. The man in the rear scooped up several hundred dollars on a table on which the proprietor said later, a prize pool was being drawn.

The man on the table, evidently the leader, kept aiming two revolvers in different directions, the man in the rear also threatened the crowd with two weapons and the other two men had a revolver each. These two put their weapons in their pockets and did all the searching. They took plenty of time and left no pocket unsearched. Watches, scarf pins and rings were taken with the money.

Then the four robbers backed slowly toward the front door with all their weapons in full view again and all aimed at the victims standing with ther backs against the walls. Not one had the courage to move.

Finally reaching the front door, the leader of the robbers declared solemnly that the first man who attempted to follow the band would be shot dead in his tracks. The four men then walked briskly to where the taxicab was standing, leaped into it and in a moment were lost to view.

Fifteen minutes went by and then the victims of the robbery began to look at one another. One fellow finally stepped away from the wall, crept to a telephone behind the cigar counter and called up Police Headquarters.

ASK COMPENSATION FROM THE C. N. O. R.

For City Land Taken by the Company—Other Business Transacted by Civic Committees

At a meeting of the Civic Committees, held last evening, the business transacted was purely routine. The Water Works Committee did not recommend the granting of an increase of $200 to Mr. Lindsay as Manager, on the ground that there had been no appropriation in the estimates for any increase this year. A settlement has been effected with Mrs. Col. Wallbridge, as to two lots the city had taken stones from. A survey shows the C. N.O.R. had taken some ground on what is known as the marsh land, and which belongs to the city. The Council will ask compensation for same at so much per foot.

The Committee reported that a settlement had been effected in the matter of two lots owned by Mrs. Col. Wallbridge, city to become owner of said lots for the sum of $295, which includes a discharge for any and all damage caimed by reason of the city having taken stone from said lots, which are situated on Stevens street.

Also recommended that as the survey of lots crossed by the C.N.O.R. known as marsh lands shows that a portion of the city property has been appropriated by said railway not yet settled for, that a price per foot be accepted, the same as has been paid for other portions in the same locality.

CURRENT COMMENT

It is said that, according to an analysis of the French census returns, there are 1,804,710 homes without a child, and neraly 3,000,000 homes with only one child.

The condition of the street crossings this morning was such as might have been looked for in Mud Hole or Slab Creek. Who is responsible for this state of things?

It is a notable fact that two former head boys of Upper Canada College are partners in the practice of the law in Belleville, namely Messrs. W. B. Northrup, K. C., M. P., and Col. W. N. Ponton, M. A.

Hon. Winston Churchill is now the ruler of the King's navee, though he knows more about a squadron of cavalry than a squadron of warships. But he is an adept at polishing up the handle of the big front door.—Ottawa Journal.

When the House meets the address in reply to the speech from the throne will be moved by Mr. R. B. Bennett, member elect for Calgary, and seconded by Albert Sevigny, member elect for Dorchester in French. Both are brilliant speakers,

The one remarkable incident in connection with the Chinese rebellion now in progress is that foreigners are being protected by the conquering rebels. This is about the first time on record that foreigners have been safe while integral trouble was raging in China, and the fact that it is the case makes it appear that, if anything, the rebels are more progressive than the government.

The United States has been grappling with the Chinese question for years without success. They will get into the country, no matter what law is passed. The Commissioner, Mr. Keefe, recommends the only practical way of getting rid of these objectionable people, and that is for Congress to pass a law that every Chinaman found without regristration papers be deported.

A group of most influential men in Kingston, including Mayor Graham and W. F. Nickle, M. P., have secured incorporation under the name of the Kingston Health Association, with the object of carrying on a vigorous fight against the white plague. The association is authorized to erect, equip and maintain hospitals, sanitariums and other buildings for the care of patients and to conduct a training school for nurses. It is incorporated without share capital.

The Belleville Club News of Chicago publshes the following communication, which is a compound of truth and sarcasm;

Belleville, Sept. 28, 1911.

Dear Sir: There is a ten-seat, shoe-shining establishment on Front Street in Belleville, manned by Greeks. The mud on Front street in Belleville is dense that navigation from one side of the main stem to the other necessitates a cleaning of shoes at each passage. Do you suppose there is any collusion between the Greek Shoe-shiners, and the Commissioner of Public Works and the Street Commissioner? I am not sure, but curious.

Yours, etc.,
CIVITAS.

At their old tactics! A contemporary points out that "some of the more vicious and narrow minded of the Liberal newspapers are continuing their efforts to set the Roman Catholics against the Protestants, the French-speaking people against those who speak English, the West against the East and the farm against the city, but their noise only provokes an echo from themselves and it can be believed will result in as little mischief to the country as it can produce good to Sir Wilfrid and the few of his colleagues who are left to help him. A clearer way could hardly be desired than that which opens before the Borden Government."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has decided to abandon his old seat for Quebec East and to sit for Soulanges, which he won by a small majority at the recent general election. Perhaps Sir Wilfrid is too high minded to take the seat in Quebec East, to which he was elected, by, it is alleged, practices which will not bear the light of day. But, what is not at all unlikely, the ex-Premier may be actuated by the belief that Quebec East is safely Grit and that Soulanges could not be retained by his party in a bye-election, thereby saving one of the comparatively few seats, which remain to them. And, be it added, Sir Wilfrid may find himself mistaken as to his former stronghold in Quebec.

Radicals in England are like Liberals in Canada. The former condemn the House of Lords, and the first opportunity that presents itself, they crave and secure a title. Two of them, Sir Edward Strachey, and Mr. Alfred Emmott, M. P., prominent Liberals, have just been raised to the House of Lords. So it is with the Canadian Radicals. The moment an opportunity presents itself, they walk into the Red Chamber, and so it is with the Canadian Radicals in respect to what they denounce as "tin pot" titles. Still, they hanker for them, and seize every opportunity to sport them. Go to the next Parliament, and more gold trapping will be seen on Radicals than can be found on all the Toryism in Canada.

Royalty, even when it speaks through the Canadian Under Secretary of State, is particular as to how it addresses titled personages. An earl is our "right trusty and right well beloved cousin," and Earl Grey is so described in this year's Thanksgiving proclamation. The coming of the Duke of Connaught, however, introduces a new form of address. A recent Royal proclamation which is, conveyed to the Canadian public via the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and the Canadian Gazette, styles him "Our most dear, and entirely beloved Uncle, and Most Faithful Counsellor, Field Marshal, His Royal Highness, Prince Arthur William Patrick Albert Duke of Connaught, etc.—Toronto Star.

ARE MICROBES IN YOUR SCALP?

IT HAS BEEN PROVED THAT MICROBES CAUSE BALDNESS.

Professor Unna of Hamburg, Germany, and Dr. Sabourand, the leading French dermatologist, discovered that a microbe causes baldness. Their theory has time and again been amply verified through research experiments carried on under the observation of eminent scientists. This microbe lodges in the Sebum, which is the hair oil, and when permitted to flourish it destroys the hair follicles and in time the pores entirely close, and the scalp gradually takes on a shiny appearance. When this happens there is no hope of the growth of hair being revived.

We have a remedy which will, we honestly believe, remove dandruff, exterminate the microbe, promote good circulation in the scalp and around the hair roots, tighten and revitalize the hair roots, and overcome baldness so long as there is any life left in the hair roots.

We back up this statement with our own personal guarantee that this remedy called Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will be supplied free of all cost to the user if it fails to do as we state.

It will frequently help to restore gray and faded hair to its original color, providing loss of color has been caused by disease; yet it is in no sense a dye. Rexall "93" Hair Tonic accomplishes these results by aiding in making every hair root, follicle and pigment gland strong and active, and by stimulating a natural flow of coloring pigment throughout the hair cells. —We exact no obligations or promises —we smiply ask you to give Rexall "93" Hair Tonic a thorough trial and if not satisfied tell us and we will refund the money you paid us for it. Two sizes, prices 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain it in Belleville only at our store—The Rexall Store. J. S. McKeown, Belleville.

DEATHS CALL

MISS HELEN WALLBRIDGE.

Miss Helen L. Wallbridge, daughter of the late Mr. Elias Wallbridge, of Ameliasburg, Prince Edward County, died at an early hour this morning. Deceased, who was 30 years of age, was born in Ameliasburg Township, where she lived the greater portion of her life. Miss Wallbridge was a graduate of the Oswego Baptist Hospital. Owing to ill health she was compelled to return home this spring. She was a young lady highly esteemed by a large circle of relatives and friends. Deceased was a member of the Anglican Church. A mother, five brothers and one sister survive. The brothers are James, Lewis, Benjamin and Ernest, of Huff's Island, and Fred. of Vancouver. The sister, Miss Lillie, is home.

MRS. S. S. MOORE.

In the death of Mrs. S. S. Moore, which occurred this morning, a well-known and highly respected lady has passed to her reward. Deceased had been ill for some time with heart trouble, which eventually terminated fatally. Mrs. Moore, who was 48 years of age, was a daughter of the late Mr. Wm. Brenton, and was born in this city, where she had resided all her life. She was a consistent member of Bridge Street Methodist Church and always took an interest in church work. Her demise will be sincerely regretted by many friends. A husband, four sons and one daughter survive. The sons are W. Brent, Stephen and Ernest G., of this city, and Dr. Stanley, of London, Ont. The daughter, Miss Alice Irene, lives at home.

Mr. A. O. Wheeler, F.R.G.S., Director of the Alpine Club of Canada, has just returned to Vancouver from a summer spent in the Canadian Rockies, in the vicinity of the Yellowhead Pass, and is greatly impressed with his trip.

In an interview with Mr. Wheeler he said: "It has been the general impression that the Rocky Mountains of Canada attain their greatest average height not very far north of the boundary line. True, of late years much has been heard of Mount Robson, which dominates the region of the Yellowhead Pass, but the popular notion was that there was nothing else in the neighborhood worth seeing, and that the Grand Trunk Pacific would pass through a region of little interest from the point of view of the tourist or mountaineer.

"There was no mistake about Mount Robson. It is without doubt, as stated by one of the most travelled and skilled mountaineers of the day, Dr. Norman Collie, one of the most magnificent mountains in the world, whether seen from the south, the view that is most familar, or from beautiful Berg Lake, it still stands supreme. In the hundred mile circuit of the great massif, on all sides were found mighty snow-clad peaks, wide spread snow fields, huge ice falls, rushing torrents, water-falls, flower-clad meadows and vast stretches of dark pine forest. Many of the peaks were manned by surveyors, but they are legion, and it will be many years before they are familiarly known as individual mountains."

In speaking of the Robson Glacier, which lies on the east side of this monstrous mountain, Mr. Wheeler said: "It struck us dumb with amazement that anthing so stupendous, so superb, so undreamed of, should exist. At our feet flowed the great river of ice, every crevasse, every morraine, every icefall, clearly portrayed. Directly opposite rose the massif, its outline clear from base to summit, for fully 8,000 feet. From the beautiful meadows at the head of Resplendent Valley twenty-five peaks were counted, all unknown and untamed. And lakes which perhaps lend the most characteristic charm to Canadian mountain scenery, were everywhere."

At the summit of Yellowhead Pass, Mr. Wheeler's party erected a monument defining the boundary between Alberta and British Columbia at the intersection of the great divide. On the huge post set up, which is surrounded with a big stone mound, are carved the words: "British Columbia on the west face; Alberta on the east face; and on the south 3,727.98 feet, being the altitude of the summit at the point where this post is set." 1td,w

The Haunted Chamber

Looking hastily around him, Arthur Dynecourt—for it is he—unfastens the door, and, entering hastily, closes it firmly behind him, and ascends the staircase within. There is no halting in his footstep now, no uncertainty, no caution, only a haste that betokens a desire to get his errand over as quickly as possible.

Having gained the first landing, he walks slowly and on tiptoe, and, creeping up the stone stairs, crouches down so as to bring his ear on a level with the lower chink of the door.

Alas, all is still; no faintest groan can be heard! The silence of death is on all around. In spite of his hardihood, the cold sweat of fear breaks out upon Dynecourt's brow; and yet he tells himself that he is now satisfied—all is well—his victim is secure—is beyond the power of words or kindly search to recall him to life. He may be discovered now as soon as they like Who can fix the fact of his death upon him? There is no blow, no mark of violence to criminate any one. He is safe, and all the wealth he has so coveted is at last his own.

There is something fiendish in the look of exultation that lights Arthur Dynecourt's face. He has a small dark lantern with him, and now it reveals the vile glance of triumph that fires his eyes. He would fain have entered to gaze upon his victim, to assure himself of his victory, but he refrains. A deadly fear that he may not yet be quite dead keeps him back, and, with a frown, he prepares to descend.

Again he listens, but the sullen roar of the night wind is all that can be heard. His hand shakes, his face assumes a livid hue, yet he tells himself that surely this deathly silence is better than what he listened to last night Then a ghostly moaning, almost incessant and unearthly in its sound, had pierced his brain. It was more like the cry of a dying brute than that of a man. Sir Adrian slowly starved to death. In his own mind, Arthur can see him now, worn, emaciated lost to all likeness of anything fair or comely. Have the rats attacked him yet! As this gruesome thought presents itself, Dyne[illegible] rises quickly from his crouching [illegible]ition, and, flying down the steps [illegible] not stop running until he arrives in the corridor below again.

He dashes into this like one possessed; but finding himself in the light of the hanging lamp, collects himself by a violent effort, and looks around.

Yes, all is still. No living form but his is near. The corridor, as he glances affrightedly up and down, is empty. He can see nothing but his own shadow, at sight of which he starts and turns pale and shudders.

The next moment he recovers himself, and muttering an anathema upon his cowardice, he moves noiselessly toward his room and the brandy bottle that has been his constant companion of late.

Yet, here in his room, he cannot rest. The hours go by with laggard steps. Midnight has struck and still he paces his floor from wall to wall, half-maddened by his thoughts, not that he relents. No feelings of repentance stir him; there is only a nervous dread of the hour when he will have to produce the dead body, if only to prove his claim to the title so dearly and infamously purchased.

Is he indeed dead; gone past recall? Is this house, this place, the old title, the chance of winning the woman he would have, all his own? Is his hated rival—hateful to him only because of his fair face and genial manners and lovable disposition, and the esteem with which he filled the hearts of all who knew him—actually swept out of his path?

Again the lurking, morbid longing to view the body with his own eyes—the longing that had been his some hours ago when listening at the fatal door, seizes hold of him, and grows in intensity with every passing moment.

At last it conquers him. Lighting a candle, he opens his door and peers out. No one is astir. In all probability every one is abed, and now sleeping the sleep of the just—all except him. Will there ever be any rest or dreamless sleep for him again?

He goes softly downstairs, and makes his way to the lower door. Meeting no one, he ascends the stairs like one half conscious, until he finds himself again before the door of the haunted chamber.

Then he wakes into sudden life. An awful terror takes possession of him. He struggles with himself and presently succeeds in regaining some degree of composure that he can lean against the wall and wipe his forehead, and vow to himself that he will never descend until he has accomplished the object of his visit. But the result of this terrible fight with fear and conscience shows itself in the increasing pallor of his brow and the cold perspiration thatstands thick upon his forehead.

Nerving himself for a final effort, he lays his hand upon the door and pushes it open. This he does with bowed head and eyes averted, afraid to look upon his terrible work. A silence more horrible to his guilty conscience than the most appalling noises, follows this act; and, again, the nameless terror seizing him, he shudders and draws back, until, finding the wall behind him, he leans against it gladly, as if for support.

And now at last he raises his eyes. Slowly at first, and cringingly, as if dreading what they might see. Upon the board at his feet they rest for a moment and then glide to the next board, and so on, until his coward eyes have covered a considerable portion of the floor.

And now, grown bolder, he lifts his gaze to the wall opposite and searches it carefully. Then his eyes turn again to the floor. His face ghastly, and with his eyes almost darting from their sockets, he compels himself to bring his awful investigation to an end. Avoiding the corners at first, as though there he expects a vile deed will cry aloud to him demanding vengeance, he gazes in a dazed way at the centre of the apartment, and dwells upon it stupidly, until he knows he must look further still; and then his dull eyes turn to the corners where the dusky shadows lie, brought thither by the glare of his candle. Reluctantly, but craefully, he scans the apartment; no remotest spot escapes his roused attention. But no object, dead or living, attracts his notice! The room is empty!

He staggers. His hold upon the door relaxes. His light falls to the floor; the door closes with a soft thud behind him, and—he is a prisoner in the haunted chamber! As the darkness closes in upon him, and he finds himself alone with what he hardly dares to contemplate, his senses grow confused, his brain reels; a fearful scream issues from his lips, and he falls to the floor insensible.

CHAPTER XI.

Dora, after her interview with Arthur Dynecourt, feels indeed that all is lost. Hope is abandoned—nothing remains but despair; and in this instance, despair grows in poignancy by the konwledge that she believes she knows the man who could help them to a solution of their troubles if he would or dared. No; clearly he date not! Therefore, no assistance can be looked for from him.

Dinner at the castle has been a promiscuous sort of entertainment for the past three or four days, so Dora feels no compunction in declining to go to it. In her own room she sits brooding miserably over her own inability to be of any use in the present crisis, when she suddenly remembers that she had promised in the afternoon when with Florence to give her, later on, an account of her effort to obtain the truth about this mystery which is harrowing them.

It is now eleven o'clock, and Dora, decides that she must see Florence at once. Rising wearily, she is about to cross the corridor to her cousin's room, when, the door opening, she sees Florence, with a face pale and agitated, coming toward her.

Want Real Laborite.

Berlin, Oct. 27.—Hon. Dr. Reaume has sent a clerk from the Department of Public Works to investigate the application of the Berlin Trades and Labor Council, who are asking that a successor be appointed to ex-Mayor Hahn, who is an officeholder with the Ontario Government as secretary of the Government Free Labor Bureau here.

The contention of the T. and L. Council is that Mr. Hahn, not being actively identified with organized labor, should not hold the office, and Stephen Wellheuser, a member of the Cigarmakers' Union has been recommended by the Trades Council as his successor. The clerk in question met a committee from the T. and L. Council last night, and will make his report back to his chief in Toronto, who will then finally dispose of the matter.

THE MARKETS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Lower—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 26.—The market displayed an easier undertone with values ⅛d to ⅜d lower, being influenced by the weakness in Buenos Ayres and also Rosario. A slight show of strength was shown in the near month, which, after the opening advanced ⅛d. The support was attributed to the steadiness in Winnipeg yesterday, and continued poor grading there, which prompted buying by a prominent firm. During the morning realizing again developed on reports of scattered rains in Australia, weakness in spot and a very small demand for both cargoes and parcels and very light flour sales. The market closed ⅛d to ⅜d lower than yesterday.

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—Because of treble as much wheat pressing forward to Winnipeg to-day as the railroads could find cars for, the price of the cereal here inclined to sag. Closing figures ran from last night's level to 3-8c to 1-2c below. Corn gained 1-8c to 3-8c net, oats 1-8c to 1-4c and provisions 15c.

Winnipeg Grain Market.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 26.—A very poor trade was experienced on the wheat market to-day on almost all grades. This may be accounted for thru someone cabling the other side that the grain standard board had materially lowered the grades of Nos. 4, 5 and 6, and in response, information has been received from a number of houses that they did not care for new business until they had seen the new samples.

There was in sight for inspection today only 550 cars, against 770 yesterday. The weather over the wheat belt was good.

The local trade in oats is fair and prices well maintained. A fairly active trade continues to be done in flour for local and country account, but the foreign demand is quiet. A few small lots of bran were sold for export. Demand for cheese and butter is fair, and eggs are fairly active.

The Borden Cabinet

No little comment has been indulged in owing to the selection of Mr. Thomas White by Premier Borden for a seat in the Cabinet. The Liberals condemn the appointment as in the interest of combines, corporations and moneyed institutions. Their objections are of little consequence. It is constitutional with them. Those who know Mr. White declare that "no interest except the public interest will dictate his policy." There are other objections which, under other circumstances would be not only excusable, but having much force and that is the overlooking of those who had been fighting party battles for years, and their selecting for important positions in the Cabinet men who were but late accessions to the party. The Toronto News treats this subject with a moderation that deserves the approval of thinking patriotic men. It will be remembered that there was a time in the history of the Conservative party when Sir John Macdonald wanted a strong practical financier to fill the position of Finance Minister, and he did not hesitate to appoint the Hon. Sir Francis Hincks to that position, the most objectionable politician to Conservatives that then lived in Canada. That appointment created no little stir in Conservative ranks and drove Sir Richard Cartwright into opposition, where he has ever since remained, that is to Conservatism. Events, however, proved the wisdom of the selection.

The analogy, however, is not a good one. At that time Sir Francis Hincks had been an open, bitter enemy of the Conservative party for years. Mr. White has not been. True, he has been a quiet, unobtrusive Liberal, until he found it incumbent upon himself as a patriotic British Canadian, with thousands of others, to cut their connection with a party that they believed was proposing to sacrifice the best interests of Canada to a foreign nation. Why, then, should they be ignored? So far as The Intelligencer views this question, it is in full accord with the sentiments of the Toronto News. In dealing with the subject it says.—

"It is true that Mr. White was a Liberal. It is also true that tens of thousands of Liberals voted for Conservative candidates in the recent election. Moreover, many of these Liberals declared their hostility to the agreement with Washington before the Conservative party in Parliament had finally demanded its rejection. Parties grow stronger only by conversions from the other party.

"In Great Britain the Liberal Unionists had formidable representation in Conservative Cabinets. Naturally it is the desire of Mr. Borden to hold the allegiance of the multitude of Liberals who united with the Conservatives against reciprocity. Thus will he form a strong, permanent and united national party. Is a single seat in the Cabinet an undue concession to the Liberal element? Can it be desired that through Mr. White, whose eminent fitness for a place in the Government cannot be disputed, intimation should be conveyed to the Liberal opponents of the Laurier Government that they can have no permanent connection with the Conservative party and no voice in public policy? Are they to be driven back into the Liberal party or to be retained as a great accretion of strength to the Conservative Government?

"It is natural that Conservatives after fifteen years of hard fighting in Opposition should feel that the Cabinet formed as a result of their victory should represent their convictions and sentiments. It is natural and right that the masses of the party should be influential in determining the party policy. Leaders are not omnipotent and there is as much patriotism among the workers in the wards as amongst those who more directly reap the honors of victory. Very often they make greater sacrifices and more faithfully express the deeper feeling of the commonwealth. To these Mr. Borden and his colleagues are responsible as well as to the leaders in finance and the captains of industry, and in order to have their confidence Ministers have only to deserve it by giving the country decent and efficient government, by cherishing and stimulating Canadian national feeling, and by strengthening the intimacy between Canada and the Mother Country, and extending the influence of the Dominion within the Empire."

The Fishery Regulations

The statesmen and politicians on the south of the line never hesitate to reject any treaty or arrangement entered into between Canada and the United States that they think is not most favorable to themselves, no matter what general interest may be affected. But if a treaty is not more favorable to themselves than to Canada they rave like wild beasts if Canada acts upon the same principle and rejects it, believing it not in her interest.

An amicable arrangement was entered into a short time ago between the late Canadian Government and the United States by which the important fish interests of the two countries could be preserved. The ratifying of it, however, would interfere with the marauders of our fishery grounds in Canada, hence we find the politicians of the United States using every influence to have the agreement either so amended as to enable the plundering which has been going on for years to be continued, or the treaty rejected, and they are likely to succeed unless the Canadian Government stands firm.

The latest news from Ottawa is that communications are passing with Washington, expressing the objection of the Canadian Department of Marine, to the amendments proposed to the international fisheries regulations by the United States.

What Canada considers as vital, the United States, to a material extent, would strike out

In the first place the Americans would eliminate the clause respecting the use of pound nets in the waters between Cape Hurd, Ont., and Thunder Bay Inlet, Michigan. They propose, also, to strike out the prohibition of trap nets and mesh nets.

Exception is taken by Canada more particularly to the proposal to eliminate the vital parts of regulations as affecting the Pacific Coast and having reference to the close season for salmon and the character of nets to be used.

Some time ago, in the latter days of the late Government, it was intimated that if the United States in place of persistent amendments did not come to time, Canada would withdraw entirely from the agreement. While the matter is one of policy to be determined by the new Government, it will not be surprising if it takes this course under the circumstances.

IDOL OF THE BELGIANS

Queen Elizabeth is Not Yet Quite Restored to Health

Queen Elizabeth, the idol of the Belgian people and the fond mother of three most interesting children, is not yet quite restored to health. Her arduous charity work, combined with the social exactions of her position after she became Queen, brought on, last winter, a violent attack of typhoid fever, which left her in an enfeebled condition. Her lungs and throat were so affected that as soon as she was able to be moved she was taken to the Riviera. Not being much benefited there, she sought the still milder climate of Egypt. Now she is at home again, but she is still too delicate to undergo an operation which ought to be performed for an ear trouble. It was her custom to drive out daily with her children, but since her return she has not been permitted to continue this.

Pauper's Hallucination

At Cambuslang, a mining town in Lanarkshire, a curious case of a pauper's hallucination was reported to the parish council. The pauper, who has been in receipt of parochial relief for many years, has refused to accept the aliment voted to him. He has become possessed with the belief that a Lanarkshire magnate died and left him a fortune amounting to several thousand pounds, and that if he accepts parochial relief he will forfeit every penny of his "inheritance." All efforts to make the man change his mind have proved useless. The eccentric, who is of a good age, is well known locally, and the case is exciting great interest.

LUCKY OLD PEOPLE

HAVE SEEN WONDERFUL PROGRESS FROM OX-CARTS TO AEROPLANES.

What wonderful progress the old people of to-day have lived to see. In their young days the railroad was as much of a novelty as the aeroplane is now, and nearly everything else has progressed as much.

Another modern idea is that people may be active and vigorous at 75 or 80 years if they will be careful to keep up their strength.

Mr. Jno. N. Kelly, aged 75, who lives at Lake Charles, La., says he was badly run down from over work, and took two or three bottles of Vinol by advice of his druggist. He is now better than for the past ten years and actually feels fifteen years younger.

There is certainly nothing like Vinol our delicious cod liver and iron preparation, to build up and keep up all weakened, run-down persons. It is especially good for old people, too, because it is very pleasant to take, and agrees with the stomach. There is no cod liver oil in Vinol. We guarantee it to give you perfect satisfaction.—Red Cross Drug Store, J. S. McKeown, Belleville.

SOLDIER AND SCULPTOR

Adrian Jones Understands a Horse From Tail Tip to Nostril

It is said of Captain Adrian Jones who has designed the four-horse war chariot, weighing upwards of thirty tons, which is to be erected in London as a memorial to "Peace," that he is probably the only living sculptor who understands a horse from tail-tip to nostril. As a boy he loved and studied horses, and would have liked to become an artist, but his father had other plans, and he entered the Army. He saw much active service, and was then advised to become a sculptor, having devoted most of his spare time when in the Army to painting and sculpture.

Soothing, Healing, Pain-relieving 'MECCA' OINTMENT

AMUSEMENTS

"THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S."

Coming to Griffin's to-night. Of all the mixed situations, "The Girl from Rector's" beats the most mixed up of reels of moving pictures ever put on the canvas. Starting in the bachelor apartment of a young spendthrift who was kept up to the round of carousals by an old friend who was living off the young fellow, several characters who are apparent strangers to him are introduced and the audience has no real idea what is going to happen next. "The Girl From Rector's" is one of the most hilariously funny comedies now on the road. Plan at Doyle's.

"THE PRIVATE SECRETARY"

William Gillette once said that of all the parts he had played none gave him more genuine pleasure in its portrayal than the role of the Rev. Robert Spaulding in "The Private Secretary." The comedian went on record as calling the play the funniest farce ever conceived. That American theatre goers thought so is evidenced by the fact that it has been, ever since its first presentation, the most consistent money-maker of all comedies, not excepting "Charley's Aunt," and that locality makes no difference is shown by the fact that the play was just as successful abroad and in foreign languages as it was on this continent.

Mr. C. James Bancroft, the celebrated English comedian, has been very happy in his selection of "The Private Secretary" as the medium for his forthcoming starring tour. He has presented the play himself over 2,000 times, playing nearly two years in London alone. In coming to this country he has made no bad move in bringing his English company intact, just as he played in England. The papers of the British metropolis were loud in their praises of Mr. Bancroft and there is no question about his success here. The play will be seen at Griffin's Opera House Wednesday, Nov. 1st.

SLAPPED HIS FACE

"All's well that ends well," and the threatened duel between the militant feminist champion of Toulouse, Mdle. Arria Ly, and her male antagonist, M. Massat, did not come off, because the two antagonists have been reconciled at a police station.

The reconciliation, however, was not effected without a hair-pulling preamble. M. Massatt organized a meeting at which he was to speak and give his views on feminism. Mdle Arria Ly broke into the meeting, and, while a lady was speaking, she got on the platform and slapped M. Massat. There was, of course, the usual excitement, and all the belligerents were marched off to the police-station, where, after M. Massat had explained that he was making no personal attacks on Mdle Arria Ly, but only on her theories, Mdle. Ly was soothed and shook hands with him.

Thousands testify to this—thousands who have suffered from Eczema, Psoriasis and other skin troubles, until they heard of the simple, cooling wash of Wintergreen, Thymol and other ingredients known as D.D.D. Prescription.

J. Samuel Lewis writes:—"I used three bottles of D.D.D. Prescription, and now my skin, once a mass of fire and irritation, is as smooth and soft as a child's.

Of all remedies for the skin that we know we can especially recommend the D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema. Just a mild, soothing wash—but it cleanses and cools the skin as nothing else can. And it takes away the itch instantly!

We would like to tell you more about D.D.D. Prescription if you will call or write the D.D.D. Laboratories, Dept. B.I.W., 49 Colborne St., Toronto, and get a free trial bottle.

Seven Foot Potato Plant.

At Briston, Norfolk, a gardener has grown a number of potato plants to an extraordinary height. Many of them are over six feet high, while one measures over seven feet. The tubers have not in any way been affected, and as much as nine pounds were dug from a seven-foot tree.

Learned Music at Seventy.

Mrs. Maria Rose, a remarkable old lady, has just died in South Lincolnshire, at the great age of ninety-nine. She preserved her faculties to the last, and it is recorded of her that she learned music at the age of seventy. Up to ninety-five she had never received a telegram.

Sanford
JUVENILE CLOTHES

THE self-conscious period, when a boy begins to notice that he is nearly ready for long trousers, may be nicely bridged by the manly, full-fashioned suit of shown in the photograph. The fullness of the knickers takes away from the height of the boy, while the coat is snappy enough in design and tailoring to meet the awakening desires for dress that come at this age. When you've found the store in your town where Sanford Juvenile Clothes are sold, clothes selection for your boy will, thereafter, be a matter of pleasure instead of a troublesome task.

Mrs. J. B. Renaud, of Goldrich St., Sturgeon Falls, Ont., says:

"I have suffered for months with a very weak stomach. I had dizzy spells and at times could not retain my food at all. I tried any number of remedies and prescriptions, but none seemed to relieve me until I tried Mi-o-na Tablets. I have used one box only, and they have completely cured me of my troubles. I am pleased to recommend Mi-o-na as I know it to be a remedy of merit."

Mi-o-na is sold by druggists everywhere at 50 cents a box, and is guaranteed to cure dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, nausea, heartburn, sour stomach and car sickness, vomiting of pregnancy and the after effects of over eating or drinking—or money back. Walked Off With $10,000.

Chicago, Oct. 26.—A sample case containing diamonds valued at $10,000 belonging to W. C. Barry, of Newark, N.J., was stolen from the lobby of a hotel here yesterday. Need More Money.

Brantford, Oct. 26.—Completion of the project to erect a tuberculosis hospital has been deferred owing to tenders being higher than the funds at present on hand will permit. The association has $10,000 and an excellent site, and a campaign has been launched to raise $10,000 additional.

TEST FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYES

Sight, Hearing, Physical Condition and General Mental Fitness

The physical efficiency of the State railroad employes in Germany is to be subjected to severe tests in the future as the result of a number of fatal accidents which have given rise to grave doubts as to whether the calamities might not have been avoided if the employes had been in good physical condition. Henceforth every member of the railroad staff employed on the trains, in the signal boxes, and on the tracks, is to undergo thorough medical examination, with tests of sight and hearing and of mental condition, every five years up to the age of forty-five. After that age, and up to sixty, they are to be tested every three years, and after sixty every two years. In this way it is hoped to keep the staff in a state of almost perfect efficiency and to reduce the risks of accidents, owing to human weakness, to a minimum.

MOVING PICTURES FOR CHINA

These are days when the picture palace on cinematograph theatre is ubiquitous, and the fact that a London syndicate has juct concluded negotiations with the Chinese Government to organize an extensive system of these moving picture shows throughout China is further proof of their popularity. The capital is being provided by local mandarins, and the theatres will be entirely in Chinese hands. The right to take films into any part of China is to be given the syndicate and, more remarkable still, it will have special privileges for taking records of religious and social ceremonies, which hitherto could only be attempted at the immediate risk of the operator's life.

MARRIAGE EXAMINATION

Enactment Ordered by the Patriarch of Constantinople

A very salutary measure has been ordered by the Armenian Patriarch of Constantinople. If this measure [illegible] strictly carried but it will prove of the utmost benefit to the whole of the Armenian population of the Ottoman Empire. Henceforward every couple intending to contract a marriage will have to bring to the authorities a medical certificate of a fully qualified doctor testifying that both the bride and the bridegroom are in a state of perfect health. Without such a certificate no marriage will be possible in any Armenian community.

THE HOME PHYSICIAN

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Cure Most of the Family's Ills.

This Little Box is Mother's Stand-by.

Perhaps if the children, and the "grown-ups" too, always ate exactly the right quantities of exactly the right things, at just the proper times, and in every other way obeyed the rules of health, there would be no sickness in the family, and no need of medicine.

But they never have and probably never will, so in every family there are sure to be more or less frequent attacks of sick headache, biliousness, indigestion, constipation, and kidney and liver troubles, and occasionally some one is "sick in bed".

It is worth a good deal to the mother, then, to have on hand that perfectly safe and reliable remedy for these ills —

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

They invigorate those organs which cleanse the body of waste and impurities, regulating the bowels, stimulating the kidneys and opening the pores of the skin.

Thus Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cure the common ailments and keep the family healthy. This they have been doing for over half a century in every part of the world.

ATTENDING TO THE FINANCES

BROCKVILLDE, Oct. 25.—The Ontario Sunday School Association today decided to place itself on a sound financial basis by raising $20,000 before the semi-centennial convention of 1915, to liquidate present liabilities and to provide for extension work this sum to be raised by subscription for two hundred golden jubilee life memberships. Ontario's "youngest child," British Columbia's association subscribed 115 such in one night at an organization meeting. Two from every county in Ontario will reach this aim. Thirty life memberships were subscribed this afternoon besides more than five hundred dollars. Receipt for the year totalled $10,895.47, all expended but $404.45. The benefit of county organization this year is now seen in the receipt of $4,385 from apportionments.

Rev. B. W. Merrill has been selected as President of the Ontario Sunday School Association for the ensuing year.—Other new officers are Miss Ada Jackes, Hon. Superintendent Temperance Department, all of Toronto.

Mr. Merril was for years Sunday School Secretary for the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec, but resigned about a year ago to become assistant pastor and Religious Education Secretary of Jarvis Street Church.

C. N. R. MAY LEASE INTERCOLONIAL

OTTAWA, Oct. 25.—It is stated in railway circles here that the Canadian Northern Railway is likely to submit a proposition to the new Government having reference to the Intercolonial railway system. The Canadian Northern is gradually linking up its transcontinental line, which will be completed in 1913 to Quebec. Connection between Quebec and the Atlantic seaboard has yet to be determined, and the idea prevails that in lieu of constructing an independent line, or at least before deciding upon it, the Mackenzie and Mann interests will endeavor to lease the Intercolonial. Otherwise there may be four lines, three of them through roads paralleling each other in practically the same territory. As yet however, no proposition has been submitted for the Government's consideration.

MET WITH A REVERSE

Monday's Fight Proves Serious For the Italians.

Later Reports From Tripoli Go to Show That the Net Result of the Battle In the Trenches Was After All a Defeat For the European Troops and White Residents of City Are In Dread of a Massacre.

Malta, Oct. 27.—The Italian reverse at Tripoli on Oct. 23, according to steamship passengers who have just arrived here, amounted almost to a rout. An Italian outpost during a reconnaissance encountered a Turkish outpost, which retreated. The Italians followed and found themselves suddenly attacked on all sides.

Three companies of Bersaglieri (light infantry) were totally annihilated. Several officers were made prisoners and mutilated and hanged by irregulars.

The return of the remainder of the Italian force, carrying a great number of wounded—said by some of the passengers to be seven hundred—caused intense excitement among the Arab population of Tripoli. The Arabs attempted to revolt, firing many shots and wounding many Italians. The attempt was soon quelled and hundreds of Mussulmans were arrested and shot. The passengers say that when they left Tripoli the town was still seething with excitement.

Fear Massacre.

London, Oct. 27.—Four hundred Italians were killed or wounded in the fighting around Tripoli on Monday and Tuesday, but all newspaper correspondent were forbidden to communicate the extent of the casualties, according to a news agency despatch received here yesterday from Tripoli, which escaped Italian censorship by being filed at Valetta.

The situation at Tripoli, the despatch adds, is serious. European residents fear a massacre, as a holy war has been proclaimed by the natives of Tripoli and Benghazi.

At Sharashett the left line of the Italian defence is reported as being hard pressed by the Arabs.

Plan Advance Into Interior.

Rome (via the Frontier), Oct. 27.—Reports received here yesterday from Tripoli say that Gen. Caneva, commander of the Italian army of occupation, has completed an elaborate plan for an advance into the Tripolitan interior. The movement will be made through the formation of a chain of forts so strongly fortified as to make them impregnable to the enemy.

Each fort will be provided with field artillery and with cavalry for scouting service. In addition each garrison can easily be reinforced from the neighboring forts as all the posts are to be connected by telegraph.

Arabs Repulsed.

Tripoli, Oct. 27.—The Arabs yesterday made a violent attack against the Italian positions between El Mesri and Boameliana. They were repulsed with heavy loss. The Italian casualties were only a few wounded.

Wireless Around Empire.

London, Oct. 27.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—An early announcement may be expected to the effect that negotiations have been concluded between the Postoffice Department and the Marconi company for the erection of a chain of wireless telegraph stations round the world, linking up the British dominions and giving Great Britain an independent system of telegraphic communication with any part of the globe.

Connection with the western hemisphere will be affected by means of the station already existing at Glace Bay, and it is proposed to establish another station at Montreal to communicate direct with the West Indies, where all the islands will be connected by short distance stations.

From Glace Bay it will be possible to communicate direct with Vancouver, where a large power station is to be established which will provide direct communication with Hong Kong.

Bombarded With Stones.

Berlin, Ont., Oct. 27.—John Belts, aged 26, and Frederick Ross, 17, were arrested in Doon Village six miles from this place early yesterday morning charged with doing wilful damage to property of their employer, Aaron Good, a farmer, as well as endangering the lives of his family.

During the past week approximately twenty-five panes of glass were broken, and the walls and furniture of Good's residence were badly damaged with stones.

It is intimated that there will be sensational evidence at the trial.

The Duke at St. Kitt's.

St. Catharines, Oct. 27.—His Grace the Duke of Sutherland arrived at Port Dalhousie Wednesday night. Yesterday morning he, Viscount and Lady Castlereigh, the Marquis of Stafford, son of the duke, and Sir Henry Pellatt, were taken on the special car "Ongiara" over the N., St. C. and T. Railway to Niagara Falls, where they spent the day. They returned last night and left Port Dalhousie for Kingston.

Peat Plant For Ottawa.

Ottawa, Oct. 27.—Ernest V. Moore, peat engineer from Peterboro, is in conference with the Department of Mines. He represents a number of prominent Canadian capitalists who have, after careful inspection of the Government peat plant at Alfred, decided to erect a similar plant, in the vicinity of one of the large bogs near Ottawa. The plant will have a capacity of 15,000 to 20,000 tons a year.

Factory for Niagara Falls.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 27.—To arrange for the opening of the Canadian branch of the Beaver Manufacturing Co., Birmingham, England, in the city, Samuel Cattell, who will manage the local plant arrived here yesterday. Aluminum novelties will be manufactured.

Because New York street car employes often need the assistance of the police and are unable to leave their cars to find officers, the police commissioners will supply them with police whistles.

OLD-TIME BALL IN BELLEVILLE

It was all Johnny Gibson's fault, in the first place. Only for Johnny, "Geordie" Bradford would have signed as pitcher for the Moguls, the Grand Trunk baseball team. We wanted the crack battery of the Ashley nine; wanted them the worst way. We knew that, with Bradford and Gibson as a battery, we would have the best team in Belleville. Someone told me Gibson would sign if we could get Geordie, and as manager of the Moguls, it was left to me to turn the trick.

I showed Geordie a good time one evening, and along after midnight, (it was a very beautiful moonlight night), I was seated with him just outside Davy Carr's house on the Rear street side. Davy probably remembers some of that conversation for we woke him up, so he afterwards told me.

Geordie was loyal to our rivals, the Ashleys, and I had to use all my eloquence to persuade him to desert to the Moguls. If there was anything that I didn't promise Geordie that night I have forgotten what it could have been. He was to have a swell job in the Grand Trunk shops; he was to do just as he pleased, just so he signed for the Moguls; good wages, no lost time while playing ball, and, in fact, anything and everything he wanted or later might think he wanted. As I remember it now, W. D. Robb, the then master mechanic, would have been a sort of messenger boy around the depot, compared to Geordie. The result of my "blue sky" talk was that the great pitcher gave reluctant consent, but he did consent, and all was rejoicing in the Grand Trunk camp next day, when I announced my success. Alas! I had not reckoned sufficiently with Johnnie Gibson, for Geordie's clever catcher balked, and would not go through with the deal; so we did not get them, after all.

Often since I have thought that if a man could put the concentrated earnestness into a business deal that I brought into my argument with Geordie that night, the world would be his. The deference with which I treated him that evening would have been the making of my fortune had it been exercised upon His Highness, the Akoond of Swat, or the Maharajah of Kapurthala, or some other eastern potentate. Geordie took it with complacency, and as being his due: for was he not King—of pitchers? Funny, isn't it, how seriously we take things before we are old enough to vote?

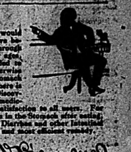
The air is so full of baseball talk now that the World's Championship and Post-Season contests are on, that I may be pardoned of writing of baseball days of twenty to twenty-five years ago. In a former article I spoke of teams ante-dating those now mentioned. Let us see, then, if we can remember the players on the famous Ashley team. Of course, we must always think first of Geordie Bradford, their star pitcher, and the first Belleville boy to play professional baseball. Next, his capable backstop, Johnnie Gibson (O, you Johnnie). Then came, as near as I can remember, Alex Kyle, Ed. Hubbard, "Hank" Johnson, Jimmy Wilson, Jones Gibson, Charley Thompson, "Judge" Gibson, "Robbo" Meagher and "Bunny" Burns.

The Moguls, rivals of the Ashleys, were composed of "Paddy" Meyer, "Nickie" McKnight, "Cap" Robertson, "Bumpy" Ivers, Bob Cotterell, "Bunty" Fisher, Billy Kennedy, "Trip" Elliott and the writer. The I. X. L. team were contemporaries of those mentioned, and consisted of Bob Ivers, Harry Fitzpatrick (Harry Fitz), "Bunny" Burns, "Paddy" Melville, Jack Harry, Harry Elsworth the first curve pitcher who ever struck Belleville; Billy Young, "Cap" Robertson, Charley Couquette, a giant Frenchman from Quebec, and Johnny Fitzpatrick. The latter was quite an umpire in the old days, and on one memorable occasion, when the I.X.L.'s won the championship cup at a tournament in Picton, Jimmy was umpire, and some Picton people were mean enough to say that Jimmy had a whole lot to do with the winning of the cup.

Among the junior teams of these days came the young I.X.L.'s, composed of "Teddy" Gibson and "Josh" Canning, a fine battery; Ed. Francis, "Mike" Cummins, Billy Simmons, Sam Geen, Jimmy Fortune, and others. Mike Cummins and Sam Geen at present are members of the Belleville Club of Chicago. Then, there were the Maple Leafs, composed of Will St. Charles, "Diddle" Meagher, "Jack" Frost, Chas. Frost, Arnott Lynne, Bert Lake, Fred LaPalm, Alex LaPalm, Jack Murphy and Harry Carey. This team, after a time was merged with the "Nimble Nine," and later the merged team took in Bradford and Johnnie Gibson, and became the Bellevile team along about 1890-91. Meagher and St. Charles were a famous battery. Then, when the merger with the Nimble Nine took place, it became Lynch and St. Charles and then Meagher and Lynch, "Paddy" changing from a pitcher to a catcher. The make-up the Nimble Nine was as follows: Jack McKeown, Claude Gaujot, Ben Davy, Pearse Carroll, Curry Taylor, F. Davy Diamond, Art Carroll, "Paddy" Lynch, "Doc." Nash, Tom Nash, "Monkey" Nash and Ed. Lloyd. Ed. is now with the Chicago Edison Company, as General Contract Agent. The second nine or juniors of this team, was composed of Harry Twining, Jim Johnson, "Pusco" McLean, Geo. Smeaton, Jim Phillips, "War" Hambly, "Duster" Diamond, George Niblock, Harry McKeown and "Nestie" Gaujot.

Lorne McAdoo, now the head of McAdoo Bros. Eectrical Contractors, Chicago, but then rejoicing in the nickname of "Knack," was the noted mascot of the Nimble Nine.—Maurice D. Lynch in Belleville Club News of Chicago.

Remedies are Needed



Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. To reach the seat of stomach weakness and consequent digestive troubles, there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a glyceric compound, extracted from native medicinal roots—sold for over forty years with great satisfaction to all users. For Weak Stomach, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Stomach after eating, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Belching of food, Chronic Diarrhea and other Intestinal Derangements, the "Discovery" is a time-proven and most efficient remedy.

The genuine has on its outside wrapper the Signature R. V. Pierce M.D.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic, medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

McRae Says Shot Was Fired to Clear Out Rifle.

Cornwall, Oct. 27.—As far as the evidence went, the trial of F. D. McRae, ex-Reeve of Lancaster Township, charged with the murder of William Shaw, the Carp druggist, ended last evening and by mutual agreement the addressing of counsel and the charge of Mr. Justice Sutherland were deferred till this morning.

The accused, F. D. McRae, was the last witness. He denied most emphatically that he was excited at the time he fired the rifle, although he had previously been under considerable excitement. He also brought in rather new evidence, to the effect that his brother, D. C. McRae, had asked him, "Farquhar, where is your rifle? This Magee party is armed, and we have no protection," or something to that effect.

In re-charging his rifle a particle of the old shell had jammed in the breach and thus prevented the proper adjustment of the new cartridge. When he arrived in front of his brother's house the Magee party, in their automobile, were going over the rise of ground on the highway, some distance away. In his anxiety to get rid of the cartridge, as he intended leaving the rifle at D. C. McRae's for the latter's protection, he had finally discharged the rifle. He did not kneel down and did not aim at anybody.

He had gone to the woodshed to get an axe, but instead of wishing to detain the Magee party, as stated by some witness, wished to drive them away. After discharging the rifle the witness had put it inside the gate of his brother's residence. He did not know that any person had been shot till he was arrested the next day by Constable John Uren.

Under a very severe cross-examination by Mr. Blackstock, the witness denied telling Rosser where the shot gun was, as when he shot at a crow a few days earlier the gun was at D. C. McRae's. He had not asked anyone to go for his rifle, and his only object was to frighten the intruders.

The first witness of the afternoon session was Miss Davidson, who for eight months was a companion to Mrs. Dr. Magee. She testified to the ill-treatment of Mrs. Magee by her husband. On one occasion she escaped downstairs with her clothes nearly torn off. The doctor had threatened to smash his wife's face.

Mrs. James McRae, daughter-in-law of D. C. McRae, corroborated the evidence of D. C. McRae as to the attack and the drawing of a gun by Uren. She was alongside of Farquhar when the shot was fired, and was positive that he had not used the expression "Protestant hound," nor had aimed the time the Magee party was already over the hill, and their shoulders and the back of the auto only were visible when the shot was fired. She believed that he discharged the gun to get rid of the jammed cartridge.

MINISTER IS DISMISSED

Chinese Government Bows to Will of the People.

The Obnoxious Sheng Hsuan Huai Is Put Out of Office With Great Alacrity In Answer to the Demand of the National Assembly—Constitutional Government Is Offered as a Reward For Calling Off Fighting.

Pekin, Oct. 27.—The throne yesterday surrendered to the Tzu Cheng Yuan, China's National Assembly, and in compliance with the demands of the assembly dismissed Sheng Hsuan Huai, Minister of Posts and Communications; ordered Prince Ching, the President of the Cabinet, before a board of inquiry, where he doubtless will be severely dealt with, released from custody the President of the Sze Chuen provincial assembly and other leaders in the riots at Chengtu, and, in fact, agreed to all that the assembly asked, with lack of dignity inconceivable to western observers.

A year ago the throne treated the National Assembly at times almost with contumacy. The Ministers refused to appear before the Assembly, and the budget and other bills submitted to the Assembly for consideration were later put aside for others more suitable to the Palace of the Grand Councillors. Until even a month ago the throne, defiant of the people, issued edicts embodying drastic measures, one in September against the anti-foreign railway agitators in Sze Chuen.

Now, the first resolution of the newly-convened Assembly, carrying consequences of irremediable character, has been granted without a single day's consideration. Sheng Hsuan Huai has been stripped of his ranks, Prince Ching, the Prime Minister, and Natung and Hsu Shih Chang, vice Prime Ministers, as well as several viceroys, who only obeyed the throne's commands, have been handed over to an inferior board, while the members of the Provincial Assembely, who provoked the uprisings in Sze Chuen, have been released from prison.

Prince Ching was not dismissed from the Premiership, but it is not doubted that the Assemby, now having control of the Government, will cause him to retire at an early date.

The appointment of Tang Shao Yi to succeed Sheng Hsuan Huai is belived to forecast the appointment of Yuan Shi Kai to the second office in the Cabinet, if not to the Premiership.

With the prospect of Yuan Shi Kai, who is a Chinaman, leading the country, now ruled by the National Assembly, it is evident that the Manchus mean to offer to the people complete and immediate constitutional government in return for cessation of hostilities. It is reported that Yuan is already negotiating with the rebels. Members of the legations, who are old in experience in Chinese affairs, would not be surprised if the revolution terminated on these lines, practically without further fighting.

Changing Fortunes of War.

Pekin, Oct. 27.—The Official Gazette announces that General Yin Chang, commander of the Imperial troops, has telegraphed that two rebel regiments on Oct. 22 attacked Santao Kiao, 15 miles distant from Wuchang. The Government troops repelled the rebels. On Monday the rebels, using four guns, forced the third brigade of Imperialists to retire and occupied Tsao Chi Chong. On Tuesday there was some scattered skirmishing, during which some rebels were captured and others defeated.

According to the consular reports yesterday the southern provinces are comparatively quiet. Canton and other rebel centres are reported remarkably peaceful.

Foo Chow Has Fallen.

Shanghai, Oct. 27.—Chinese official telegrams report that Foo Chow has fallen and that the customs have been seized by the rebels.

A despatch from Hankow says that in an engagement Tuesday, chiefly artillery, the rebels were driven back, but the Imperialists failed to follow up their success.

Foo Chow is one of the treaty ports and capital of the Province of Fokien. Inclusive of Nantai, a large suburb and European quarter, the population is estimated at 700,000.

TO KILL STEEL TRUST

U. S. Government Action Is Started at Trenton, N.J.

Wall Street Is Surprised at the Action of the Officials In Asking That Not Only Shall the Trust Be Dissolved, But Also the Companies That Have Combined With Them—Magnates Prepared to Fight.

Trenton, N.J., Oct. 27.—The Government's long-planned suit to break up the so-called "steel trust," was begun here yesterday in the United States Circuit Court. It is the most sweeping anti-trust action ever brought by the Department of Justice.

The Government asks not only for the dissolution of the U. S. Steel Corporation, but for the dissolution of all constituent or subsidiary companies which are alleged to have combined in violation of the Sherman law to "maintain, or attempt to maintain, a monopoly of the steel business." There are 36 subsidiary corporations named as defendants.

J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, Charles M. Schwab, George W. Perkins, E. H. Gary, John D. Rockefeller, jr., Henry C. Frick, Charles Steele, James Gayley, W. H. Moore, Edmund C. Converse, Percival Roberts, jr., Daniel G. Reid, Norman B. Ream, P. A. B. Widener and William J. Palmer are named individually as defendants.

The Steel Corporation lease of the Great Northern Railway's ore properties, which the directors of the steel company yesterday formally decided to cancel, is alleged to be illegal. The Government acknowledges that it was advised of the Steel Corporation's intention in this respect, but states that under the terms of the lease no cancellation would be effective until Jan. 1, 1915, and there is no limit upon the amount of ore that can be taken out in the meantime.

The Steel Corporation's acquisition of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. during the panic of 1908 is declared illegal and scathingly criticized. The petition declares that E. H. Gary and Henry C. Frick misled former President Roosevelt when they told him "that but little benefit will come to the Steel Corporation from the purchase."

Interlocking directorates through which those in power in the Steel Corporation held positions of influence on the directorates of other powerful corporations, are referred to as "a method more refined, more euphemious, but nevertheless more effective than pools."

The bill goes on to allege the formation of illegal pools known as the "Steel Plate Association, the Structural Steel Association, the Steel Rail Combination, the Wire Rope Combination, the Rubber-Covered Wire Combination, the Horse Shoe Manufacturers' Association, the Underground Power Cable Combination, the Weatherproof and Magnate Wire Combination, the Land Encased Rubber Cable Combination, and the Bare Copper Wire Combination." These are alleged to have been illegal agreements to suppress competition and fix prices in the commodities indicated by their names.

It was not generally supposed that action against the giant corporation was so near at hand. Many believed that the attitude taken by the corporation's officials in recent public statements probably accelerated the carefully-laid plans. The former secretary of war's retention as special counsel became known for the first time yesterday, when the bill was filed.

Will Fight For Its Life.

New York, Oct. 27.—The U. S. Steel Corporation is prepared to fight for its existence. The announcement took the steel men completely by surprise, and they declined to make any comment for the time being. The attitude of the corporation is set forth clearly, however, in a statement which it issued a month ago. In that statement it proclaimed its belief that it was within the law. It declared over the signature of J. P. Morgan that it would not dissolve voluntarily.

The stock of the Steel Corporation is now selling about 25 points below the high price of the year.

Word of the dissolution suit did not reach Wall Street until almost an hour after the close of the stock market for the day, so that its effect upon securities has not been registered. The steel shares were heavy all through the session. The pressure against the stock was attributed to many rumors of pending unfavorable developments following the directors' meeting. Brokers made preparations to place orders in the London market, which opens before the beginning of trading on the New York Exchange this morning.

French Warship In Danger.

Toulon, France, Oct. 27.—An alarming outbreak of fire occurred yesterday on board the French battleship Justice, a sister ship of the Liberte, which was blown up on Sept. 25. The fire is believed to have been due to a short circuit. A shower of sparks fell in dangerous proximity to the magazines, and the commander of the battleship immediately ordered the forward magazines flooded. The fire was got under control and no great damage resulted.

Saw a Strange Man.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 27.—That a man holding a handkerchief to his face as if to hide his features was seen to emerge from an alley in the rear of the apartment house in which Dr. Helen Knabe lived alone, at 2 o'clock last Tuesday morning, about the hour at which the physician met her death by a knife blow, was the newest lead that had developed yesterday in the police investigation.

Sir Robert Hart's Successor.

London, Oct. 27.—A Pekin despatch to The Times confirms the appointment of Francis Arthur Aglen, deputy inspector general of the Imperial Maritime Customs, China, as the successor of the late Sir Robert Hart.

PROMINENT RAILROAD MAN

STRONGLY ADVISES HIS FRIENDS TO TRY GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS

"I have been a Pullman Conductor on the C. P. R. and Michigan Central during the last three years. About four years ago, I was laid up with intense pains in the groin, a very sore back, and suffered most severely when I tried to urinate. I treated with my family physician for two months for gravel in the bladder but did not receive any benefit. About that time, I met another railroad man who had been similarly affected and who had been cured by taking Gin Pills, after having been given up by a prominent physician who treated him for Diabetes. He is now running on the road and is perfectly cured. He strongly advised me to try Gin Pills which I did,—with the result that the pains left me entirely.

I procured a box, and in a very short time I got relief, and by the time I had taken five boxes the Rheumatism had all left me. After 18 months it returned—I got another box, and now I am free from Rheumatism. I can conscientiously recommend your remedy to all sufferers from Rheumatism. Your No. 7 Tablets are great—worth their weight in gold."

Charles R. Cronkhite,

TRY OUR BINDERY FOR PAMPHLET WORK

FRIENDLY WARFARE IN THE Y. M. C. A.

The Reds, the Whites and the Blues are still at it, waging a friendly warfare, striving to outdo each other in the securing of new members for the Young Men's Christian Association And it is truly a friendly warfare or rivalry, in which British fair play is very much in evidence, and the welfare of the Y.M.C.A. is always paramount to the victory of the team.

There is not the excitement or noise about this campaign that has been observed in previous campaigns for the same purpose, but there is instead a quiet, persistent effort that is steadily bringing in the members. As is usual, there are a few on each team who are not working very hard, while others are doing, or trying to do, the work of two or three.

No announcement of results will be made until ten o'clock this evening, so the three captains are still in the dark as to who is ahead. "We must close this up to-morrow evening with a whirlwind finish." This is the instruction one of the captains was overheard telephoning his team last evening, so there will likely be something doing this evening when the returns are brought in.

Some young men are unwisely planning to delay joining until after the new building is in active operation, forgetting that it costs no more to join now than it will then, owing to the reduced rate being offered now, together with all the privileges of the old quarters.

The new Physical Director, Mr. Dingman, is anxious to start classes in boxing and wrestling. He has had some experience in this line, having boxed and wrestled with some whose reputations are familiar to lovers of these arduous sports. Anyone who wants to get into these classes, whether young or old, lightweight or heavyweight, let him join the Association now, before ten o'clock this evening.

If there are any others whom the campaigners have missed, but who want to join, they should wait no longer, but should go to the Association Rooms this evening and take out a ticket with either Captain Thompson, Captain Schryver or Captain Mowry.

SERGEANTS WERE WORSTED BY THE LEHIGH STAFF

At the Armories last evening the first indoor baseball match of the season took place in the presence of a goodly number of spectators, who thoroughly enjoyed the game. The teams represented the Sergeants of the Fifteenth Regiment and the Lehigh Cement Works. The soldier boys' aim at hitting the ball was by no means as accurate as that of the opposing force, and the result was a victory for the Cement Works team. The latter team took a decided lead at the commencement of the game and maintained it to the end, the score being 14 to 9 in favor of the Cement Works team. Mr. Wm. Cochrane was umpire, filling that position in a satisfactory manner. The line-up of the teams was as follows:

Lehigh—	Sergeants—
Connell, p.	Lloyd, 1b.
M. Reddick, c.f.	Clarke, c.
C. Reddick, 1b.	Sharpe, p.
F. Reddick, 2b.	Aris, l.f.
Edwards, l.f.	Freeman, 3b.
French, ss.	Middleton, 2b.
Dowrie, r.f.	Hutcheson, c.f.
Thompson, c.f.	Hayes, r.f.

Score by innings:

Lehigh	2	4	1	0	0	1	2	0	4	—14
Sergeants	2	2	0	1	0	0	0	0	4	— 9

At the conclusion of the game the visiting teams and a few friends were entertained to a lunch in the Sergeants' quarters.

PERSONAL NOTES ABOUT FORMER BELLEVILLIANS

John T. Luscombe, an old Belleville boy, son of former Alderman Thomas Luscombe, visited the old town last month. Jack is now master mechanic on the Toledo & Ohio Central R. R., with headquarters at Bucyrus, Ohio.

President Robertson was in Winnipeg this month, looking after some interests there.

Mrs. Michael Cummins and daughter Miss Lizzie, have returned from Belleville, where they spent the summer.

Thomas M. Sweeney, our enterprising young drug store merchant, spent a pleasant holiday among the scenes of his early days. He has a new version of the Two-Mile Pond layout.

Peter Rosseal, a Belleville boy of long ago, dispenses justice in the police court at Watkins, New York State.

William C. Lawrence, of Vancouver, formerly of Belleville, one of the famous "Okas," was in Chicago this month. He was returning from an extended tour through the east, taking in both sides of the line. "Billy" says that, outside of Vancouver and Chicago, he thinks Belleville was the busiest town he struck on his travels. When one hears the same story often, from a varied number of sources, one must come to believe that it is really so. Billy looked well, and rumor has passed it about that he is not suffering for the price of his "pork chops."

G. T. Hamilton, of Oketon, Kansas, visited Belleville recently. Mr. Hamilton lived in Belleville 60 years ago. He is now in his 83rd year and is hale and hearty. Belleville people live long. There's an Old Boy for you!

William Woods of the Belleville Club of Chicago, leaves on October 21st to take up his residence in Florida. Some time ago he secured a title to a tract of fruit growing land, and intends now, to begin the work of cultivation. He will make a specialty of grape fruit for the northern markets. The Belleville Club News wishes Billy and his charming bride of a few months all the success they hope for, and then some. Billy has been a loyal Bellevillian at all times, and we know that he will continue to boost the old town, even when he wanders among the Everglades. So long, Billy, old scout, take keer o' yourself!—Belleville Club News, Chicago.

"CREDIT TO WHOM CREDIT IS DUE"

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Sir,—In your reports of the Hambourg piano recital in last evening's issue you were so good as to praise my efforts in the matter. I do not wish to monopoliez the credit. My colleague, Mr. Dan Cameron, gave most valuable assistance, and the undoubted success of the venture is very much owing to him and those ladies who were so active in disposing of tickets and talking the recital up generally.

Yours truly,
IVOR THOMAS.

WINTER ECZEMA

CURED BY ZAM-BUK.

Mrs. P. W. Drummond, of Thetford Mines, Que., writes: "Every fall as soon as cold weather set in, my little daughter's face and hands would be covered with rough, watery patches, which before long turned into scably sores. These would itch and smart terribly, and would remain on her face from fall until spring. This happened for three years, and we could get nothing which did her any good, until a short time ago I started using Zam-Buk, and now, after using half a box of same, the sores have entirely disappeared, leaving her skin as smooth and clear as it could possibly be."

Zam-Buk is also a sure cure for ulcers, abscesses, ringworm, blood-poison, scalp sores, chapped hands, cold sores, and all skin diseases and injuries. 50c. a box, all stores.

FORTY YEARS' FRIENDSHIP CAME TO SUDDEN END

Though F. Johnston, of 33½ Jarvis Street, Toronto, and Geo. A. Eckert, were boys together in Picton, and had known each other all their lives, they had a falling out with a sequel to the dissension in the Division Court in that city on the 26th of October.

For some little time Eckert, who is in the employ of the Great North Western Telegraph Company, had been staying with Johnston at the latter's room on Jarvis Street. For the entertainment provided and for sundry other matters as set forth in the account the following bill was rendered:

Two walking sticks and one cuff	$1.00
3½ days' board	1.75
Cash lent	.50
" "	.50
5 days' board and lodging	2.50
	$6.25
By cash	$1.00
	$5.25

"Hadn't you known each other long ago in Picton?" asked counsel of Mr. Johnston. "And didn't he often help you out?"

"He never helped me out in his life."

"Didn't he get three meals a day with you?"

"Yes, if he wanted them."

The plaintiff then told how Eckert had made himself at home in his rooms and used his bed when he was off work.

"I have known him for forty years and would have paid his board bill if it hadn't been for this which he wrote me."

Here Johnston produced a letter and handed it to the judge. The contents of the letter were not made public, but the plaintiff won his case.

THEATRE DONT'S

Advice that a Veteran Actor Contributes Without Charge

Don't arrive at the theatre late. You would not begin your dinner with the entree.

Don't keep your theatre bonnet on until the very last minute before the curtain goes up, and thus give the man behind you a fit wondering whether you are going to take it off or not.

Don't secure side seats and then glare at the people who have inside ones and pass you on their way out to see some man between the acts. May be you've done the same thing yourself.

BELATED WEDDING PRESENT

Massive Silver Table Service for the German Crown Prince

The Crown Prince and Princess of Germany are about to receive a truly magnificent wedding present. It is true that it reaches them about five years after their marriage, but in point of beauty and value the gift is said to be one which any ordinary young couple would be cheerfully willing to wait for. It is a massive silver table service for use on state occasions, and comprises a variety of decorative pieces, including huge candelabra a meter high, heavy punch-bowls, and a set of sculptured figures representing the seasons. The gift is presented by the cities of Prussia, which ordered it at the time of the Crown Prince's wedding. For five years some of the best artists, sculptors and silversmiths of Germany have been at work upon it, and the individual pieces, when completed, have been stowed away in the vaults of the Reichsbank. The service will be presented in August.

DIVORCES IN BAVARIA

Divorce cases having increased in Bavaria, which is a Catholic country, an official order was promulgated some months ago to the effect that whenever citations are applied for in the divorce courts the priests of the parish in which the parties are living shall be informed of the differences between the parties in order that they may bring their pastoral influence to bear in bringing about a reconciliation. The latest statistics show that the new order has had no appreciable effect in checking the rapid increase in the number of cases brought before the courts.

AGED CLOWN TO MARRY

James Doughty, Aged 92, Will Wed a Girl of 25

Mr. James Doughty, the oldest in the world, whose approaching marriage, at the age of ninety-two to a woman of twenty-five was announced recently, gives an interesting version of a conversation which led to his engagement. The old man's face is wrinkled and his hair is silvered, but his eye is bright and his hand-shake is one that can be felt. "I'm going to live to be a hundred," he said, when interviewed at his cottage opposite the Brighton Hippodrome. "You see," he went on, "my wife has been dead these four months, and I am getting lonely. I've had plenty of trouble and I want someone to look after me." He explained that Miss Alice Underwood, his fiancée, is a daughter of his former housekeeper.

"One day she was here, and a friend said, 'You are very lonely, Mr. Doughty; you ought to get married again.' "'Married?' I said. 'Who's likely to marry an old man like me?'

"Alice looked up and said, 'I would.' 'Nonsense,' said I; 'but she stuck to it, and so we're going to get married.'"

Thus did Mr. Doughty tell his story, and Miss Underwood, who was listening, did not deny hi sversion.

Mr. Doughty makes his living by means of performing dogs on the West Pier at Brighton. He has just started training a new dog. "It's a long job," said he, "but I can do it." Clowning, he says, is not what it was in the good old days of the harlequinade. He would like to put on his clown's dress to be married in, but the bride shakes her head.

GAINSBOROUGH PAINTING

The Alleged Original of his "Stolen Duchess" is at the Baillie Gallery

The alleged original of Gainsborough's "Stolen Duchess" is now to be seen at the Baillie Gallery, in Bruton Street, London, under conditions which make it possible to form an idea as to its artistic merit. Although the documentary evidence in its favor is so clear and convincing that any legal mind will accept it as absolutely trustworthy, the picture itself does not advance the claims made on its behalf. There is little if any evidence of Gainsborough's brushwork to be seen on the canvas, which must have undergone many restorations, and bears a thick coat of shiny varnish. What is to be seen now reveals a coarseness of touch quite alien to Gainsborough's art. How much of this may be due to subsequent repaintings it is difficult to decide. In this connection it is interesting that Mr. Foster in his declaration distinctly states that Gainsborough, when asked to paint the portrait of Lady Betty Foster, said that he would show his ability to paint in the much-admired manner of Reynolds, but, without resorting to the "butchery patches" with which Reynolds endeavored to imitate the "impasto" of the Italian school. Of course, if Gainsborough deliberately adopted a style of painting different from his usual practice, this may account for the difficulty every student of his work most experiences in trying to discover his brushwork in the portrait in the Baillie Gallery. Whatever conclusions may be arrived at from comparing the two rival pictures which are claimants to the distinction of being Gainsborough's originals, it seems fairly established that both of them represent Lady Betty Foster, the second wife of the Duke of Devonshire, and not Georgina, his first wife.

Ask any spinster why she never married and she will frankly admit that it wasn't because she never had an opportunity.

Laboratory of Provincial Government Analyst.

MONTREAL, 22nd February, 1909.

I HEREBY CERTIFY that I have drawn by my own hand ten samples of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co's EXTRA STANDARD GRANULATED SUGAR, indiscriminately taken from four lots of about 150 barrels each and six lots of about 450 bags each. I have analyzed same and find them uniformly to contain 99-99/100 to 100 per cent of pure cane sugar, with no impurities whatever.

"THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S."

At the Griffin Opera House last evening the melodrama entitled "The Girl From Rector's" was presented to a fair but appreciative audience. The company presenting it played their parts well, which the audience were not slow in appreciating. The four acts in the play were well carried out by all who took part. it is a very pretty play, and the various scenes were depicted in such a manner as to make them true to life.

A SHOWER AT ANSON.

A very interesting event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Eggleton, Anson, on Monday evening, Oct. 23rd. A number of young people gathered together and gave their daughter, Miss Evalena, a linen shower, consisting of a linen table cloth, napkins to match, tray cloths and a centre piece. She was agreeably surprised and thanked the donors very kindly. Lunch was served and the evening was spent with games and music, and at a late hour the crowd dispersed.

A THIRD CALL.

The police last night, for the third night in succession, were called to the Chinese restaurant to settle a dispute Two young men who were somewhat under the influence of liquor obtained a meal and refused to pay for the same until the officer arrived. Then they settled up.

MINING ON LARGE SCALE.

The Cordova Mines, Ltd., started operations on a large scale last week. The broken shaft, which caused the delay, has been replaced and the mill is expected to be kept running at its full capacity. Some new and promising veins have been opened up and the prospects look very bright for the new company.

BEEKEEPERS' ASSOCIATION.

The annual convention of the Ontario Beekeepers' Association will be held in the York County Council Chambers, 57 Adelaide street east, Toronto, on Wednesday to Friday, November 15, 16 and 17. Every member is expected to attend this annual gathering of the clans. Every affiliated society is invited to send delegates. Ladies are especially welcome at all the sessions.

PUSHING ON THE WORK.

Construction work on the line of the C.N.O.R. is progressing in a most satisfactory manner. Rails are now laid to within a short distance of Shannonville. During the past few days a large amount of ballast has been deposited on the road between Trenton and the city and also within the city limits. The work on the station here is well advanced and the structure, when completed, will be up-to-date in every respect. The exterior of the building, except painting, is completed and the interior is now being finished up. General Freight Agent Phillips of the Canadian Northern, states that the business on the new Toronto to Trenton line had exceeded all expectations, and to meet the increased demand for freight transportation the company have ordered 200 new box cars, which are on their way from Halifax. A number of new refrigerator cars have also been built for the company by the Crossen Car Co., of Cobourg.

$110,000 FOR KIND ACT

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 26—The kindness of a young man in giving up his berth in a sleeping car on a New York and Washington train to an elderly woman many years ago has brought golden returns.

To-day when the inventory of the estate of Mrs. Helen Amelia Marsh of Hamden was filed in Probate Court it was learned that the residuary legatee, to the extent of $110,000, was Ernest W. Marlow, of New York City.

Marlow was the youth who gave up his berth fifteen years ago, and Mrs. Marsh was the passenger. She made him her protegee, providing for his education and sending him to Harvard College and Harvard Law school. The estate inventories at $114,383.

A farmer of Aroostook County, Me., who was owing a mortgage of $1,500 for two years on his farm and was unable in 1909-10 through these bad years for crops to pay the interest, has this year not only paid the interest but also the entire principal by har-

CANADA'S WEST OWES MUCH TO CHIEF GEOGRAPHERYOUNG

Made Winnipeg Maps in Old Boom Days-Surveyed Under Torrens System – Microscopic Accuracy Work

Old-timers who were in Winnipeg in the boom days will recall the daily and nightly auction sales of real estate which were the chief attraction of the infant prairie metropolis at that time, and will remember the huge plans of townsites which decorated the walls of Coolican's auction rooms. The young man to whom many of those maps, in all their glory of bright colors and gold leaf, owed their existence, was the late R. E. Young, afterwards Geographer of Canada, with a long record of good work to his credit.

The late R. E. Young, D.L.S., whose sudden death was recorded this week, was a native of Georgetown, Ontario. He studied surveying with Evans and Bolger, Belleville, and in the late seventies went to the Northwest and grew up with western ideals. To his credit stood prominently the re-survey of the City of Winnipeg, under the Torren's system, and the making of a map in connection therewith, a job so well done that in a score of years the first error has yet to be found. The location and survey of the old trails in Manitoba was also a notable and painstaking achievement. The surveying of mining claims in British Columbia gave him a thorough knowledge of the mountains and a year or two of railway engineering added to his store of experience.

Some years ago Mr. Young was called to Ottawa to undertake the adjustment of the railway land grants. By his thorough acquaintance with the West and the adoption of common-sense methods he reduced the chaos to order; in a few years all tangles were straightened out, and the companies to whom land had been granted were put in possession of the last acre. Having a natural bent for cartography, and a natural belief in the value of good maps, he utilized the information acquired in adjusting the railway lands in the creation of a map showing the lands—odd sections—that had been alienated in this manner, following it up with its natural complement, the homestead map—even sections—which has passed through seven editions, and is the sheet anchor of every man dealing in land in the West. Of this series of maps, experts in Washington said there was nothing in any country to equal them—they were Chinese in their microscopic accuracy.

Greedy for work to a degree unusual in a Government servant, the administration of the swamp lands in Manitoba, the Grand Trunk Pacific townsites, the railway belt of British Columbia, and waterpowers of the Dominion was put in Mr. Young's hands, and of his own motion he took up the regions north of Saskatchewan and Alberta, which have become well known t[illegible] world through his "Fertile Nor[illegible]d," and other publications.

On the appointment of Mr. James White, Canadian Geographer for many years, to the post of secretary of the Conservation Commission, Mr. Young was offered and accepted the vacant position, and, immediately went from British Columbia, where he was temporarily occupied with departmental business, to London, England, to attend the conference of the geographers of all nations, now engaged in the preparation of a standard map of the world.—From the Montreal Star.

Y. M. C. A. YOUNG MEN FINISHED THEIR WORK

Over 100 New Members Secured —Reds and Tecumsehs Won in Their Classes

A few of the young men of the Y.M.C.A. set out Wednesday morning to secure one hundred members for the Association in three days. The time was up last evening at ten o'clock, and there was rejoicing among the workers when it was learned that they had not only reached this mark, but had exceeded it by a small margin. The total number of members secured was one hundred and two, and this would doubtless have been much larger only for the fact that one of the captains has been unable to leave his store during the daytime, and could give practically no time to the work.

There were three teams, called the Reds, Whites and Blues. Each team had a junior section composed of Boy Scouts, working under Indian names In the senior sections the Reds were winners by a big majority, while in the junior teams the Whites won out by another big majority. The score was as follows:—

Reds, captained by Mr. W. H Mowry, 72 members.

Whites, captained by Mr. Allan Schryver, 26 members.

Blues, captained by Mr. E. Thompson, 4 members.

Senecas, captained by Al. Hitchon, 2 members.

Tecumsehs, captained by Hugh Rogers, 12 members.

Blackfeet, captained by Harold Reid, 2 members.

The Tecumsehs, under Capt. Hugh Rogers, therefore, capture the pennant, which was offered to the winning Scout team.

Two of the senior workers are deserving of special mention—Mr. W H. Mowry, captain of the Reds, who personally secured thirty-six members and Mr. T. R. Dando, who secured twenty-three, taking second place in individual honors.

Marsh & Henthorn's factory gave eleven members, the largest number of members of all the factories, and the Rolling Mills comes next. It was reported unofficially that one worker had secured ten members in the Rolling Mills in addition to those secured by other members, but for some reason these ten applications were not handed in last evening, and therefore could not be counted on the side of the Blues, where they belonged. Had these been brought in it would have placed the Rolling Mills at the head of the list of factories.

A pleasing incident occurred yesterday when a farmer handed one of the captains the price of a membership ticket, requesting him to purchase a ticket and give it to somebody who needed the Association, but could not afford to join with his own means. The captain had no difficulty in finding the right place to bestow that ticket, and would be glad if others would follow this example.

There are many new faces to be seen around the Association rooms now, and it will take the officials some time to get well acquainted with them all. Some of the new members are getting into the gymnasium classes already, and, though their muscles feel rather sore the following day, they are heartily enjoying it, and want more.

The battle raged all day and the rebels were driven from all their fortified positions.

PEKIN, China, Oct. 28.—The Dowager Empress has sent the Minister of Finance $500,000 from her private purse. This she ordered put into the war chest for recruiting and equipping more soldiers.

DISSENSION IN ITALY

(Intelligencer Special.)

ROME, Italy, Oct. 28.—It is feared that the Socialists, under the leadership of Bisollati will enter an organized opposition to Italy's grab of Tripoli, and has caused Premier Giolletti to postpone indefinitely the meeting of the Italian Parliament, which was to have convened next week. There is internal dissension in Italy over the conduct of the war on Turkey, and the Government leaders are well aware of the opposition to their present policy.

The Socialists and Laborites are hostile to the complete grab of Tripoli. To avert an organized opposition of these parties Gioletti will prevent Parliament from meeting until the Italian armies in Africa have completed their conquest.

NOMINATION IN EAST HASTINGS

Four Aspirants for the Legislature—Mr. Sandy Grant, Reeve of Tweed, Was Chosen

The Conservatives of East Hastings assembled yesterday afternoon in the village of Roslin for the purpose of placing in the field a candidate for the approaching Provincial elections. It was one of the largest and most representative gatherings ever held; all parts of the riding being well represented by the stalwarts of the party.

When the gathering was called to order at 2 o'clock the spacious hall was filled to the door with delegates and others. Mr. G. Campbell, of Thurlow, President of the Association occupied thechair, and Mr. Malley, of Deseronto, was secretary. The following gentlemen were placed in nomination:

A. A. Richardson, M.P.P. of Deseronto.
Sandy Grant, Reeve of Tweed.
A. T. McFarlane, of Tyendinaga.
H. K. Denyes, of Thurlow.
Wm. Tummon, Reeve of Huntingdon.
A. Kirk, Reeve of Hungerford.
Dr. Newton, of Deseronto.
J. Hill, of Tyendinaga.
Dr. Bowlby, ex-Reeve, of Tweed.

Those nominated were called to the platform and each received a warm welcome when called upon to speak Messrs. Tummon, A. Kirk, J. Hill, Dr. Newton and Dr. Bowlby retired, leaving four in the field. It was decided when the ballots were cast that the candidate receiving the smallest number of votes should retire upon the first ballot. Mr. McFarlane dropped out, and in the second ballot, Mr. Richardson, M.P.P., received the smallest number of votes. The deciding ballot between Mr. Sandy Grant and Mr. H. K. Denyes resulted in the former receiving the largest number of votes and his nomination was made unanimous.

Addresses were then given by the candidate and Mr. W. B. Northrup, K.C., M.P., for East Hastings, who received a hearty welcome and gave an admirable address. The proceedings were brought to a close by cheers for the King, Hon. R. L. Borden and the candidate.

The officers elected were as follows:

COW AS PASSENGER

Russian Railway Employes Treated the Director's Bovine Quite Royally

Railway employes in Russia realize that they are working not in the interest of the public, but for the Director of the railway. A characteristic incident is reported from Samara. A cow belonging to the Director of the railway had to travel from Santoui to Samara. The railway officials along the line were very anxious about the safety of the animal, and as soon as the cow was placed in a specially prepared truck instructions by wire were sent all along the line. At Bugutussiau the truck was attached to a fast train, so that the cow would be saved the discomfort of slow travelling. The station-master at Kinel paid a special visit to the cow, and then telegraphed to the Director of the railway: "Cow passed in the train 911. Health excellent." When the cow reached her journey's end a crowd of railway officials met the cow and accorded her something like a royal reception. Passengers by the train were greatly annoyed, and they complain that the railway's employes concerned themselves more about the cow than the safety of human life.

SOLDIER AND SCULPTOR

Adrian Jones Understands a Horse From Tail Tip to Nostril

It is said of Captain Adrian Jones, who has designed the four-horse war chariot, weighing upwards of thirty tons, which is to be erected in London as a memorial to "Peace," that he is probably the only living sculptor who understands a horse from tail-tip to nostril. As a boy he loved and studied horses, and would have liked to become an artist, but his father had other plans, and he entered the Army. He saw much active service, and was then advised to become a sculptor, having devoted most of his spare time when in the Army to painting and sculpture.

Britain is about to annex Egypt. Well, there wouldn't have been much Egypt at this time but for Britain.

It looks as if the entire adult population of Los Angeles will have a chance to sit for a little while anyway in that jury box.

It begins to look as if the Italians have "caught a Tartar" in Tripoli. At least the military experts are of that opinion.

Enforcing the law. A Toronto restaurant keeper who allowed customers to consume liquor was fined $50. That's a precedent for all magistrates to follow.

The death of Robert White, aged 89 years and 2 months, occurred at Kincardine, Ont. on Wednesday. He was a native of Ireland, and came to Canada in 1858. U. S capitalists are to establish at Thorold a pulp mill which will cost one million dollars. Had the reciprocity scheme been accepted by the people of Canada the mill would have been located across the line and Canada would have been deprived of the advantages from the money expended in the great plant in question and of benefits which will result from the employment of a large number of men in its operation.

The Grit party in Ontario are entering on a hopeless struggle in the coming elections in a completely disorganized condition, being divided on the leadership of their fag-end of a party. The Liberals of Toronto are anxious to displace Mr. MacKay from the leadership and to select a Toronto man for the position. The rural section stick to MacKay, and thus is their house divided against itself, with the result which is inevitable in such cases.

A contemporary puts the case in a nutshell. It says: "Sir Jas. P. Whitney is going to the country in his own good time, the same as his predecessors did. With ten vacancies in the Legislature, and only one further session possible, he is doing the wisest thing by clearing up the political situation for the next few years. Furthermore, his good record entitles Premier Whitney to the hearty endorsation of the electors—and that he will undoubtedly receive on polling day. So what is the use of the Opposition grumbling?

A telegram from Windsor, Ont., of the 26th says: "With his bride of a day on his arm, David Andrews, a Syrian, who lives at Wallaceburg, found himself in an awkward position when he attempted to re-enter Canada yesterday. Andrews, who is a glass-worker and a naturalized Canadian, crossed the line to wed a Detroit girl of his own nationality, but when he tried to take her back to his Wallaceburg home he bumped up against the Canadian immigration laws, his wife never having been given American papers. Andrews decided to return to Detroit, rather than be separated from his bride, and meanwhile the necessary papers will be obtained for Mrs. Andrews, which will permit her to come into Canada." These immigration regulations seem to be an outrage upon our civilization. What possible good reason could there be to keep these people out of the country? It should be investigated.

On Thursday, November 16th, Kingston electors will vote on a by-law to guarantee bonds of a hotel company to the extent of $100,000 and to give a fixed assessment of $50,000 on the new hotel which it is proposed to erect. The site chosen for the new hotel is the Carruthers property on King St., between West and Simcoe streets. The promoters of the new hotel are Messrs. Charles E. Phenix, J. Wilbur Stevens and Wallace A. Pendle, all of Boston. The capital stock for the hotel is placed at $210,000, of which $85,000 will be common stock and $125,000 preferred. There will be a bond issue of $100,000, bearing interest at four and one half per cent. The cost of the hotel, exclusive of the site, is placed at $180,000. The men back of the proposition purchase the land, and in return ask that the city guarantee their bonds to the extent of $100,000. The citizens of Kingston are to take preferred stock to the value of $50,000. A sinking fund is to be provided, in which the company is to deposit $2,100 per year. The agreement provides that the city shall have a director, and provision is made for the City Solicitor to act as such.

RACE WAR RAGING IN OKLAHOMA

COWETA, Okla., Oct. 27.—Ed. Suddeth, a negro, who shot and killed City Attorney Beavers, was killed by a mob as he was being lifted into an automobile which was to take him to the jail in Wagoner. He was riddled with bullets, probably fifty shots taking effect in his body. Negroes are arriving from the surrounding country, and an outbreak appears to be inevitable.

Muskogee, Okla., Oct. 27.—There are rumors of other deaths at Coweta, but these cannot be confirmed. Citizens of Muskogee are being armed by the sheriff and are hurrying to Coweta, 25 miles from here. Sheriff Long of Wagoner county, has despatched all his men to the scene, and has been assured of help from the sheriff of Muskogee county.

THE BIG STONE MOSES STRUCK

Many Antiquarians Convinced That Stone of Destiny Carried From Scotland to London, Is Rock From Which the Water Gushed.

The belief of the antiquary, quoted by Archdeacon Wilberforce, that the Coronation stone was the rock struck by Moses and that from it flowed the water for the thirsty Israelites, has made visitors to Westminster Abbey more than usually keen to see the Coronation chair and the famous relic which it encloses. The archdeacon, preaching in the Abbey stated that a well-known antiquary who had made a special study of the history connected with the stone was convinced that it was the stone on which Jacob rested his head when he had the vision of angels at Bethel, and that from that night it was considered sacred and carried from place to place. "He believed it was this stone that Moses struck, and that it was carried by the Israelites during their 40 years of wandering. He showed me a big cleft in the back from which he believed the water gushed out." The antiquary traced the stone from Solomon's temple to Spain, thence to Ireland, then to Scotland, thence to Westminster.

Only the front and sides of the stone can be seen by visitors to the Abbey, for the top is hidden by the seat of the Coronation chair, and a rail prevents people passing behind the chair for an inspection of the back. To appearance it is a piece of purplish-grey rock about 2 ft. long, 16 in. wide, and 10 in. deep. At each end is a much-rusted, deep-sunken iron staple. Whatever its early history, there is little doubt that Kings of Scotland were crowned on it at Scone, and there is no doubt that Edward I. brought it to Westminster and that on it all the Sovereigns of Britain have been crowned from the time of Edward II.

"In the book of Genesis it is recorded that Jacob, after his vision of the angels descending from Heaven, set up the stone on which his head had rested and poured oil on it. 'And this stone which I have set for a pillar shall be God's House.'"

To Cure Ear Defects.

Because many school children cannot hear well and because this deficiency makes them appear stupid in their classes, Prof. McCallie, a Trenton, N. J., school principal, recently got busy to determine their defects by inventing an ear testing machine.

This has proved a great success and by its means children who formerly appeared stupid are enabled to have their ears treated and cured. The merit of the invention is that the ears are tested without the little subject suspecting it.

The machine consists of a metal box, containing a tiny bell. Stethoscope tubes reach the child's ears and a tiny hammer strikes the bell at varying degrees of sound. The test consists in learning at what strength the tinkle of the bell is audible. Pupils are tested at the rate of one a minute.

COLOURS OF THE OCEAN

It has been proved that the blueness of sea water is in constant ratio to its saltness. In the tropics the tremendous evaporation induced by the blazing sun causes the water to be much more salt than it is in higher latitudes. For about 30 degrees both north and south of the equator the waters of the world's oceans are of an exquisite azure. Beyond these latitudes the blue fades and changes to green, and in the Arctic and Antarctic Oceans the greens are almost as vivid as the tropical blue.

The extraordinary blueness of the Mediterranean has two causes. One is that very few large rivers of fresh water run into this sea; the second, that the Mediterranean is practically land-locked, and, being exposed to a powerful sun, evaporation is great. By actual test the waters of the Mediterranean are heavier and more salt than those of the Atlantic.

But blue and green are not the only colours observed in the world's seas and oceans. In January, [illegible] a river of yellow water, three miles wide and of enormous length was observed running parallel with the Gulf Stream. It stretched from Cape Florida to Cape Hatteras, and was undoubtedly caused by some tremendous submarine upheaval, probably of a volcanic nature.

Again, about nine years ago, the sea turned almost black off a large portion of the California coast. The this extraordinary tint was due, and the ng came abruptly to an end. In this case the darkness seems to have been caused by millions of tiny animalcules, known as whale food. The dull reddish tint which is occasionally seen in the Red Sea, and which has given that sea its name, has a similar cause. The water becomes full of microscopic algae — tiny weed.

China's Yellow Sea is usually supposed to owe its origin to the flood of muddy water which its great river pours into it. But here again modern science has proved that living organisms are responsible for its peculiar tint.

Occasionally, and for some cause as yet undiscovered, great areas of the ocean turn milkwhite. In March, 1904, the passengers and crew of a Japanese merchant vessel steaming at night between Hong Kong and Yokohama ran into a snow-white sea. It was an opaque, phosphorescent surface, but an expanse of pure snow-white, having a dazzling effect upon the eyes. The phenomenon lasted for six hours, and alarmed the passengers so greatly that not one slept at all that night.

Eight thousand gallons of fresh water are used in a large battleship daily. About two-thirds of this is taken up by the boilers, and the remainder is used for drinking, washing, etc.

REALLY SPEAK

German Canine's Ability to Talk in Clear Intelligent Fashion, is Ascribed by Zoologists to Possession of Anatomical Peculiarities.

There is in Berlin a dog that talks. Learned men who have examined him assert that his talking is totally distinct from his barking, that there is no resemblance between the two, that they are never mixed, and that he really knows what he is saying. His speech is not like that of parrots, mere imitation, but is a true, though still rudimentary means of communication between him and human beings.

A French newspaper man who interviewed Don — that is the dog's name — writes: "Do not get Don mixed up with the educated dogs of the country fairs and the cafe concerts. He is a well marked individuality, endowed, it seems, with a very strong will and an affection, extraordinary even in a dog, for the human race, with which he seems to be linked by obscure affinities, remarkable intelligence, and most eloquent gestures. What he says he speaks, not mechanically under the hypnotising influence of his master, as an 'educated dog' would do, but spontaneously and apparently under the single impulse of his own will.

"However, there is an excellent way of making this extraordinary dog talk. Offer him something nice to eat, and unless he be in an exceptionally sulky temper, he will show himself ready at once to display his vocabulary to you. Profiting by this happy disposition, ask him his name. He will reply in a deep voice, slurring the initial consonant a little, 'Don.' Ask him what he likes, and he will tell you, like a German baby, 'Haben, haben.' Inquire further what he wants, and he will surely answer 'Kuchen' (cake), a magic word that he seems to think includes all good things, and that he applies indiscriminatingly to cake, meat, and other favourite dainties."

Zoologists who have examined Don say that his superior intelligence is due to certain anatomical peculiarities, such as an exceptionally high forehead.

His Bit of Empire.

It is a well-known fact that some Britons are more inclined to talk about the Empire's fringe, of which they are ignorant, than about its heart.

A housewife, whose husband was addicted this way, turned his thoughts into more homely channels by her ready wit.

One Saturday evening he came home late, smelling strongly of tobacco and very red in the face.

"Oh," he said, "I've had a fine time. I've been to an Empire meeting. It was good."

Then he frowned and said impatiently. "What's the matter with supper. Ain't it ready yet?"

His wife, who was peeling potatoes and holding a squalling baby, rose and extended the child to him. "Here," she said, "take hold of your bit of Empire while I fry these chips."

Napoleon III and his "Double"

Many of the stories relating to Napoleon III. and Eugene Vivier, the cornet-player, are apocryphal. But there can be no doubt the latter owed much of his social and artistic success to his remarkable resemblance to the French Emperor. This resemblance, from their first meeting in London, endeared him to Napoleon, who at once took him under his patronage so that his future was thenceforth assured. Indeed, he soon became on most familiar terms with the Emperor who, according to the Republicans and Orleanists, availed himself of his extraordinary likeness to the musician in employing the latter to impersonate him when he desired to be, like Sir Boyle Roche's bird, in two places at once.

Ready for Emergencies.

One of our French contemporaries, apropos of the desire of the Germans to get a piece of Africa, speculates as to what the personal equipment of the German commander will consist. Will it be as extensive as that of Count Waldersee when he went to China in connection with the Boxer rebellion? The intimate friend of the Kaiser, we are told, had a trunk of dressing-gowns, a vast quantity of "chemises de nuit," boots by the dozen pairs, with felt socks and gutta percha overalls, and fur-lined waistcoats. The Count also carried a portable kitchen, the fittings being of nickel and silver. Four coursing dogs, barrels of biscuits, and a domestic to look after the dogs accompanied Waldersee, whose life was insured for $100,000.

Carnegie and his Father

Dr. Andrew Carnegie told an audience at Liverpool the other day that he had "taken to library forming because his father did it before him." William Carnegie's efforts at library founding were extremely modest, as compared with the work of his distinguished son. In 1838 Mr. Carnegie's father was a journeyman weaver in Dunfermline. He and two other drivers of the shuttle met, and agreed to convey the books they had in their respective homes to one house. The combined libraries only figured out twenty volumes. The pioneers were joined by other weavers, and they agreed to tax themselves to the extent of a few pence per month and from this fund purchase new books. The little institution ultimately blossomed into the Dunfermline Tradesmen's Library.

A new home industry has been initiated in Ireland. In a notice headed "Flies Cause Disease" the Public Health Committee of Dublin announce that they will give three pence each for paper bags filled with dead flies.

The proper way to discover the sex of any wasp which may alight on the back of your neck, it seems, is to wait and see. The male wasp never stings.

MAY BE LONG

Avoidable Sources of Physical Degeneration Include Poisoning of Tissues by Meat Putrefaction and Grief Worry and Anxiety.

There is a definite limit set to one's length of years. This limit is an inherent something very difficult to define, which determines the end of the vital span, beyond which life cannot be prolonged. It is one of the very numerous expressions of protoplasmic inertia. It means that no matter how carefully a man lives, avoiding accidents and all those poisons which tend to produce degeneration of tissue — those of alcohol, gout, and the toxins of specific infections — nevertheless he cannot live on for ever because of an intrinsic tendency in his protoplasm to cease working after so many years have elapsed. Just as a clock, wound up to go for eight days, will stop at the end of eight days, or a projectile fired from a gun can travel no farther than the energy of its charge will permit it, so the organism can endure for a certain time, but no longer than this inherent fatality to cease to live will allow it.

One avoidable source of early tissue degeneration is the absorption of intestinal poison, chemical substances of an injurious nature manufactured in the alimentary canal. As nearly everybody now knows, it is the bacilli of sour milk which antagonise the putrefactive bacteria. The drinkers of sour milk in Eastern Europe and the tribes of the desert are notoriously longlived.

Lastly, the mind and its various states have, as is universally recognised, an influence on growing old. Grief, worry, and anxiety are well known "to age" people rapidly. Other things being equal, the person of placid temperament is more likely to survive to a ripe old age than the person who frets and fusses and fumes.

OLD LEATHER FOR DINNER

Hungry Men Existed on Hard Leather, and It Might Be Well to Hold Old Boots Against Possible Crop Failure.

The famous Captain Morgan and his piratical crew were sometimes in tight places at Panama, and on one occasion were reduced to eating their leathern bags. Some persons who never were out of their mothers' kitchens may ask how these pirates could eat, swallow, and digest these pieces of leather, so hard and dry. "But," states one of the company who narrated the story, "could they once experience what hunger, or, rather, famine is, they would certainly find the manner, by their own necessity, as the pirates did. For these first took the leather and sliced it in pieces. Then did they beat it between two stones and rub it, often dipping it in the water of the river, to render it by these means supple and tender. Lastly, they scraped off the hair and roasted or broiled it upon the fire. And being thus cooked they cut it into small morsels and ate it, helping it down with frequent gulps of water, which by good fortune they had right at hand."

Change of Air

The cyclist was fighting hard against a strong head-wind and wondering what unhappy thought had prompted him to come so far away from home. Darkness was rapidly falling, and, to crown his misery, it was beginning to rain. After a little practice, the rain came down in its best style, and the wheelman got wet to the skin. Then, as the intelligent reader will have anticipated, a piece of glass laid his tyre open. Some people get all the luck.

Presently there drove up from the opposite direction a benevolent old gentleman in a pony-cart. Gazing at the upturned bike, the perspiring wheelman, and the repairing outfit which he had dropped in the mud, he inquired—

"Had a puncture, my friend?"

The cyclist looked up and swallowed his feelings with a huge gulp.

"No, sir," he replied. "I'm just changing the air in the tyres. The other lot's worn out, you know!"

An Arctic Cannonade.

At Sadonsk, in Northern Siberia, the silence of the intensely cold winter nights is sometimes broken by a loud report as of a cannon. This is due to the bursting of one of the ice-bubbles in the river. The streams coming down from the hills are frozen on the surface some six to nine inches thick. The water beneath flows faster than it can escape, and the pressure becomes irresistible. First the elasticity of the ice is seen by the rising of circular mounds from six to eight feet in diameter, and four to five feet high. The bursting point comes at last with a report like an explosion. The water escapes, but soon freezes again. Scores of these hillocks may be seen in a few miles of the river.

Advertisement by Water.

An ingenious machine has just been put on the Parisian market. According to details given in "La Publicité" the machine prints an announcement on the ground in water, which it sprays upon the soil in a fine shower. The letters or signs will last from twenty to thirty minutes, until the evaporation of the water is complete, and as the spray of water also serves the welcome purpose of laying the dust, the invention will doubtless be accorded a heartier welcome than the majority of advertising devices of this nature receive.

There is great dignity in labour. Work of every description, however humble it may be, is honourable, and beneath the dignity of no person, and every one should delight in doing some kind of work.

Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Oct. 27.—Almost panic conditions took a clutch to-day on the market for wheat. Demoralized stock dealings had the most to do with the scare, but there was also talk that the government would investigate the alleged manipulation of grain. Closing prices were weak at a decline of 1 3-4c to 2 3-8c to 2 1-2c, compared with 24 hours before. Other staples fell, too, but not nearly so much as wheat—corn 1-2c to 5-8c to 3-8c, oats 1-8c to 1-2c, and hog products 5c to 15c to 27 1-2c.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ½d lower than yesterday on wheat and ¼d to ½d lower on corn. Antwerp closed unchanged on wheat, Budapest ½c lower, and Berlin ½c lower.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Oct. 27.—The foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat was very limited; but, notwithstanding this fact, there was a good demand for ocean grain room, and engagements for some fair-sized lots were made to Leith, Glasgow and Manchester. Owing to the break in prices of over two cents per bushel in the Winnipeg October option, a weaker feeling developed in the local market, and prices declined 1c per bushel. A good business continues to be done in flour for local account, and prices are firm at the recent advance. The export demand shows no improvement. Cheese and butter in fair demand and eggs fairly active. Provisions quiet.

A Contrast

Mr. Leonard, the new chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, is in every respect a contrast to his predecessor, Mr. S. N. Parent. The latter was a mere professional politician who had no knowledge of the work of constructing a railway, unless the experience which he gained in the unsavory Quebec bridge job be taken ino account. The new chairman, on the contrary, is a gentleman who is an expert in that line and has had many years of experience in connection with the C. P. R. and other great railways. That Mr. Leonard will give to the country the benefit of his professional knowledge is evidenced by the following telegram from Ottawa under date of October 26th:—

> Mr. R. W. Leonard, the new chairman of the National Transcontinental Commission, this morning arrived in Ottawa and bright and early was in possession of the office occupied so long by Hon. S. N. Parent. He had a long consultation with Mr. Gordon Grant, the chief engineer, and afterwards had a conference with his colleagues, Messrs. McIsaac and Calvert.

It is, of course, too soon for Mr. Leonard to have made any plans for the future, but it is understood that the new chairman and the other commissioners will soon leave for Winnipeg, where an inspection of the railway will be made. It is unfortunate, perhaps, that the season is so far advanced, but Mr. Leonard is so experienced a railway man that even though frost and snow may be present he will be able to diagnose the conditions as they really are. It is evident, moreover, that Mr. Leonard intends to make a personal inspection of the whole line, so far as transportation is possible, and it would not be surprising if the greater part of the fall and winter would be devoted to that work.

The proposed action of Mr. Leonard in taking such a journey at this advanced season of the year evidences his high sense of duty and forms a pleasing contrast to the incapacity and inactivity of the politician who was foisted into that office after having been ejected from the Premiership of Quebec by his political friends, by a Government which hesitated not to play into the hands of its political friends, regardless of the interests of the country.

Fishing--Close Season

The working of the fishery laws in our international waters has long proved detrimental to Canadian fishermen, Canadians being restricted as to the time when fish should be caught in these waters, while citizens of the United States were not restricted in a like manner by the laws of their country, hence the Canadian Department of Fisheries has acted wisely in extending the time for the fishermen of East Elgin and Norfolk to catch whitefish during the month of November on an equality with the United States fishermen, and also the Counties of Kent and Essex. This means that the fisherman's new privilege may be worth thousands of dollars to them.

Having made enquiry as to the running of whitefish at the present time in the Bay of Quinte, it appears that the time for catching whitefish in our bay might with propriety be extended for some ten or twelve days.

Our information, gleaned from those whose duty it is to enforce the present regulations is that the proper season for taking whitefish in the Bay of Quinte has of late years materially changed, that in fact the run from Lake Ontario up the bay is at least from ten days to a fortnight later in the season than formerly, and that, under the circumstances, fishermen scarcely catch sufficient to pay for their license, and the result, as every one knows, is that scarcely a whitefish, the best fish that swims in our inland waters, is seen upon the market.

Would it not be well for those who have studied the question, not the fishermen, and know from experience what the facts are, to bring the question under the notice of the proper authorities and seek a remedy?

We have now practical men at the head of affairs, who will not neglect any reasonable suggestions that may be made.

To have any effect this season no time should be lost, as the "close season" begins on the 1st of November, Wednesday next.

Aldermanic Elections

In concluding its comments on the subject of electing our municipal representatives, The Intelligencer has no apology to make for reproducing from its own columns the following contrast between the ward system and the general system:—

1.—The ratepayer, who is on the voters' list in one ward only can vote on the election of but three of the twenty-one aldermen who are to spend his taxes and transact the city's business. Under the general system, he could vote on the election of every member of the Council.

2.—Under the ward system men who could not, by a large majority, be elected on a vote of all the taxpayers, are enabled to secure seats in the Council. A small ward is so much easier to manipulate than is the whole city. No man should have a seat in Council unless he has the confidence of a majority of the people.

3.—The ward system fosters a narrow prejudice in each of the several divisions of the city and is inimical to the general welfare.

4.—It is the chief cause of log-rolling and grafting, on the "you help me and I'll help you" principle.

5.—In order to secure re-election, weak or unscrupulous representatives work for undue expenditure in their constituencies, to the detriment of the general interest. Judge Cannon, the commissioner who investigated the charges of grafting in civic affairs at Montreal and discovered a veritable sink-hole of corruption, reported that the ward system was responsible for nearly the whole of it through aldermen wanting to make themselves "solid" with the electors.

6.—The committee work of the Council is, under the ward system, conducted in such a way that what is done is known to the members of one committee only, and it is very difficult to secure meetings of the committees, while under the general system the committees are composed of virtually all the members, and each committee transacts its business on the same evening and at the same place, so that all the aldermen are aware of what is being done.

North Hastings

The Conservatives of North Hastings were fortunate in having, as aspirants for the nomination for the Legislature for that constituency, two gentlemen whose qualifications in all respects for the position were beyond doubt, namely Messrs. Robert Cook, of Rawdon, and John A. McCoy, of Madoc.

Both are Conservatives by descent, their fathers having been men who were not only true and tried, but ever active in the Conservative interests in the old days when North Hastings was a real political fighting ground, and both have proved themselves worthy sons of loyal sires. No mistake, consequently, could possibly be made in choosing either of them as the party's standard-bearer in the pending contest.

That Mr. Cook, in whose favor the ballot resulted, will worthily represent the grand old riding of North Hastings there can be no doubt, and it will be the duty of every Conservative in the constituency, should there be a contest, to give him active support.

ALLEGED SURPLUS OF THIRTY MILLIONS

Is a Farce—The Truth is that there is a Deficit of Nearly Four Millions from Last Year.

The opening paragraph in the report on the public accounts of Canada for the fiscal year ending with March 31, 1911, reads as follows:—

"The receipts on account of Consolidated Fund for the year amounted to $117,780,409.78 and the expenditure on the same account to $87,774,198.32. The surplus of receipts over the expenditure on this account was, therefore, $30,006,211.46."

On the strength of this it has been proclaimed that at the close of the last full year of its term the Laurier government had a surplus in the treasury of over thirty millions of dollars. Some partizan commentators have even gone the length of expressing wonder as to how long it will be before the new administration makes away with the great sum mentioned. The case illustrates the need of a change in the manner of presenting the public accounts that will make their meaning so plain that it will be no longer possible to support falsehoods in regard to a ministry's financial record by reference as to what should be in all its features a fair and open statement of the treasury's position. The statement quoted conveys an altogether misleading idea of what the Government spent in the twelve months of 1910-11 and as to the condition of the treasury at the close of that year. The Consolidated Fund receipts, that is, the income from the customs and excise taxation, the sale of public lands, the postal service, etc., as given above were $117,780,409. The expendture was as follows:—

On administrative services	$87,774,198
On railways and canals ..	27,110,215
On public works..	3,742,717
On railway subsidies	1,284,892
On bounties	1,597,093
Total	$121,509,715

And as $121,509,715 is greater than $117,780,409, the record of the year shows a deficit as represented by an increase in the debt. This is explained or admitted in a subsequent section of the report, which reads as follows:

"The net debt of the Dominion at the close of the fiscal year was $340,042,052, or an increase of $3,733,505 to the debt as it stood on March, 31. 1910. The increase is accounted for as follows:—

Capital expenditure on National Transcontinental Railway		$23,487,986
Capital expenditure on other railways and canals ..		7,361,977
Railway subsidies		1,284,892
Bounties		1,597,093
Consolidated fund transfers		1,286,911
		$35,022,430
Less:—
Surplus of Consolidated fund	$30,006,211
Sinking fund ..	1,203,416
Refunds	40,296
		$31,248,924
Increase of debt		$3,733,505

There was, therefore, at the close of the late fiscal year, no surplus in the treasury, either for the late or the present ministers to spend. The late ministers in the year spent more than they received, and thus only could the debt have been increased, as it was. The new minister of finance, who is a business man with a business man's knowledge of financial transactions, should make an early reform by putting an end to a system that permits claims of great surpluses to be made when a study of the accounts shows that none exist and that in truth the debt has been increased and is increasing. It is time for a change from the Fielding method of finance as well as from the Fielding method of setting out the national accounts.—Montreal Gazette.

AMUSEMENTS

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.

This seems to be a season of revivals, judging by the list of attractions that has been offered to New York audiences the past year. "The Private Secretary," revived at the Empire Theatre, broke all records at that house for attendance, and the interest shown encouraged Mr. C. James Bancroft, one of England's most famous comedians, to bring his entire London production to this country. Mr. Bancroft is to England what Wm. Gillette is to this country, and great interest is being shown here in his presentation of the part of the Reverend Robert Spalding. Mr. Bancroft has played this role in "The Private Secretary" over 2,000 times in the British Empire, and comes here to Griffin's Opera House Wednesday, November 1st. Plan at Doyle's.

INDIANA TOWN IS IDEAL

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 20.—"I found in Du Bois County the ideal township," a travelling salesman said here this morning. "It is Ferdinand, a town with little more than a thousand inhabitants. It has a telephone exchange, banks, and is on the Southern Railway.

"They have no justice of the peace, and have not had any for years. From their past record they don't need any. There is no history of a man being arrested for a crime and no history of a civil suit. In the history of the township, my informant told me, there been only two cases of real estate delinquencies, and they were due to mistakes.

"The township has only two Republicans, the Postmaster and his son, and the only time their votes count for anything is in a national election. It is the most peaceful town I was ever in, but for a small place it keeps rank with the rest of the towns in the Hoosier State for activity. Something is going on all the time, but never any rowdyism.

C. O. R. HAS ADDED TWO NIGHT TRAINS

The C. O. R. has granted Picton an improved service. Two evening trains every week will be put into service.

This is the outcome of a meeting of the Board of Trade and the public last Wednesday night. Here, acting on the advice of B. R. Hepburn, M. P., a committee was formed. This committee met George Collins, general manager of the C.O.R., Thursday afternoon. Mr. Collins promised the improved service over the C. O. R. and the new time-table went into effect on Saturday.

Eighty new box-cars for the C.N.R. are billed to arrive in Trenton this week from the car works at Amherst, N.S. They will be distributed along the line between here and Toronto. The Crossen Car Co. are turning out refrigerator cars for the company as fast as they can be constructed.—Picton Gazette.

JACK JOHNSON A MASON

LONDON, Oct. 27.—The recent somewhat hurried initiation of Jack Johnson, the negro priez fighter, into a Masonic lodge of Dundee has raised a storm of protest throughout the country. The Grand Lodge of Scotland, presided over by the Marquis of Tullibardine, has ordered a searching inquiry into the matter. The Dundeeites ridicule the interference of the Grand Lodge, and maintain that Johnson is as good as any Scotchman.

Sir William Smith is just over 60 years of age. He worked himself up through every grade of the service.

"HIGH SIGN" HIS UNDOING

SEATTLE, Wash, Oct. 26.—Charles Hillenbeck, convicted of blackmailing a fifteen-year-old girl, recognized in the Judge, Wilson R. Gay, a brother member of a secret society. He gave the signal of distress, and sign of the order, and then wrote him a note.

As soon as the Judge realized the situation he reached for the code of the State of Washington, and discovering that the maximum sentence for Hollenbeck's crime was five years, sentenced him to one day less, at the same time arraigning him scathingly for his crime and for giving the distress signal in court.

SHE WON A HUSBAND BY SUPERIOR COOKING

WABASH, Ind., Oct. 27.—Mabel Blanche Baker, 23 years old, "jimmied" a window, took possession of the house and set about getting the meal for the husband she had not yet married when she answered William Bailey's advertisement for a wife and found his house locked up.

Bill Bailey had forgotten about the advertisement regarding such a little question as matrimony, and was surprised for a moment when he found his house occupied and set in order. The smell of pie baking in the kitchen, however, reminded him of the new domestic arrangement he had under consideration. The courtship was brief.

"Will you be mine?" he cried.

"Just taste my pie first," she replied, and an hour later they were married by the Rev. S. D. Colyer.

A BEAUTIFUL STORY

A beautiful story is depicted in the picture, entitled "Home Again," given this season with the Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal. It is beyond doubt the best picture ever offered with that great paper. The picture is 22 x 29 inches, ready for framing. The Family Herald and Weekly Star is growing faster and faster every year. It is the marvel of the newspaper world to-day and with such a picture as "Home Again" all for one dollar a year, it is no wonder the circulation grows. Every home in Canada should spend a dollar this season on this great bargain.

THE MILLIONAIRE MARAUDER

All He Had Really Stolen Was a Girl's Heart.

By MARGARET MUZZEY.

"Going downtown, Dick?"

"Not in this flood. My umbrella has a broken rib."

"You are almost a surgeon. Why don't you set it?" asked Joe. "Take mine and have yours mended."

"Have mine fixed, too, will you?" called a voice from the next room.

"Mine needs a patch," said another young student of medicine, appearing in the door.

"I say, get the handle put on mine while you're about it," demanded a third.

Dick departed with Joe Dart's umbrella over his head and three disabled ones besides his own under his arm. After leaving them with an umbrella mender he did some shopping and went into a corner drug shop to wait for a car. He was absorbed in the marvelous representations of a new patent medicine until, glancing out of the window, he saw his car, seized the nearest umbrella and hurried to the door. As he passed out a feminine voice cried:

"Stop thief! He's stolen my umbrella!"

Without the faintest suspicion that it referred to him Dick ran and jumped on the car.

When he reached the boarding house he carried Joe's umbrella to his own room and forgot it until the next rainy day, when his friends inquired for their mended property.

"The repairs will be finished today. I'll bring your umbrellas on my way back from the hospital," he told them.

When he went out with Joe's umbrella, which he had not returned, it struck him as being rather small for a man, although it had not occurred to him when he carried it before.

As he seated himself in the car going uptown the woman next to him muttered an angry ejaculation. Dick moved his bunch of umbrellas and apologized, fearing he had set it on her foot, when, to his astonishment, she whispered:

"I congratulate you, young man. You have had a very successful morning. If it were not for making a scene that would get my name into the papers I should denounce you here and now."

Dick was speechless. He started to his feet.

"Don't you suppose I recognize my stolen umbrella right there in your hand?"

"North street!" bawled the conductor.

"I will leave you to your own conscience," added the woman and was gone before Dick recovered sufficiently to retort.

"Isn't this your umbrella?" he asked Joe when he reached the house.

"It's five times as good. Where did you get it?"

"I must have exchanged with somebody," said Dick ruefully.

"Take my silver watch out and swap it off for a gold one, will you?" said Joe.

"Who shall you take to the next assembly?" Joe inquired later.

"I have asked Miss Mildred Wells, but as I have met her only once she will probably decline."

"Not Mill with the mercenary mother. She won't be permitted to refuse an invitation from the only son of a gold mine."

"Her mother has never even heard of me," said Dick crossly.

"She'll find you out soon enough. She keeps a regular Bradstreet's of eligible men. She has married all her nieces to diamond tiaras and is just waiting for a chap like you to crown her daughter. Her permission won't be asked this time, though. She is going away tonight. Milly told me so this afternoon."

Joe was right, and Mildred accepted Dick's invitation. During her mother's absence she was relegated to the chaperonage of a much married cousin, who was too engrossed in the pursuit of sterilized nutriment and sanitary apparel for her children to keep a vigilant eye on her guest.

The night of the assembly found her unable to leave her youngest, who, having deposited a dime in his insides, refused to honor a draft of mustard and warm water for the amount. The distracted mother was easily persuaded to allow Milly to go with a friend.

"I shall have to leave early," Milly told her escort. "Mother will be home at 1 o'clock, and I must be there to greet her. I have been staying with Cousin Carrie, you know, but I promised mamma I would be back at our own house when she arrives."

They left the dance at midnight and started for Mildred's home. When they reached the house Dick inserted a latchkey, but it would not turn.

"Bridget has slipped the night latch," exclaimed Milly. "She sleeps on the third story and is so deaf she can't even hear by mail. What shall we do?"

"Isn't there a window I can open somewhere?"

"Suppose you try mother's room. The windows are on the piazza, and they are seldom locked."

"I will do my criminalist," said Dick.

"Just inside the window at the left is a stand with candle and matches. You can easily find the front door when you have a light."

Dick opened the window, stepped inside, felt around with his hand, which came in violent contact with something on the stand and knocked it off. The one match that he found in his waistcoat pocket spluttered only long enough to show him the little china match holder, which had rolled under the edge of the bed. He was on his knees to pick it up when suddenly the room was flooded with electric light and he was seized by the tails of his evening coat and jerked violently backward. Struggling to his feet, he turned and looked directly into the muzzle of a revolver held by the accusing angel who had commended him to his conscience in the street car.

The surprise was mutual. Dick's first impulse was to laugh, but immediate contact with a loaded weapon in the hands of a feminine fury is not stimulating to one's sense of humor if the situation is sustained.

"Ah, ha, young man!" she cried triumphantly. "I have got you now—a 'Daniel come to judgment!'"

"In the lion's den, you mean," said Dick.

"You are delivered into my hands by an interposition sent direct from Providence."

"You've mistaken the postmark; it's from the other place," protested the prisoner.

It was futile to explain.

"You shall not escape me a second time. March straight into that closet."

She locked him in, withdrew the key, and left the room.

Dick glued his ear to the keyhole, heard an electric bell, followed by the banging of the front door, and his custodian returned, accompanied by Mildred.

"Cousin Carrie gave me permission to go to the dance, mamma," she said, "and we left, as we thought, in plenty of time to reach here before you."

"What do you mean by 'we?' I found you alone at the front door."

"Why, Dick—I mean Mr. Brown—was with me. My key wouldn't work, so he got in the window. He must be in the house somewhere. It's funny you haven't seen or heard him."

"I caught a young thief in the act of hiding under my bed, and I have put him where he can't do any harm unless from sheer viciousness he sees fit to tear my clothes."

"For heaven's sake, mamma, you haven't mistaken Dick for a burglar! Why, he is the only son of Richard Jones-Brown of Boomville, who owns the largest gold mine in the west."

"That's a lie," said the gentle parent. "Richard Jones-Brown is Mrs. Doan's brother. I met him at her house in New York last week. He promised to send me a photograph of his son, who is a student in the medical college. I shall ask him to dinner."

Milly picked up some unopened mail that lay on the table.

"This must be a photograph. Look at it," she said.

Mrs. Wells tore off the envelope, disclosing the unmistakable likeness of "Daniel come to judgment."

"Oh, what have I done?" she moaned, collapsing into a chair.

Milly snatched the photograph.

"Isn't he the best looking thing you ever saw?" she exclaimed involuntarily. "I'm simply crazy about him!"

"Hear, hear!" bawled Dick, thumping on the closet door.

"Good gracious, mamma, have you locked him up? Give me the key this instant."

"Oh, don't let him out till I get upstairs," implored the old woman. "I've insulted him not once, but twice. He will never forgive me, never!"

But for reasons best known to herself Mildred thought that he would, and he did.

Disorder in the Commons.

Disorderly scenes in the house of commons are comparatively rare. Members, however, have more than once displayed a degree of excitement verging on frenzy. When the reform bill passed its third reading by a majority of nine Macaulay writes that "we set up a shout that you might have heard at Charing Cross, waving our hats, stamping against the floor and clapping our hands. The tellers scarcely got through the crowd, for the house was thronged up to the table and all the floor was fluctuating with heads like the pit of a theater. But you might have heard a pin drop as Duncannon read the numbers. Then again the shouts broke out, and many of us shed tears."

Should the need arise the house of commons may call in the police to assist the sergeant at arms in maintaining order, but the lords have only one way of quelling a disturbance—the reading by the clerk of a standing order on "asperity of speech," passed so long ago as 1626. The last time this power was exercised was during the progress of the ballot bill in 1872, when it acted like oil on the troubled waters and was followed by a singularly calm debate on the burning question before them. Possibly the virtue of the order lies in the fact that it is so long that it acts as a soporific on the noble lords.—London Chronicle.

WHEN THE U. S. FOUGHT TURKEY

A Century Ago United States Took Turkey to Task, and After Daring Attack Work Brought Enemy to Attention

Most people have forgotten their history to the extent of overlooking the fact that where the Italian fleet is today ships of war of the United States were operating a little over a hundred years ago.

That war was signalized by the loss of an American frigate, but also by what Lord Nelson declared to be "the most bold and daring act of the age." The frigate Philadelphia was one of the vessels built for the war with France, which ended almost as soon as it began. She was on the Mediterranean station, and, under Capt. Bainbridge, went aground on an uncharted reef in the harbor of Tripoli while chasing a prize. The officers and men were captured and confined in dungeons. Thence Bainbridge managed to send word to the Americans to destroy the Philadelphia, which had been hauled off and manned by the Tripolitans.

This enterprise was conducted by Lieut. Stephens Decatur and a volunteer crew. Decatur performed his task of great danger and difficulty with complete success. The Philadelphia was captured, but, of course it was impossible to take her out. She was set ablaze and the Americans sailed away with only one man wounded. It was a little later that the bashaw was compelled to make peace at the cannon's mouth, and since then the States has had very little interest in Tripoli, as it lies far outside the range of their commerce.

A few years ago an American artist, who was spending some months in Tripoli, hired a diver to go down and bring up some of the wreck of the Philadelphia, which is plainly visible in fair weather. Some of the wood is now in America in the shape of paper weights and the like.

WHY OUR CORNS ARE SO NAMED

Man Pays Irritating Penalty for the Invention and Use of Foot-Wear, and Titles the Outcome a Horn.

As man finds that his unprotected feet are not very safe to use for walking upon, he invents boots and shoes and sandals to protect them. But often we have to pay a penalty for our cleverness, for boots and shoes are apt to cause pressure on the soft, thin skin of our toes just where it lies close to the bone, with scarcely any padding between. The skin in places where it is padded can stand occasional pressure very well without injury, but the case is different where the skin is practically just over the bone. If the skin did nothing, it would be worn through in such a case. Therefore it tries to protect itself in circumstances to which it should never have been exposed, and the result is the corn.

A corn is due to a great thickening of the thin, horny layer which is found in the skin everywhere. It can only be really cured by removing the cause which produced it. We can keep a corn in check by paring away the horny material as it gets thicker or by putting something on it which has the same result, but we shall not cure the corn until we cease to apply the pressure which excites and irritates the horny layer of the skin to thicken itself. Corns are named from the Latin word cornu, meaning a horn, and the horns of some animals are also made from the horny layer of the skin.

A Mathematical Curiosity

Charles Barnes, the American short story writer, was once travelling for local colour, when he entered a cafe which had a coloured water. "I need something to eliminate the robins from my eaves," said Mr. Barnes. "Get me, Sam?" Samuel said he "got" Mr. Barnes. "Ah got just the finest drink what evah pass down a man's froat!" said Samuel. "Ah done thought it up mahself. Mah boss nevah star's the day wivout he puts in a layer of 'em." Mr. Barnes ordered one of the new invention. He leaned listlessly on the counter watching Samuel make the toddy. Sam flicked some of this cordial and some of that into the glass, and when finished it tasted to Mr. Barnes's parched gullet as good as it looked. He at once demanded the recipe. "Well, sah," said Sam. "Ah take one-half Scotch whisky and one-half Vermouth and one-half sherry—" Mr. Barnes interrupted. "That can't be right," said he. "There can't be more than two halves in anything." "Boss," said the waiter, "the way Ah mix dat drink there's four halves in it!"

Comfort for the Feet

Here are some useful points from a doctor's advice:

Never wear a shoe that will not allow the great toe to lie in a straight line

Never wear a shoe that pinches at the heel.

Never wear a shoe tight anywhere or so loose that it does not hold to the foot.

Never come from high heels to low heels at a jump.

Never wear one pair or shoes all the time unless obliged to do so. Two pairs of boots worn a day at a time alternately give more service, and are much more healthy.

Never wear stocking short in the feet. Be sure they will allow your toes to spread out at the extreme ends, as this keeps the joints in place and makes a strong and attractive foot.

Plans have been completed in New York for the building at a cost of $1,500,000 of a great amusement structure to be known as the Broadway Garden, to take the place of the Madison Square arena.

BIG MARKET TODAY AND BIG PRICES

It was anticipated that the market to-day would be a large one, owing to the fact that Monday will be Thanksgiving, and such proved to be the case, it being the largest held here for some time. A large quantity of produce was offered for sale and the supply of dressed-poultry was exceptionally large.

Prices, as usual, were very high for all products offered for sale.

Fresh butter sold at 30c. and 32c. per pound, according to quality.

Fresh eggs sold at 28c. per dozen by the basket lot and 30c. per dozen was the prevailing price for small quantities.

In the poultry line there was a variety. Chickens sold at 50c. to $1.25 per pair, according to size and quality. Ducks were from $1.25 to $1.75 per pair; geese $1.25 to $1.50, and turkeys, $2 to $3.

There are no changes to note in the grain, hide, or hog markets.

Potatoes are not plentiful in this district, and sell readily at $1.40 and $1.50 per bag. Importations from Quebec and the Maritime Provinces have been large.

ALPINE DEATH ROLL LARGE THIS YEAR

LONDON, Oct. 24.—The Alpine death roll for 1911, though probably not quite complete, shows that 115 persons were killed and 37 injured during the season. The killed include 39 Germans, 29 Austrians, 27 Swiss, 5 Frenchmen, 5 Italians, 3 Englishmen, 2 Russians, 1 Hollander and 1 American.

As usual, the majority of accidents seem to have been preventible, as there were only two fatal accidents to climbers who provided themselves with guides. Thirteen of the victims were looking for edelweiss and other Alpine blooms.

Three Viennese, a man and two women, were killed on the easy climb of the Great Pyrgas, in the Tyrol. The man's boots were not even hobnailed. One of the girls wore a hobble skirt, while both wore high-heeled shoes.

Though there are many English climbers, the number of accidents among them is small, as they invariably take guides.

A man's natural bent seems to be crooked.

NOT ALWAYS WINNING

Italian Troops in Tripoli Have Met Bad Reverses.

Government Is Sending Fifteen Thousand Men to Reinforce the First Expeditions — Uncensored Despatches Report That List of Italian Casualties Is Far Greater Than Had Been Anticipated.

London, Oct. 28.—From uncensored despatches from Tripoli, reaching England by way of Malta, and which in part are confirmed by censored despatches reaching Italy, it is apparent that Italy's campaign in Tripoli already has cost more lives than Italy anticipated it would, while the financial outlay will greatly exceed the estimates.

The Turks, with their Arab allies, who at best, it was believed, would only carry on a desultory campaign, which would make a kind of holiday for the invaders, have upset the calculations of the Italians by a series of concerted attacks in which, according to accounts sent by correspondents without submission to the censor, the Italians have come off second best.

The Turkish embassy issued a statement yesterday claiming that in Monday's fighting the allies secured a victory, the Italians losing 300 men killed and 700 wounded. This is confirmed in part by an independent report that the Italians brought 700 wounded men into Tripoli, and further by an announcement from Rome that the Government had decided to send forward 15,000 reinforcements.

Since then, according to the telegrams coming in from various points, some of them, it is true, rather conflicting, there has been a series of attacks, the latest of which was delivered Thursday. Thus far only censored accounts have been received of this, but apparently it was extensive.

Only one despatch, which obviously was roughly handled by the censor says wonderful but untrustworthy stories about the action are in circulation, but that the Italian riflemen and artillerymen says that about 100 Italians were wounded and that it is claimed that hundreds of natives were killed in the palms, which a cruiser was shelling. According to this despatch a determined attack was looked for yesterday, Friday being the Moslems' Sunday.

A belated account of Monday's fight, which came by way of Malta, says the Italians have no knowledge of what brought about their defeat. The Moslems, thoroughly understanding each other, prepared for a supreme effort to stagger or destroy the invaders, and, only by accident did the Italians escape ambuscades deep and deadly.

"The Moslen population," the despatch continues, "was expecting the signal to rise and strike their professed friends and awaited the opportunity to shoot or stab the Italians who had been drawn by a stratagem to parts favorable for an attack, but the Turks and Arabs showed themselves too soon. Their plans and strength were partly discovered. They number perhaps between 40,000 and 50,000. Undeterred by the failure of their tactics, they fought desperately. The Italian bersagliere, or sharpshooters, sustained the heaviest loss, some 200 to 300 of them perishing.

A later despatch from the same source says that there was an engagement Wednesday, and while the capture of 12,000 Arabs and Turks is mentioned in it, the assertion also is made that the Italian losses were heavy, some companies of the bersaglieri being wiped out.

Another Army Sent.

Rome, Oct. 28.—Another army expedition to Tripoli sailed secretly from Naples during Thursday night. As was the case with the other expeditions, the troops were brought to the port and placed on the transports with the knowledge of comparatively few persons.

The expedition sailed, escorted by a naval division, which will be strengthened with other ships after the convoy has passed through the Straits of Messina. The transports and warships carried no lights, and nothing leaked out as to whether the troops would be landed at Tripoli, Benghazi, Derna or Tobruk.

Gen. Caneva, commander of the army of occupation, has requisitioned a large number of coral, sponge and fishing boats to facilitate the landing of the soldiers, a task which is difficult, owing to the rough seas and unfavorable coast.

Captain Ley Exonerated.

Halifax, Oct. 28.—Word comes from London that Captain James C. Ley of H.M.S. Cornwall has been exonerated by the Admiralty from all blame in connection with the touching of a rock by the Cornwall last summer, when the warship went to the rescue of the H.M.C.S. Niobe, ashore in the southwest ledges off Cape Sable.

Investigation by the Dominion Government service showed that the rock which the Cornwall struck was uncharted.

The Cornwall is now at the drydock in Halifax undergoing repairs.

Robbers Attack a Town.

Shawnee, Okla., Oct. 28.—Robbers attacked the town of McComb, several miles from here yesterday, cut telephone and telegraph wires, then blew open the safe in the town bank.

They got a large amount of money and escaped before a sheriff's posse could head them off. Big mobs are on the robbers' trail.

Lunatic Fought Seven Men.

Ottawa, Oct. 28.—It required seven men to overpower an insane man who Thursday night was parading the streets of Metcalfe village, near here, clad in duck trousers and an undershirt. He gave his name as Thomas Smith, and spoke vaguely of Toronto and Hamilton.

M'RAE IS CONVICTED

Jurymen Bring in a Verdict of Manslaughter.

In a Calm and Dispassionate Review of the Evidence Mr. Justice Sutherland Gives Jury Three Courses to Find Murder or Manslaughter or to Acquit the Prisoner—Sentence Will Probably Be Given To-day.

Cornwall, Oct. 28.—The jury in the McRae case yesterday afternoon brought in a verdict of guilty of manslaughter.

Justice Sutherland in his address to the jury made a calm and dispassionate review of the evidence. He said there were three courses open to them—to find a verdict, either of murder, manslaughter or not guilty.

The verdict of the jury was accepted in silence. The prisoner seemed to be unmoved. He will probably be sentenced to-day.

R. A. Pringle, counsel for the defence, opened yesterday morning's proceedings by a masterly address, which lasted one and three-quarter hours. He said that he felt the greatest responsibility in approaching the case and felt it would be a great privilege to do what he could towards saving the life of F. R. McRae.

He believed he had just cause to ask for his acquittal. If the prisoner, in the handling of his own weapon, used ordinary care and prudence he was not guilty.

The prisoner was a man of prominence in the community, and not a man of criminal instincts. It was not proved that Mrs. Magee left her husband on account of religious differences, but on her husband's own testimony, on account of his brutal treatment. In the pledge she extracted in returning to her husband, she was only insisting on liberty of conscience.

There was no ground for appealing to religious prejudices as against the prisoner. A man who would treat a woman as Magee had treated his wife, would not hesitate to perjure himself to gratify his spite against the McRae's. The letters written by Magee to his wife were a disgrace to any man. It was hardly to be wondered at that D. C. McRae become alarmed for the safety of his daughter and grandchild and took the steps that any man would take to protect them.

All the Magee party were armed, and admitted they would have used their weapons to obtain the child. It was time that the Magees and Constable Uren should be indicted by the crown for entering the McRae premises armed. Mr. Pringle wound up with a strong appeal for the acquittal of the prisoner.

George T. Blackstock, crown prosecutor, in closing, deprecated the bringing of religious matters into the case, on which they had no bearing, and threw the onus on the defence for so doing. Nor was there any necessity to go into Dr. Magee's conduct towards his wife, for which there was no excuse. These were merely introduced to prejudice the jury.

He then went into the story of the shooting, remarking that he never knew a case on which there was so little real difference of opinion among the witnesses. On McRae's own evidence that he had fired the shot that killed Shaw, he was a murderer, unless he could prove that the circumstances were such as to excuse him. This he did not do, said Mr. Blackstock. It was not manslaughter, but murder, and he asked the jury to find to that effect.

Haldimand Liberals.

Cayuga, Oct. 28.—At the Liberal convention held here yesterday, Jacob Kohler received the unanimous vote of the convention to contest the County of Haldimand.

Trying to Place Graham.

Ottawa, Dec. 28.—T. W. McGarry, M.P.P. of South Renfrew (Con.), is back in Ottawa to-day. With his arrival there is a renewal of the effort to arrange an acclamation for Hon. George P. Graham as federal member of North Renfrew. It doesn't look to-day as if such an arrangement can be made.

Missionaries Safe.

Toronto, Oct. 28.—"In any case," said Rev. T. E. Shore of the Methodist Missions rooms yesterday, "we believe our missionaries are quite safe." He explained that the revolutionists realized that their ultimate success depended in a large measure upon the good will of the foreign nations.

"The reports as to the number of Canadians located in the war zone," said Rev. Mr. Shore, are exaggerated. "There are only about twenty Canadian missionaries there, instead of one hundred as reported in the press despatches."

All efforts to reach the missionaries by cable has failed, due to the wires being cut around Hankow, Chingtu and Chingking.

First Trin on New Line.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Oct. 28.—The first train over the newly-accepted road between Mile 65 and Mile 79 on the Algoma Central Railway will leave the Soo at 9 a.m.

The large bridge at Mile 91, Montreal River, was completed this week, and contractors are rushing steel across to connect with Hawk Lake, to which point grading has been done. The contractors say the road would be ready to connect with Meben on the C.P.R. early next summer.

Reports from the line to Mile 66 state that three inches of snow are now on the ground. The Soo had its first snowfall [illegible] Thursday.

To display his son's ball tossing ability, a Montreal fan organized a baseball team. While pitching in a practice game Aaron, the boy, found his father at bat. His "inshoot" hit dad in the ribs. "Son," groaned the father as they hauled him away to the hospital, "I'm proud of that speed, but—but, please try to improve that control."

TO FIGHT EACH STEP?

Steel Trust May Overlook No Technicality of Law.

Many Things Are Likely to Arise to Delay Investigation of Giant Industry, But Formal Beginning Will Be Made on Dec. 4, When Greatest Lawyers In U. S Will Appear In Court—Gary Makes Answer.

Washington, Oct. 28.—The United States Steel Corporation's first step in the titanic legal battle with the Government for its existence will be taken Monday, Dec. 4.

On that day an array of counsel which promises to include some of the most brilliant legal minds in America will formally appear before the United States Circuit Court at Trenton, N.J., in which the Government's dissolution suit has been brought. On Jan. 2, 1912, the Steel Corporation is expected to file its answer to the Government's sensational charges, which have hardly been paralleled in all the anti-trust suits brought by the Department of Justice.

Several legal manoeuvres, of which the Steel Corporation's lawyers could avail themselves, may postpone the date of their answer, for they have the right to ask the court to give thirty days' more grace, thus extending their time to Feb. 2.

In the meantime, they may demur to some of the Government's allegations or they may file a bill of exceptions. Either action would delay automatically the actual beginning of the trial. The Government expects that none of the formalities of law will be overlooked by its opponents. It is possible, however, that no legal technicalities may be thrown in the way, and in that case, the earliest date upon which the trial can begin is Jan. 2.

The procedure will be for Judges Gray, Lanning and Buffington to appoint a master to take evidence in various parts of the country. It required a year and a half to take the testimony in the Standard Oil case. The Government hopes to do as well with the Steel Corporation.

Judge Gary Issues Statement.

New York, Oct. 28.—After a day of intense excitement in the stock market, with especially severe declines in the securities of the U. S. Steel Corporation, the appended statement was issued, by Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board:

"I think it would be improper for me at this time to make any comments concerning the suit, which has been brought by the Government against the U. S. Steel Corporation, except to say I regret exceedingly that the Department of Justice felt called upon to institute proceedings. If any harm results, it will fall upon the stockholders and employes, aggregating a very large number, and any loss to them must be deplored. It is a time for everyone to keep cool, with disposition to patiently await results, knowing that in the end justice will be done to all in this.

"I believe a disclosure of all the facts applicable to the allegations contained in the Government's bill of complaint as a ground for relief will show that the suit ought to be decided in favor of the corporation on the merits, and that the following facts will be established:

"1. That in the organization of the U. S. Steel Corporation those in charge had no intention of creating a monopoly or of restraining trade.

"2. That the corporation never has had, or attempted to exercise, a monopoly or to restrain trade.

"3. That the conduct of the affairs of the corporation has clearly and positively negatived any effort or intention to violate any provision of the Sherman law.

"4. That the existence of the corporation has been of benefit and not of injury to is employes, its customers, its competitors and the general public.

"5. That no misrepresentation was made to the President relative to the Tennessee Coal and Iron properties, and the motive of those connected with the purchase was to prevent a threatened general financial disaster, which would have adversely affected the corporation as well as others."

Excitement on 'Change.

New York, Oct. 28.—The big slump in the New York Stock Market yesterday, following the announcement that the Government had instituted proceedings aimed at enforcing the dissolution of the U. S. Steel Corporation, extended practically throughout the whole list, and while the major part of the decline in prices was borne by the stock of the Steel Corporation itself, the securities of practically every company listed in the exchange suffered from a reflection of the disruption of confidence. The paper losses entailed as a result of the recessionary movement ran into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Another Dynamite Plant.

San Francisco, Oct. 28.—Southern Pacific Railroad officials here were notified yesterday of the finding of thirty-six sticks of dynamite in a frog on the track at Ellwood, Cal., a few moments after train No. 18, a southbound passenger, had passed the switch. Part of the dynamite was pulverized, evidently having been ground by the car wheels.

The dynamite was found within a few miles of the bridge where a similar cache was planted when President Taft's train passed on Oct. 17.

To See Military Flights.

Ottawa, Oct. 28.—The Militia Department is taking much interest in the flying experiments to be made at Atlantic City, N.J., by the naval and militia authorities of the United States. Col. Hughes has instructed Col. Fiset and Lieut.-Col. Maunsell to witness the experiments.

A tree planted by his father on the day Frank Fitzpatrick of Summit, N.J., was born, 78 years ago, recently suffered a blight. Last evening he began chopping it down. As the tree crashed to the ground, Fitzpatrick fell dead.

Bound to Car Axle.

Montreal, Oct. 28.—With his head in a bag half filled with ashes, cotton waste tied around his mouth for a gag, and his arms and legs tied around the axle of the wheels of a Canadian Pacific freight car, Mike Schutz, a Pole, 33 years of age, whose home is at 57 Manufacturers street, Point St. Charles, was found late Thursday night by two constables. A watchman who heard a man groaning, called the police.

Schutz said that while walking along St. Patrick street towards his home early in the evening he had been attacked by four men. They had pulled the bag over his head. He did not know where they had tied him until the police released him.

Schutz is held as a prisoner on a charge of loitering. The police think that he may know about the shooting of Joseph Budziaszek, who died on Tuesday night and that the men who attacked him may have tried to get rid of him lest he tell.

Canada's Vote Saved Empire.

London, Oct. 28.—The Church of England Men's Society concluded a remarkable three days' convention yesterday. Ten thousand attended Thursday night's demonstration and cheers greeted a message from the branches in Manitoba and other parts of the Empire. The Archbishop of York said, that in democratic history, our country now was at the parting of the ways and would have to decide whether the work was only material or ideal. Dr. G. R. Parkin of Canada also spoke.

Lord Charles Beresford, interviewed yesterday on his return, as to the sentiment of the Canadian people, expressed in the elections, said it had saved the Empire. At the same time, he sympathized with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was one of the few really great statesmen to-day. Every man was liable to make a mistake. He was glad Sir Wilfrid was remaining in politics and his gladness was shared by all Canadians.

Inadvertent Omission.

London, Oct. 28.—In the House of Commons McKinnon Wood, for the Treasury Board, informed Evelyn Cecil that the words "Dei Gratia" or letters "D.G.," had been omitted inadvertently from the new Canadian coinage. Fresh dies had been sent to the Canadian mint.

Sir W. Mackenzie has subscribed a thousand pounds to the habitation fund of the Society of Knights Bachelor.

Earl Grey had an enthusiastic reception when he arrived at Howick, his northern residence.

Stanley Kaufman, Toronto, is admitted to the Royal College of Physicians

Six Comets Hanging.

Montreal, Oct. 28.—Six comets, three of which have quite recently been seen with the naked eye, are now within the neighborhood of the sun, according to Prof. McLeod of the McGill Observatory. Of the two brightest, one has been visible just after sunset, north of the sunset point. It has a bright head and a tail about seven degrees long.

The second is said to be brighter than the famous Halley's comet, and was discovered last July. Early this week it had a tail twenty degrees in length, and was visible in the morning just before 5 o'clock, northeast of Venus, the morning star.

Carbolic Acid Cures Lockjaw.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 28.—Just three days after James H. Coleman was admitted to the hospital with his neck perfectly rigid and his jaws locked, he was partly able to open his mouth. Dr. P. C. Kintsing, of the Maryland Medical College, directed the treatment, which consisted of a hypodermic injection of pure carbolic acid every three hours. Only six times before has this treatment been resorted to, and each patient was cured and suffered no ill-effects.

Canada and the Indies.

London, Oct. 28—The Evening Times concerning Canada taking the West Indies, says it is little use considering the plan until Canada is able to take all the West Indies' exports, since the United States could, if induced to do so by a West Indian and Canadian tariff, ruin a majority in the Indies by imposing a duty on articles now finding an American market.

Declines to Run.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 28.—It is now certain that Mayor Dores, who was nominated for the Legislature by the Liberals last June, will not run against Evan Fraser, the Conservative candidate. Fred. W. Griffiths, a local lawyer, may be nominated at the Reform convention in Welland next Wednesday, it is said to-day.

MINISTERS ELECTED.

Several Members of Cabinet Go In by Acclamation.

Montreal, Oct. 28.—Hon. F. D. Monk, Minister of Public Works; Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice; Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General, and Hon. W. B. Nantel, Minister of Inland Revenue, were re-elected yesterday, by acclamation, in Jacques Cartier, St. Ann's, Quebec County, and Terrebonne, respectively; no opposition developing in either of the constituencies. There was a protest, however, in the case of Jacques Cartier, where H. Semple, advocate, handed in a document, alleging that, in the English version of the proclamation, the day of nomination was stated as being Sept. 27, instead of Oct. 27, but as the French proclamation is equally official, the protest was not noticed by the returning officer, and Hon. Mr. Monk was declared elected.

The Minister of Public Works, during a nomination address at Lachine said it would be un-British and unconstitutional for a Minister to attempt to give an outline of Government policy before that policy had been decided upon.

Hon. Mr. Monk announced that he had not only been given an important department by Mr. Borden, but had been asked to select his own colleagues. Both the Prime Minister and his other colleagues had done all in their power for Quebec, and the delicacy shown by the Prime Minister in handling all matters had stamped him to be a man of absolutely unbiased and unprejudiced mind, as were, in fact, so many of the men from the lower provinces.

Foster By Acclamation.

Toronto, Oct. 28.—Hon. George E. Foster was elected by acclamation in North Toronto yesterday, when he returned to his constituency for election as Minister of Trade and Commence. Norman B. Gash, K.C., was ready to act as Hon. Mr. Foster's financial agent had there been an election.

Raised Ag. Limit.

Ottawa, Oct. 28.—An order-in-council has been promulgated suspending for the pending examinations the regulations whereby candidates for naval cadets much be from 14 to 16 years old, and putting the age limit at 17. Back of this is the fact that owing to the mismanagement of the naval service by the late Government, very few candidates are presenting themselves.

An order-in-council also makes the necessary legal provision for the holding of the Niobe court-martial.

White to Hold Meeting.

Brockville, Oct. 28.—Hon. W. T. White, the new Minister of Finance, for whom Mr. George Taylor has resigned the seat in the Commons for Leeds, will hold several bye-election meetings in that constituency, commencing at Lansdowne on Nov. 2. He will be supported by Mr. Taylor and Mr. Webster, M.P., for Brockville.

Asks Extension of Time.

Ottawa, Oct. 28.—The Canadian Northern Ontario Railway will apply to Parliament for an extension of time in completing the lines from Toronto to Ottawa, French River to Ottawa and Montreal, to Sudbury to the C. N. R. The company also seeks authority to build from Long Lake to the National Transcontinental, and from a point in the Township of Chisholm to a point on the Central Ontario line.

Never before in the history of the Tombs have there been so many prisoners awaiting trial on charges of murder, no less than 26 being there at present.

Vol. 45 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1911. No. 295

The Haunted Chamber

"You, Florence!" she exclaims. "I was just going to you, to tell you that my hopes of this afternoon are all—"

"Let me speak," interrupts Florence breathlessly. "I must or——" She sinks into a chair, her eyes close, and involuntarily she lays her hand upon her heart as if to allay its tumultuous beating.

Dora, really alarmed, rushing to her dressing-case, seizes upon a flask of eau-de-Cologne, and flings some of its contents over the fainting girl. Florence, with a sigh, rouses herself, and sits upright.

"There is no time to lose," she says, confusedly. "Oh, Dora!" Here she breaks down and bursts into tears.

"Try to compose yourself," entreats Dora, seeing the girl has some important news to impart, but is so nervous and unstrung as to be almost incapable of speaking with coherence. But presently Florence grows calmer, and then, her voice clear and full, she is able to unburden her heart.

"All this day I have been oppressed by a curious restlessness," she says to Dora; "and when you left me this afternoon, your vague promises of being able to elucidate the terrible secret that is weighing us down made me even more unsettled. I did not go down to dinner——".

"Neither did I," puts in Mrs. Talbot sympathetically.

"I wandered up and down my room for at least two hours, thinking always, and waiting for the moment when you would return, according to your promise, and tell me the success of your hidden enterprise. You did not come and at half past nine, unable to stay longer in my own room with only my own thoughts for company, I opened my door, and listening intently, found by the deep silence that reigned throughout the house that almost everyone was gone, if not to bed, at least to their own rooms."

"Lady FitzAlmont and Gertrude passed to their own rooms about an hour ago," says Dora. "But some of the men are still in the smoking-room.

"I ddi not think of them. I stole from my room, and roamed idly through the halls. Suddenly a great—I cannot help thinking now a supernaturally strong—desire to go into the servants' corridor took possession of me. Without allowing myself an instant's hesitation, I turned in its direction, and walked on until I reached it."

She pauses here, and draws her breath rapidly.

"Go on," entreats Dora, impatiently.

"The lamp was burning very dimly. The servants were all downstairs—at their supper, I suppose—because there was no trace of them anywhere. Not a sound could be heard. The whole place looked melancholy and deserted, and filled me wth a sense of awe I could not overcome. Still it attracted me. I lingered there, walking up and down, until its very monotony wearied me; even then I was loath to leave it, and, turning into a small stiting-room I stood staring idly about me. At last, somewhere in the distance I heard a clock strike ten, and, turning, I decided to go back to my room."

Again, her emotion overcoming her, Florence pauses, and leans back in her chair.

"Well, but what is there in all this to terrify you so much?" demands her cousin, somewhat bewildered.

"Ah, give me time! Now I am coming to it," replies Florence, quickly. "You know the large screen that stands in the corridor just outside the sitting-room that I have mentioned,—put there, I imagined, to break the draught? Well, I had come out of this room and was standng, half hidden by this screen, when I saw something that paralyzed me with fear."

She rises to her feet, and grows deadly pale as she says this, as though the sensation of fear she has just described has come to her again.

"You saw——" prompts Dora, rising too, and trembling violently, as though in expectation of some fatal tidings.

"I saw the door of the room that leads to the haunted chamber slowly move. It opened; the door that has been locked for nearly fifty years, and that has filled the breasts of all the servants here wtih terror and dismay, was cautiously thrown open! A scream rose to my lips, but I was either too terrified to give utterance to it, or else some strong determination to know what would follow restrained me, and I stood silent, like one turned to stone. I had instinctively moved back a step or two, and was now completely hidden from sight, though I could see all that was passing in the corridor through a hole in the framework of the screen. At last a figure came with hesitating footsteps from behind the door into the full glare of the flickerng lamp. I could see him distinctly. It was——"

"Arthur Dynecourt!" cries the widow, covering her ghastly face with her hands.

Florence regards her with surprise.

"It was," she says at last. "But how did you guess it?"

"I knew it," cries Dora, frantically. "He has murdered him, he has hidden his body away in that forgotten chamber. He was gloating over his victim, no doubt, just before you saw him, stealing down from a secret visit to the scene of his crime."

"Dora," exclaims Florence, grasping her arm, "if he should not have murdered him after all, if he should only have secured him there, holding him prisoner until he should see his way more clearly to getting rid of him! If this idea be the correct one, we may yet be in time to save, to rescue him!"

The agitation of the past hours now proving too much for her, Florence bursts into tears and sobs wildly.

"Alas! I dare not believe in any such hope!" says Dora. "I know that man too well to think him capable of showing any mercy."

"And yet, that 'man,' as you call him, you would once have earnestly recommended to me as a husband!" returns Florence, sternly.

"Do not reproach me now," exclaims Dora; "later on you can say to me all that you wish, but now moments are precious."

"You are right. Something must be done. Shall I—shall I speak to Mr. Villiers?"

"I hardly know what to advise"—cions publicity, Arthur Dynecourt ma, cions publicty, Arthur Dynecourt may even yet find time and opportunity to baffle and disappoint us. Besides which, we may be wrong. He may have had nothing to do with it, and—"

"At that rate, if secrecy is to be our first thought, let you and me go alone in search of Sir Adrian.": awful room!" exclaims Dora, recoiling awful room!" exclaims Dora, recoling from her.

"Yes, at once"—firmly—"without another moment's delay.

"Oh, I cannot!" declares Dora, shuddering violently.

"Then I shall go alone!"

As Florence says this, she takes up her candlestick and moves quickly toward the door.

"Stay, I will go," cries Dora, trembling. But a slight interruption occurring at this instant, they are compelled to wait for awhile.

Ethel Viliers, coming into the room to make her parting adieus to Mrs. Talbot, as she and her father intend leaving next morning, gazes anxiously from Florence to Dora, seeing plainly that there is something amiss.

"What is it?" she asks kindly, going up to Florence.

Miss Delmaine, after a little hesitation, encouraged by a glance at Dora's terrified countenance, determines on taking the new-comer into their confidence.

In a few words she explains all that has taken place, and their suspicious Ethel, though paling beneath the surprise and horror of the recital, does not lose her self-possession.

Jeffries a Boilermaker

Jeffries began his business career as a boilermaker in Los Angeles. He was fond of swinging the heavy hammer and soon developed great physical strength. Jim was never in the habit of looking for trouble, but when it was up to him he generally sailed in and won. Among his co workers in the boiler factory Jeff soon gained a reputation for his rough and ready fighting ability, so that very few cared to cross his path.

HOW ABOUT THAT O'BRIEN TROPHY.

M. J. O'BRIEN TROPHY

Winning the Championship of the National Hockey Association last winter when they went through the league schedule with but three losses, and capturing the Stanley Cup, emblematic of the World's Hockey Championship, officers of the Ottawa Hockey Club are now asking themselves what has become of the O'Brien Trophy. This mug, of solid silver from the M. J. O'Brien Mines, at Cobalt, was donated to the Eastern professional body by the Renfrew Magnate, at the time of the formation of the N. H. A. The Stanley Cup was a trophy that any tea mor league might claim, and he decided to give a trophy to the National Association.

Wanderers won the trophy in 1910, but it was not finished in time to be presented to the red and white club, now however, [illegible] ready for the rightful owners, b[illegible]e Ottawa's, despite an interchan[illegible]f correspondence with the secretary of the N. H. A., appear to be unable to obtain possession of the Cup.

It it comes down to finesse, shrewd manipulation and working the fine points generally — in short, to a question of managerial generalship — John McGraw's chances for the National league pennant will be so much the bet—

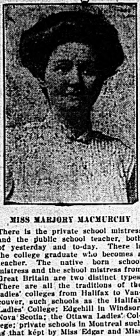
Canadian Women and their Work

By Marjory MacMurchy

Copyright by Publishers Press, Limited, Montreal

Canadian women have taught successfully in such large numbers that the story of the Canadian woman teacher has become a commonplace. No one apparently has recognized what an interesting part has been taken in the development of Canada by the Canadian woman who has taught. Many interesting types of women teachers have been evolved in the short history of the teaching profession in Canada. There is the type of woman teacher of long ago in the Canadian towns; and the woman teacher of long ago in the country.



MISS MARJORY MACMURCHY

There is the private school mistress and the public school teacher, both of yesterday and to-day. There is the college graduate who becomes a teacher. The native born school mistress and the school mistress from Great Britain are two distinct types. There are all the traditions of the ladies' colleges from Halifax to Vancouver, such schools as the Halifax Ladies' College; Edgehill in Windsor, Nova Scotia; the Ottawa Ladies' College; private schools in Montreal such as that kept by Miss Edgar and Miss Cramp, a school of the new type; Havergal College for Girls in Toronto and Winnipeg; Miss Gordon's school for girls in Vancouver; and scores of others which might readily be named. Toronto's population is considerably increased about the middle of September every year by the incoming of hundreds of girls from all over Canada to attend one of ten or fifteen successful schools for girls. New, ladies' colleges are being established all over Canada. One of the most recent is a ladies' college at Regina. Miss Bollert, a native of Guelph, until her appointment a member of the staff of Columbia University, has been chosen as head mistress of this new ladies' college. The sole occupation of the public school mistress used to be training little Canadian boys and girls. Now in the cities one of her chief duties is to teach foreign boys and girls what it is to be a loyal Canadian. The history of Canada would be a different story if it were not for the Canadian woman teacher.

Many Canadians can remember the days when any lady who was under the necessity of earning a living could begin a school for children if she so desired. In the last twenty years all this has been changed. The admonition to pass examinations has partially superseded the admonition to be good children; and the woman school teacher must have passed every possible examination herself before she can begin teaching. One would like to write a few words in praise of the school mistress of long ago before she is forgotten. She was a lady of dignity and consequence. She could be severe, and she was majestic when she was offended. She valued manners highly and goodness above all. We have undoubtedly advanced in many ways in Canada. But we lost a great deal when we lessened the consequence of the school mistress. Children should have a good measure of admiration and respect for their instructors. In Canada, it is not as easy as it used to be for children to penetrate their teachers. They may learn more out of books, but they do not cultivate as readily the wholesome respect for the knowledge of the individual who teaches them. There are hundreds of Canadian women who remember with respect which comes near to awe such women as Miss Harmon of Ottawa and Miss Haight of Toronto, naming two of the number of women who were once heads of girls' schools in Canada. Numbers of other names will readily come to the recollection of any Canadian. One may be mistaken in thinking so, but surely the old system of education used to allow of the growth of stronger individualities. A strong individuality is a fine quality in an instructor. There are two such individualities which can be taken as types of the Canadian women teacher at her best. Miss Janet Carnochan of Niagara, now retired from teaching and greatly interested in the collecting of historical material, is a native of the Niagara peninsula. She is as keenly interested in life to-day as she was when she began teaching. Her teaching brought out the individuality of her pupils. In the same way Miss How, Principal of the Elizabeth Street School in Toronto, which is now known officially and popularly as The Hessie How School, is an admirable example of the strong individuality of a teacher. Miss How has accomplished more practical work for social reforms than, perhaps, any other Canadian. Her chief aim is to make the best of every boy and girl who passes through her hands. She does not merely mean to make the best of them. She makes the best. The biographies of these two women are examples of the splendid story of the Canadian woman teacher.

MISS CARRIE DERICK,
Professor of Botany
McGill University

Miss HURLBATT,
Late Principal
Royal Victoria College, Montreal

There are a number of Canadian women who have achieved a national reputation as teachers. Miss Harriet Johnston on the staff of the Toronto public schools has been elected more than once at the head of the poll as a member of the Advisory Council to the Minister of Education for Ontario. Mrs. James L. Hughes, wife of Mr. Inspector Hughes of the Toronto public schools, who came from the United States to be head of the public school Kindergartens in Toronto, was elected President of the Dominion Teachers' Association as representative of the Kindergarten section. Miss Eliza Ritchie of Halifax was instructor in philosophy, Wesley College, Massachusetts, and then Associate Professor of philosophy in the same institution, until her resignation in 1900 when she returned to Canada. Many Canadian women teachers hold responsible positions in the schools and colleges of the United States. Dr. Annie Marion Maclean is professor of sociology in Adelphi College, Brooklyn. Miss Florence Keys is at Bregn Macor and Miss Cummings on the staff of Vassar. Miss Laird is at Mount Holyoke. In Montreal Miss Carrie Derick was made assistant professor of botany at McGill University in 1906. Miss Hurlbatt is Warden of the Royal Victoria College for women in connection with McGill. Miss Cartwright is the Dean of St. Hilda's the women's college in connection with Trinity College, Torohto. Miss Addison is the Dean of Annesley Hall, the residence for women in connection with Victoria College, Toronto. Miss Annie Lair is the head of the Domestic Science department of the University of Toronto. In every instance named, as well as in the case of names still to be mentioned, the Canadian teachers who hold these positions are women of character, ability and high attainments. Standards have advanced rapidly and are still advancing. To be at the head of a girls' college, or in charge of a residence for women in connection with a Canadian university, means that the woman who holds the position stands high in her profession, not merely in scholarship, but in character.

Miss KNOX,
Principal
Havergal College, Toronto

Three women teachers were elected to the Senate of the University of Toronto within the last year. These three, Miss Balmer and Miss Lawler of the Harbord Collegiate Institute, Toronto, and Miss Charlotte Ross of the Margaret Eaton School of Expression are representative graduates of the University of Toronto. They are native Canadians and received their early training in the Toronto schools. Miss Curlette, head of Westborne School, Toronto, and Miss Edgar, who with Miss Cramp has charge of a girls' school in Montreal, are also typical instances of the Canadian woman teacher who has been trained in Canada. Miss Knox, head of Havergal College, Toronto and Miss Jones head of Havergal College in Winnipeg; Miss Hurlbatt of the Royal Victoria College, Montreal, and Miss Smith, Lady Principal of the Church School for Girls, Edgehill, Windzor, Nova Scotia, are instances of the woman teacher in Canada who has been trained in England. Girls' schools and colleges all over Canada are engaged in fitting Canadian girls for domestic and social life. Some of these schools are introducing the ideals of social service to their students. Canada has always been potentially a wealthy country. But in a few years the graduates of these schools will have opportunities given to them whether they will or no of filling arduous social positions. The girls' college has been planned to train girls who will be able to fill such positions. On the other hand, the public schools, high schools and collegiate institutes are more or less designed to train girls who will become teachers or who will fill business positions. The training of the public secondary schools is for use in the business world. It is impossible naturally to draw a hard and fast line. The graduate of a girls' college may become a teacher, and the girl who is trained in a collegiate institute in a few years may be one of the leaders among the women of a new prairie town. But generally speaking, the public school training is more rigorous and the private school training more decorative. It would be impossible to name one out of every ten private schools and colleges for girls in Canada and it would be more impossible to call the roll of women teachers who are engaged as teachers in the primary and secondary public schools of Canada.

MISS JANET CARNOCHAN,
Pres. Niagara Historical Society,
One of the oldest teachers in Canada.

The average woman teacher in Canada is conscientious, devoted, able, helpful and optimistic. She could hardly be a Canadian if she were not optimistic. But it is of the nature of the teaching profession to make its followers a trifle over-anxious, perhaps, than the woman teacher in some other countries. She is, possibly, less precise than she used to be. It is no longer so necessary for a teacher to impress her class with the idea that she keeps all the knowledge of the world in her mind. A teacher in the twentieth century is allowed to forget a few facts occasionally without losing her authority as a teacher. Canada owes a great deal to her women teachers. Sarah Maxwell, the heroine of the teaching profession in Canada, said that she could not leave her little children and so she died with them. Many of the women teachers of Canada would be able to do this willingly if the necessity arose for the sacrifice. The great majority of these women teachers do spend their lives for the children who attend their daily classes.

MIGHTY MIRACLE IN STONE

Unearthing the Secrets of Egypt's Mighty Pyramids that have been Buried for Over Fifty Seven Centuries.

It slumbered for thirty-seven centuries before the coming of Christ — the Great Pyramid of Cheops, or Khufu. It still stands there, eight miles from Cairo, defying time, the elements, and the vandals, all working together, barely able to stretch its skin. An American, Dow Covington, has brought out the latest word from its mysterious depths; he has almost solved its secret.

After clearing every passage that can be found, he has discovered that certain winds make musical sounds in the passages, which he has rid of the debris of nearly fifty-seven centuries and he hopes yet to find another northern passage which will make quite a musical effect when the winds blow right. Best of all, he has cleared the single remaining course just above the sands of the desert, and revealed to the world that its outer sheath was of white limestone, which nobody knew before, because the great mass of stone had been used as a common quarry for thousands of years. The limestone sheathing makes many a mosque in Egypt to-day. When the tomb of Cheops was first reared it was as white as a marble mansion of our times. The technical work of those days was marvellous. The masonry is absolutely unrivalled; there is nothing better in all the world to-day. Monuments and palaces have come and have gone a hundred times since the Great Pyramid was built. They have perished; it remains.

For 20 years 100,000 men toiled at the stones. They built their great pile facing exactly north and south. They chose a base of nearly a seventh of a mile, 761 ft. to be exact. This was a plot covering nearly 13 acres. There were 210 perfect courses of stone, almost invisibly joined of Mokattem limestone blocks. At an angle of a little more than 51 degrees its four sides swept-up, tapering to the pointed apex, 481 ft. above the ground.

In it were 85,000,000 cubic feet of stone, put up by people who had no modern machinery. There are about 2,300,000 individual blocks.

It Flew 5600 Years Ago!

The debris removed, marvellous relics were unearthed. They had been left there almost before modern time began — objects of bronze and terra cotta, two mason's levels, breadplates and wine-flasks used by the workmen of other days. There were the bones of a sacred bird which flew its last flight at least 5,600 years ago.

He found the mysterious chamber below the ground — burrowed out of the living rock beneath the mighty pile above—"The stones of darkness and the shadow of death." What this chamber was for is not yet known.

Sixty-nine feet of debris obstructs the outer end of the channel that leads to the great chamber of the king — the great Cheops, or Khufu, himself, and when this has been cleared away there will be exposed for the first time in history the interior of this world wonder.

The Queen's Chamber

Beneath the King's chamber, in the heart of the pyramid, is the Queen's chamber, near the entrance to which there was found about forty years ago a number of rare relics, the most important of them being a small bracelet of iron, or perhaps it was a child's anklet. This was lying imbedded in the cement of the eighty-fourth course. It is the oldest iron object known to men. In 1837 a Mr. Hill, an engineer, found imbedded in the 103 course a flat piece of iron equaly as old, which is now in the British Museum.

Masons to-day build no more beautifully than did those ancient men who toiled 5,600 years ago. They have left their own monument in the Queen's chamber which, apparently, was never used. It is superbly finished and jainted; yet, oddly enough, the entrances to this superb tomb was covered and concealed. Possibly it was intended for Mertitefe, Khufu's Queen, but she survived him and married his brother Chephren, who built the second pyramid in the great group which stands to-day as perpetual monuments just outside Cairo.

The Grand Gallery is considered the most mysterious part of this mighty miracle in stone, because if the pyramid were intended only as a tomb there was practically no use for this elaborate Grand Gallery, with its strange and remarkable features, except perhaps to temporarily accommodate the granite plugs which still close the lower end of the ascending passage, but which I find fit too tightly to have been slid into position. At an angle of about 26 degrees 8 minutes it slopes up for 155 feet, its height 28 feet, and its width above the ramps nearly 7 feet. Its great sides are clearly marked by seven overlapping layers of stone, while it is roofed by thirty-six slabs.

Plants Breaking Up an Island.

The man in the street would scarcely associate great growth with so delicate and fragile a thing as maidenhair fern, yet if its roots have not sufficient room they will break the pot in which the plant grows. Blades of grass will force the curbstones between which they spring up out of their place, and in a single night a crop of small mushrooms has been known to lift a large stone. Indeed, plants are on record as having broken the hardest rocks. The island of Aldabra, to the north-west of Madagascar, is now becoming smaller through the action of the mangroves that grow along the foot of the cliffs. They eat their way into the rock in all directions, and into the gaps thus formed the waves force their way. In time they will probably reduce the island to pieces.

MOST WICKED CITY ON EARTH

Russian Town of Irkutsk Alleged to be Toughest Known to Modern Times, Producing 500 Murders Per Year.

One would hardly recommend Irkutsk for a rest cure. With a population of 120,000 persons crammed into a couple of square miles on a bend in the Angora river, it produces 500 murders in a year, with an average of one arrest for each fifty killings. And for each ten arrests there are but five convictions. This is a transcription from the city's criminal records. In one day last month there were twenty-two murders within the city limits.

Irkutsk is pretty gay at nights now, but the citizens look back enviously to the zenith of its career in the days of the recent Japanese war. Then, it is said, champagne and wines were often cautiously transported free of freight charges from St. Petersburg and Moscow in steel cars labeled Powder — cars militant, with painted imperial eagles and Cossack guards. A colonel of the regiment openly boasted in the Metropole restaurant recently that more champagne was drunk in Irkutsk in one month during the Japanese war than is sold on Broadway, New York, in half a year.

The fun at Irkutsk starts at midnight; the city is as dead as a Sunday an hour before. Then the moving picture shows, of which there are three to a block on the Bolsholskala spin off their last films and the officers and mining engineers — for all the world goes to moving picture shows in the towns of Siberia — crowd into the restaurants.

Here, too, the sons of Uncle Sam keep the old flag flying. Last year there were, for instance, the young Harvard graduate of a town in the north of Pennsylvania and his friend the clergymans' son. They sojourned here for three hectic weeks, spending $25,000 in one hotel during that time. The Harvard man disbursed $1,000 in one day and another day had $2,500 stolen from his person.

An Unstable Platform

One of the most remarkable political meetings on record is described in a Paris contemporary as having taken place at Riga. The Letts Sociolists desired to hold a meeting. The Riga police expressed an opposite view, and then the contest began in reality. It was brains versus determination. Wherever the Socialists determined to pitch their camp the police checkmated them. At last one of the Socialists conceived a brilliant idea. He circularised the members of his organisation to have a kind of swimming match. Of course, the competitors were the orators. They went into the water, and the assemblage stood around! Then swimmer after swimmer delivered a speech, and invited questions from those on land It is claimed that, although somewhat damp, the meeting was a great success.

Courted His Own Mother

The custom of finding a mate for life through the medium of advertisements sometimes has curious results. A young Polish engineer stationed at an out-of-the-world place in the Crimea recently felt he ought to marry, studied the advertisements in a Polish newspaper, and replied to one inserted by a "widow in the height of her beauty." He used a nom de guerre, and gave an address at the nearest town. The widow also used a pseudonym, and they interchanged typewritten letters. The young man was delighted at the propsect of becoming engaged to a young widow from his own town, and the widow looked forward to marrying again in a town only a few miles away from her dear boy. A meeting between the widow and the engineer was arranged, and then it was discovered that all the affectionate correspondence had been wasted between mother and son!

CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Made Safe by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Graniteville, Vt.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

IN THE WORLD OF SCIENCE

THAWED BACK TO LIFE

Remarkable Experiments With Fish and Frogs Frozen for Months in Ice Blocks.

Some remarkable experiments were made not long since at the University of Geneva by M. Raoul Pictet, whose name is intimately connected with the production of artificial cold. In the course of some work he was able to take live fish and place them in a tank. Then he froze the water in which the fish were swimming, so as to form a block of ice. After two or three months the block of ice was thawed out very slowly, and the seemingly dead fish came to life and swam about as usual. In a recent interview M. Pictet states that his first experiments upon life at very intense cold date nearly eighteen years back. He became convinced that if the chemical reactions of a living organism could be suspended without causing any organic lesion, the phenomena of life would disappear, but these would come back as soon as the organism was restored to the usual conditions. Great cold will suspend the operations of life as far as we are able to observe, but without losing it totally. The freezing must not be carried down too far in the case of fresh water fish, otherwise the fish will be killed. However, there are other animals which can stand a much greater amount of cold. Frogs come next in order to fish in this respect, and can be frozen down to 28 deg. C. below the freezing point. Some water lizards or salamanders will stand more cold, or 50 degrees. He finds that snails will resist the greatest amount of cold among the specimens which he tried, and they can be frozen as low as 120 deg. C. below the freezing point, and will then come back to animation.

WILL POINT THE TRUE NORTH

Compass of Columbus' Days Getting Closed Out, Recent Gyroscope Improvements Helping Man Steer Safer Course.

The magnetic compass, which has been in use by every mariner who sailed the sea since Columbus, is nearing the end of its usefulness, at least for steam vessels. The Bureau of Navigation of the United States has decided that it must go. In its place there is being installed in the warships, the gyroscope compass, which it is said is so far superior to the magnetic compass that they are not in the same class.

So long as ships were built of wood, the magnetic compass was as good a guide as the mariner needed, though its shortcomings were such that to understand its use required much study. To begin with, the magnetic compass, except on a single meridian of longitude, does not point to the North Pole, for the very obvious reason that the magnetic North Pole is many hundreds of miles to the south of it. The effect of this is seen in the fact that in Iceland the compass needle points almost due west, and in Northern Alaska due east. Because of this, allowance must be made for variations before one may know where lies the true north, and before he may discover what allowance to make latitude and longitude must be known.

An examination of the gyro compass shows that its most wonderful feature, next to the way it finds the north, is the tenacity with which it holds it. A magnetic compass is held to its position by a force so slight that a breath will disturb it. The power that holds the gyro to the meridian, on the other hand, is more than 7,000 times as great.

GERMANY IN THE HOLY LAND

It is undeniable that the Holy Land is gradually being Germanized. More than two-thirds of the philanthropic institutions in the way of churches, missions, hospitals, and hospices are in the hands of the Germans. The leading polytechnics, public schools and educational institutes are also governed by them, while quite large German colonies are now to be found in Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Jaffa, and other places. Recent excavations of any importance have been carried out by the Germans, who also virtually control the country's trade. It is well known that the finest and purest bitumen is obtained here, also quantities of excellent sulphur. According to Professor Blackenhorn's report, copper mines have been worked near the south end of the Dead Sea in Byzantine times; and also marble porphyry, and other fine classes of stone are to be found there as well as phosphates.

It has also been stated by American experts that evidences of coal and oil are very apparent. Salt is found in great quantities; but upon this the government holds a monopoly with the curious result that salt is at present imported from Smyrna and England.

A Judgment of Solomon

An English judge has set up a new legal precedent, and one which the peaceful, law-abiding public is not likely to desire to see generally acted upon. A man was brought before his Worship charged with being on premises with felonious intent. The circumstances were that a young lady, on retiring for the night to her bedroom, happened in a quite accidental manner to discover that there was a man lying concealed under her bed. She rushed out for help, and the man was arrested and brought before the judge. It was alleged that he had got into the house through a window, and had found his way upstairs unobserved. His excuse was that, under the influence of drink, he had mistaken the house. To most minds the excuse would appear to be a particularly thin one, but the court so far accepted it as to dismiss the case, holding that there was no evidence of felonious intent. People do not enter their own houses through the window and conceal themselves under beds as a rule, but one has heard of it being done before for unlawful purposes. In future Bill Sikes will have a legal precedent to quote in his favour whenever he is found on other people's premises, and the decision is one which will doubtless be welcomed by the predatory fraternity.

British Columbian Fruit

The apple crop of British Columbia will be about a two third yield, says the Canadian Pacific reports. Peaches are a failure with the exception of Penticton, B.C., where some fair shipments will be made. Cherries have been a good crop in the Kootenays. Plums and prunes are fair and apricots have proven a very regular crop. One grower in Penticton, gathered 5,400 pounds of apricots from 100 trees, and after paying the cost of picking, boxing and packing he realized a net profit of 8 cts. per pound or $424.00, for his crop. The fruit shipment from the Okanagan Valley for the season will be about 300 cars.

The amount of land under cultivation in British Columbia and devoted exclusively to fruit represents 140,000 acres, or an investment of easily forty million dollars. One million acres of land is still available for fruit culture.

Of the lands under cultivation only fifteen per cent are yet bearing, so that a yearly shipment of 7,000 cars can be looked for when all the present orchards are producing.

We can only have the highest happiness — such as goes along with being a great man — by having wide thoughts and much feeling for the rest of the world as well as ourselves. — George Eliot.

THE WONDERFUL WATCH

Few pieces of machinery show more marvellous features than that of the watch. As a general proposition it may be stated that a watch is the smallest, most delicate instrument of the same number of parts that has ever been devised. About one hundred and seventy-five different pieces of material enter into its construction, and upwards of twenty-four hundred separate operations are comprised in its manufacture. Certain of the facts connected with its performance are almost incredible, when considered as a whole. A blacksmith strikes several hundred blows on his anvil in a day, and, as a matter of course, is glad when Sunday comes; but the roller jewel of a watch makes every day — and day after day — 432,000 impacts against the fork, or 157,680,000 blows during the course of a year without stop or rest — or some 3,153,600,000 blows during the space of twenty years, the period for which a watch is usually guaranteed to keep good time. But the wonder of it does not cease here. It has been calculated that the power that moves the watch is equivalent to only four times the force used in a flea's jump. The watch-power is, therefore, what might be termed the equivalent of a four flea-power. One horse-power would suffice to operate 270,000,000 watches. Furthermore, the balance-wheel of a watch is moved by this four flea-power one and forty-three one-hundredths inches with each vibration, or 3558¾ miles continuously in one year. Not much oil is required to lubricate the little machine on its 3500-mile run. It takes only one-tenth of a drop to oil the entire machinery of a year service.

Life on Mars.

Mr. Elgie, the author of "The Night Skies of a Year," agrees with the statement recently made by a French scientist that life on Mars has evolved in the same way as it has done on the earth. It is, he thinks, a reasonable conclusion at which to arrive, and adds:—"Why should not life evolve (that is, on Mars) in the same way as it has done on the earth? And not only so on Mars, but on all the other planets? Life will appear on those planets which are at present without it when the planets are ready for the reception and the evolution of life—and not until then. Why should the earth be an exception, either to the rule of the existence of life, or of its evolution?"

The Best Temperature

Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson found, after long experiments and practice, that 64 degrees Fahr. is the best temperature in which to conduct mental labour. If the temperature falls below this the mind becomes drowsy and inactive, and if it rises much above there is a relaxed state of the body and mind which soon leads to fatigue and exhaustion. It is important that the temperature be the same in all parts of the room and that it be steadily maintained.

ALSO WORRIED THE EARLY BOY

Arithmetic Problems that Sadden Schoolboy of Today also Gave Pain to the Kiddies of Two Thousand Years B. C.

There is a ray of vindictive comfort for the modern schoolboy in the fact that for over 3,600 years his schoolboy progenitors have been worried by just such problems in arithmetic as annoy him most.

Among the archaeological discoveries made in Egypt is a papyrus roll, in excellent condition, dating from about 1700 B. C. This roll, which had a long heading beginning, "Directions how to attain the knowledge of all dark things," proves beyond doubt that the Egyptians of that time had a thorough knowledge of the elements of arithmetic.

Numerous examples show that their principal operations with units and fractions were made by means of addition and multiplication. Substraction and division were not known in their presetn form, but correct results were obtained nevertheless.

Equations are also found in the papyrus. Here is one that brings the Egyptian schoolboy [illegible]

Ten measures of barley are to be divided among ten persons in such a manner that each subsequent person shall receive one-eighth less than the one before him.

Another example given is: There are seven men; each [illegible] seven cats; each cat has eaten seven mice; each mouse has eaten seven grains of barley; each grain of barley would have yielded seven measures of barley. How much barley has been lost?

The papyrus also contains the calculation of the area of a circle and attempts to square the circle.

NOT MOTHER OF PARLIAMENTS

Writer Points Out That England is Not the Mother of Parliaments, the Honor Really Belonging to Spain.

How errors grow, says a writer in T. P. O'Connor's Weekly, and how false epithets attached to persons or nations, by constant repetition come to be accepted as descriptively true! England is called, not only in her own Press, but in that of other countries, the "Mother of Parliaments." She, however, is not in that proud position legislatively. Spain had a Parliament nearly a century before England — meaning by Parliament "popular representation." [illegible] was convened in [illegible], while that of England first assembled at Leicester in the [illegible] thirteenth century. [illegible] ours the Castilian [illegible] did not receive hereditary [illegible] was left to England to do [illegible] and to give them hereditary [illegible] powers which were denied them by the Castilians. If, then, writers desire to call any nation the "Mother of Parliaments," to be accurate, they must attach that title of grace and honour to Spain.

Evidence from a Shark.

It may be a perfectly unwarrantable reflection upon an upright and exceedingly useful body of men, but somehow the mention of the legal profession irresistibly draws the mind to sharks. And there was at least one historical occasion on which a shark did actually play an important part in a criminal trial.

In 1799 the brig Nancy was captured by a British warship as a suspected slaver, and her release by the prize court at Jamaica, whither she had been brought for trial, seemed inevitable, owing to the absence of incriminatory documents. Curiously enough, the officers of the Abergavenny hooked a shark soon afterwards in the neighborhood, which was found to contain a bundle of papers relative to the Nancy.

These were preserved in ignorance of the capture of the brig, and eventually led to her condemnation. These interesting documents are said to have been stored in the museum at Jamaica, and perished in the great earthquake there a few years ago; but the head of the shark is still on view at the Royal United Service Institution, London.

The Reward of Thrift

In connection with the sale of the French "junk pile" at Panama comes the story that one bidder for the De Lesseps leaving was a man who but a few years ago was working in a junk shop at $7 a week, yet who was able to accompany his bid with a certified check for $115,000.

Such a fact serves to put a hitherto despised business in a different light. We shall do well to treat the lowly rag and bottle man with more respect. His potentialities are great. His shrewdness in taking profitable advantages of such seemingly simple openings as first present themselves deserves a higher appreciation.

A Novel Church Service

A real agricultural setting was provided at a harvest thanksgiving service held in connection with a parish church in England. The service took place in the well-filled rickyard of a farmstead. The vicar, the Rev. C. Harrison, the assistant curates, the churchwardens, and the choir, during the singing of the processional hymn, took up their places in a space surrounded by corn and hayricks and agricultural implements, and the vicar delivered his sermon from a farmer's waggon. A large congregation, attracted no doubt by the novelty of the service, was present.

Money makes the mare go; the lack of it makes her go hungry.

ANIMAL AND RACIAL ODORS

A White Man Gives Off a Distinctive Natural Smell, Same as the Negro.

That every human being and every animal possesses an individual odour we know, although generally our own sense of smell cannot distinguish one from another, for the more sensitive scent of the dog does this with ease from the slightest traces. That the personal odour of an entire race has a character of its own we also know. In most cases this odour is displeasing to members of different races. The odour of the negro is often spoken of by white races as offensive, but it will be news to most of us that the odour of Europeans is quite as objectionable to the Japanese. A Japanese physician, Dr. Burtaro Adacki, has recently published some remarkable observations on this subject.

"This physician states that it is certain that the Western peoples possess a natural odour which is not perceived by them, but which is clearly perceptible to the yellow race. After a certain length of time, however, both Japanese and Chinese who have taken up their residence in Europe become habituated to this odour, it being the experience of these European residents that the odour of Europeans, which at first was intolerable, after several weeks' residence becomes supportable.

"Every living animal possesses in general a characteristic odour,—horses, dogs, cats, etc., man himself having an emanation which is a part of the race, and which may be individual and variable with age and condition of health. The sudoriferous glands produce the emanation perceived by the sense of smell, although it is true that the Chinese and Japanese have little or no odorous emanation. When these races perspire, their perspiration has no odour, a fact which is doubtless chiefly a question of race, although also probably one of alimentary regime. In the white races observers who possess an acute sense of smell can distinguish solely by this means those persons who follow a vegetarian regime and those who eat meat, at times the difference between these two classes of persons being very pronounced. The individuals who nourish themselves on meat exhale, under the influence of the fermentation of cutaneous secretions, a much stronger odour than vegetarians. Experimenters in ethnography know that there exist provincial odours, the odour of Brunswick being different from that of Bavaria, that of Savoy different from that of Normandy.

"The Japanese are chiefly vegetarians, and for this reason their skin exhales odours which are scarcely perceptible; but here clothing plays its role, for if we superimpose many layers of tissue closely around the body, perspiration is produced, and with it the odour of disassimilation.

Small [illegible]

The Katydid, which is closely allied to the grasshopper family, is something of a hauler for its avoirdupois. Recently, an average looking specimen was harnessed to a kind of sledge made by folding a piece of ordinary notepaper, and then loaded the sledge with various articles. The insect proved able to draw, in addition to the original paper, twelve paper sheets each three by four and a half inches, a large screw, two steel pens, a stone weighing two ounces, and three and a half lead pencils. When the weight became too heavy to draw otherwise the katydid got its fore feet over the edge of the table for a better hold, and on addition of another weight it increased the adhesive power of its feet by moistening them in its mouth.

How Deserts are Formed

There is a popular idea that deserts like the Sahara are the bottoms of ancient seas which have been lifted above their original elevation by geological forces. This notion is an erroneous one. It is absolutely certain, high authorities contend, that the sands of all the great deserts have been formed on the spot by the disintegration of the solid rocks on which they rest. Desert sands correspond in all respects, so far as their mode of origin is concerned, to the dust and sand that accumulates on our high roads in summer. All deserts are situated where the winds from the ocean, before reaching them, are exhausted of their moisture by passing over mountains or across extensive tracts of land.

Dr. Morriscy's No. 10 May Save Your Life. It Has Made Many Remarkable Cures.

ST. ANDREWS, N. B., July 25, 1911.
"In the Autumn of 1907 I found myself the victim of a very distressing cough, and in October, 1907, during a fit of coughing I had a dreadful hemorrhage, and great streams of blood issued from my mouth. We called in the family physician, who pronounced it Tuberculosis, and said it was a matter of but a very short time. We had heard a great deal of the wonderful Father Morriscy, and we wrote him to send us some of his No 10 Lung Tonic, for I had heard what a fine remedy it was, and felt sure it would help me. The dear good man sent the cure, and I took it faithfully, but in the spring of 1908 the family called in a local physician, who said I had consumption, and there was no hope for me. This however, did not daunt me, for I knew that the cure was helping me, and I kept on taking it faithfully for over a year and never missed, and to-day I am in splendid health. Every one in [illegible] has said it was the most wonderful and miraculous cure they had ever [illegible]. I can walk 8 to 10 miles a day, can eat anything I want, and look as though there never had been anything wrong with me. People look on [illegible] filled with awe, but still they have no idea how wonderful my recovery has been.

SOME FLY FALLACIES

Flies Don't Grow in Size and it is not the Case that the House Specimen Bites.

It is quite a common belief that flies grow in size, and that the small flies one comes across in the house are but the young of the larger house-flies, but this is quite a misconception. The difference one notices in flies of very similar appearance is due to their belonging to a different species. The feet of flies are wonderfully adapted to their habits, for they are equally useful for moving in any position over either rough or smooth surfaces. When walking over a rough surface there are two claws which come into play and enable them to grip tightly, but when the foot falls on to a smooth surface the claws are automatically withdrawn, and a pad comes into contact with the smooth plane. This pad is provided with minute glands, which cause the air to be expelled from between the pads, the surface to which the feet cling. Bristles are also provided in the feet, and these probably contain the nerves which enable the insect to feel its way along and select its foot-hold. Another popular fallacy with regard to the house-fly is that at certain seasons of the year it bites, but this is due to confusion with another species, very similar in appearance, the stable-fly, which possesses the piercing mouth-parts that are so modified in our common house-fly that it makes biting or rather piercing, an impossibility.

To Hear the Fly Tramp

The inferiority of the human sense organs to the instruments of science is pointed out by Dr. Carl Snyder. He says that whereas the human eye can see but little more than 3,000 stars in the heavens on the clearest of nights, the photographic plate and the telescope can discover countless millions. It is difficult for the eye to distinguish divisions of the inch if they are smaller than 1-200 of that unit of measure, yet a powerful microscope will make an object 1-10,000 of an inch in diameter look comparatively large. It would be a delicate ear which could hear the tramp of a fly, yet the microphone magnifies this sound until it sounds like the tramp of cavalry. The most sensitive skin cannot detect a change in temperature less than 1-5 of a degree, but the bolometer will register on a scale an increase or decrease of temperature of 1-1,000,000 of a degree, and can easily note the difference in temperature caused in a room when a match is lighted one mile away.

Eight thousand gallons of fresh water are used in a large battleship daily. About two-thirds of this is taken up by the boilers, and the remainder is used for drinking, washing, etc.

TO BANISH A DOUBLE CHIN

Woman Can Follow Easy Muscular Exercises that Will Annihilate this Foe of a Pretty Fall.

Authorities upon the science of beauty now declare that to get rid of an accumulation of fat, which is really only unburnt body-fuel, one has but to exercise the breathing apparatus, the oxygen taken into the lungs burning up this fat. They also inform us that correct breathing and pose will enable one to banish that awfulness of the throat known as the "double chin." A photographer recently asked a party of matrons grouped before his camera to hold back their double chins, and thereby showed them the possibility of annihilating this foe of a pretty face. Why submit to the disfigurement of a double chin? Certainly much may be done to correct it by the poise of the head. The short-necked woman is advised to hold her head well up, even stretching her neck until conscious of the tension of its cords. She should also practise dropping her head listlessly upon the trunk and rolling it about on its spinal pivot. This exercise of muscles little called into use will help consume the accumulation of fat upon the throat, and give a graceful pose to the head. To be too thin is really more desirable than its opposite, for in the latter condition one becomes but an expressionless mass of rotundity.

BE GOOD TO YOUR TEETH

It is unadvisable to do all your brushing across the teeth. Instead brush up and down. This is the most effective mode of cleansing the pearls of the mouth.

Jewellery Modes.

The fashion in gowns has a very marked effect upon jewellery modes, the type of ornament which is suited to one class of gown being quite unsuited to another.

The low necked dress has brought a revival in the way of bead necklaces. Many of the long bead necklaces now worn with cotton frocks do not pretend to be of any value, but are nevertheless very effective finish to frocks otherwise too severe-looking. The craze of the year is the Swaztika, a curiously-shaped charm which is supposed to be eminently "lucky". The origin of the Swaztika is lost in the distant past of Eastern mysteries, but is believed to have played an important part in Oriental "magic." (It is interesting to note that the Swaztika appears on the back of Rudyard Kipling's books in the first editions). Swaztika as ornaments are procurable as pendants brooches, bangle and guard charms, and are often to be seen inset with valuable gems.

The favourite gems, in the realm of fashion have of late been green or mauve. Among green-coloured gems come olivines, peridots, tourmalines, green beryl, and chrysolite, as well as the well-known emerald. Of these, peridots have recently found most favour. They are of a rich yellowish green, and look best when set with diamonds. Among purple stones, the amethyst is the chief, and is among the least expensive gems, a fact which weighs considerably with people who like the jewellery they wear to be "real."

Wall-Pocket for Magazines.

A wall-pocket is very useful to hang in the porch in summer time, which will keep papers, magazines and fans from blowing about. Have a strip of Japanese matting sixty by twenty inches. Bind the top and bottom with brown linen. Then measure off twenty-eight inches and fold it up to within eight inches from the top. Now turn the bottom edge up to within about the same distance from top of the first pocket and stitch securely. Bind the sides with the linen and a strip of folded linen is stitched near the top to hold fans, tacking it down at intervals so as to leave small loops. Two heavy rings at the top and a brown cord, such as is used on pillows, is looped across the bottom for a finish. Hang to the side of the house by two strong hooks.

Corn-Bread

Two and one half cupfuls of sifted meal, one teaspoonful of salt, one level teaspoonful soda. Mix together dry, then add enough sour milk to make medium batter. Grease bread [illegible]. Then melt a tablespoonful of [illegible] in it, and pour in the corn-bread. Bake in quick oven.

LOVING POOR MEN

Females Greatly to Blame for so Many Old Maids.

Statistics go to prove that every year men delay marriage for a longer period, and every year the ranks of the spinster women grow larger and larger.

"Marriage is too expensive," young men mutter, if questioned on the subject, and they, as well as all the crowds of unwedded fair ones, are prone to pretend that matrimony has very little charm for them.

Perhaps it will astonish the ladies in question to learn that they are themselves greatly to blame for the present unsatisfactory state of things.

Every natural girl wishes to marry, whatever she may say on the subject and young men are every whit as eager for the happiness of home as were their fathers and grandfathers before them; but how dare they propose to damsels who apparently require such riches as does the modern girl?

It is all the foolish result of trying to do as others do. If girls would but be their sweet natural selves, show that they do not fear poverty when they love, then statistics will tell a different tale.

As it is, almost every girl persists in dressing to an extent greatly beyond her means, demanding amusements and diversions by no means warranted by her social scale.

A girl can be awfully surprised to when she knew it all the time.

Just Out of School The Best Teacher.

Married women, especially mothers, should not be employed as teachers. Their time is their husbands and should be; besides they are set in their ideas and fight against radical changes.

The young teacher, just out of school herself, is the ideal teacher. She bubbles over with enthusiasm, which inspires the children intrusted to her; being young, she is more apt to understand and sympathize with them; she is up-to-date on the latest teaching experiments and theories.

Corporal punishment is a thing of the past; when I hear a teacher or a mother talking of breaking a child's will, I always think of a big bully who whips a small boy and then boasts of it. It's morally wrong to teach that way.

It would be splendid if there was some way of allowing youngsters to work in school for pay. It would teach them the value of work, and that a livelihood should be worked for, not stolen. Then too, when the boy was ready for high school, he would have a means of sustenance, and there would be a larger high school attendance.

There has been much vaudeville in churches and schools of late. That's all right. I am heartily in favor of it. Children should be able to swallow their disagreeable tasks with a smile, and if children can't smile their education isn't going to be all profit to them.

Hints on Treatment of the Hair.

Care should be observed in the selection of a hair stimulant or scalp emollient to obtain the preparation best suited to one's individual case. Promiscuous use of cheaply made tonics or restorers often result disastrously.

All strong, irritating drugs, such as cantharides, acids, ammonia, inferior grades of spirits, bay rum, and the like, which are the chief ingredients of many so-called tonics, should be scrupulously avoided. These drugs merely inflame the scalp without healthfully stimulating it, and although they may produce a spasmodic effort for a short time, they will eventually prove fatal to the hair-producing organs. It should be accepted as a fact that any tonic or preparation for the hair containing strong spirits will in time debilitate the scalp, the stronger the preparation the more destructive its after effects.

Fashion Hints.

The feather toque is a happy medium between the warm weather hat and the fur toque of the winter.

For the late spring suit as well as for summer dresses there is a marked fancy for silk and wool voiles.

Embroidered net hands for embellishing summer wraps and satin and silk dresses show colored embroideries.

WHAT MOTHERS HAVE DONE

"All that I am or hope to be," said Lincoln, after he had become President of the United States, "I owe to my angel mother." "My mother was the making of me," said Thomas A. Edison, recently. "She was so true, so sure of me; and I felt that I had someone to live for, someone I must not disappoint." "All that I have ever accomplished in life," declared Dwight L. Moody, the great evangelist, "I owe to my mother." "To the man who has had a mother, all women are sacred for her sake," said Jean Paul Richter. "A kiss from my mother made me a painter," said Benjamin West.

A wise man is merely less of a fool than the average.

MY LADY'S COLUMN.

FADS AND FASHIONS

The exigencies of fashion during the last few seasons have completely revolutionized the style of women's underclothes. The modish woman of today wears fewer underclothes than the woman of a year or two ago, and those she does wear are less aggressively self-assertive, finer, daintier and — alas — more expensive. The combination in one form or another is the favorite undergarment, and the woman who has worn it finds it hard to go back to separate corset covres and drawers or underskirts, with their multiplicity of waistbands always shrinking out of place in the loundering and their troublesome fastenings.

Not that corset covers, separate drawers and separate underskirts are not worn. They are, and many women favor them, insisting that the women who need to consider laundering economies will find the separate garments better, since often one needs changing when another does not. But the fact remains that the combination is in high favor, and that it does away with awkward fulness at the hips.

NOVEL WAYS TO ANNOUNCE CUPID'S DOINGS.

One girl invited a few of her closest friends in for tea. Everything was quite usual. Ice cream appeared in a variety of lover moulds, roses, lilies, daisies, and the like. At the very last came an ice cream bride, standing cool and straight with her frozen train and paper-mache veil. When this odd delicacy was served to the chum of the hostess the guests hastened to extend congratulations.

Another hostess had the monograms of the engaged couple in opposite corners of the place cards, which were tiny water colors done in cupids and rose garlands. Printed in gold letters at the bottom was the motto "Love Is All." Needless to say the engagement was sufficiently well announced.

If healthy the gain should be just six pounds the next year

At three, the weight should be 31 pounds, and at four years, 35 pounds

During the next four years — up to 10 — the weight should be 49½ 54½, 60 and 66½ pounds.

SPONGE CULTIVATION

Sponges are becoming scarcer and scarcer, the higher qualities fetching extraordinary prices, as compared with those of a few years ago, and this condition has led to the suggestion that some artificial substitute for the sponge be devised, or that sponge cultivation take on a new and better phase.

Experiments in the Mediterranean show that the cultivation of sponges may be undertaken with excellent prospects of success off the French coast, and that such cultivation need not, as it was first feared, be confined to the Tunisian shores.

Sponges from the opposite shores of the Mediterranean have already been carried to France and planted on its coasts. It is expected that the sponge industry will be greatly strengthened by these methods.

Fragments of sponge transported to [illegible] heal [illegible] about three months, when [illegible] soon become [illegible] rapidly increase in size, being twenty-five times their own value in the course of four or five years. The growth is, of course, slow, especially during the first year, mainly because of the necessity for healing the wound caused by the tearing off of the fragment from the main body for transplanting.

The character of the spongy tissue is altered by cultivation, that [illegible] becoming much clearer. It has not as yet been ascertained whether there is sufficient change in this respect to alter the commercial value of the product.

THE EARTH'S AGE

One of the most interesting results of Professor G. F. Becker's summing up of recent investigations as to the age of the earth is the general agreement in the figures arrived at by different methods. "These," as Professor Becker says, "seem to be mutually confirmatory, and to give results which converge towards some value near 60,000,000 or perhaps 70,000,000 years." And these figures approach more nearly to the time allowed by Lord Kelvin from physical consideration than to the practically unlimited period demanded by some evolutionists. One of the methods of estimating the age of the earth is by dividing the amount of salt in the ocean by that yearly carried in by the rivers of the globe. And Professor Becker draws attention to the remarkable fact that 200 years ago the famous astronomer Halley suggested a way of determining the age of the earth from the saltness of the ocean. "If," he said, "we determine the quantity of salt in the sea, and then some centuries after make a second determination, we may by the rule of proportion take an estimate of the whole time wherein the water would acquire the degree of saltness we at present find in it."

It may cost slightly more to make pastry with PURITY FLOUR

But there's a DIFFERENCE in pastry

YES, madam, we know there is an impression amongst some people here in the East that Western hard wheat flour is not good for pastry. Some people even actually think that good pastry can only be made with a soft Ontario wheat flour, or a blend of hard and soft wheat flours.

If such were the case, the West would be starved for pie, for hard wheat flour is used there almost exclusively. But nowhere in the world are home-cooks more famed for the deliciousness of their pastry. Visitors to the West almost invariably remark about the creaminess and flakiness of the pies and the lightness and delicacy of the cakes. They return home converted to the use of hard wheat flour for pastry.

So you see, madam, that the prejudice against using hard wheat flour for pastry is not founded on facts. It is directly opposite to the truth, for the truth is this:

You can make more delicious, more flaky pastry with PURITY FLOUR than you've ever before seen or enjoyed.

Such pastry will cost you slightly more, for PURITY FLOUR costs a trifle more per pound. And on account of its extra strength and extra quality, more shortening is required than when using the weaker soft or blended flours.

The extra deliciousness of the pies and cakes you will make from PURITY FLOUR will more than make up for the slight extra cost. And remember:

PURITY FLOUR MAKES
"More Bread and Better Bread"

It takes more water because it is a strong, thirsty flour. It goes farther in the baking. Get a pencil and add PURITY FLOUR to your grocery list right now. 102

GIRLS AT CRICKET

Many Young Women of England Have Become Sporting Wielders of The Willow.

Though the days of the broomhandle and left-handed play when gentlemen meet ladies at cricket are not yet over in England, the great national game is now receiving the serious attention of the so-called weaker sex. Only a day or so ago a girls' eleven beat a male eleven from the local club by seven runs. The men, it is true, were handicapped in the unorthodox way, but though this minimizes the merit of the victory, it still remains a [illegible] performance. Most of the [illegible] players learned at school and have retained their early fondness for the game. Their record, indeed, silences the contemptuous and laconic remarks generally passed by the mere man on the usual cricket played by girls.

"Girls' cricket" is fast passing out of that stage in which it was a term of reproach for a weak male eleven. A mid-Victorian lady, with her crinoline and furbelows would stand aghast at the sight of the playing field of a modern girls' college on a summer afternoon, and would shake her head sadly over the exploits of the Forest Hill eleven. But a healthier tone prevails today, and what were once looked upon as exclusively "manly sports" are now actively engaged in by both sexes—to the infinite advantage of the girl of today. Cricket has almost an equal place with hockey and lawn tennis in the outdoor education of the modern miss, and all over the old country the national game can be seen in full swing during the summer in the playing fields of high schools and colleges for girls. Clad in the regulation "gym" dresses, the girls pursue this very healthy pastime with all the zest and seriousness they gave in earlier days to the dressing and care of their dolls.

McGRATH HURLS HAMMER FAR

Mighty Mat McGrath, one of New York's cops, hurled the 16-pound hammer the remarkable distance of 183 feet 11¼ inches, the greatest throw ever made with the exception of John Flanagan's world's record toss of 184 feet 4 inches in New Haven in 1909. Harry Grumpelt, the limber-legged Mercury Footer, cleared the bar in the high jump at 6 feet 3 inches, the best leap of the year — those were the feature performances at the eighty-seventh games of the New York A. C.

The Tall Man's Golf Clubs.

The choice of clubs is not by any means a haphazard affair. "Generally speaking, a tall man, unless his arms are disproportionately short, should never play with wooden clubs of so-called full length. And the shorter the shaft the more upright should be the lie of the head. To buy a 'fishing rod' and have six inches cut off the top of the shaft is to court disaster, because, however beautiful the shaft may be, the head will not lie to the ball as it did before.

"Another point which each man should consider is the angle which his shoulders make with his neck. Those fortunate individuals who are blessed with what we call sloping shoulders can play accurately with longer and more powerful clubs than their square-shouldered fellows. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred sloping shoulders are a sign of strength in the upper part of the trunk."

CANADIANS FOR STOCKHOLM

Blow Florman, the lacrosse representative of the Olympic sports of 1912, has secured dates next July for two Canadian amateur teams to play at the Olympic games. Mr. Florman states that his intention is to have Vancouver and an eastern amateur team compete at the Swedish games and also play in the principal cities of Europe. He claims to have $110,000 in his grasp to finance the trip.

It is a wise woman who refrains from inducing her husband to bring the atmosphere of his club home with him.

A BIG STRONG CZAR

A Man of Great Mental Power Peter was Also a Clever Handler of Heavy-Weights.

Peter the Great of Russia was a man of great physical as well as mental power. His years of work as blacksmith and ship carpenter had so developed a naturally powerful physique that he was supposed to be the strongest man in Russia. The story is told that a certain blacksmith in a little country town had boasted that he was the only blacksmith in the world who could lift his own anvil.

The Emperor, hearing of the blacksmith's boast, disguised himself as a workman, and with a single companion set out for the blacksmith's village. On learning of their errand the blacksmith, without a word, laid [illegible] anvil [illegible] and, grasping the [illegible] it with great effort [illegible] the floor. Then Peter took [illegible] lifted the anvil, raised it a foot, two feet, three, higher and higher, until he finally swung it to his shoulder and calmly walked away with it.

A worthy successor of Peter the Great was the late Tsar Alexander III., who was one of the strongest men in the world. He was often called the Russian Samson. The Tsar's regular visiting card was a Russian coin somewhat larger than a silver quarter, which he would bend almost double with his powerful fingers.

Arrow Versus Golf Ball

"Arrow versus golf ball" is one of the few sensational entries in the records of the Royal Company of Archers, who form the bodyguard of the Sovereign when he visits Scotland. It occurs twice. On the first occasion a match was played early last century, over the Musselburgh links, between an archer and a golfer, whose names are not given. The conditions were that the arrow had to be shot right down into the hole, and not merely made to pierce its side. The arrow won, but it was a close thing. On the second occasion the archer was the Rev. John Tait, minister of Aberlady, and chaplain to the Company, and the golfer the renowned Tom Morris. They played the eighteen holes at Luffness, and the result was that the chaplain finished five up, doing the round in 76 to Tom's 82.

TWO FRONT ROW MEN

Milo was the most famous athlete of ancient times, and his most spectacular feat was to take on his back a four-year-old heifer and to carry it around the stadium. The animal may have weighed anywhere from 400 to 800 pounds. The distance it was carried was exactly 220 yards or one-eighth of a mile.

There is no good reason for doubting the story, nor for growing excited over it either. The porters at Constantinople often make long journeys, bearing on their shoulders a weight of 600 pounds. But it is further told of Milo that after carrying the heifer around the stadium he killed it with a single blow of his fist. If it is assumed that the fist was bare the story is rather steep. But he probably wore the cestus, a bulky affair not unlike the boxing glove and extending nearly to the elbow and heavily weighted with lead. Armed with such a weapon any good heavyweight pugilist like Sharkey, Jeffries, or Jack Johnson would have little difficulty in slaying a cow with a single blow.

Then there is the well known story of Leander, who swam the Hellespont with the praiseworthy object of passing an hour in the presence of his sweetheart. Now, the body of water known in ancient times as the Hellespont is in these days called the Straits of Dardanelles, and the distance across is rather less than a mile. Compared with such a swim as that of Captain Webb and Burgess across the Channel, Leander's performance seems not only credible but insignificant.

BASEBALLER LORD,

REMARKABLE RUNNERS

British Bluejacket Has Honor of Being Most Notable Athlete of Modern Times.

Among the notable athletes of modern times perhaps the most remarkable was Ernest Menson, a sailor in the British Navy. On a certain occasion, finding himself penniless in London, and knowing he must reach his ship at Portsmouth by roll call or be shot as a deserter the next morning he ran the entire distance between the two cities, starting at half after eight in the evening and arriving at his destination by six the next morning. That is to say that he covered the distance of 69 miles in less than ten hours. His next run was from London to Liverpool, a distance of 200 miles, which he covered in exactly 32 hours.

A still more remarkable pedestrian feat was his famous run from Paris to Moscow, a distance which in those days was 1,760 miles. Menson started from the Place de Vendome, in Paris, at exactly ten o'clock on the morning of June 11, 1831, and arrived at Kremlin, in Moscow, at ten o'clock, June 25, having made the journey in about 330 hours. Menson never walked, but went at a dog trot, a gait similar to that of Rowell, the famous pedestrian of 20 years ago. This gait, the dog trot, or fox trot, as it is called, is employed by all native runners.

Menson was also peculiar as to eating and sleeping. On his journey he ate nothing except occasionally a little fruit or a cracker, but would drink much water. His rest was taken in a standing position, usually leaning against a wall or a tree. After ten or fifteen minutes of this rest he would waken and go on apparently as fresh as ever.

One one occasion during a long run he went up as usual and leaned against a tree to rest. His seconds and attendants standing about had noticed nothing unusual in his manner or appearance. Ten minutes passed, fifteen, thirty. The watchers went closer and found that Menson was dead.

WOULD ELIMINATE [illegible] PUNCH.

Amateur Boxing not Interesting Enough.

Speaking of amateurs, R. H. Kane, in his weekly boxing review, advocates the elimination to the knock-out punch in amateur contests, a subject which carries the views of many. Mr. Kane says:

"Tournaments of amateur boxers have been held quite frequently during the past winter season, and the man who has been compelled to attend them regularly finds it a very tame and uninteresting task. Judging by the great number of young fellows who are willing and even anxious to stand up and take a hammering for the sake of a small diamond ring or a cheap gold watch, there must be a very great interest in boxing among the youth. Such being the case, it seems a great pity that the promoters of the so-called amateur boxing tournaments do not frame up a series of bouts or contests which would not cater entirely to the jaw punch, as is done at present. No one would think for a moment of having a fencing tournament in which the contestants would have no idea of swordsmanship, and who would only be able to stand up and thrust a foil out straight in front of them.

THIS IS JOHNSON'S NEXT OPPONENT

Pat Curran.

Jack Johnson is to fight Pat Curran in a short time. Curran is a British heavyweight and is considered a good man, but scarcely anyone will admit he is in the champion's class. Tom Flanagan, the Toronto promoter, is credited with making the match.

PUGILISTS ARE BORN AND NOT MADE.

John L. Sullivan was Intended for the Church. — So Was Jeffries, Whose Father Was a Circuit Rider.

It is as natural for some men to be prizefighters as it is for others to be poets, musicians and artists. Circumstances often develop the pugilistic nature in the successful fighting man, but nobody can become a topnotcher in the prize ring unless he has the natural requirements in his makeup.

John L. Sullivan's parents often declared that they intended their husky son for the church, but that nature made the big fellow a champion prizefighter. It was about the same with the parents of Jeffries. His father, who is a travelling preacher up and down the Western rivers, tried hard to have his big son follow in the same path, but again nature stepped in and declared Jim a gladiator. It is almost always the case that parents of pugilists are opposed to the fighting game.

When Sullivan was a young fellow in South Boston, his father put him [illegible] his own boss [illegible] to learn the trade [illegible] and [illegible] hour, he would join his friends in a game in a nearby lot. The boss of the factory was a big burly fellow who ruled the apprentices with an iron hand. When the whistle blew at one o'clock he would accept no excuses from the boys who were a few minutes late.

One afternoon Sullivan was so taken up with his ball playing that he did not hear the factory whistle and was about ten minutes late when he came back to the shop. With no word of warning the boss rushed at John L. like a cyclone, clouted him in the face, and kicked him in the body. Like an infuriated tiger Sullivan turned, and shooting out his mighty right fist he landed on the boss's jaw, sending the latter flying through a window into the yard.

Sullivan lost his job, but it was not long after that he came to be known as "the strong boy." The first time he ever put on a pair of boxing gloves was at a variety entertainment, in the Dudley Street Opera House, in Roxbury, Mass. John attended the show not expecting to take any part in it. But it so happened that as a muscular young man named Scannel came on the stage and announced that he was ready to meet anybody in the house, some of Sullivan's friends induced him to accept the challenge. So after a parley John climbed over the footlights. He had no boxing togs with him, but just pulled off his coat, rolled up his shirt sleeves and drew on the gloves.

Sullivan and Scannel went at it hammer and tongs. In a mixup John received a terrific blow on the back of his head. His eyes flashed fire, and he came back at his antagonist with a punch so hard that Scannel was knocked clean over the piano which was near at hand. That settled Scannel and also started Sullivan on his pugilistic career. From that night on his sole ambition was to become a champion fighter.

THE FIRST AIRMAN

The true inventor of aerial navigation was Lieutenant, afterwards General Meusnier, a prodigy, who was made a member of the Academie des Sciences at the age of 29 on account of his work in aerostation, and was killed at the siege of Mayence in 1793. He was a true scientific initiator. Through not following the lines he laid down aerial navigation lost a century groping about fatuously and conducting experiments absolutely without method. He elaborated all the laws governing the stability of an airship, and his designs and calculations are preserved in the French War Office in the shape of drawings and mathematical formulas. He not only evolved the ballonnet, he originated the triangular suspension system today considered imperative and universally adopted, and the "revolving oars" or the screw propeller (1784), now used for driving steamships as well, and he indicated the point at which the screw should be installed. Passing with bare mention over Giffard's balloon (1852), the first dirigible, run by the dangerous steam engine, near the gas, and Dupuy de Lome's improvements on this (1872), and the Tissandier balloon, driven by electric motor (1883), we come to the dirigible La France, built in 1884-85 by Captain Renard and Captain Krebs. This balloon is indisputably the starting point of practical aerial navigation, and it has served as the model for all who have followed.

NA-DRU-CO Tasteless Cod Liver Oil Compound

There is no question as to the very high value of Cod Liver Oil, properly prepared and made digestible, as a "builder-up" for convalescents or those who are run-down.

Na-Dru-Co Tasteless Compound contains the valuable properties of the Cod Liver Oil without its disagreeable flavor. In fact, this preparation is decidedly pleasant to the taste. With Extract of Malt, Extract of Wild Cherry, and Hypophosphites of Lime, Soda, Potassium, Manganese and Iron added, it makes a combination that puts an edge on the appetite—aids digestion—invigorates the nerves—relieves and helps to cure affections of the throat and lungs — and generally builds up strength and restores health.

For puny, delicate children there is probably no better "builder-up" than Na-Dru-Co Tasteless Cod Liver Oil Compound. 102

THE STRUGGLE FOR THE EARTH

Desire to Own the Earth Grew from the Individual, to Families, Clans, Nations, and Now We Battle in Batches

The origin of man is wrapt in obscurity. We cannot tell whether we all sprang from one stock, or whether there were two or a hundred human beings evolved simultaneously. If the latter be the case, it would be more than interesting to know the first thoughts of the first man upon meeting another first man, says T. P.'s Weekly. We do not know what they were, nor can we ever know, but we can make a very shrewd guess. The thoughts that passed through that first man's head were probably these: "Hullo! something else here fashioned like myself, is there? I thought the Earth belonged to me. Everything seems to have been made for my convenience, and here is someone just like me, who, of course, will want to be joint-sharer, or possibly more than that. He is in my way. I want the Earth. I must hit him over the head forthwith."

Whereupon, doubtless, our other first man being by no means less ready for the fray, there was a determined set-to. It did not take these good people long to realise the fact that there were a lot of others all wanting the earth, but this did not damp their ardour, nor has it throughout the course of the centuries. They continued to want the earth; we continue to want the earth; but the fact that we reproduce ourselves in families, that families form clans, and clans form nations, has taught us the absurdity of wanting the earth individually, so we now strive for it in batches.

MUCH MONEY IN TOBACCO ASH

Ton of Tobacco Contains 400 lbs Valuable Mineral Constituents from the Soil Which Must Be Otherwise Replaced.

A writer in the Lancet, (England), says: "As everybody knows, the ash left on burning tobacco is considerable and, as a matter of fact, the mineral matter of the tobacco leaf frequently amounts to as much as a fifth part of its weight. Thus, a ton of tobacco leaf would yield four hundredweights of ash, which represents valuable mineral constituents withdrawn from the soil which have to be replaced by abundant manuring. It has been calculated that a ton of tobacco withdraws over a hundredweight of mineral constituents per acre of land. In 1901 the home consumption of tobacco in the United Kingdom was at the rate of two pounds per head, or a total of about 40,000 tons, which represents, at what is now a probably low computation, approximately 8,000 tons of ash annually committed to the winds or dissipated in some way or other. This would appear to be an astounding waste of material which must be of enormous value to the soil, considering that 75 per cent. consists of calcium and potassium salts and 15 per cent. of magnesium and sodium salts, including nearly 5 per cent. of the essential constituent to all plants—phosphoric acid. On the face of it there would seem to be a fortune in store for that individual who could devise a successful means for the collection of tobacco ash, and it is a great pity that so much valuable material should forever be lost to the soil without any attempt at direct restoration being made."

Eels for the Irish

When so many hard things are being said about the House of Lords it should be kept in mind that they have just affirmed the claim of certain Irishmen to the exclusive right to fish for eels in Lough Neagh for a period of five thousand years from July 1, 1905. It is an affirmation that raises an equiry as to whether or not the people of Ireland eat eels. Scots — even London Scots — never touch them, and a Scotch angler, catching an eel, promptly throws it away. Eels used to be associated with snakes, "and just as men of every race entertain an instinctive horror for snakes," writes Sir Herbert Maxwell, "so there remain traces of the same feeling about eels."

It seems somewhat unkind of Sir Herbert to state that most civilized races have overcome this long ago, and then to add that there exists among the Scots a strong and universal prejudice against eels.

Reducing a Prince's Weight

The Kaiser's second son, Prince Eitel Fritz, whose circumference is a source of worry to him, has adopted a new method for reducing weight. He has given up digging in the garden owing to the intense heat and goes every morning to the ferry across the River Havel, at Sakrow, near Potsdam. There he relieves the old ferryman, and for two hours works on a heavy float, which is pulled across on a chain by hand. His wife motors down about 8 o'clock to take him home.

On Saturday the Crown Prince motors a long way round on his way to Berlin in order to have himself and his car ferried over by his brother.

Princess Eitel has started a crusade against wearing birds' feathers in hats and has signed a pledge never to wear ostrich feathers, egrets or birds of paradise.

Teacher: "Tommy, how would you punctuate this sentence, 'Willie, while going down the street, dropped a piece of pie, and'"—

Tommy (quickly): "I'd make a dash after the pie."

Because New York street car employes often need the assistance of the police and are unable to leave their cars to find officers, the police commissioners will supply them with police whistles.

THE HERPICIDE
GIRL IS THANKFUL

I am always grateful for real blessings, and I know of nothing that I need to be more thankful for than Newbro's Herpicide. Thousands of ladies not only in the United States but all over the world, feel the same way about it. To this wonderful scalp and hair remedy, they owe their soft, long, beautiful hair.

Mary J. Terry, of Lorejoy, Ill., writes: "My hair came out until there was just a scanty cover for the scalp. I tried everything I ever heard of or read about until finally I used Herpicide. There is nothing like it. My head is now covered with new hair. I shall forever praise Herpicide.

Most hair troubles come from dandruff. Newbro's Herpicide removes this dandruff by killing the germ which causes it. It also stimulates a flow of blood which nourishes the follicles. The scalp being healthy, the hair does not come out and the new hair is allowed to grow.

There are other preparations which they say are "just as good" as Herpicide. It is not advisable to try them. Instead of doing any good they may do positive harm.

No one is ever disappointed in Herpicide. The results are always the same, always satisfactory, as indicated by the fact that Herpicide has been sold for years and has thousands of satisfied friends. It is the only genuine, original, dandruff germ destroyer. There is nothing "just as good."

One dollar size bottles are sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

Applications at good barber shops. Send 10c. in postage for sample and book to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent, Belleville.

REMARKABLE TIME PIECES

Men Who Have Exercised Their Genius in the Production of Queer Clocks and Watches.

A most extraordinary chronometer is the result of the patience and ingenuity of a French clock-maker. The construction of this time-piece which contains nine hundred and seventy-seven parts and cost about $4,000, consumed the maker's time for a number of years.

On the case are shown the signs of the zodiac. On the main dial, in addition to the usual characters to indicate hours, minutes and seconds, are seen divisions with reference to time in years, months, and days, not to speak of features to indicate the phases of the moon, the seasons solestices, equinoxes, and other astronomical records.

Then, too, there are large and small gongs, together with a diminutive carillon of three notes for sounding purposes. On the lesser minute dial are 225 stars of the Boreal and 200 of the southern hemisphere; time at 125 different cities of the world, times of sunrise and sunset, and a thermometer and barometer.

Since first men began to construct time-pieces there have almost always been those delighting to exercise their genius in the making of queer clocks and watches. In China they tell of such an inventor who lived forty-five centuries ago. This was Hwang-Ti, who is said to have devised the water-clock. The Chinese honor the name of Hwang-Ti as that of the greatest mechanical genius that ever lived. There was a Chinese emperor, too, who excelled in the clock-making line. This royal inventor, who is rather vaguely assigned to the fourteenth century, is said to have constructed an extraordinary time-piece, for which three toy temples served as bases. At the top of these temples there was placed a box of works. In the middle temple were shown figures of fairies, each carrying the sign of one of the hours.

SIR WILLIAM VAN HORNE
One of Canada's Great Railroad Builders.

It appears that the side temples were dedicated to the sun and moon, respectively, and that they were given over to miniature genii, whose dwelling-places were connected with the central structure by bridges. Without the temple were placed the images of two gods standing before drums.

On the hour the quiet of the temple was broken by the action of the gods striking the drums, and there appeared a fairy with her hour sign. At the same time from the temples of the sun and moon genii wended their way across the bridges, for the purpose, apparently, of ascertaining the time from the fairies, after which proceeding they returned to report to their fellows. Chinese say that the name of the emperor who devised the characteristic conceit was Shun-te.

To Clean Decanters

Port wine decanters are often very troublesome to clean, especially after the wine has stood in them for a time. A very good way is to wash them out with a little pearlash and warm water, adding a spoonful or two of fresh-slaked lime, then shake the bottle well.

LIGHTING UP MAN'S INSIDE

Advance of Science is Such that Medical Men Can Now Light Up a Patient's Internals and Spy Out Trouble.

The interior of the human body is no longer dark to the physician's eye. Its most mysterious recesses may be lighted up so that he can see what ails it or what foreign objects are concealed there. This is done by the science called endoscopy.

The luminous sources are very powerful electric lamps, either fixed on the operator's forehead by means of a wide band or contained in the instrument itself.

The instruments of extraction consist of hooks, of pincers at various angles, and of electro-magnets for attracting foreign bodies of metal.

To-day endoscopy gives us an opportunity to see, not the shadow, but the thing itself; it enables us to ascertain the nature of this foreign body, whether it is free or encysted, whether the walls of the conduit are wounded.

A few years ago the physician was usually in doubt and often in despair. When certain means of doubtful value had been tried, such as emetics, holding the patients head downward, slapping his body, and administering thick pastes intended to carry the foreign body down into the stomach, the prudent physician ceased his efforts. Some more daring ones introduced at random instruments such as hooks or "umbrellas," and made vain and dangerous attempts that were more apt to be fatal to the patient than to bring up the foreign body.

Other surgeons, still more enterprising, proposed to reach the oesophagus or bronchial tubes by cutting through the chest — an elegant operation doubtless, but not of encouraging results, the mortality being one hundred per cent.

At present, thanks to endoscopy in the hands of a skilful operator, we have a rational, sure and safe method of treatment.

New "Far West" Location

A Canadian Pacific Railway Official who has just returned from a trip to the Pacific Coast states that there will be undoubtedly a big rush of settlers to the Windermere Valley next year, a district that is being rapidly opened up. The Company, it is stated, will have forty miles of road into the valley in operation next year, and with these transportation facilities at their command, new settlers will find the district a good one in which to settle. The land of the Windermere Valley is singularly free from rock, and is composed of rich fertile soil, with sufficient timber for the construction of buildings and for domestic purposes. Water for irrigation purposes is plentiful and easily obtained and the climate of the Valley is remarkably free from extremes of heat and cold.

With Good Intent.

"I am going over to comfort Mrs. Brown," said Mrs. Jackson to her daughter Mary. "Mr. Brown hanged himself in their attic last night."

"Oh mother, don't go. You know you always say the wrong thing."

"Yes; I'm going, Mary. I'll just talk about the weather. That's a safe enough subject."

Mrs. Jackson went over on her visit of condolence. "We have had rainy weather lately, haven't we, Mrs. Brown?" she said.

"Yes," replied the widow; "I haven't been able to get a week's wash dried."

"Oh," said Mrs. Jackson, "I shouldn't think you would have any trouble; you have such a nice attic to hang things in!"

To Hold a Cigar

There is only one right way to hold a cigar, that is if the smoker has an especially easy chair in which he is liable to fall asleep while enjoying the fragrant weed. If one holds a cigar between the first and second fingers, the act of falling asleep will invariably cause the hold to become relaxed, and the cigar will drop from the fingers, to the imminent danger of the clothes or the carpet. That is how not to do it. But if the seductive roll be held between the second and third finger, the cigar would still be found safely grasped in the hand even if the sleeper did not wake up until the "morning after."

Big Enough to Work.

Artists do never look alike, any more than grocers or doctors do. Nevertheless, many persons are surprised at an artist who is not small, anaemic, delicate of feature, and decorated with a flowing necktie. Such a person lately visited the studio of a certain artist in one of our big cities.

The man in question wears a big red beard, and stands six feet and some inches high. His shoulders are broad, and his muscles hard from continued exercise. A woman entered his studio and asked for the artist.

"That's him, standing over there," the attendant said.

The woman looked over to where the artist stood, towering like an ancient viking, and gasped. "Why," she whispered, in surprise, "he's big enough to work, isn't he?"

The violent-tempered manager was lecturing his clerk.

"Look here, sir," he thundered, "this won't do! What on earth do you mean by making such wretched figures? They're a perfect disgrace! Look at that 5, it's just like a 3!"

"I—er—I beg pardon, sir," replied the trembling clerk; "but you see, sir, the figure is intended for a 3!"

"A 3?" roared the manager. "Why, you idiot, it looks just like a 5!"

HATS AS PICTURE FRAMES

A Man's Point of View

The other day a famous man was sitting in the window seat of a fashionable restaurant, watching fair women pass to and fro, as his sisters discussed the fashions and incidentally ate more chocolate cakes than were good for them.

"What puzzles me," he said at last, after a long silence, "is why pretty women should try so hard to make themselves into ugly ones by wearing hideous headgear. If they would only regard their hats as frames for their faces, and not merely as evidences of wealth or of their milliners' skill, they would not be such blots upon the landscape."

He indicated as he spoke two women who had just passed. The delicate face of the one was literally buried under an imposing structure of purple, which turned her natural paleness into a ghastly white, while the other sported a fearful erection of blue and green that made her look grotesque. Without their hats, both these women would have been "good to look at," with them they were almost monstrosities. A man's point of view is always worth seeing, and so, dear girls, when you next go shopping, remember that your "picture hat" will be a failure if it does not make your face a picture, too.

FAD AND FANCIES

New evening sets of scarf and muff just received from abroad are in all the delicate tints of the rainbow and have hints of ostrich in their fluffy marabout depths.

Fashionable tailors declare that the models brought by them from Paris for copying purposes are so tight the wearer walks with extreme difficulty.

King's blue, black and white form the present fashionable color combination.

There is delightful evidence of a few inches added length to the new autumn coats

The handsome ribbons of satin and silk background against which stands out wonderfully natural velvet roses and floral designs are to play a conspicuous part in the coming season's millinery.

Broad hats of soft felt may be worn in an endless number of becoming angles.

Black velvet next to the face, either in a hat or in a ribbon worn next the throat, is very becoming to the average woman, whether she is a blonde or brunette. The soft black background has a softening effect upon the skin. Black velvet should be used in this way by the older women who wish to disguise the flight of time.

The pleated ruffle which has become very fashionable is considered an extravagance by some women, as it is difficult to launder and still more difficult to pleat successfully. The woman who is wise has the dainty accessory washed and ironed and then takes the frill to a pleating shop where it is turned out like new for a few cents.

[illegible] Mantelets.

Very slowly long scarves are dev oping into mantles, and they are un doubtedly more useful in this form I saw a charming one this week painted chiffon over plain mauve chi fon, edged with a ruche of very so black chiffon. It formed a wide fich over the shoulders, was caught int the waist behind by a buckle of ol silver embroidery like that with whic the buckle was made. Another prett idea was carried out in mole colore satin and cerise. Three bands of tin, the middle one being cerise, wer shaped round the shoulders, formin a point behind, and in front the crossed at the waist and fell mor than half-way down the skirt, the ends being cut so as to fall in point Others are just scarves drawn int motives of metal embroidery or band between the shoulders, and again a the waist in front, but in all new models there is a suggestion of the mantle, and the quite straight scar is demode.

Pat, roll out, and bak twelve minutes in a hot oven in but tered tins. Split and spread cut su faces with butter. Sprinkle washe and hulled strawberries with suga place on back of range until warme crush slightly, and put between and on top of shortcakes. Cover wit whipped cream, sweetened and flavor ed with vanilla, and garnish with few choice strawberries that have been reserved for the purpose.

World's Deepest Hole.

The deepest hole in the world, u to date, is the boring begun ten y ago at Cunchow, Silesia, with the object of attaining a depth of 25 metres, and which has now reache a depth of 2240 metres (7349 feet The bore is 44 centimetres in diame at the top, and diminishes pro gressively to 5 centimetres. Measure ments of temperature have been mad regularly. At 2220 meters the tem perature is 83.4 degrees C. (182 de grees F.). This gives a "geotherm degree" (amount of descent corre ponding to a rise of temperature of degree C.) of 31.8 metres. The chang of temperature does not proceed un formly. In fact an interesting te perature inversion occurs between the depths of 640 and 730 metre where the temperature actually fal with descent, about 2 degrees.

Giants Among Insects.

While the study of entomolo (science of insects) will lead one observe many minute and micro scopical objects, all insects are n small. In size the Hercules beetle probably one of the largest insects existence, being about seven inch long, including his snout. He is native of the West Indies, where must look a most formidable foe the insect world, though his pro minent proboscis seems to be used chiefly to "lock horns" with the adversaries of his own order on Among insects are found many stances of structures present in mal and wanting in the female of the sam species. Many of them have enlarg jaws, some with horns and som antler-like projections with which combat their foe, and probably ma a desperate battle has been foug in insect life that would be worthy record by some Homeric bard.

MYSTERY OF THE AURORA

[illegible] Experiments Prove the Borealis is Due to Electrified Sun Particles Playing About a Magnetized Earth.

That marvelous and beautiful spectacle, the aurora borealis, has hitherto been a complete puzzle to scientists. Until recently it was impossible even to make a photograph of the aurora.

It is certain that there is a connection between the aurora and electrical disturbances on earth, for the former never passes without the latter. During a great auroral display of September 25, 1909, telegraphic communication was interrupted all over the world.

Svante Arrhenius, the great Swedish scientist, has now put forward the theory that the aurora is the result of electrical particles thrown off by the sun. To test this theory M. Birkeland has directed an electrical discharge of the kind described against a globe and succeeded in reproducing a miniature aurora.

The theory of Professor Arrhenius is that the sun is continually discharging ionized gases. They condense and form particles which are electrified negatively. These are thrown out all over the universe by the force of radiation.

These particles emit cathode rays similar to those which produce X-rays. They enter into combination with terrestrial electric currents, are attracted to the poles in accordance with the laws of magnetism and give rise to the aurora, just as the cathode rays in a Crookes' tube produce a beautiful light.

M. Birkeland directed a powerful mass of cathode rays upon a small magnetic globe, representing the earth: It was covered with a coating of cyanide of platinum and barium to make visible the places struck by the cathode rays. A blaze of brilliant electrical illumination formed itself over the top of the globe, representing the North Pole, or over the bottom of the globe, representing the South Pole. The place where the illumination concentrated itself varied according to the manner in which the experimenter manipulated the cathode rays. It showed itself slightly between the poles. Altogether it was a close reproduction of the way the auroral lights are distributed over the earth.

A Delightful System

The young postmaster of a village was hard at work in his office when a gentle tap was heard upon the door, and in stepped a blushing maiden of sixteen with a money order which she desired cashed.

She handed it, with a bashful smile, to the official, who, after examining it, gave her the money. At the same time he asked her if she had read what was written on the margin of the order.

"No, I have not," she replied, "for I canot make it out. Will you please read it for me."

The young postmaster read as follows:—"I send you ten shillings and a dozen kisses."

Glancing at the bashful girl he said, "Now, I have paid you the money I suppose you want the kisses."

"Yes," she said, "if he has sent me any kisses, I want them, too."

It is hardly necessary to say that the balance of the order was promptly paid, and in a scientific manner. On reaching home the delighted maiden remarked to her mother:—

"Mother, this post-office system of ours is a great thing, developing more and more every year, and each new feature seems to be the best. Jimmy sent me a dozen kisses along with the money order, and the postmaster gave me twenty!"

Bitter Experience

Bitter experience is a wonderful teacher, as is proved in the case of the young lady who had often been told that she ought to wear glasses but had neglected, or refused to do so.

There was a most determined look in her eyes, however, as she marched into the optician's shop.

"I want a pair of glasses immediately," she said. "Good, strong ones. I won't be without them for another day!"

"Good, strong ones?"

"Yes, please. I was out in the country yesterday, and I made a very painful blunder, which I have no wish to repeat."

"Indeed! Mistook an entire stranger for an old friend, perhaps?"

"No, nothing of the sort. I mistook a humble-bee for a blackberry."

DUNNING A KING

King George of Greece has a little black dog, which, like all dogs in all countries, is subject to a tax. When the usual advice asking for payment of this tax was sent to the King this year, it either got lost among his private papers or his secretary omitted to reply to it. At any rate, after a fairly long delay a second advice on a paper of different colour was sent to the Royal dog owner. Still no payment was made.

The third advice is usually delivered by hand. Great, therefore was the surprise of King George when he was informed that a bailiff wished to speak to him regarding the non payment of his taxes. The bailiff was introduced into the Royal presence and began reading a long rigmarole demanding that "His Majesty George I. of Greece should pay to the Royal Office of Taxes appointed by His Majesty George I. of Greece, etc."

In the middle of this the King, recovering from his surprise, drew out of his pocket a ten franc piece and paid the tax and the extras. And when the bailiff had gone he gave his secretary a reprimand worthy of the occasion.

He was a good errand boy, Mrs. Chris Davis, 50, of New York, admits, but Christopher, 18, doesn't suit her as a husband, so he is going back to

WHY SNIFFLE AND SNEEZE WITH CATARRHAL COLD?

BY BREATHING THE HEALING VAPOR OF CATARRHOZONE YOU GET RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

Every second person that you meet seems to have a sneeze and stuffed feeling in the forehead and nostrils. To cure promptly, say in half an hour there is nothing worth using except Catarrhozone. You inhale its balsamic vapor, and feel as if you were among the Norway pines. This is because Catarrhozone contains a healing medicine, light as pine air, which is breathed straight into the lungs and bronchial tubes. Away goes the cold, sneezing and catarrhal cough cease, bronchial irritaton stops; in short, you are cured of catarrh by a pleasant, simple remedy, free from sedatives and irritants.

That Catarrhozone is a swift, certain means of destroying colds and catarrh is proved by the following statement of Mr. Pulos, one of Brockville's best known merchants:

"In the fall of 1903," writes Mr. Pulos, under date of June 10th, 1910, "I contracted a very severe cold which developed inot Catarrh. At that time I was living in New York State and treated with four different physicians, who afforded me no relief. On coming to Brockville I was advised by a friend to try Catarrhozone. I bought the dollar outfit, and was gratified by the results. I was completely cured by Catarrhozone, and have used it since to checks a cold with unfailing results. It is the grandest medicine in existence, and I hope my testimony will be of some use to other fellow-sufferers."

(Signed) George Pulos."

PRUSSIAN POLICE

An Interesting Description of the Officials Who Enforce the Laws With an Iron Hand

The Prussian policeman is an interesting personage. On first acquaintance he usually inspires the visitor to Germany with a sense of awe. This is hardly wonderful, seeing that his own fellow-countrymen stand in considerable awe of him. But in the case of the stranger it takes time to realize that the stately and commanding figure, adorned with a uniform closely assimilating to that worn in the army, who struts along clanking a sword is that of a policeman.

The Prussian policeman belongs to the great and honored official class. He is not a public servant—there are no "public servants" in Germany—nor is he anybody's servant: he is the Kaiser's. He is a State official. In his sphere he is absolute, an autocrat.

The Prussian policeman not only looks a soldier, he is one—every inch of him. There are reasons, physical and other, which exempt some men from military service, but he who has been exempted can never be a policeman. As a matter of fact the great bulk of the Prussian police have served in the army for considerably longer than the compulsory term. A great many members are men who have been non-com. officers in the army, and they possess the virtues and the limitations of their class. The iron military discipline of the German Army has become part of their nature. Amenable only to their superior officers, they recognise no other authority.

The Prussian is attended by policemen and police enactments from the cradle to the grave. In the realms alike of Church and State the arm of the policeman falls heavily on the shoulders of the citizen. It is the policeman who enforces—and that with characteristic severity—the taxes which the law permits the Churches to lay on their nominal members. If a man secedes from the Church he must make an affidavit to that effect, and have it countersigned by the police. From time to time he is called upon to satisfy the police as to his formal secession in order to escape the Church levy. When a girl seeks to enter domestic service she must furnish the police with full information regarding herself, and obtain from them a service book, which contains among other things, a description of her personal appearance, after the manner of police notices of missing criminals in this country. Every time she changes her situation her book must be countersigned by the police.

Nothing, perhaps, throws such a strong light on the position and power of the Prussian policeman as the high place he occupies at public meetings. There he sits, a conspicuous figure on the platform, and if a speaker ventures to make an observation which he regards as objectionable he may in his absolute discretion dissolve the meeting. His word is law.

BELATED WEDDING PRESENT

Massive Silver Table Service for the German Crown Prince

The Crown Prince and Princess of Germany are about to receive a truly magnificent wedding present. It is true that it reaches them about five years after their marriage, but in point of beauty and value the gift is said to be one which any ordinary young couple would be cheerfully willing to wait for. It is a massive silver table service for use on state occasions, and comprises a variety of decorative pieces, including huge candelabra a meter high, heavy punch-bowls, and a set of sculptured figures representing the seasons. The gift is presented by the cities of Prussia, which ordered it at the time of the Crown Prince's wedding. For five years some of the best artists, sculptors and silversmiths of Germany have been at work upon it, and the individual pieces, when completed, have been stowed away in the vaults of the Reichsbank. The service will be pre-

AT THE BASE

Advise to Young Baseball Players

A ball player's most valuable asset is his ability to hit the horsehide. Great hitters are born, not made, but any youngster can improve his batting average by experimenting with different methods.

One of the greatest faults with players just breaking in is their fear of the opposing pitchers, a timidness when they begin to come across rather fast. This results in most youngsters "pulling away" when they strike at a ball.

When you cease this "pulling" your batting will improve. Remember that the pitcher is not trying to hit you, but is working to put them over the plate. You are there to hit the ball, not to think about your own safety.

Many good hitters stand very close to the plate, and step toward the pitcher when he delivers the ball. George Stone, ex-champian batsman of the American league, and one of the greatest batsman the game ever developed, used to hug the plate, and Wee Willie Keller, who for fourteen consecutive years hit over the 300 mark, and in 1897-8 led the National league, hugs the plate, and the various umpires frequently are compelled to force this famous little outfielder now with Joe Kelley's Toronto Eastern leaguers, back a few inches from the plate.

Maybe you don't "pull" and still cannot hit. If this is the case try a different method. Probably you grasp your bat too close to the handle. Shorten your hold on it; in other words choke your stick, stand up close and eight times out of ten you will meet the ball, and if providence has [illegible] you that big, grand and valuable [illegible] essential to success on the ball field, speed, you will obtain many a nice little hit that under your old method would be an out. Then there are other ways to experiment. Try standing a little further in front of the plate or a little further behind it. Again you may swing too hard. Change until you discover your most successful style.

If you cannot hit a pitcher the first time you come up, try to bunt the ball the next time, providing conditions in the game will warrant such a play. You can thus get a line on his curves which will probably enable you to drive [illegible] the next time up. Keep your [illegible] always with you and the results [illegible] to you, providing you possess any ability in the profession you have chosen for a living.

STILL IN [illegible] GOLF CHAMPION

Wm. W. Sheehan.

The youngest golf champion on this continent is William M. Sheehan, assistant sporting editor of the Des Moines Daily News.

Sheehan took up golf for his health when he was 16. At 19 he has health and enough silver cups, medals and fobs to stock a silversmith's business.

Sheehan captured the state championship at 17; he was semi-finalist the next year and champion agian this year. He looks like another Chick Evans.

Proof that his title is not an empty honor was shown by Sheehan's playing in the western amateur tournament last year at Minneapolis, and the trans-Mississippi at Denver. In the latter he was runner-up to Harry Legg and in the western he won the consolation flight.

Sheehan's driving is brilliant and his putting is uncanny. He plays for big game generally, but has won the last three city tournaments to remind the boys he is still on earth.

A Cricket Record.

Cricket has its Lajoies, Wagners and Cobbs, who are feared by the bowlers as much as the famed trio of ball tossers are feared by pitchers. C J. B. Wood of Leicester, starred in a record-breaking performance, carrying his bat through two innings, scoring 214 without losing the wicket. No English batsman has scored two separate not-out hundreds in a match before, and it has been done but once in Australia, by Gehrs in the season of 1905-6.

Ask any spinster why she never married and she will frankly admit that it wasn't because she never had an opportunity.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

A QUIET THANKSGIVING.

Since Saturday everything has been exceptionally quiet in police circles, not an arrest having been made and only two unimportant calls responded to.

FOOT BALL YESTERDAY.

Three games of football were played here yesterday. In the morning the Mutes defeated the Y.M.C.A. at the Institute grounds by 3 goals to 2. In the afternoon on Albert College campus, the Collegians won from O. B. C. by 4 to 0, and from a city team 2-0.

THANKSGIVING AT ST. ANDREW'S

The Young People's Society in connection with St. Andrew's Church last evening commemorated Thanksgiving by having a special entertainment in the Sunday School rooms of the church, which was well attended. The programme presented was as follows.

Instrumental—Miss Strong and Davis. Duet—Mrs. Carruthers and Mrs. Swales. Solo—Miss Wilson. A talk on Social Evenings by Rev. A. S. Kerr.

Fortune telling by shadow was an entertaining feature of the programme

WARD OF GENERAL?

A petition which has been signed by many electors of the city will be presented to the city Council this evening, asking for the submission of a by-law to reduce the number of Aldermen from 21 to 10 and have the latter number elected by the votes of the whole city. That there is a desire to have a change, there can be no doubt, as no person to whom the petition was presented refused to sign same. It the Council assents to the by-law, it will be voted upon before the municipal elections, so as to come into force next year.

CONSERVATIVE GATHERING.

That the Conservatves of Belleville are fuly awake to the importance of the issues to be decided in the coming contest was evidenced last night at the meeting which was held of the electors of Foster, Samson and Ketcheson wards for the selection of delegates to the convention which is to be held here on Monday next for the nomination of a candidate for the Legislature The meeting was large and businesslike, and Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., who was present, gave an account of his stewardship, his address being heartily applauded

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

Mrs. John Clapp, who resides in Thurlow, near Thrasher's Corners, was yesterday the victim of a runaway accident, which might have been of a more serious nature than it proved to be. It appears that the lady was driving a horse attached to a buggy near the village of Canifton, when the animal took fright and ran away. Mrs. Clapp was thrown out of the vehicle, sustaining an ugly wound over the eye and was bruised about the body. The horse was stopped before doing any particular damage. The unfortunate lady wase subsequently driven home.

FUNERAL IN AMELIASBURG.

On Saturday afternoon the remains of the late Miss Helen Wallbridge of Ameliasburg township were consigned to the tomb. The burial services of the Anglican church were conducted at the residence of Mr. T. Wallbridge, by the Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, of this city. Interment took place at the Belleville cemetery. The bearers were four brothers and two cousins of the deceased.

APPLES ARE PROFITABLE.

Mr. David Coyle, fruit merchant, of Colborne, paid Mr. H. G. Bleecker, of Sidney for apples from five acres, $674.90; windfalls sold to evaporator, $72.00, a total of $746.90. Mr. Bleecker also retained seven barrels of apples for his own use.

At a recent meeting of the T. A. S. Dramatic Club, the following officers were elected:

Hon. President—Mrs. James Grant.
President—Rev. J. A. Meehan.
Vice-President—C. C. St. Charles.
Treasurer—W. K. Wims.
Secretary—J. E. Lally.

A meeting of the club will be held in a short time, when a first-class play will be selected for presentation in the near future.

HALLOWEEN TO-NIGHT.

To-night will be the eve of All Saints' Day, commonly called Halloween, and no doubt there will be the usual joyous celebration by the youth of both sexes. The Inteligencer counsels all its host of young readers against allowing their fun to degenerate into wanton mischief.

DUST TO DUST.

The funeral of the late Mrs. S. S. Moore took place yesterday and was largely attended. Services at the residence on Charles street were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Bishop, pastor of Bridge St. Church. The floral tributes were many and beautiful in design. At the Belleville cemetery the remains were laid to rest. The bearers were: Messrs. H. Pringle, F. E. O'Flynn, J.H.P. Young, E. F. Dickens, C. N. Sulman, and H. J. Clarke.

THAT POST OFFICE WALK.

The question has repeatedly been asked: "Why does not the contractor proceed with the work, and complete the repairs to the sidewalk on Bridge street in front of the Post Office?" On enquiry we learn that there was every prospect of the old job, that is, the construction of a walk that would have to be rebuilt in a year or two. Whether this would be the result of the work done by the contractor or the government conditions upon which he is doing the work, we know not. One thing about it is commendable. Mr. Porter promptly had the work stopped until some competent overseer was appointed to see there is no repetition of the old job, which was a disgrace to the city. Let's have a creditable walk, or none at all.

A six foot seam of coal of fine quality has been found at Nelson (Glamorgan).

MEN MUST HAVE COOKS.

Quoting a Philosopher, Court Decides to Let Dr. Leigh's Cook Go.

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—"A man can get along without many things, but he can't get along without a cook." remarked Judge O'Sullivan in General Sessions yesterday as he suspended sentence upon Sophie Acker, who pleaded guilty to selling cocaine. The woman was employed by Dr. S. J Leigh, of 152 Madison Avenue, and yesterday Dr. Leigh appeared in court and begged for clemency. After thinking the matter over Judge O'Sullivan said:

"A philosopher has said:
We may do without clothes,
We may do without books,
But civilized man
Can't do without cooks.

"So, Sophie," said the Judge, "I will suspend sentence upon you, as Dr. Leigh wants you to cook for him Hereafter let the doctor dispense cocaine, but you attend to the cooking."

A QUIET WEDDING.

At the home of Mrs. A. Abraham, grandmother of the bride, Elmer St., at noon to-day, Pearl Irene Ketcheson daughter of Mr. and Mrs Henry Ketcheson, of Prince Edward County, was united in marriage to Ed. P. Austin, of Plunkett, Sask., by Rev. A. R. Sanderson. The bride was given away by her father and was unattended. She wore a handsome travelling suit of navy blue broadcloth. A sumptuous dinner was provided and many guests from a distance were present, including Mrs. (Rev.) Campbell, of Winnipeg; Mr. and Mrs. Ostrom and Mr. Brown, of Montreal. The happy couple left on the evening train for Peterborough, and on their return will leave in a couple of weeks for the West, whence they will carry the best wishes of their many friends. The bride was the recipient of many useful and handsome presents.

JUDGE UPHOLDS RIGHTS OF WOMAN TIPPLERS

May Frequent Saloons If They Wish, Chicago Court Maintains.

CHICAGO, Oct. 30.—"A woman has as much right in a saloon as a man" said Judge Edward L. Walker in the Harrison street court. He discharged 11 women who were arrested in saloons in the Loop district.

"Why don't you get the women that go to the fine hotel cafes?" exclaimed the judge to the detectives who had arraigned the woman. "Because a woman is not as well dressed as some who frequent the better wine rooms makes no difference in the case. I will discharge these women."

Four of the women demanded jury trials, but when they heard of the court's ruling they withdrew the demand.

LEADER MACKAY HAS RESIGNED

His Party Disunited—Resents Imputations Made on His Personal Character

TORONTO, Oct. 31.—After an all night caucus in the Prince George Hotel, A. G. MacKay, Liberal leader, resigned to-day and his resignation was accepted by the Ontario Reform Association in session to-day. Mr MacKay gives as his reason for resigning that a certain action has been launched reflecting on his personal honor, and at this juncture the case might injure the Liberal party were he to remain leader. His successor will be appointed to-day.

RESCUED THE FALLEN, BUT FELL HIMSELF

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—The Rev. David Daniel Lewis, colored, who raises the fallen at his Rescue Mission at 83 West 134th Street, fell himself into the hands of the police yesterday afternoon. He has had a great many falls besides that, according to Frank L. Arnold, Secretary of the Alliance Against Accident Fraud, who preferred a charge of attempted grand larceny against the negro preacher. Mr. Arnold says he has investigated the career of the colored uplifter and discovered that he has, for the last two years, been making quite a business of falling, in various cities, always from street cars, invariably following his fall with a call for damages from the companies.

Lewis is known in the Harlem negro colony as Brother Lewis, Mr. Arnold says, but to the Claims Departments of street railway companies of this and other cities he is known under the aliases of Murry Hill, Damon Lewis, Frank James, Lewis Thomas and N. A. James. His age, according to Mr. Arnold, has varied from 32 to 38 years, and as he grew older he grew wiser also, and fell more and harder—but always in the same place

The Rev. Brother Lewis, in his private capacity, apart from his business relations with the street railway companies, Mr. Arnold says, was once a missionary in the South, and collected considerable funds there for a church to be built in the Soudan. The subsequent prosperity of that church has not been inquired into. Lewis himself, however, came north and continued his missionary labors. He fitted up the parlor of the three-storey building at 83 West 134th Street as a church, with about fifty seats and an altar. He himself, with his wife and one child, occupied the rear of the floor as a dwelling. He wore and she laundered his clerical collars, white vests and white ties.

He was wearing a complete set of clerical clothes yesterday afternoon when Detective Mangan arrested him in a tailor shop at 133rd Street, near Lennox Avenue.

Mr. Arnold says that he has traced the colored preacher back to his native southland, through the railway claims agents in various cities there. He says that in 1909 alone Brother Lewis, under various names "fell" from street cars and applied for damages in Chattanooga, Nashville, Memphis, Washington, D.C., Atlanta and Macon, Ga. Photographs of him, sent to the claims agents in those cities, Mr. Arnold says, were identified by all of them. Just how much he collected from the companies Mr. Arnold says he has not yet learned, the claims agents in most part preferring to keep silent about transactions they handled ingloriously.

FORGER CONVICTED GIVEN SIX MONTHS

George Pringle, whose home is in the Township of Thurlow, will for the next six months be an inmate of the Central Prison, having been this morning found guilty of uttering a forged promissory note, and sentenced for the above term. It appears that Pringle made a bargain with a party named John Reid to purchase a team of horses from the latter for $130. Pringle gave a joint promissory note for the amount named, and the name of R. Pringle was on the note with George Pringle. R. Pringle was supposed to be a brother of George, but it transpired that the name was forged, as R. Pringle did not place his signature on the note The evidence was conclusive in the case and the accused was found guilty and immediately sentenced by the Magistrate. DEATH'S CALL

CHARLES W. BABCOCK.

Death came suddenly on Sunday morning to Mr. Charles W. Babcock, who resided at Rossmore. On Saturday he was in the city, and at night attended to his duties as watchman on the bay bridge. Upon reaching home at an early hour he complained of feeling ill and in a few minutes expired. Heart disease was the cause of death. Deceased, who was 54 years of age, was born in Ameliasburg Township, where he had resided all his life. He was a man who was much respected and had a large circle of friends. Mr. Babcock was a member of the Methodist church. A widow and a family of four children survive.

MRS. W. A. SHEPARD.

Mrs. Henrietta Augusta Shepard widow of the late W. A. Shepard, who was for many years connected with The Intelligencer and was later manager of the Mail Job Printing Co. and who survived her husband by 17 years, passed peacefully away at the family residence, 652 Shaw street, Toronto, at 2 a.m. yesterday. Mrs. Shepard was 75 years and 10 months of age and was a daughter of the late Jacob Cook, of Cooksville, Ont.

All the remaining members of the family were present with the exception of Dr. Charles A. Shepard, of Needles, Cal. They were: Mrs. Henrietta E. Shepard, of Toronto; Mrs Ben Mitchell and daughter, of Battleford, Sask., daughter and five sons; Dr. Arthur E. Shepard, Los Angeles, Cal., W. A. Shepard, Borden, Sask., Fred C. Shepard, Borden, Sask., Miles Washington and George Shepard, of Toronto.

The announcement of Mrs. Shepard's death will be greatly regretted by a large circle of intimate friends here, as well as in Toronto.

Great expectations often breed great disappointments.

It's a pity we can't convert our wild oats into breakfast food.

The hardest thing that can be said about any man is that he is 'easy.'

CURRENT COMMENT

The Chinese Government cannot successfully "wage" war because the rebels have stolen their military chest.

Liberals are much better mannered than Conservatives. You don't see them quarreling for nominations for the Legislature.—Toronto Star.

The latter part of 1911 will go down to history as a record-breaker for elections. A general election in September, an Ontario election in December, and the municipal elections at the end of the year. Ye editor will be sick of exhorting his readers to vote early and shop early.—Brockville Times.

The officers who were in charge of the Niobe when she ran aground are to be court-martialled. Probably had the government not changed hands they would have been let off with not even a reprimand, since the accident happened when they were on a political misson. Things have changed since Jimmy crossed the Last Divide. —Kingston Standard.

The financial statement of the Dominion for the year ending 31st March last, shows a falling off in Post Office Savings Bank deposits of $168,898 as compared with the balance held on March 31, 1910. The withdrawals during the year exceeded the deposits by $1,855,973, while $1,686,074 was added for interest accrued, thus making a net decrease of $169,898.

The Grit papers are trying to make a point in favor of the dead and buried reciprocity project out of the fact that hogs are at present being sold for higher prices in the United States than they are in Canada. The existing state of affairs has arisen out of there being a surplus of hogs in Canada just now and a scarcity in the United States. But what about cheese?

Quebec Province has the unenviable record of having one of the highest death-rates in the world for tuberculosis. One of the causes ascribed for this state of affairs is the unsanitary conditions of many of the houses. The custom seems to prevail of keeping the houses closed up tight during the winter, so as to keep out the cold and keep in the heat. Quebec seems to be badly in need of a campaign of education as to the causes and the treatment of consumpton. It is shocking to learn that with fresh air so cheap and so plentiful there should be so much suffering for the lack of it.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

The Liberal newspapers are chuckling and poking fun at the Conservative newspapers because Earl Grey has just been assuring a distinguished audience in England that there was no annexionist sentiment in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's advocacy of reciprocity. The Liberal editors apparently fail to appreciate the fact that the laugh is on the Conservative side. That the late Governor-General had thought it necessary to defend Sir Wilfrid Laurier in England against suspicions of annexionist sentiment is hardly a matter for rejoicing for Liberals in Canada. On the contrary they should feel humiliation that their leader should have acted in such a way as to cause suspicion of his motives and sentiments.—Brockville Times.

During September the United States exported agricultural products to the value of $95,694,632, as compared with $47,452,500 in September 1910, and $81,461,764 in September 1909. For the nine months ended on September 30th the Republic exported $582,669,296 worth of agricultural products, including cotton, this sum comparing with $466,594,222 during the corresponding nine months of 1910, and with $512,582,138 for the like period of 1909. These figures show that so far this year the United States has been exporting farm products at the rate of $900,000,000 per annum, an increase of nearly fifty per cent. over last year. Clearly, the Republic has a growing surplus of farm stuff for sale abroad and clearly the Canadian farmer would have suffered had reciprocity gone into force on September 21st.—Toronto News.

The Post-Office Department has been notified that through the explosion of a lamp in a postal car on an Intercolonial Railway train on Oct. 23rd, 125 bags of mail were destroyed.

The Montreal Gazette says: It has been reported that the record of the Laurier Government and the Liberal party of late years could not have been so bad as was that of their predecessors because, while under former governments some crooks who robbed the public were put in jail, nothing of the kind occurred in late years. The end may not be yet. The retiring ministers did not lock and seal the jail doors."

The Laymen's Missionary Movement delegates were in deliberation in Calgary on the 26th October in the form of denominational rallies. Presbyterians, Methodist, Baptists and Congregationalists met in their respective churches, while the Anglican rally was held in Paget Hall. The main feature of the session of the Anglican rally was an address by R. A. Allen of Toronto, on the subject of "Our Task in Canada." The Bishop of Calgary presided and delivered an impressive address. There is no reason why all these Protestant bodies should not be together. The cause is the same.

There is nothing like having practical business men at the head of affairs as Canada has at the present moment. In an interview with J. C. McConachie, agent of the Children's Aid Society, in Kingston a day or two ago, Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary in the Ontario Government said that his department was considering a plan whereby worthless heads of families would be placed at work on the prison farm, paid for their labors and the proceeds sent to their families. Mr. Hanna also said it was possible that arrangements would be made in the eastern part of the Province for the taking care of men who would not support their families.

On Saturday last no less than five persons were injured in Toronto, owing to automobile recklessness, one of which proved fatal, and others are likely to terminate in the same way. Two of the drivers are now under arrest, and under bail, one at $10,000, and the other $2,000. The speed at which these autos are run through towns and cities should be limited to that at which horses are driven through crowded streets, and any infringement of the law should be punished, and that, too, severely. A verdict or two of manslaughter might put a stop to the crime; for such it is.

"THE KILTIES"

TRANS-CONTINENTAL TOUR

Final arrangements have been made for the famous "Kilties" band to open their transcontinental tour here on Wednesday, Nov. 15th. They will give two concerts in the Armouries under the auspices of the Daughters of the Empire and the Hospital Committee. This will be the first appearance of the "Kilties" since their triumphal tour round the world, and they will no doubt be greeted by a big audience.

Mr. John Hazza, formerly manager of Griffin's Opera House, has been engaged as general representative and will have charge of the advance work.

The "Kilties'" new private palace pullman car "Heather" arrived here to-day direct from the Pullman Car Works in Chicago and it is considered to be the finest car ever used in the theatrical business.

The opening of the transcontinental tour on the 15th, of November will mark the eleventh anniversary of the "Kilties" and will be the beginning of the seventeenth grand tour.

Only three towns in Canada will be visited this winter as the "Kilties" are booked for several important engagements in New York, Boston, and southern cities. However, the band will return to Canada again in the spring via Vancouver from California, thence across the great North-West for home.

Lucky for the Peasant

To her resemblance to the German Empress a peasant woman owes her present good fortune. Not only is she the Empress's counterpart in form and feature, but she was married on the same day as her illustrious double, and the dates of birth and sex of the Imperial children are those of her own. This extraordinary sequence of coincidences was brought to the notice of the Emperor, who not only stood godfather to the poor woman's baby daughter, but promised to provide for the family's future.

Queen Alexandra Has All the Letters of Condolence in Connection with Edward's Death

Queen Alexandra has carefully preserved all the letters of condolence her Majesty received on the death of the King, and these are now numbered among her most treasured possessions. The letters have been divided into categories, those from Royalties and intimate friends, and those from thousands of the late King's subjects not only in England, but in all parts of the Empire, many of them being quite poor people, and from little children. The letters have been carefully bound in plain, dark red calf, with a small crown on the cover. Queen Alexandra specially prizes those letters of sympathy which came from poor people, and though it was obviously impossible for her Majesty to reply to them all, during the first few months she wrote to several of these correspondents, thanking them for their kind sympathy.

CADET'S HEROIC EFFORT

Arthur Driver, a grandson of [illegible] officer who was on board the Victo[illegible] as midshipman when Nelson fell at Trafalgar, has just performed an act of extreme bravery.

Driver is a cadet on board the Naval School training ship Mercury at Hamble. A few nights ago a boy fell overboard, and Driver, though it was blowing half a gale and pitch dark at the time, promptly dived to the rescue. He reached the drowning lad, but his strength failed, and the lad was swept away and drowned. Driver was rescued exhausted and almost unconscious.

THAT TIRED FEELING

Fresh Views of Life, and New Channels of Work, are Advocated as Methods of Cure.

Some woman has written a poem in which she said she hoped she would not get to heaven for a thousand years after she died — she wanted to rest. One of the greatest drawbacks to the thorough enjoyment of life is that we tire so easily—tire physically, mentally, spiritually. In these rushing times we grow tired of everything. "Nothing lasts but change," to quote a paradox. The author we read with so much pleasure yesterday to-day cloys us with his changeless style and mode of thought. The picture which appealed to us last year, we pronounce old-fashioned and out of date. Even the friend grows tedious after we have fathomed his thoughts and failings.

A brainy woman one day, speaking of a man who evidently had grown tired of his wife, put the idea in an epigram:—"One cannot expect a man to keep on longing for what he already has." That is the kernel. As long as we have not attained, satiety is impossible, but when that for which we yearn is surely ours, our restless minds and desires ever go seeking something new. As this seems to be an inborn human trait, it looks as though the only way to escape that tired feeling is to make new angles from which to view our possessions, new channels in which to pour our enthusiasms and our work.

It can be done. Witness the people who have made success of life and who have remained happy, sweet and sympathetic to its close. One woman whose tired eyes ever are lighted with a smile of hope, put it tersely once. "Life will always be worth living while there are sunshiny afternoons." She knows there never would be enough of them to tire her, and from the monotonies of life she always has turned to nature's antidote of ceaseless change.

Breakfast and the Morning Mail.

Did you ever hear that it is dangerous to open your morning mail at the breakfast table? According to a Berlin scientist, Professor Kron, it is dangerous—very. Professor Kron has succeeded in tracing several cases of contagion to the old custom of waiting until you sit down at the breakfast table before opening and going through your morning mail. He calls attention to the fact that the average man goes down to breakfast with hands and face scrupulously clean, teeth scrubbed and throat gargled. In that condition he is prepared to eat without danger of swallowing more disease germs than may have possibly escaped the watchful attentions of the cook.

But instead of doing that, he handles letters and papers which have passed through many hands before reaching his own. Between bites he opens envelopes and wrappers, and in doing so unthinkingly paves the way for the absorption of all kinds of germs which may, or may not, do him a great deal of harm.

The Haunted Chamber

"I will go with you," she volunteers. "But let me say," she adds, "that I think you are wrong in making this search without a man. If—if indeed we are still in time to be of any use to Sir Adrian—always supposing he is secreted in that terrible room—I do not think any of us would be strong enough to help him downstairs, and, if he has been slowly starving all this time, think how weak he will be!"

"Oh, what a wretched picture you conjure up!" exclaims Florence, nervously clasping her hands. "But you are right, and now tell me who you think can best be depended upon in this crisis."

"I am sure," says Ethel, blushing slightly, but speaking with intense earnestness, "that if you would not mind trusting Captain Ringwood, he would be both safe and useful."

As this suggestion meets with approval, they manage to convey a message to the captain, and in a very few minutes he is with them, and is made acquainted with their hopes and fears.

Silently, cautiously, and without any light, but carrying two small lamps ready for ignition, they go down to the corridor where is the door that leads to the secret staircase.

Turning the handle of this door, Captain Ringwood discovers that it is locked, but, nothing daunted, he pulls it so violently backward and forward that the lock, rusty with age gives way, and leaves the passage open to them.

Going into the small landing at the foot of the staircase, they close the door carefully behind them, and then, Captain Ringwood producing some matches, they light the two lamps and go swiftly, with anxiously beating hearts, up the stairs.

The second door is reached, and now nothing remains but to mount the last flight of steps and open the fatal door.

Their hearts at this trying moment almost fail them. They look into one another's blanched faces, and look there in vain for hope. At last Ringwood, touching Ethel's arm, says, in a whisper:

"Come, have courage—all may yet be well!"

He moves toward the steps, and they follow him. Quickly mounting the stone steps, he lays his hand upon the door, and, afraid to give them any more time for reflection or dread of what may be in store for them, throws it open.

At first the feeble light of their lamps fail to penetrate the gloomy darkness of the apartment. Their hearts sink within them. Have they indeed hoped in vain?

Dora is crying bitterly; Ethel, with her eyes fixed on Ringwood, is reading her own disappointment in his face, when a sudden piercing cry from Florence wakes the echoes around them.

She has darted forward, and is kneeling over something that even now is barely discernible to the other as they come nearer to it. It looks like a bundle of clothes, but as they stoop over it they, too, can see that in reality it is a human body, and apparently rigid in death.

But the shriek that has sprung from the very soul of Florence has reached some still living fibres in the brain of this forlorn creature. Slowly and with difficulty he raises his head, and opens a pair of fast-glazing eyes. Mechanically his glance falls upon Florence. His lips move; a melancholy smile struggles to show itself upon his parched and blackened lips.

"Florence," he sighs, rather than says, and falls back, to all appearance dead.

"He is not dead!" cries Florence passionately. "He cannot be! Oh save him, save him! Adrian, look up—speak to me! Oh, Adrian, make some sign that you can hear me!"

But he makes no sign. His very breath seems to have left him. Gathering him tenderly in her arms, Florence presses his worn and wasted face against her bosom, and pushes back the hair from the forehead. He is so completely altered, so thorough a wreck has he become, that it is indeed only the eyes of love that could recognize him. His cheeks have fallen in, and deep hollows show themselves. His beard has grown, and is now rough and stubby; his hair is uncombed, the lines of want and despair and cruel starvation have blotted out all the old fairness of his features. His clothes are hanging loosely about him; his hands, limp and nerveless, are lying by his side. Who shall tell what agony he suffered during these past lonely days with death—an awful, creeping, gnawing death staring him in the face?

A deathly silence has fallen upon the little group, now gazing solemnly down upon his quiet form. Florence holding him closely to her heart, is gently rocking him to and fro, as though she will not be dissuaded that he still lives.

At length, Captain Ringwood stooping pitifully over her, loosens her hold so far as to enable him to lay his hand upon Adrian's heart. After a moment, during which they all watch him closely, he starts, and, looking still closer into the face that a second ago he believed dead, he says, with subdued excitement:

"There may yet be time! He breathes—his heart beats! Who will help me to carry him out of this dungeon?"

He shudders as he glances around him.

"I will," replies Florence, calmly. These words of hope have steadied and braced her nerves. Ethel and Mrs. Talbot, carrying the lamps, go on before, while Ringwood and Florence, having lifted the senseless body of Adrian, now indeed sufficiently light to be an easy burden, follow them.

Reaching the corridor, they cross hurriedly, and carrying Adrian up a back staircase that leads to Captain Ringwood's room by a circuitous route, they gain it without encountering a single soul, and lay him gently down on Ringwood's bed, almost at the very moment that mid-night chimes from the old tower, and only a few minutes before Arthur Dynecourt steals from his chamber to make that last vist to his supposed victim.

CHAPTER XII.

Slowly and with difficulty they coax Sir Adrian back to life. Ringwood had insisted upon telling the old housekeeper at the castle, who had been in the family for years, the whole story of her master's rescue, and she, with tears, drooping down her withered cheeks, had helped Ringwood to remove his clothes and make him comfortable. She had also sat beside him while the captain, stealing out of the house like a thief in the night, had galloped down to the village for the doctor, whom he had smuggled into the house without awakening any of the servants.

This caution and secrecy had been decided upon for one powerful reason. If Arthur Dynecourt should prove guilty of his cousin's incarceraton, they were quite determined that he should not escape whatever punishment the law allowed. But the mystery could not be quite cleared up until Sir Adrian's return to consciousness, when they hoped to have some light thrown upon the matter from his own lips.

In the meantime, should Arthur Dynecourt hear of his cousin's rescue, and know himself to be guilty of this dastardly attempt to murder, would he not make an attempt to escape before the law could lay its iron grasp on him? All four conspirators are too ignorant of the power of the law to know whether it would be justifiable in the present circumstances to place him under arrest or decide on waiting until Sir Adrian himself shall be able to pronounce either his doom or his exculpation.

WAR WOLVES OF THE TURK

The Bashi-Bazouks Recruited From All Quarters of the Empire Have Wild-Beast Courage and on the War-Path are Merciless.

The Bashi-Bazouks are to the Turkish army what the Cossacks are to the Russian. The Cossacks are, however, far more civilised and immeasurably the superior of the Bashi-Bazouks in all that goes to make the soldier. Bashi-Bazouks are almost without discipline; their courage is that of the wild beast seeking its prey, and once on the war-path they are merciless. It was the Bashi-Bazouks who by their monstrous cruelties, gave such point to the pen and tongue of Mr. Gladstone at the time of the "Bulgarian atrocities." The name itself means "hot-brained." From every quarter of the empire and its numerous suzerainties this horde of cutthroats has been gathered — from Diarbekar, from Yemen, from the far Sudan, from every nook and corner of the Caucasus, and from every imperial slum. Their motto is "Kill-kill!" to which they freely add "and rob!" Their weapons are the long lance, such as is used by the Cossack, the sabre, two or three pistols, and as many murderous-looking daggers.

An Emperor-Policeman

Among the Duke of Wellington's special constables was a dreamy personage, then well known, but not very well spoken of in English society, named Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. He had returned to England nearly two years before after his melodramatic escape, in workman's disguise, from the fortress of Ham. The special constable's real career was now about to open. Two months after the memorable 10th of April he was in Paris as a member of the Constituent Assembly, and in the following autumn he was elected President by an overwhelming majority. What followed belongs to history, and takes us far from the enrolment of special constables.

CAUSES MUCH DISEASE

ADVICE ABOUT STOMACH TROUBLES AND HOW TO RELIEVE THEM.

Do not neglect indigestion, which may lead to all sorts of ills and complications. An eminent physician once said that ninety-five per cent. of all the ills of the human body have their origin in a disordered stomach.

Our experience with Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets leads us to believe them to be among the most dependable remedies known for the relief of indigestion and chronic dyspepsia. Their ingredients are soothing and healing to the inflamed membranes of the stomach. They are rich in pepsin, one of the greatest digestive aids known to medicine. The relief they afford is very prompt. Their use with persistency and regularity for a short time tends to bring about a cessation of the pains caused by stomach disorders.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets help to insure healthy appetite, to aid digestion, and thus promote nutrition. As evidence of our sincere faith in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets we ask you to try them at our risk. If they do not give you entire satisfaction, we will return you the money you paid us for them, without question or formalty. They come in three sizes, prices 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain them only at our store—The Rexall Store. J. S. McKeown.

DOCTORS COULD NOT HELP HIM

BUT GIN PILLS DID

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone in the Bladder. He decided to operate but said the stone was too large to remove and too hard to crush. I returned home and was recommended by a friend to try Gin Pills.

They relieved the pain. I took two boxes and went back to the specialist. He said the stone was smaller but he could not remove it although he tried for two hours and a half. I returned home and continued to take Gin Pills—and, to my surprise and joy, I passed the stone. Gin Pills are the best medicine in the world, and, because they did me so much good, I will recommend them all the rest of my life".

PICK-ME-UPS BEFORE MEALS

Medical Authorities Argue It is Wrong Principle to Attempt to Provoke Appetite by Stimulents or Preliminary Tasteful Dishes.

There is a vast amount of popular misconception regarding the use of so-called appetizers, or provokers of appetite. No doubt the true appetite in a healthy body follows upon the development of the hunger sense. Where, however, appetite seems to be lacking in respect either of the desire for food or of the enjoyment thereof, many persons rush to so-called appetizers by way of stimulating the flagging nerves of the stomach or digestive system in this respect. Various forms of pick-me-ups, for example, are in common use. People will take some form of alcohol, sherry and bitters, or gin and bitters, under the idea that these stimulants provoke the appetite. This, of course, is a complete mistake. They are more likely to injure the appetite, and to cause a certain feeling of repletion before even food enters the stomach, whilst in no case can they be regarded as stimulants of the appetite itself. Again, they may act injuriously upon the walls of an empty stomach in the sense that they tend to limit the flow of gastric juice, instead of stimulating it. Other forms of appetizers are frequently found in the taking of certain dainties mostly of the fish order. Such a luxury as caviare which represents the preserved roe of the sturgeon, or preserved anchovies, sardines, and the like, are all frequently taken in order that the appetite may be stimulated. It is difficult to see how or why such substances should promote the further desire for food. The only physiological reason for such things being consumed is that they mostly contain salt which exercises a certain stimulating power on the stomach, and also supplies a certain amount of material towards the formation and secretion of the gastric juice itself.

BRAIN POISON CAUSE OF SLEEP

Science Men Decide the Real Reason We Go to Sleep is That Nature Demands Clearance of Toil-Poison.

Considerable discussion has arisen in scientific circles over the experiments of MM. Legendre and Pieron in Paris, who have discovered that the real reason why we go to sleep is because our brain has been actually poisoned. Sleep, they declare, is produced through a morbid change in the cells of the frontal lobe of the brain. They discovered a dog that died of insomnia, and injected some of the serum of its brain into another dog, thereby causing it to fall into a deep sleep from which it subsequently awakened in a perfectly healthy condition. From this and similar experiments they assert that sleep is due to a natural poison. The poison of sleep, they contend, is, in fact, an antidote for the poisons that are the by-products of every mental and physical action of our lives, and we awake from sleep when it has cleansed our higher nervous centres of the poisons that our daily toil has produced.

The Well-Dressed Man.

The business or professional man who neglects his clothes discards one of the most potent instruments of success.

Commenting on this obvious fact a writer on men's fashions remarks that apart from mercenary reasons, it is becoming more widely recognised that it is the duty of all men to do their best in the matter of dress to make themselves as presentable as possible.

There is also a psychological aspect of the matter which is not without interest. It is demonstrated that the average man is to some extent influenced by his own clothes, just in the same way as he is affected by his environment. Thus the same man, well dressed, will talk better, will walk better, and by the same token, do better work than he would do if he were carelessly or inappropriately clad. In a word he will (more or less consciously, of course) line up to his appearance, and become less slovenly in every way. As in most other things, it is the little things that count in the matter of dress. A man should study his appearance from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet.

At the Chequers Inn, Belvedere, Kent, a spaniel, a wire-haired terrier, a black cat, a pigeon, a bantam cockerel, and a tortoise all sleep in the same kennel.

The Intercolonial

Rumors are constantly appearing in the press that the Intercolonial Railway is to fall into the hands of one of the great railway systems of the Dominion. The last comes from Ottawa, that

> "It is stated in railway circles that the Canadian Northern Railway is likely to submit a proposition to the new Government, having reference to the Intercolonial Railway system."

Though we have more confidence in the present head of the Department than in his predecessors of late, we cannot divest ourselves of the opinion that the sooner the operating of the road is placed in the hands of an independent Commission, the better it will be for the country.

Pure Food

It is well there are in all civilized countries laws enacted to punish unprincipled dealers in articles of food unfit for use, and it is well also that there are officials who do their duty and enforce the law. Here is a sample of how the law is enforced in New York: On the 22nd of October seventy-one dealers were hauled before the Court of Special Sessions for violating the law by offering for sale adulterated or impure food. A baker who had 180 dozen rotten eggs in his possession to use in cakes and pies was sentenced to thirty days in jail. The court gave him the alternative of paying $200 fine. A fish dealer caught with twenty-five pounds of putrid fish was fined $100. Butchers and milkmen went at all kinds of prices from $50 down. One milkman who said there must have been a hole in the top of his milk can, which let in the water, which dripped from the ice chest, was fined $25 in spite of the shrewdness of his defence.

We give these examples of the enforcement of the law for the benefit of those who may attempt to sell impure food in this locality. Of course there are none such in Belleville.

Leader Repudiated

The party designating itself Liberals in Ontario are in revolt, repudiating their leader, Mr. A. G. MacKay, as non-progressive and unfit for the leadership of the party. "The Mackenzie Liberals" of Toronto are opposing his continuance in that important, at least what they consider important, position. At a meeting of that Club, held the other day, the following resolution was proposed:

> "As the Liberal party has led in every reform, and as the time is now ripe for other advances in legislation looking to the welfare of the people, this club is of opinion that the party leader should be a man in hearty sympathy with advanced legislation. We regret the present leader is not in accord with such sentiment.
>
> "We, as a club, request our representatives at the coming meeting of the Ontario Liberal party to use their influence and votes for the selection of such a leader as will cheerfully aid in the work of securing such advanced legislation."

After a lively discussion, during which Mr. MacKay came in for some knocks, in which it was alleged that he did not represent the party in many respects, the motion was allowed to stand.

These malcontents should know that the failure of the party to succeed is not the fault of their leader but the fault of the governing of the Province by their former leaders that caused a revolution in the party in Ontario. Maladministration, grafting and almost every political crime known to the parasites that clung to the late Liberal Governments in Ontario and the Dominion drove the honest men of the party into rebellion and hurled them from power, and it will require at least a quarter of a century, under the best and purest leader they can select to restore them to the confidence of Canadians.

The German Trade

When Canada entered into a treaty with France by which certain articles of merchandise were exported from that country to Canada, and allowed entry at a lower rate of duty, the Germans became resentful because the same concessions were not made to them, and imposed a surtax upon Canadian goods when exported to that country. Canada retaliated by increasing the duty upon German goods when imported from that country. This continued for some years until the German trade fell off to a large extent. Germany then sought a conference with Canadian officials, resulting in the removal of these impediments to trade, but not to the extent, as was pointed out at the time, as it should have done, Canada, as usual, not demanding the concessions she should have done, but far enough to benefit Canadian trade in certain articles, but much more so that of Germany, as will be seen on consulting the following figures given in a telegraphic item of the 27th of October from Ottawa. It says:

> "The removal of the German surtax by the Canadian Government has resulted in a material increase in the volumne of importations from Germany. The surtax was abolished on March 1st, 1910. In the year previous to that date imports from Germany totalled $5,678,200. In the year following they increased to $7,764,920 A compilation just made shows that for the twelve months ended September 1st of this year the total importation had reached $19,853,801. There is a decided influx of German commercial travellers to Canada since the ban was lifted."

Had the samo policy been adopted and enforced towards the United States, when the McKinley tariff was enacted, it would not have been long before commercial men in the United States would have demanded its repeal or a modification of it, but until now Canada has shown a disposition to yield to all the demands of that country. Fortunately the time has arrived when Canada can and will pursue such a policy as it believes to be in its best interest. The United States and other self-governing countries do; why should not Canada?

Professional Secrets

A lift-man employed for many years at the Capitol in Washington was brought much into contact with the newspaper correspondents who were regular visitors. One afternoon, as three of them left the lift, Mr. Payne, a deputy of New York, stepped in, and to him the lift-man said, "I can't understand those newspaper men, sir. They puzzle me." "What's the trouble with them?" asked Mr. Payne. "Well, Mr. Payne, every day they ride in this lift one fellow will turn to another and say, 'What do you know to-day?' And the other fellow will answer, 'Not a thing! What do you know?' Then the first fellow will say, 'Nothing!' And yet, Mr. Payne, the papers [illegible] just full of news every day. It [illegible] me where they get it!"

A Time For Everything

A well-known Scottish architect was travelling in Palestine recently, when news reached him of an addition to his family circle. The happy father immediately provided himself with some water from the Jordan to carry home for the christening of the infant, and returned to Scotland. On the Sunday appointed for the ceremony he duly presented himself at the church, and sought out the beadle in order to hand over the precious water to his care. He pulled the flask from his pocket, but the beadle held up a warning hand, and came nearer to whisper: "No the noo, sir; no the noo! Maybe after the kirk's oot."

England's Surplus Women

The proportion of females to males in the population of England and Wales was 1,057 to 1,000 in 1801; it then declined census after census, though with some irregularity, down to 1851, when it stood at 1,042 to 1,000. But after that a change in the opposite direction set in, and up to 1901 there was a slight but continuous increase in the proportion of females to males. The proportion of females to males was the same in 1911, as in 1901, viz., 1,068 to 1,000.

USES FOR WOOD SCRAPS.

Material Formerly Wasted Is Now Considered Valuable.

In these days of high priced lumber the utilization of the small pieces of wood formerly considered of little or no value assumes considerable importance. The Woodworker gives a number of uses for these scraps.

Some furniture makers glue together small clear pieces down to one inch wide and one foot long and find that they serve very well for the interior framework of bureaus, chiffoniers, sideboards and similar articles.

Wheelwrights save the ends cut from spokes and shape them in lathes for chisel, gimlet, auger and other small tool handles. Wagon builders occasionally make use of scraps of hard woods for lining brake blocks. Sash and blind makers save their scraps for the match factories, or if the pieces are large enough they are worked into corner blocks, rose blocks and balusters.

Coopers recut broken or defective staves of the larger sizes and make kegs or smaller vessels of them. Small headings are economically manufactured in that way. Occasionally defective staves and headings are made into dowels. Basket makers save the cores from which veneer has been cut and saw them into thin slats for baskets and crate covers.

Brush manufacturers have made some headway in using waste from furniture factories, but the pieces are of so many sizes and of such irregular shapes that success has been only partial. A small porch chair shop has been able to draw a considerable part of its raw material from the waste of boat factories.

Some of the makers of interior finish work their odds and ends of soft woods into small boxes, and the hard wood scraps are made into parquet flooring. Planing mills work scraps and broken pieces, unsalable in that form, into boxes for apples, medicines and other articles and into brackets, balusters, rose blocks and small quarter round moulding.

KILLS THE DANDRUFF GERM

STOPS FALLING HAIR—OTHERS IMITATE AND MAKE SIMILAR CLAIMS, BUT THE GENUINE AND ORIGINAL DANDRUFF GERM DESTROYER IS NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE.

The discovery of the dandruff germ as the cause of all hair troubles is not a recent event. Prof. Unna gave the germ theory to the world in 1887 and two years later Sabourand by his experiments with a rabbit proved beyond a doubt the actual existence of this germ.

On the heels of this establishment of the germ theory came the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide. This was the first and only remedy for the destruction of the dandruff germ.

There have been other preparations alleged to kill this germ, stop falling hair and itching of the scalp. But Newbro's Herpicide really does these things. For this reason it has long been known as the original remedy and the only one that is genuine.

Don't be fooled by preparations which are trading upon the marvelous success of Herpicide. Remember, you take no chances with Newbro's Herpicide. It is absolutely guaranteed.

For sale by all druggists.

Applications at good barber shops.

The Herpicide Company of Detroit, Mich., Dept. R., will send a sample bottle and booklet upon receipt of 10c. in postage. —J. S. McKeown, special agent.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

Its Site to Be Restored and Sold at a Big Profit.

Few persons are aware that experts have long been of the opinion that the site of the garden of Eden can actually be determined with a fair amount of accuracy. They maintain that it lies in Mesopotamia, somewhere, between Babylon and Bagdad. And there has just been set on foot a scheme for restoring the garden of Eden.

The district is at the present day almost a desert. But there is abundant proof that it was once a fertile paradise. And the proposed restoration, which will take the form of a scientific irrigation, is undertaken as much in the belief that it will prove a profitable commercial enterprise as for its religious association.

Under the direction of Sir John Jackson an army of 8,000 workers has already started on the preliminary work, which consists of preparing the land for the canals and other waterways which will be fed by a series of gigantic damming operations of the ancient rivers of Tigris and Euphrates.

It is estimated that the scheme will cost about twenty millions sterling, which is being supplied by the Turkish government. But it is expected that as soon as the work is completed the restored garden of Eden will be readily sold for thirty-eight millions, and there will be, in addition, all the industrial development and prosperity that follow upon successful colonization.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Microscope For Two.

A new device which will appeal to all users of microscopes is the arrangement of two separate oculars with one common objective, allowing two persons side by side to look at the same field, so that an instructor may describe to a pupil what should be observed by the latter while both are looking at it, so also that an artist can make a drawing under the direction of the microscopist, etc. Appreciation of its value will doubtless be expressed by all users, and the question will be asked why it was not invented before. Thus far we have heard only of the instrument's being exhibited in France, but in due time it will probably be introduced into this country.—Journal of American Medical Association.

WRECKED SHIPS OF BRITISH NAVY

History Tells of Many Disasters but All Were Under Service Conditions, and Loss Lower than French Record.

While the British Fleet during its long history has not often experienced disasters of anything like the magnitude of those which have happened in the French Navy, it too has a regrettable record of accidents. It is worthy of note, however, that they have been nearly all accidents at sea and not in port. They have taken place when the ships were sailing, most ly under service conditions. The most serious of all, the foundering of the armoured ship Captain off Finistere in September, 1870, with the loss of 483 lives, was attributed to low freeboard and faulty construction generally; while the loss of the Mediterranean flagship Victoria and 358 lives in June, 1893, was the result of a mistaken order by the Admiral in command, which caused his own vessel to be rammed and sunk by the Camperdown. In the wreck of the torpedo-cruiser Serpent near Cape Villano in November, 1890, 173 men were drowned; and when the new turbine destroyer Cobra sank — owing to structural weakness — in the North Sea in October, 1901, she carried to the bottom 67 men. Perhaps the disaster in the British Navy which arrested public attention most strongly during recent years was the running down of Submarine A1 off the Nab Lighthouse in March, 1904, with the loss of 11 men. The introduction of the submarine into the Navy exacted its inevitable toll of life from the ranks of the intrepid crews who manned the new vessels, but the type has been so developed that they are now almost as safe as ordinary ships. Among explosions in British men-of-war the most serious falls far short of either of the two — those on the Liberte recently and on the Jena, on which nearly 200 officers and men were killed in March, 1907 — which will leave indelible marks in the history of the French Navy. The majority of them have been of a minor character, and we have no record of the actual blowing up of the magazines on a British warship and the consequent sinking of the vessel.

Ruby Superstitions

The superstition that the ruby changed colour at the approach of danger to its owner was, in bygone ages, a popular belief, in which, among others, the great General Wallenstein, shared. Having got wind that a conspiracy against him was on foot, he, acting on the advice of the astrologer Seni, invited the suspects to a supper, at which to each guest was served a dish sprinkled with powdered rubies. In the guise of a servant Seni passed round the table, and having made pretence to note the hue of the crushed gems, assured his master in a whisper that the danger was imminent. On this warning the credulous Wallenstein acted with promptitude; several of the guests were arrested, and on the following day led to execution.

At the time of the conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards certain of Cortes' officers, angered at the refusal of a wealthy Mexican to disclose the hiding-place of his possessions, of which a great portion consisted of emeralds, devised a hideous retaliation. The hoard having been discovered, the conquerors invited their prisoner and his family to a banquet, at which the dishes were sprinkled with the wretched man's gems. These the Spaniards compelled him, his wife, and their children, to swallow with their food, making sure of their recovery by murdering their luckless guests, whose bodies were then opened and the booty regained.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had tumors, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Any one wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PEYROUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

"THIS FABLE TEACHES"—

Wise Cadi Had Trouble In Deciding Who Should Be Punished.

There was once a robber in Cairo who fell from the second story of a house be was trying to enter and broke one of his legs.

He went to the cadi and complained the man's window was badly made, he declared, and he wanted justice.

The cadi said that was reasonable, and he summoned the owner of the house.

The owner confessed that the house was poorly built, but maintained that the carpenter was to blame, not be. This again struck the cadi as sound logic, and he sent for the carpenter.

"The charge is, alas, too true," said the carpenter, "but the masonry was at fault, and I couldn't fit a good window." So the cadi, impressed with the reasonableness of the argument, sent for the mason.

The mason pleaded guilty, but explained that a pretty girl in a blue gown had passed the building while he was at work and that his attention had been diverted from his duty. The cadi thereupon demanded that the girl be brought before him.

"It is true," she said, "that I am pretty, but it's no fault of mine. If my gown attracted the mason the dyer should be punished and not I."

"Quite true," said the cadi. "Send for the dyer."

The dyer was brought to the bar and pleaded guilty. That settled it. The cadi told the robber to take the guilty man to his house and hang him from the doorsill, and the populace rejoiced that justice had been done. But pretty soon the crowd returned to the cadi's house, complaining that the dyer was too tall to be hanged from his doorsill.

"Oh, well," said the cadi, who by that time was suffering with ennui, "go find a short dyer and hang him. Justice shall prevail."

Notwithstanding.

"You know Mr. Merton?" the maiden suddenly remarked, busying herself with nothing at all.

Mamma looked up quickly, and papa growled:

"Know him? I should think we ought to. He's made a regular boarding house of this place! What about him?"

"Well—oh, nothing! That is, he's asked me to marry him!"

"I should think he would have wanted to see us before speaking to you," mamma said severely.

The maiden looked at her with wide-y opened eyes.

"See you and papa? Why, what do you mean, mamma? He has seen you both often enough, but he wants to marry me, just the same!"—Brooklyn Life.

MEN OF CANADA IN PLAY TIME

Some Interesting Facts and Figures Relating to the Recreations of the Grown-Ups in their Hours of Leisure

The Canadian "Who's Who" is an interesting study in the careers of several thousands of Canadian men and women who have attained distinction in some line of activity; but the significant features of these brief histories are not so often in the records of success and accomplishment as in the list of recreations in which these men indulge in their moments of leisure.

Of the 660 whose recreations are quoted, 225, or more than one-third, acknowledge shooting as a favourite form of play. Of these fourteen at least specify rifle target shooting, and six big game shooting. The rest it may be presumed are devoted to hunting in one form or another. "Let us go out and kill something," is the way a witty Frenchman once described the Englishman's idea of sport, and the Canadian seems in a fair way to follow his example. Fishing and shooting go together with a large number of people, and 163 mention fishing as a recreation.

For a country with such splendid water courses and lakes, the number among those mentioned who are devoted to water sports is surprisingly small. With only forty-four is yachting or sailing a recognized diversion. Canoeing appeals to thirty-one, boating without special preference to forty, rowing to thirteen, swimming to six, and camping, which of course includes any or all of the pleasures of the water, to thirty-one.

The same thing may be said of winter sports. The Canadian winter is the glory of the Canadian climate, but in view of the general favour in which winter sports are held, it is remarkable that only 96 — perhaps largely the Scotch proportion of the population — go in for curling, thirteen for skating, three for hockey, two for snowshoeing, two for skiing, and one for tobogganing.

Athletic and outdoor sports do not occupy as important a place as might be expected. This may be due to the fact that as men grow older — old enough to qualify for admission to "Who's Who" — they have usually passed from the performing to the onlooking stage in athletics.

REINDEER FOR THE NORTH LAND

Recent Importation to Northern Canada Promises Splendid Results, Being Much More Useful than the Dog.

The importation of reindeer into Northern Canada is not altogether an experiment, because in the neighboring territory of Alaska imported reindeer and their off-spring have now for some time flourished and proved their usefulness. They were imported into Alaska by the United States Government, just as they are being imported into the Mackenzie District by our Department of the Interior.

In Alaska the reindeer have increased rapidly; they have found there abundance of suitable food; they have proved useful as beasts of burden, especially for prospectors and travellers visiting remote parts of the wild country; and they have supplied a needy class of the population with a most valuable article of food — reindeer milk, not to take into account the meat always available by killing an animal.

The traveller in the North has had to depend upon a dog-train. These dogs are difficult to manage, and their food almost invariably has to be carried — a serious drawback where transportation facilities are so limited. In hauling power one reindeer is equal to several dogs. In the natural mosses of the country the reindeer can almost everywhere find its own food; and in case of dire distress the slaughtered reindeer can save the traveller from starvation.

Judge Got the Baby.

A few days ago an Iowa county court judge tried to imitate King Solomon in his well-known decision respecting the child that was claimed by two women. In the Iowa Court two women claimed to be the mother of a child that was produced before the judge. Thinking that history might repeat itself, the judge asked for the infant. Then, opening his knife, he announced his intention of cutting the child in half. Whereupon one of the mothers exclaimed, "Oh, no! If it comes to that you may keep the child yourself," and both women left the court.

"It appears to me that Solomon was a very over-rated man," murmured the judge.

About Cigarette Paper

Of the great army of cigarette smokers there is probably not more than one in a hundred who knows that rice paper, in which the tobacco is wrapped, has nothing to do with rice, but is made from the membranes of the breadfruit tree, or, more commonly, of fine new trimmings of flax and hemp. So light is this paper that 500 of the tiny sheets go to make an ounce. They are perfectly combustible, and give off the minimum of smoke.

Good Evidence

"Did you ever see Mr. M. return the oats?" inquired the counsel.

"Yes, your honour," was the reply.

"On what ground did he refuse them?" was next asked by the learned counsel.

"In the backyard," said the witness, amidst the laughter of the court.

Plans have been completed in New York for the building at a cost of $1,500,000 of a great amusement structure to be known as the Broadway Garden, to take the place of the Madison Square arena.

ARMIES MAY NOW DISBAND

Should Latest Gun Operate to Schedule, the Nations May Mutually Agree to Study the Arts of War No More

A Swede named Svenson claims to have invented a new automatic rifle which may do away with machine-guns on the field of battle, whilst the ordinary infantry soldier, armed with this weapon, would become much more formidable than he is with his present equipment. The new invention has not only been applied to rifles, but to fowling pieces and other weapons. As regards rifles, Mr. Svenson has invented two kinds of appliances, one of which can be used as an ordinary rifle and another as a machine-gun. Mr. Svenson claims that his weapon can at will be made to perform both functions without its weight in any way being increased. It can be loaded either at the breech or underneath by inserting the cartridge magazine. A company of infantry, equipped with the new rifle and forming a front of 15 paces, can fire, it is said, 70 shots per second, or if fitted with a larger magazine 240 to 250 shots in three seconds. A battery of machine-guns, consisting of four pieces served by 16 men, with their commanding officers, would occupy a front of 15 paces and fire under the same conditions only 32 to 95 shots respectively in the same space of time. In addition to this, machine-guns are difficult to transport, or to place in position, or to hide from the enemy, which is not the case with the rifle of the Svenson type. The new weapon is about the same weight as the Mauser rifle, and has the same kind of barrel, but its entire length is five centimetres shorter. Another advantage is its simplicity of construction, possessing, as it does, only 17 movable parts, including the spiral springs.

BANK NOTES ARE ALL CLEAN

General Adoption of Custom of the Bank of England in Having No Reissue of Notes Would Be Genuinely Welcomed.

Dirty bank notes are rarely seen in England, and the reason for this cleanliness was supplied by the Right Hon. F. Hugh Jackson, a director of the Bank of England, in a lecture delivered recently.

It was often remarked, he said, that they rarely, if ever, saw a dirty Bank of England note. "This was due," he explained, "to the fact that the bank never reissued a bank note. Even if you were to go into the bank and demand a five pound note for five sovereigns, and were then to walk across the floor and exchange the note for gold, that note would be destroyed. The bank has adopted this principle, not in the interest of cleanliness, but in the interest of security, as they find that by this practice, expensive though it may be, they avoid and the public avoid, many of the risks of forgery." Mr. Jackson added another item of little-known information, that besides the printing of Bank of England notes and India rupee notes, the bank also printed all postal orders and old-age pension orders for the Government.

Wanted Much Cooking.

One of the most annoying things about swans is that they live to an extremely great age, and that it is impossible for the ordinary observer to guess what their years may be. President Grover Cleveland, it is narrated, once had an amusing experience with some swans. He had been in the South, shooting, and brought home a number of wild swans, one of which he sent to each member of his Cabinet, and to some other associates.

"All the boys," said Mr. Cleveland, "thanked me politely for having remembered them, but none of them seemed to have much to say about how they enjoyed the birds.

"Carlisle, I found, had his cooked on a night when he was dining out. Another when I asked him, said he hoped I wouldn't mind, but he had sent his home to his old mother. Thurber didn't mention his bird at all for two days. Finally, I asked him about it

"'Thurber, did you get that swan all right?'

"'Yes, sir, oh, yes. I got the swan all right, thank you,' and he bent over his desk and seemed very busy.

"'Fine bird,' I said.

"'Yes, sir, fine bird,' and he went on working.

"'Enjoy eating him, Thurber?'

"He waited a minute, and then he said, 'Well, sir, I guess they didn't cook him right at my house. They only cooked him two days — and he went on working without cracking a smile."

High Sneezing Dangers

Sneezing is one of the greatest perils that confront aeronauts, declares Harry Atwood, the American aviator. "On my flight over Cleveland, Ohio," says Mr. Atwood, "a small insect flew into my nose. I felt the sneezing convulsion coming on and fought against it. Realising that a sneeze was inevitable, I braced myself so that I would not lose possession of my senses, even for an instant. It was the first time I ever had to sneeze while in the air, and it immediately dawned on me that more than one aviator probably owed his death to a sneeze — the spasmodic jerking of the head, the brief loss of sense direction, and probably a jerk of a lever which made recovery of balance impossible. Believe me, I never again want to sneeze while flying. It is one of the most serious perils of aviation."

An elastic conscience is often apt to fly back and sting you.

VANDALS IN LABRADOR

RUTHLESS HUNTERS ARE COSTING CANADA MILLIONS.

Lieut.-Col. Wood Urges That the Wild Ungava Country Be Preserved For the Nation — It Is an Animal "Sanctuary" Where the Fur Resources Can Be Maintained Indefinitely—Outrages Committed.

The paper on Animal Sanctuaries in Labrador by Lieut.-Col. William Wood, F.R.S.C., and read before the second annual meeting of the Commission of Conservation, held in Quebec, has just been issued in pamphlet form. It is to be hoped that it has been given a wide circulation, and that wherever circulated it is being studied. It is further to be hoped that its students will heed the appeal with which the pamphlet opens, and do all in their power to give it effect. It is in these words that Lieut.-Col. Wood makes his appeal:

"All to whom Wild Nature is one of the greatest glories of the earth, all who knows its higher significance for civilized man to-day, and all who consequently prize it as an heirloom for posterity, are asked to help in keeping the animal life of Labrador from being wantonly done to death."

That is the keynote of the pamphlet —the conclusion to which the writer would lead every reader. But the little book contains lessons for all our people, who at any time or place come into touch with the life of forest, the lake or the river; and it would inculcate principles which can be put into practice much nearer home than Labrador, and which should find ready acceptance by every lover of nature, by every true sportsman, as well as by the utilitarian pure and simple, and sees in the game and fish of the country great natural resources which can be profitably developed, but whose extermination means destruction of national capital.

A few of the lessons of general application with explanation all gleaned from the pamphlet for the benefit of those who may not have an opportunity of reading the little book itself.

What does Lieut.-Col. Wood mean by "sanctuaries?" "A sanctuary," says he, "may be defined as a place where man is passive and the rest of nature active. Till quite recently nature had her own sanctuaries, where man either did not go at all or only as a tool-using animal in comparatively small numbers. But now in this machinery-using age, there is no place left where man cannot go with overwhelming forces at his command. He can strangle to death all the nobler wild life in the world to-day. To-morrow he certainly will have done so, unless he exercises due foresight and self-control in the meantime. There is not the slightest doubt that birds and animals are now being killed off much faster than they can breed. And it is always the largest and noblest forms of life that suffer most. The whales and elephants lions and eagles go. The rats and flies and all mean parasites, remain."

Lieut.-Col. Wood considers Labrador "the best country in the world for the best kinds of sanctuary" and he goes on to describe the country, and the animals and birds that now make Labrador their home. That home he urges, should be kept intact and secure for these denizens of the forest. Great destruction has already been wrought, largely by fires burning the forests and even the soil itself; but "still, there is plenty of fur and feathers worth preserving. Nothing can save it unless conservation replaces the present reckless destruction."

The portion of the pamphlet dealing with destruction makes this clear. Lieut.-Col. Wood first speaks of the destruction of the eggs of wild fowl. The fishermen, he says, who come up the north shore of the St. Lawrence take eggs wherever they go.

"If they are only to stay in the same spot for a day or two, they gather all the eggs they can, put them into water, and throw away every one that floats. Worst still, if the men are going to stay long enough they will often go round the nests and make sure of smashing every single egg. Then they come back in a few days and gather every single egg, because they knew it has been laid in the meantime and must be fresh.

Already results have given warning of what the end will be unless measures of conservation are at once enforced.

Within living memory the great auk and the Labrador duck have become extinct. The Eskimo curlew is decreasing to the danger point. The lobster fishing is being wastefully conducted; whales are diminishing; the walrus is exterminated everywhere in Labrador except in the north. The seals are diminishing, and the woodland caribou has been killed off to such an extent as to cause both Indians and wolves to die off with him. The barren-ground caribou is still plentiful, though decreasing. The dying out of so many Indians before the time of the Low and Eaton expedition of 1893-4 led to an increase of fur-bearing animals. But renewed, improved, increased and uncontrolled trapping has now reduced them below their former level. Hunting for the market seems to be going round in a vicious circle, always narrowing in on the quarry, which must ultimately be strangled to death."

Lieut.-Col. Wood also tells of a party of hunters securing a large number of walrus and tusks by having a whole herd of walrus wiped out, in spite of the fact "that these animals were, at that very time, known to be the only food available for a neighboring tribe of Eskimos. The Eskimos were starved to death, every soul among them, as the Government explorers found out. But Eskimos have no votes and never write to the papers; while walrus hides were booming in the markets of civilization."

"A form of sanctuary suggested for the fur-bearing Yukon is well worth considering as a remedial measure," writes Lieut.-Col. Wood. "It consists in opening and closing the country by alternate sections, like crops and fallow land in farming."

PUZZLING BABIES.

Some Have X-Ray Eyes That Look Through Objects.

A year or two ago doctors in England were much puzzled over a six-year-old boy named Arthur Keens, living with his parents at Penarth, Glamorgan. Young Arthur had lived on milk since his birth, not a particle of solid food being taken. At six years of age he was finally developed and healthy, and his diet per week consisted of thirty pints of milk mixed with sugar and a little water.

When Lionel Brett, a young boy of Massachusetts, was a baby in arms, says Tit-Bits, his mother noticed that there was something peculiar about the eyes, and fearing that he was in danger of going blind, she had him examined by several occulists. These gentlemen discovered that the child was possessed of a most wonderful pair of eyes his sight penetrating substances in the same fashion as the X-rays.

Dr. Fe-roul, of Narbonne, and Dr. Grasset of Montpelier some years back examined a young girl of Narbonne and she was found to possess eyes similar to those of Lionel Brett. Experiments proved that she could see through opaque bodies as clearly and penetratingly as her eyes generated Rontgen rays.

Another child possessed of wonderful sight was a German lad named Schaefer, who created a furore in scientific circles some time ago. There was nothing unusual in his appearance, and yet he had a very strange pair of eyes. The usual order of things was reversed; in the day he was practically blind, while in the darkness of night the keenness of his sight was astonishing. When night came on young Schaefer could see with an acuteness which many ordinary people would have given much to possess even in the daytime. He could enter a pitch-dark room and pick up any small object from the table or floor with as much ease as his parents could if the room were flooded with light. On one occasion Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer sprinkled the floor of a room with tiny pins, and at night they ordered their son to pick them up. Although the room was absolutely dark the lad found every one of the pins in an incredibly short space of time.

People with magnetic bodies are not unknown, and six years ago doctors discovered at Vladikavkaz, in the Caucasus, a girl of twelve whose body was practically a magnet. According to a medico who examined her, every object which she approached would move. Once she walked close to a kitchen dresser, and in an instant the crockery upon it began to dance. On another occasion a heavy bottle standing upon a table was raised in the air when the magnetic maiden went near it.

The Small Voice.

"Children," said the minister, addressing a Sunday school, "I want to talk to you about one of the most important organs in the world. What is it that throbs away," he went on, "beats away, never stopping, whether you wake or sleep, night and day, week in week out, without any volition on your part, hidden away, as it were, in the depths unseen to you, throbbing rhythmically all your life long?"

During the pause of oratorical effect came a small voice, "The gas meter."

TAFT IS PESSIMISTIC

President Hints at Possibility of Being Defeated.

In Speech at Chicago In the Bosom of His Supporters He Expresses the Hope That the Republican Party Has Only Been Chastened In Order That It May Do Better Hereafter—Will Support New Government.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—President Taft surprised a large audience at the dinner of the Hamilton Club yesterday by what most of his hearers construed as an admission of the possibility of Republican defeat in the coming national election. He was speaking to an unusually enthusiastic audience of Republicans.

"Now we are at—some people think—the crisis in the Republican party with reference to its continuance in the guidance of the nation," the President said. "I am hopeful that the good people of the country who know a good thing when they see it, have only chastened us in an off year, in order that we may be better hereafter—but with no intention of shifting from shoulders that are fitted to bear the burden of the present problems and carry them to a successful solution, to those which are untried and which have new theories of action that we do not believe in, and that we don't believe the people believe in.

"However, if so be it they desire to make a change, we shall loyally support the new Government under any conditions, with the hope it will inure to the benefit of the country, but with the consolation, that, if after one trial the people think they ought to go back to the other party that has served them so well in the progressive days of the nation, they will do so—we can bear that, my friends; that is all."

After his address the President retired to his hotel for rest. Though he professed no weariness the three days steady strain had told on him, and it was a tired man who led the Presidential party out of Chicago at 5.30 p.m. over the Pennsylvania Railroad for Pittsburg.

Part of Tripoli Recaptured.

Washington, Oct. 31.—The Turkish embassy received unofficial despatches yesterday confirming reports that the Turkish troops have recaptured part of the city of Tripoli. These messages came indirectly, and do not represent an official Turkish statement on the subject.

The State Department received a message from Consul J. J. Wood at Tripoli, stating that Italian forces have not treated Arabs so badly as some reports indicated.

Rome, Oct. 31.—The Italian nobility, like the people, are paying tribute in blood in the African conquest. Word has reached here of the death in action at Homs, Tripoli, of Duke Riccardo Grazioli Lante Delia Rovere, a lieutenant in the army, and of the serous wounding of Count Pompeo Di Campello, a lieutenant in the cavalry, and gentleman-in-waiting to the king. Both of these officers were well-known sportsmen.

Killed By Train.

Hamilton, Oct. 31.—Another railroad accident, with fatal results, occurred here yesterday, when the C.P.R. train from Toronto early yesterday afternoon ran down and instantly killed an unknown man near the high level bridge. The train was stopped within a short distance when the accident happened, and Dr. Phelps of the Toronto General Hospital staff, who was a passenger on the train, rushed back to the unfortunate man, who was dead when the doctor reached him.

The man was apparently about 30 years of age and wore a black moustache. Two G.T.R. switch keys were found in his pockets, which, in connection with the clothes he wore, suggested that he was a brakesman.

Struck By Train, May Die.

Toronto, Oct. 31.—M. Shea, 1,269 West King street, 55 years of age, was picked up about twenty yards east of the Brock avenue crossing beside the C.P.R. tracks at 7.20 last night. He was unconscious and there was a severe fracture at the back of the skull and a deep gash in his hand. He was attended by Dr. Gillan, 1,435 West King street, and removed to Grace Hospital in a private ambulance. He is unlikely to recover.

He appears to have been struck by a train while walking on the tracks.

Beardmore & Co. received the contract for one vessel, and the Fairfield Shipbuilding & Engineering Co. were successful tenderers for the other. The expenditure is $5,000,000.

Workmen were busy all afternoon trying to adjust the difficulty. It was almost nightfall when Vaniman finally announced that the flight would have to be postponed.

Chinese Rulers Grant the People Constitutional Government.

Imperial Edict Issued Yesterday Apologizes For Throne's Neglect In the Matter, Grants Popular Rule, Pardons All Rebels and Promises Better Behavior in Future — Cabinet Will Be Organized Without Nobles.

Pekin, Oct. 31.—The demand of the National Assembly for a complete constitutional government has been acceded to by the throne. An Imperial edict was issued yesterday, apologizing for the past neglect of the throne, and granting an immediate constitution with a Cabinet, from which nobles shall be excluded. A second edict grants pardon to political offenders connected with the revolution of 1898 and subsequent revolutions, and to those compelled to join in the present rebellion.

The Imperial edict, which is from the hand of the Emperor, Hsuan-Tung, says: "I have reigned three years and have always acted conscientiously in the interests of the people. But I have not employed men properly, as I am without political skill. I have employed too many nobles in political position, which contravenes constitutionalism.

"On railway matters one whom I trusted deceived me. Hence public opinion was antagonized. When I urge reform, officials and the gentry seize the opportunity to embezzle. Much of the people's money has been taken, but nothing to benefit the people has been achieved.

"On several occasions edicts have promulgated laws, but none of them has been obeyed. The people are grumbling, yet I do not know. Disasters loom ahead, but I do not see."

After referring to the uprisings in various places, the edict continues:

"The whole empire is seething. The spirits of our nine deceased emperors are unable to enjoy the sacrifices properly, while it is feared that the people will suffer grievously.

"All these things are my own fault, and I hereby announce to the world that I swear to reform, and, with our soldiers and people, to carry out the constitution faithfully, modifying legislation, promoting the interests of the people and abolishing their hardships, all in accordance with their wishes and interests. The old laws, that are unsuitable will be abolished. The union of the Manchus and Chinese, mentioned by the late emperor, I shall carry out now. Finance and diplomacy have reached bedrock.

"Even if all unite, I still fear that we may fall. If the empire's subjects do not regard and do not honor fate, and are easily misled by outlaws, then the future of China is unthinkable. I am most anxious day and night. My only hope is that my subjects will thoroughly understand."

The throne promises to organize a Cabinet without nobles forthwith. The Manchu Prince Shih Shu, President of the Assembly, is permitted to resign, the Chinese Li Chia Chu, succeeding him. The Manchu Kuei Chun, Minister of Constabulary, has been removed, and the Chinese, Chao Ping Chun, supersedes him in that office.

The lines around Pekin are tightening. While there is no great panic observable in the capital among the higher classes and the foreigners, there has been a perceptible tensioning everywhere. The legation quarter is preparing for emergencies and in some cases temporary fortifications have been placed in position. These consist largely of bags of sand.

Strong detachments of troops guard the palace and the gates of the city but while the throne has made haste to comply with the demands of the 20,000 soldiers of the Third and Twentieth Divisions and the Second Mixed Brigade, composing the Second Imperial Army, for the Yangtse campaign, which were presented by the National Assembly, it cannot be said that Pekin is yet safe from attack.

The Imperial edict has been widely discussed and it is generally believed that it was issued in order to provide Yuan Shih Kai with a powerful lever to use in his negotiations with the rebels. Its effect in Pekin already is good. The fear of the people, which was great yesterday morning when it became known that the capital was threatened with an attack unless the Government acceded immediately to demands of far-reaching importance, had somewhat subsided last night, although 600,000 Chinese continue to fear a massacre, while 100,000 Manchus are in dread of a Chinese attack.

At Tien Tsin yesterday the foreign troops marched around the concession for the purpose of impressing the natives with their numbers, armament and general preparedness for trouble. The customs commissioner received a letter signed Shur Yen Fang in behalf of the Tien Tsin branch of the revolutionary committee, announcing the intention of the committee to take possession of both Tien Tsin and Pekin.

Strange Death In Chicago.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—What the police say was a murder, with many features which they were unable to explain, was revealed yesterday when the body of Blanche Dow was found, naked, on the floor of her room in a down-town hotel.

The furniture was broken and the young woman's hair was torn down, giving evidence of a struggle. Despite these facts, there were no wounds on the body and both doors and the windows of the room was locked.

The police believe Miss Dow, who was about 26 years of age, was an actress. Several valuable jewels on her fingers were not disturbed.

Not Eager to Sell.

Winnipeg, Oct. 31.—Sir William Mackenzie, who arrived yesterday from the east, declared that he was not keen to sell the Winnipeg Electric. He was surprised at the novelty of the scheme recently mooted to extend the Canadian Northern Railway north to take in the Hudson Bay Railway.

McRae Gets Life.

Cornwall, Oct. 31.—Farquhar McRae, reeve of Lancaster Township will, if the sentence of the court be carried out, end his days within prison walls. Mr. Justice Sutherland sentenced him to life imprisonment in expiation of the shooting of William Shaw, druggist of Carp.

The sixty-five-year-old prisoner goes into captivity because twelve of his fellow-countrymen believe that, laboring under the excitement of provocation, he shot to death the young Scotch chemist who was assisting his friend, Dr. Magee, to recover his child. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter after 1 3-4 hours consideration.

Before McRae had been led away to his cell his friends in the court room were planning a petition to Ottawa for clemency. It would be signed by every man in Glengarry, irrespective of religion or politics, said one of them. McRae will be removed to Kingston this week.

It is possible that a new trial will be applied for on the ground that the jury were allowed to read newspaper reports of the case, some of which are alleged to have been inflammatory. "They should never have seen them," said Mr. Pringle.

Hit Both Ways.

Brockville, Oct. 31.—James Cowan of Gananoque fell into the company of David Casey, a St Regis Indian, at Prescott. The pair came to Brockville and occupied a double room in a local hotel, but in the morning the Indian was gone and $2 of Cowan's money.

Casey lit out by the first train for Cornwall, where he was arrested and brought back to answer to the charge of theft. During the enquiry it developed that Cowan purchased liquor for the Indian both in Prescott and Brockville, for which he was fined $50 and costs, and in default was committed for two months. Casey is on remand in order that he may be used in other prosecutions to follow.

Frank Eastman was arrested here yesterday in possession of a horse and buggy which it is alleged he stole from a Smith's Falls liveryman on Saturday night. Eastman is 22 years of age, and says he belongs to Montreal. He was taken to Smith's Falls for trial.

Westbrook, but he informs your correspondent that his visit had no connection with the claim established for the legacy. Dr. Perrin declined to discuss the case in any way, although he implied that the fortune was a genuine one. It is his second visit here in forty years, his family having been formerly well-known residents of Mount Vernon, Burford Township.

LOST HIS NERVE.

Frightened Auto Passenger Leaps to Death on Toronto Street.

Toronto, Oct. 31.—Jumping from a motor car in which he was riding with four other persons between Eglinton and St. Clair, in Dufferin street, Melrose F. Morrison, chief accountant of the Dovercourt Land & Savings Co., was fatally injured at 7 o'clock last night. His companions picked him up unconscious, but still breathing and rushed him in the car to the office of Dr. Walter McKeown, College street, only to find upon their arrival that their speedy trip had been in vain, for the young man was dead.

The story of the accident told by the others in the car is that the car was running swiftly down Dufferin street with its four passengers when it swerved alarmingly upon striking a stone or knoll in the roadway. The car careened, and Mr. Morrison seems to have believed that it was going to overturn, for he jumped headlong from the car. His skull was fractured, and the doctor believes that death must have been almost instantaneous. The body was removed to the morgue.

William Stewart, 584 Brock avenue, says that he was walking south in Dufferin street when he was overtaken by the car. Just as it came abreast of him it seemed to strike a knoll in the roadway and swerved so that it mounted a bank at the side of the road. He saw Mr. Morrison jump from the car, but thought that he had been thrown out. As he struck the ground the machine slid back from the bank, crushing him beneath it. A messenger was sent for a doctor, but when he arrived with a near-by physician, the man had been hurried away in the car.

Mr. Morrison was 30 years of age and single. In speaking of him last night W. S. Dinnick, president of the Dovercourt Land & Savings Co., said he was one of the best men the company had, was a general favorite with its patrons, and would be sorely missed by the company.

Federal Help Promised.

North Bay, Oct. 31.—Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, stated at a convention at North Bay that it would be his endeavor to see carried out the pre-election promise of the Borden administration, that the same energetic immigration policy heretofore applied to western Canada would be given to northern Ontario. He also promised earnest consideration to the question of Federal contribution to trunk roads in New Ontario, and also that a strong effort would be made to settle long-standing disputes between Provincial and Dominion Governments, such as jurisdiction over the islands of Georgian Bay, conservation and control of streams, and other matters, which would be settled by conference if possible, but failing that, by an appeal to the courts.

A subsidy to the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway would also be considered, the opinion of the Minister of Railways and Canals being that the provincial railway was entitled to the same consideration as a private company from the Federal Government.

North Bay Power Problem.

North Bay, Oct. 31.—North Bay is considering entering the list of towns served by the Hydro-Electric Commission. The franchise of the local electric lighting company has expired, and the Town Council seriously contemplates establishing a municipal system and has entered into negotiations with the local company with that object in view.

In the meantime the lightning company has been absorbed by the Nipissing Power Co., controlled by Smith, Kerry & Chase of Toronto, but virtually part of the merger of Ontario power companies. The new company asks for a 21-year franchise, and offers very low rates if the franchise is granted.

Representatives of the Hydro-Electric Commission have also been in consultation with the Council, and Hon. Adam Beck has promised to come here in the course of a week and lay a definite proposition for a supply of power before the Council.

Insurance Bill and the Dominions.

London, Oct. 31.—In the House of Commons yesterday the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in defending clause 26 of his insurance bill, which provides that uninsured persons emigrating to the dominions shall have the right to take their transfer value to similar societies abroad, described the provision as an attempt to bring about reciprocity with the dominions and foreign countries in the matter of insurance. This was to be regarded rather as a general offer to the colonies than as a final settlement.

Never before in the history of the Tombs have there been so many prisoners awaiting trial on charges of murder, no less than 26 being there at present.

Tug Struck a Rock.

North Bay, Oct. 31.—The tug Zephyr, owned by Thomas Darling & Sons of Callander, struck a rock in Lake Nipissing on Saturday while towing a scow, and sank in fourteen feet of water. The crew escaped to the scow and were taken off several hours later by a passing steamer. The bow of the wrecked craft is resting upon a shoal, and no difficulty is expected in the task of raising the boat and taking her to the drydock for repairs.

Successor to Sheriff Motz.

Lutheran Seminary Dedicated.

Berlin, Ont., Oct. 31.—Under auspicious circumstances and ideal weather the new Lutheran Theological Seminary was dedicated at Waterloo yesterday afternoon, in the presence of a distinguished gathering. Rev. Mr. Miller of Hamilton extended a formal greeting to the assembly. Mayor W. G. Weichel, M.P., delivered an address of welcome on behalf of the town of North Waterloo.

J. Charles Mueller, president of the Board of Trade, formally handed over to the directorate the deed for the five acres of land, wishing the seminary board God-speed in its work.

The dedication ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Hoffman of Berlin, and Rev. Mr. Weigand of Brodhagen delivered a German oration.

New York's Low Death Rate.

New York, Oct. 31.—New York city's death rate last week reached the lowest rate on record. The death rate for the entire city was 12.12 per 1,000 of the population, a decrease of 1.41 from the corresponding week of last year, and lower by 1.20 per 1,000 than the previous low record, for the week ending Nov. 5, 1910. The deaths totaled 1,158.

In the Borough of Queen's the death rate was 8.40 per 1,000 of the population, the lowest death rate any of the boroughs has ever shown.

Could the Tree Talk

Bishop Seymour was very fond of trees, and one day while walking with a young woman he pointed out to her some of the fine trees of the neighborhood. She professed great interest and delight. She cried—

"How the noble aspects of beautiful trees stir up the keenest emotions of the soul."

Then, patting a great rough trunk, she went on—

"You superb oak, what would you say to me if you could talk?"

The bishop smiled.

"I believe I can be his interpreter," he murmured. "He would probably say, "I beg your pardon, miss; I am a beech."

A man's natural bent seems to be crooked.

SINGER TOOK HER OWN LIFE

CHICAGO, Oct. 30—Her voice and beauty gradually succumbing to the ravages of years, and driven by her failing talent to seek employment in the cheapest theatres, Miss Blanche Dodd, once a popular actress, yesterday shot herself in a room at the Commercial Hotel, Wabash Ave. and Harrison street, and turned on the gas. Her body was found a few hours later by an employee of the house.

The room in which the woman spent her last hours was littered with the relics of the days when she won the hearts of audiences with her fine soprano voice and girlish manners. On the bureau were two large solitaire rings and a diamond brooch.

Before preparing to die, Miss Dodd took from her trunk a bundle of old valentines sent her by admirers in the years of her popularity. These were found near the door.

Miss Dodd came to Chicago from Toronto, Ont., fifteen years ago. She quickly won a place for herself on the musical stage, performing under the name of Pearl Ward. Many seasons of success and prosperity followed.

Then came the day when applause grew meagre and managers were less generous with engagements. The fivecent show and the saloon vaudeville in time offered her her only means of livelihood.

She returned to her Canadian home for a while. A few weeks ago she came back to Chicago resolved to make a fresh effort to regain her own popularity. She received little encouragement.

Friday night she visited her sister Mrs. W. H. Loomis, No. 638 East Forty-second street. She sang a number of duets with a young nephew. From there she went to the Commercial hotel and registered as "Pearl Ward." The body was found early to-day by David Ettelson, an attache of the hotel. "Suicide by gas poisoning" was the verdict of the coroner's jury.

Miss Dodd was 38 years of age. Her father is Thomas Dodd, of Toronto, a retired miller.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Mr. Hunt, for many years on the Board of Directors of the local Y.M.C.A., who has been in the city for the last couple of weeks, addressed the men's meeting in the Association rooms Sunday afternoon and gave a most helpful talk on the subject of Thinking. Mr. Hunt dealt with numerous things with which the average man has to contend every day, and those who heard him were deeply interested.

The senior members who are planning to get in the Volley Ball league should hand in their names to the Physical Director as soon as possible, as the league will be organized this week.

The Association football team played the first game yesterday morning, losing to the Institute team by a close score of 3-2.

PREMIER BORDEN AT NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—The Hon. Robert L. Borden, M.P., Premier of Canada, arrived here yesterday and is staying till to-morrow at the Hotel Belmont. He has been spending a few days with Mrs. Borden at Atlantic City, resting after the strenuous life he has been living since the end of July, first in the general election and then in the formation of a Cabinet.

Mr. Borden, as he was on a holiday, did not care to discuss public affairs in any way, but he had this to say on the recent elections in the Dominion:

"The result of the elections was in no way induced by any spirit of unfriendliness to the United States, for no such spirit exists. The proposals of the late Government constituted a reversal of the policy which Canada has pursued for thirty years, and her people were not prepared to execute any such change."

When Mr. Borden was asked his opinion of the action of the United States Government against the Steel Corporation, he declined to comment on it on the ground that the Steel Trust has no extensive operations in the Dominion. There is no steel corporation, he said, which controls the trade of the Dominion to any extent; so Canadians are not vitally interested in the matter.

GOLD IN CIRCULATION IN UNITED KINGDOM

LONDON, Oct. 30.—For the first time the report of the English Mint gives an official estimate of the amount of gold coin in circulation in the United Kingdom. The total is £113,000,000, an increase of £13,000,000 since 1900. In 1892 the total was about £90,000,000. The phrase "in circulation" includes the amount of gold held by banks in their coffers, which has been increasing in recent years.

The Mint's figures will be of great value to the economists who assign part of the cause for the increased cost of living to an expansion in the amount of gold coined, thereby, they contend, diminishing the purchasing value of the sovereign.

Men of the highest authority in economics are found to be averse to expressing any opinion on this question. For instance, Lord Avebury, in reply to an inquiry, said:

"The subject you raise is most interesting, but it is diffcult, and requires careful study. My impression is that the development of commerce has prevented the increase in the supply of gold from having had much if any appreciable effect on prices.

WOULD-BE BURGLAR WAS NABBED BY WATCHMAN

NAPANEE, Ont., Oct. 30.—On Thursday night, about 11.30 o'clock, Night-watchman Perry surprised a would-be burglar on a ladder in the rear of F. Chinneck's jewellery store, Dundas street. Mr. Perry was on his rounds with his dark lantern and when he entered the rear yard he flashed his lantern and spied his man. He immediately pointed his six-shooter revolver at the fellow and marched him to police headquarters. The prisoner gave his name as Charles Totten, an Englishman, about twenty years of age. Totten says he spent two years in Kingston and was also in Toronto and other cities. He was remanded for eight days to inquire into his previous character.

LOCAL LEGAL IN THE TORONTO LAW COURTS

SINGLE COURT
Before Teetzel J.

Re Estate of Ellen A. McNeil—G. F. Ruttan, K. C., W. N. Ponton, K. C., Ruttan, K. C., for executors and residuary legatees; W. N. Ponton, J. E. Jones for children of Richard Daven. Motion by executors and residuary legatees under the will of Ellen A. McNeil, for an order construing the 19th clause of the will, on the question of whether the legacy of $1,000 to her half brother, Richard Daven, who predeceased testatrix, leaving issue, lapsed or not. Judgment: The children of Richard Daven claim that the legacy bequeathed to their father goes to them, while the residuary legatees claim a lapse and that it goes into the residue. The whole trouble in the case, it seems to me, arises out a misconception of the law by the testatrix, under which she apparently assumed that it was necessary to expressly provide that in case any of the legatees predeceased her without leaving issue, the legacy should lapse and go to the residuary estate, and by implication assumed that if a legatee predeceased her leaving issue there would be no lapse. Beyond a conjecture of what the testatrix thought would happen under the law if a legatee predeceased her leaving issue, I can find no sufficient language in this will to indicate either an intention to prevent a lapse or to give the legacy in question to the issue of Richard Daven. It is to be hoped that if the residuary legatees agree that the testatrix executed her will under the misapprehension of the law relating to lapsed legacies, they will do for their cousins what the testatrix would probably have done had she correctly understood the law. The order will therefore be that the $1000 legacy lapsed and passed under the residuary clause of the will. The costs of all parties out of the estate.

LABOR AND CAPITAL ARE NOW IN CONFLICT

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—Recent events point to a conflict which cannot long be postponed between Labor and Capital. Labor Unions everywhere have attained a power impossible to over estimate. The great masses have slowly emerged from being serfs to a knowledge of their almost absolute power. Look at the strikes on this continent and in the British Empire. Can anyone estimate the tremendous commercial convulsions which have been caused by these conflicts, when supplies of food for suffering citizens in great cities had to be conveyed by thousands of bayonets, and every railroad was affected?

The great principles of Socialism are gaining ground with inconceivable rapidity. The masses demand, and will have, changes in their condition, which education and enlightenment show are possible, and to which they as men and not as slaves are entitled. The Bishop of London, recently asked "Why has the Church not more influence than it has upon the rising tide "of democracy to-day? Why has organized labor so little to say to organized Christianity, as a whole? "Has the new wine burst the old bottles, and is the wine hopelessly and "wastefully runnning out? There is "a strong new wine working in the "brains of thousands to-day. They "believe there is equality for all. "That the grinding, hopeless poverty "seen in large cities is unnecessary. "They look forward to a time when each child shall have a chance, and "no one shall be 'Damned into this world. They are tired of hearing of "a heaven in another world, when "they believe they were promised one "upon earth. They do not crave for "princely mansions, or incomes, but "more time to think, and leisure "from toil, a living wage, and a help "to independence in old age. Instead "of cut-throat condition, peace and "an avoidance of war. This is the "beautiful dream at the bottom of the "Labor movement." Witness the 100,000 men who, in Berlin a few days ago, raised their hands and voices at a public meeting in condemnation of war. The Bishop adds: "It is new "wine, and apt to go to the head with "intoxicating force. But what "Christian can deny that dream is a "beautiful and a Christian dream, and "that the wine in itself, undiluted, "might have been created at Cana of "Galilee?" When one thinks of the lords in the old land, of their vast estates, immense wealth, prodigality and luxury, of the large number of the vapid, semi-imbecile, depraved members of what is styled the aristocracy, of the hundreds of thousands of acres of land retained unsold because they are devoted to raising of pheasants and wild fowl for a few days of shooting, no wonder that Socialism flourishes, and is destined to flourish, and what is more, is certain, to win in the end, because the masses have the power, and having it, are fast learning how to use it. Unquestionably, it was the stern, menacing voice of the people that caused the downfall of the lords in the recent parliamentary crisis. The pity is that some wild, ungoverned spirits, commit horrible crimes, and bring disgrace upon those who are determined upon change and improvement of their condition, only to be effected by legal constitutional methods.

I am, yours truly,
JOHN J. B. FLINT.

CHEAP COFFIN STARTS RIOT IN PHILADELPHIA

Dead Woman's Relatives Storm Home of Husband Said to be Worth $4,000

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 30.—Because Samuel Prager, a tailor, ordered a $3 coffin for his wife relatives of the woman stormed Prager's home in this city. The police were called to quell the disturbance.

Prager and his wife had quarreled and she committed suicide.

While a deputy coroner was making an investigation the relatives of Mrs Prager visited the house. Their denunciations became so violent that several hundred persons collected. The relatives said Prager had $4,000 in the bank and had asked a charity association for a coffin not costing more than $3.

AMUSEMENTS

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY

There is no better comedy than The Private Secretary, which Mr. C. James Bancroft is presenting for our delectation at Griffin's Opera House on Wednesday, Nov. 1st. Theatregoers of Belleville, knowing Wm. Gillette's reputation in the role of the Rev. Robert Spalding, and being assured that Mr. Bancroft is to England what Mr. Gillette is to us, await his coming with interest. As the Rev. Robert Spalding, Mr. Bancroft has delighted more than 2,000 audiences and, in fact, it was his interpretation of the original play that made it spring into instant favor on the continent. Mr. Bancroft has surrounded himself with a thoroughly competent cast of players and the production is identical with the one that made William Gillette a famous actor over night. There is real fun, hearty healthy laughter in "The Private Secretary" aid its enormous vogue at the present in the larger cities proves that it has the qualities which so few plays have—that of sustaining interest year after year. SIR JAMES WHITNEY OUTLINES HIS POLICY

Sir James Whitney Issues Pre-Election Address to Voters.

Progressive Platform of Ontario Government Includes the Creation of a Minister of Power to Supersede the Commission—Arrangement to Have G. T. R. Run Over T. & N. O.—Federal Aid Given Immigration.

Toronto, Oct. 31.—Sir James Whitney last night announced that the Provincial elections are to be held on Monday, Dec. 11, the nominations on the previous Monday, the 4th.

The new Legislature will be the thirteenth since 1867, and may be counted upon for some ill-luck for one side of the House or the other. The Legislature dissolved on May 2, 1908, had endured for three years and a quarter; the present Legislature has already exceeded that term by about two months.

Formal dissolution of the House and the issue of the writs for the new Legislature will take place shortly, the delay being intended to give the municipal officers the longest possible time for the preparation of the polling lists.

This duty should have been undertaken during the summer, but, as usual, was generally allowed to go by default.

A statement to the press accompanied the announcement of the election date, and in it the record of the Government was outlined along with the proposals for the future.

Premier Whitney gives as the more important questions upon which the people of the province should have an opportunity of pronouncing:

(1) As to the advisability of further provincial appropriations if necessary to any scheme of development by reason of the financial aid to be given by the Dominion Government, and also of any statutory enactment which may be found to be necessary under the circumstances.

(2) Whether the Government of the province shall continue to urge upon the Dominion Government the payment of a bonus or subsidy on account of the construction of the T. & N. O. Railway.

(3) Whether a department of the Government shall be created, with a Cabinet Minister at its head, to take over and carry on the work heretofore done by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

The question of the opening up of Northern Ontario is said to be obviously of great importance and should be dealt with without delay. The only result of the addition to population in the newer districts is to increase the provincial expenditure while the Dominion derives an increased income from the greater consumption of goods paying tariff duties. The Provincial Government, therefore, notes with satisfaction Mr. Borden's announcement, that he would favor the giving of financial aid by the Dominion to the province in the work of immigration to Northern Ontario; the construction of permanent highways for the province, and for providing practical instruction in agriculture. Legislation to provide for the disposition of any sums voted by the Dominion for these purposes is contemplated and mentioned as "the enactment of statutory provisions of a very important character."

The T. & N.O. Railway policy is an important feature of the address. An engagement has been entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway for running rights of its trains over the line, in consideration of which the company assumes an equitable share of the general maintenance of the road, and pays the sum of $300,000 per annum as rental for such running rights, this sum representing one-half of the interest on the total cost of construction of the railway.

Sir James refers to the "bitter and relentless opposition" to the Hydro-Electric power scheme, which is intended to furnish power at cost to all sections of Ontario, and the great efforts which "have been made by interested individuals to hamper and prevent the carrying out of the intentions of the Government in the central and eastern parts of the province. So far have these efforts gone that in all probability we shall be compelled," says Sir James, "to use the powers given us by statute with reference to expropriation."

Sir James refers to the "very patriotic and unselfish exertions of Hon. Adam Beck, Hon. J. S. Hedrie and Mr. W. K. McNaught to the commission, and announces the discontinuance of the commission, and the establishment of a new power department with a Cabinet Minister at its head.

Ideal Protection Against Inroads of Catarrh

Remember this: You don't take drugs when using Catarrhozone; you simply inhale a healing vapor that cures every type of catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, throat and nose soreness and irritation.

No medicine brings such prompt relief, exerts such an invigorating influence, or so thoroughly and speedily cures throat troubles as "Catarrhozone." Doctors, hospitals, sanitariums, all say that for those who suffer from changeable weather, for those who are predisposed to catarrh, lung trouble, deafness, or bronchitis, no treatment is so indispensable as "Catarrhozone."

VICTIM OF CHRONIC CATARRH CURED.

I contracted a severe cold while following my occupation of furniture travelling, and eventually it developed into Catarrh. The desultory mode of life I was following gave me very little chance to attend to the Catarrh condition, and at last I became a victim of Chronic Catarrh. I bought a large package of Catarrhozone, used it as per directions, and have never been bothered since. I will be only too glad to give any information I possess to any person suffering from the disease that was the bane of my life two years.

A. H. SWARTZ, Brockville, Ont.

For certain cure, for relief in an hour, use Catarrhozone, the only direct, breathable medicine. Two months' treatment, guaranteed, price $1.00, smaller size, 50c.; at all druggists, or the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont., and Buffalo, N. Y.

IN THE SCIENTIFIC WORLD

THE SOUND OF OUR VOICE

Experiments Support Contention That Everyone Hears His Own Voice Differently From Others.

That a man does not hear his own voice as all the rest of the world hears it is shown by an interesting experiment described by Dr. L. Lalo in La Nature (Paris). Says the writer:

"If a person records on a phonograph a few sentences pronounced by himself, together with others by his friends, and causes the machine to reproduce these at the end of a brief period, it generally happens that he easily recognizes his friends' voices but not his own. On the other hand the friends recognize his voice perfectly. This singular fact proves that every one hears his own voice differently from others.

"As is remarked by Professor Exer, the difference must lie in the quality of tone. It must be remembered that one hears his own voice not only through the air, as do his auditors, but across the solid parts situated between the organs of speech and those of hearing. The sound thus produced has a different timbre from that conducted to the ear by air alone.

"We may show this as follows. Take the end of a wooden rod between the teeth and pronounce a vowel continuously. Let the other end be alternately taken between the teeth and released by another person, who at the same time stops his ears. The latter will find that every time he seizes the rod in his teeth the sound becomes stronger than when it reaches his ear through air alone, and has a different quality. The experiment may be varied by applying a wooden rod to the larynx of the person observed and touching it, from time to time, to the observer's own larynx. As in the preceding case, it will be found that its passage through a solid body augments the intensity of the sound and modifies its quality."

SOUND IN THE UNIVERSE.

We live and move at the bottom of an ocean of air, the earth's atmosphere. One consequence of this is that every mechanical disturbance starts waves of compression and rarefaction, which radiate out from the source, and, striking the drum of our ear, may (if of the right strength and quality) cause in us the sensation of "sound." Among such sensations some affect us merely as "noises"; in others we recognize a more or less well-defined "musical pitch," and "tone quality." Physically the "noise" differs from the "musical note" in that the former is an irregular disturbance, while the latter is periodic and of definite frequency. Not that there is any hard and fast line of demarkation; a rapid succession of impulses, which separately would be mere noises, may impress the ear with a definite sense of pitch. Thus the teeth of a saw, cutting in rapid sequence through a wooden board, produce a sound of definite pitch, though lacking perhaps in musical quality. Or, again, a sharp noise of brief duration, proceeding from a point in the neighbourhood of a series of equidistant obstacles, such as a line of fence-rails, or a flight of stone steps produces upon the observer a sensation in which a more or less well-defined pitch can be recognized. The explanation of this phenomena is that the sound is reflected back from each fence-rail in turn, and since it takes time to travel, each echo reachs the observer a trifle later than that from the neighbouring rail.

To Make Light in a Bottle.

A safe light for going about at night or where there are inflammable materials, as into a store-room, may be made as follows: Take a long glass bottle and put into it a piece of phosphorus the size of a pea; upon this pour pure olive oil heated to the boiling point until this bottle is about one-third full and cork tightly. When light is needed take the cork out and allow the air to enter, subsequently recorking. The empty space in the bottle will then become luminous and give quite an effective light. If it becomes dim it can easily be revived by uncorking the bottle for a few seconds. One bottle will last a whole winter. Small bottles may also be prepared in this way and carried in the pocket.

[illegible] Sufficient

A woman missionary in China was taking tea with a mandarin's eight wives. The Chinese ladies examined her clothing, her hair, her teeth and so on, but her feet especially amazed them.

"Why," cried one, "you can walk and run as well as a man."

"Yes, to be sure," said the missionary.

"Can you ride a horse and swim, too?"

"Yes."

"Then you must be as strong as a man!"

POCKET KNIVES IN THE MAKE

Although Comparatively Cheap Good Pocket-Knives Are Put Through a Hundred Operations Before Being Ready for the Market

The labour of making a pocketknife is, as usual in every industry that is carried on by the aid of a great deal of machinery, much divided. Each blade must go through six separate processes — first, forging; second, laying on the "tangs" — that part which is inserted into the handle and through which the blade is riveted; third, marking or stamping with the name of the manufacturer; fourth, "choiling," or filling a depression in the neck of the blade between the sharp edge and the heavier part or "tang"; fifth, tempering; sixth, grinding.

The rod of steel from which the blades are made is taken from the material room to the forge. Here one end is put into a bed of hot coals, the bellows are pumped and the end is soon red. The skilled forger then hammers the blade into shape upon his anvil, and so accurate is his eye and so exact his hand that the blade does not deviate a hair's breadth from the little brass pattern which is before him, and to which each blade must correspond exactly.

The blade is next dipped in water and becomes as hard and brittle as glass. It will even make a deep scratch in glass. But the edges are rough. It is nearly uniform in thickness and is a light grey in colour. Again the forger's skill is brought into play in the tempering. Laying the blades on a copper plate over the fire, he watches them as they change their hue with the degree of heat, first to straw colour, then to darker straw, and now to the dark purple which denotes that the proper degree of heat has been obtained.

The blades are taken next to the grinding room, where grinders are seated on "horses," or wooden seats built over the revolving grindstone. The grinder must also depend upon the accuracy of his eye and the training of his hand.

From the "wheel room" the blades go to the cutler's room, where they find the other parts of the knife, and where all the parts are put together.

The making of a three-bladed knife may involve no fewer than one hundred operations, and may require handling by as many different workmen.

He Knew Them All

At one time Professor Snow, a well-known Kansas naturalist, was out with a party of students on his annual insect hunt, states the author of the "Life of a Fossil Hunter," when the owner of a large herd of Texas cattle who was passing through, noticed the party out on the prairie with their nets in their hands, running about as if possessed. It happened to be the first time that he had ever seen insect-collectors at work, and his curiosity was aroused.

"What are those men doing?" he asked Jim Thompson.

"Catching bugs," was the laconic reply.

"I don't believe it," said the cowman. "They are grown men."

"All right," said Jim, "you can find out for yourself if you want to."

The man started off after the professor, and I waited, with a good deal of curiosity, to hear his report on the conversation. On his return he was in a brown study. The professor had taken him into his tent and shown him hundreds of mounted insects, reeling off their names to him until his head whirled.

"Well, did I tell you the truth?" Jim asked.

"That man," said the cow-man, "is the smartest man I ever saw. He knows the names and surnames of all the bugs in this country."

How Jones Lost Toes

Jones was a man whose boast had always been that whatever he dared he could do, but his braggadocio ended rather seriously — for him.

His friends declared that he would not stay in a certain haunted room for one night, and as the idea of being afraid of anything was particularly distasteful to him, Jones decided to accept the challenge to do so.

He slipped a revolver under his pillow and slept peacefully for a few hours. Then he was awakened by a peculiar moaning sound, the weirdness of which thrilled him with an apprehensive fear and a longing for home.

Looking towards the foot of the bed he thought he saw — a human hand!

"Remove that hand or I fire!" he shouted, bracing himself up for action.

One—two—three—no reply — then, bang!
